[redacted]

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in

PACIFIC REPORTER

251 P.—254 P.

Cite by Volume and Page of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:
251 P. 87

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1927, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 251, Nos. 1-5; Vol. 252, Nos. 1-4· Vol. 253, Nos. 1-5; Vol. 254, Nos. 1-4.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

Cal.Rep. 251-254 P.
2-1967

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 251–254 P.

P.

	Vol.	Page
Abbott; Stearns v., Sup.	251	907
Abbott v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	251	221
Alaska Packers' Ass'n v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, Sup.	253	926
Allan; People v., App.	252	779
Allen; Cornbleth v., App.	251	87
Alliance Ins. Co. of Philadelphia; Siskin v., Sup.	251	922
Alliance Land Co.; McKean v., Sup.	253	134
Allison; People v., Sup.	253	318
All Persons, etc.; Islais Creek Reclamation Dist. v., Sup.	252	1043
All Persons, etc.; Sheehan v., App.	252	337
Allyne v. Murasky, Sup.	254	564
Alpine; People v., App.	254	281
Ambassador Hotel Corporation v. Lee, App.	254	1116
Anderson; Waybright v., Sup.	253	148
Archer v. Superior Court of California in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	254	939
Arena v. Bank of Italy, App.	251	338
Arnold; People v., App.	252	635
Arnold v. Sullenger, Sup.	254	267
Babb; Williams v., Sup.	252	1039
Babb's Estate, In re, Sup.	252	1039
Bacciocco; People v., App.	251	817
Baida; Noll v., App.	254	623
Bailes v. Keck, Sup.	254	573
Bailes v. Keck, Sup.	254	577
Ball; Fawcett v., App.	251	679
Ball v. Warner, App.	251	929
Baltimore Hotel Co.; Fry v., App.	252	752
Bandy v. Westover, Sup.	252	593
Bank of Italy; Arena v., App.	251	338
Bank of Italy v. Johnson, Sup.	251	784
Banks v. Pann, App.	254	937
Bargala; People v., App.	253	938
Basalt Rock Co. v. MacMillan, App.	251	322
Bastiani, Ex parte, App.	253	951
Bateman; People v., App.	251	335
Bates v. United Const. Co., App.	253	328
Bauer v. Bauer, App.	253	969
Bava; Citti v., App.	254	299
Bava; Dei v., App.	254	306
Baxter v. Boston-Pacific Oil Co., App.	253	185
Baxter v. King, App.	253	172
Bealey; People v., App.	254	628
Beck; Scott v., App.	254	637

P.

	Vol.	Page
Bedoy; People v., App.	252	1061
Bennett v. Logan & Bryan, App.	252	662
Binney v. San Dimas Lemon Ass'n, App.	253	346
Black; People v., App.	251	321
Blackwell; People v., App.	253	964
Blanc, Ex parte, App.	252	1053
Bleakmore; Pacific Bone, Coal & Fertilizer Co. v., App.	254	618
Blodgett v. Superior Court of Santa Barbara County, App.	254	913
Blumenthal v. Larson, App.	251	241
Board of Dental Examiners of California; Homan v., App.	254	907
Bocchio; People v., App.	251	672
Bond; Dam v., App.	251	818
Bonestell; Graham v., Sup.	253	1115
Booth v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, App.	254	617
Boston-Pacific Oil Co.; Baxter v., App.	253	185
Boyer; Hillwig v., App.	254	662
Brashear; First Nat. Bank v., Sup.	253	143
Brenot v. Southern Pac. R. Co., App.	254	917
Brocco; People v., App.	253	1115
Brown; People v., App.	253	735
Browning v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, two cases, Sup.	254	551
Brun v. Evans, App.	251	330
Bullwinkel; Fifield v., App.	253	962
Burckard v. Smith, App.	251	663
Burdick v. Kerkovecz, App.	254	684
Burt v. Forrest, App.	254	296
Byrne v. Western Pipe & Steel Co. of California, App.	253	776
Caldwell; Vaughan v., Sup.	253	929
California Highway Commission, Department of Engineering, v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	251	808
California Nat. Bank v. El Dorado Lime & Minerals Co., Sup.	253	704
Callan; Stransky v., App.	253	960
Calvert; People v., App.	251	244
Carl v. Eade, App.	253	750
Carmona; People v., App.	251	315
Central-Gaither Union School Dist.; Hartwig v., Sup.	253	733
Chaffin; People v., App.	254	291
Chaplin v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	253	954
Chapman; Hutton v., App.	253	942
Charles L. Donohoe Co. v. Superior Court of Glenn County, App.	252	659
Chester R. Pyle Co. v. Fossler, Sup.	252	599
Chiappari; People v., App.	253	338
Chin Chew; Smith v., App.	254	599
Christianson; Kenny v., Sup.	253	715
Citti v. Bava, App.	254	299
City Council of Berkeley; Dwyer v., Sup.	253	932
City of Los Angeles v. Hannon, App.	251	247
City of Los Angeles v. Vickers, App.	254	687
City of Sacramento v. Goddard, Sup.	252	329
City of San Diego v. Cuyamaca Water Co., App.	251	341
City of Venice; Schultz v., Sup.	251	913
Clark; Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v., App.	254	306
Clark; Walker v., App.	252	334
Clary's Estate, In re, App.	253	778
Clavey v. Loney, App.	251	232
Cline; Mott v., Sup.	253	718
Clover v. Jackson, App.	253	187

	Vol.	Page
Cole v. Low, App.	254	676
Cole; Wilson v., App.	252	757
Commercial Mortg. Co.; Haines v., Sup.	254	956
Compson; MacFadden v., App.	254	622
Cooley; Western Electric Co. v., App.	251	331
Coombs v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	253	976
Coombs v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	252	1069
Cornbleth v. Allen, App.	251	87
Costa; People v., App.	253	940
Cosulich v. Stempel, App.	253	344
Coyle; People v., App.	254	597
Crawford v. Imperial Irr. Dist., Sup.	253	726
Cullinan v. Mercantile Trust Co. of California, App.	252	647
Cullinan v. Mercantile Trust Co. of California, App.	252	652
Curtin v. Salomon, App.	251	237
Cuyamaca Water Co.; City of San Diego v., App.	251	341
Daly; Sexton v., Sup.	251	778
Dam v. Bond, App.	251	818
Davis; Hulse v., Sup.	253	136
Davis v. Monte, App.	253	352
De Fehr; People v., App.	254	588
Dei v. Bava, App.	254	306
De La Torre v. Johnson, Sup.	254	1105
Denault; People v., App.	253	151
DeWitt v. Sides, App.	254	668
Dickey v. Dunn, App.	252	770
Dickey v. Walrond, Sup.	253	706
Dickson v. Keeler, App.	254	919
Diederichsen; Hinde v., Sup.	254	561
Dillingham; Horney v., App.	253	970
District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate Dist., Division 2; Fay v., Sup.	254	896
District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate Dist., Division 2; Landon v., Sup.	254	907
Doe; Search v., Sup.	253	1115
Domenighini; People v., App.	254	292
Donohoe Co. v. Superior Court of Glenn County, App.	252	659
Dover; Fleming v., Sup.	251	637
Downs v. Kroeger, Sup.	254	1101
Doyle v. Jordan, Sup.	252	577
Duffey v. Duffey, App.	251	218
Dunn; Dickey v., App.	252	770
Dunn; Trull v., App.	251	226
Dwyer v. City Council of Berkeley, Sup.	253	932
Eade; Carl v., App.	253	750
E. A. Portal Co.; Mahl v., App.	254	278
Edwards; Palo Verde Land & Water Co. v., App.	254	922
El Dorado Lime & Minerals Co.; California Nat. Bank v., Sup.	253	704
Emigh v. Wood, App.	253	947
Emmons; People v., App.	252	666
Engelberg v. Sebastiani, App.	253	340
England; Skellenger v., App.	253	191
Enlow v. Irwin, App.	251	658
Enterprise Dairy Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	254	274
Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States; Minnis v., App.	253	341
Evans; Brun v., App.	251	330
Ewald; Waller v., Sup.	252	1052
Fanta v. Maddex, App.	252	630

	Vol.	Page
Farren v. Hobbs, Sup.	253	320
Fashion Hat Frame Co. v. Ringel, App.	254	275
Fawcett v. Ball, App.	251	679
Fay v. District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate Dist., Division 2, Sup.	254	896
Feather River Lumber Co.; Lane v., App.	251	838
Felton Water Co. v. Superior Court in and for Santa Cruz County, App.	254	915
Fernandes; Foster v., Sup.	252	726
Ferrari; People v., App.	251	692
Field; Johnston v., Sup.	254	269
Fifield v. Bullwinkel, App.	253	962
Fink; Morlock v., App.	254	578
Finn v. Goldstein, App.	251	964
Finn; National Bank of New Zealand v., App.	253	757
Firpo v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., App.	251	657
First Nat. Bank v. Brashear, Sup.	253	143
First Nat. Bank; Jackson v., App.	252	743
First Nat. Bank; Luckehe v., App.	253	337
First Nat. Bank; Redo y Cia v., Sup.	252	587
First Nat. Bank v. Silva, Sup.	254	262
Fisher Finance Corporation; Murdock v., App.	251	319
Fleming v. Dover, Sup.	251	637
Fleming's Estate, In re, Sup.	251	637
Flesher, Ex parte, App.	252	1057
Foote; Marshall v., App.	252	1075
Forbell v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	254	890
Ford; People v., App.	253	966
Forrest; Burt v., App.	254	296
Foskett; Havens v., App.	254	642
Fossler; Chester R. Pyle Co. v., Sup.	252	599
Foster v. Fernandes, Sup.	252	726
Foster; Sheean v., App.	251	235
Fowler; Lewis v., App.	252	786
Francisco & Ellington v. Pasadena Tournament of Roses Ass'n, App.	252	652
Fraser; People v., App.	253	340
Fraters Glass & Paint Co. v. Southwestern Const. Co., Sup.	254	1097
Frazer; People v., App.	252	633
Fred W. Hauger Motors Co. v. Reidy, Sup.	253	1114
Fry v. Baltimore Hotel Co., App.	252	752
Gadd, Inc., v. Workman, Sup.	253	700
Gandy; General Motors Acceptance Corporation v., Sup.	253	137
Garabedian; Hodoian v., App.	251	227
Garey; Mousseau v., Sup.	252	324
Gavin, Ex parte, App.	251	231
General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Gandy, Sup.	253	137
Ghysels; People v., App.	252	1067
Gibbon v. Justices' Court of City and County of San Francisco, App.	253	961
Gibson v. Hercules Mfg. & Sales Co., App.	252	780
Gilbert; Rauschan v., App.	253	173
Glaze; Helfer v., App.	252	1078
Globe Cotton Oil Mills v. Zellerbach, Sup.	252	1038
Goddard; City of Sacramento v., Sup.	252	329
Goeppner, Ex parte, App.	251	939
Goetting v. Goetting, App.	252	656
Goldberg; Iwata v., App.	253	331
Goldstein; Finn v., App.	251	964
Gould; Norland v., Sup.	254	560
Gould v. Otto, App.	254	272

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Gracey v. Gracey, Sup.	253	921
Gracey's Estate, In re, Sup.	253	921
Graham v. Bonestell, Sup.	253	1115
Gray v. Hall, App.	254	911
Haines v. Commercial Mortg. Co., Sup.	254	956
Hale; People v., App.	254	639
Hall; Gray v., App.	254	911
Hall v. Imperial Water Co. No. 3, Sup.	251	912
Hall v. Imperial Water Co. No. 5, Sup.	251	912
Hamberger-Polhemus Co. v. Hind, Rolph & Co., App.	254	615
Hamer; Honn v., App.	253	336
Hammond; Sloane v., App.	254	648
Hannon; City of Los Angeles v., App.	251	247
Harris, Ex parte, App.	253	953
Harris; People v., App.	251	823
Hartwig v. Central-Gaither Union School Dist., Sup.	253	733
Hartwig v. Proper, Sup.	253	734
Hatch; Wagg v., App.	253	1116
Haub v. Tuttle, App.	251	925
Hauger Motors Co. v. Reidy, Sup.	253	1114
Haupt v. Lindahl, Sup.	252	597
Haupt's Estate, In re, Sup.	252	597
Havens v. Foskett, App.	254	642
Hawk; Robinet v., Sup.	252	1045
Hayes v. O'Marr, App.	253	749
Haynes v. Los Angeles Ry. Corporation, App.	252	1072
Helfer v. Glaze, App.	252	1078
Heney v. Heney, App.	251	841
Henry v. Lingsweiler, App.	253	357
Hercules Gasoline Co.; Robbins v., App.	251	697
Hercules Mfg. & Sales Co.; Gibson v., App.	252	780
Herminghaus v. Southern California Edison Co., Sup.	252	607
Hershey v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, Sup.	254	542
Hillwig v. Boyer, App.	254	662
Hinde v. Diederichsen, Sup.	254	561
Hinde's Estate, In re, Sup.	254	561
Hind, Rolph & Co.; Hamberger-Polhemus Co. v., App.	254	615
Hobbs; Farren v., Sup.	253	320
Hodoian v. Garabedian, App.	251	227
Homan v. Board of Dental Examiners of California, App.	254	907
Honn v. Hamer, App.	253	336
Hooper; Mella v., Sup.	254	256
Hornbeck; Mathews v., App.	252	667
Horney v. Dillingham, App.	253	970
Houle; Neilson v., Sup.	254	891
Hughes; Lower v., App.	251	952
Hughes v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	252	575
Hull v. Ray, App.	251	810
Hulse v. Davis, Sup.	253	136
Hunt v. L. M. Field, Inc., App.	254	594
Hunt, Mirk & Co. v. Patterson, Sup.	253	317
Hutchison v. Reclamation Dist. No. 1619, App.	254	606
Hutton v. Chapman, App.	253	942
Illbeg; Naffziger v., App.	254	276
Imperial Irr. Dist.; Crawford v., Sup.	253	726
Imperial Water Co. No. 3; Hall v., Sup.	251	912
Imperial Water Co. No. 5; Hall v., Sup.	251	912

	Vol.	Page
Industrial Accident Commission; California Highway Commission, Department of Engineering, v., Sup.	251	808
Industrial Accident Commission; Coombs v., App.	253	976
Industrial Accident Commission; San Francisco & S. R. Co. v., App.	251	931
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Alaska Packers' Ass'n v., Sup.	253	926
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Coombs v., App.	252	1069
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Enterprise Dairy Co. v., App.	254	274
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Knock v., Sup.	253	712
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Liptak v., Sup.	251	635
Industrial Accident Commission of California; London Guarantee & Accident Co. v., App.	253	323
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Montezuma Mountain Ranch School v., App.	251	948
Industrial Accident Commission of California; New York Indemnity Co. v., App.	252	775
Industrial Accident Commission of California; North Elk Oil Co. v., App.	254	582
Industrial Accident Commission of California; York Junction Transfer & Storage Co. v., App.	254	279
Irwin; Enlow v., App.	251	658
Islais Creek Reclamation Dist. v. All Persons, etc., Sup.	252	1043
Iwata v. Goldberg, App.	253	331
Jackson; Clover v., App.	253	187
Jackson v. First Nat. Bank, App.	252	743
Jahnke v. Jahnke, App.	253	752
James v. James, App.	251	666
John L. Benwell, Inc.; Lancel v., App.	253	963
Johnson; Bank of Italy v., Sup.	251	784
Johnson; De La Torre v., Sup.	254	1105
Johnson; People v., App.	254	1118
Johnson v. Seelye, App.	251	646
Johnson v. Studley, App.	252	638
Johnson's Estate, In re, Sup.	252	1049
Johnson's Estate, In re, Sup.	252	1052
Johnston v. Field, Sup.	254	269
Jordan; Doyle v., Sup.	252	577
Jordan; Perkins Mfg. Co. v., Sup.	254	551
Joyce; McDonough v., Sup.	251	916
Justices' Court of City and County of San Francisco; Gibbon v., App.	253	961
Justice's Court of Township No. 1 in Shasta County; Turner Hardware & Implement Co. v., App.	254	601
Kahn Bros.; Oles v., App.	253	158
Katz v. T. I. Butler Co., App.	254	679
Keck; Bailes v., Sup.	254	573
Keck; Bailes v., Sup.	254	577
Keeler; Dickson v., App.	254	919
Keller; People v., App.	254	580
Kelley; People v., App.	253	773
Kenny v. Christianson, Sup.	253	715
Kerkovecz; Burdick v., App.	254	684
Kimball v. Tully, Sup.	252	591
Kimball's Estate, In re, Sup.	252	591
King; Baxter v., App.	253	172
Knock v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, Sup.	253	712
Kochritz; W. H. Marston Co. v., App.	251	959
Kopp; People v., App.	253	1115

	Vol.	Page
Kroeger; Downs v., Sup.	254	1101
Kruger; Longmire v., App.	251	692
Kruse v. White Bros., App.	253	178
Lackey v. Olds & Stoller Interexchange, App.	252	672
Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee of Portlaioghis; Maher v., Sup.	251	311
Lamborn v. Lamborn, App.	251	943
Lancel v. John L. Benwell, Inc., App.	253	963
Landon v. District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate Dist., Division 2, Sup.	254	907
Lane v. Feather River Lumber Co., App.	251	838
Langford v. Thomas, Sup.	252	602
Larson; Blumenthal v., App.	251	241
Lasley, In re, App.	254	913
Lauffer; Linser v., App.	253	1110
Lee; Ambassador Hotel Corporation v., App.	254	1116
Lee; People v., App.	252	763
Lee's Estate, In re, Sup.	253	145
Lewis v. Fowler, App.	252	786
Lierly v. McEwen, App.	254	587
Lillywhite v. Superior Court within and for Los Angeles County, App.	251	945
Lindahl; Haupt v., Sup.	252	597
Lindgren v. Weaver, App.	252	669
Lingsweiler; Henry v., App.	253	357
Linkous v. Sunderland, App.	254	919
Linser v. Lauffer, App.	253	1110
Liptak v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, Sup.	251	635
L. M. Field, Inc.; Hunt v., App.	254	594
Logan & Bryan; Bennett v., App.	252	662
London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	253	323
Loney; Clavey v., App.	251	232
Longmire v. Kruger, App.	251	692
Lopez; People v., App.	253	169
Los Angeles City School Dist. of Los Angeles County v. Odell, Sup.	254	570
Los Angeles Creamery Co.; Schurman v., App.	254	681
Los Angeles Ry. Corporation; Haynes v., App.	252	1072
Low; Cole v., App.	254	676
Lower v. Hughes, App.	251	952
Luckehe v. First Nat. Bank, App.	253	337
Luna, Ex parte, App.	253	151
Lyons; People v., App.	251	648
Lyons; Miller v., Sup.	252	330
McConnell; People v., App.	252	1068
McDonough v. Joyce, Sup.	251	916
McDonough's Estate, In re, Sup.	251	916
McEwen; Lierly v., App.	254	587
MacFadden v. Compson, App.	254	622
McGowan; People v., App.	251	643
McKean v. Alliance Land Co., Sup.	253	134
McKee; People v., App.	251	675
McKenry v. Western Union Tel. Co., App.	253	333
McKeon v. Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, App.	254	944
Mackie; Nuetzel v., App.	253	166
Maclay Rancho Realty Co. v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	254	287
MacMillan; Basalt Rock Co. v., App.	251	322
McNett; People v., App.	251	688
Maddex; Fanta v., App.	252	630

	Vol.	Page
Maher v. Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee of Portlaioghis, Sup.	251	311
Mahl v. E. A. Portal Co., App.	254	278
Mahoney; People v., App.	254	932
Makings, Ex parte, Sup.	253	918
Manriquez v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, Sup.	251	1118
Manuel; Price v., App.	253	746
Marsh v. Marsh, App.	252	1071
Marshall v. Foote, App.	252	1075
Marston Co. v. Kochritz, App.	251	959
Martello v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	254	658
Mathews v. Hornbeck, App.	252	667
May; People v., App.	253	961
Mazuran v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	253	951
Mazzola; People v., App.	251	222
Mella v. Hooper, Sup.	254	256
Mercantile Trust Co. of California; Cullinan v., App.	252	647
Mercantile Trust Co. of California; Cullinan v., App.	252	652
Merz v. Poole, App.	254	914
Metcalfe's Estate, In re, Sup.	251	202
Meyer v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	254	1108
Miller v. Lyons, Sup.	252	330
Miller; Yule v., App.	252	733
Miller v. Yule, App.	252	737
Minnis v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, App.	253	341
Mitchell; People v., App.	251	682
Mix v. Yoakum, Sup.	254	557
Moeller's Estate, In re, Sup.	251	311
Monte; Davis v., App.	253	352
Montezuma Mountain Ranch School v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	251	948
Morgan's Estate, In re, Sup.	253	702
Morlock v. Fink, App.	254	578
Morris v. Standard Oil Co., Sup.	252	605
Motor Transit Co.; Offerdahl v., App.	252	773
Mott v. Cline, Sup.	253	718
Mousseau v. Garey, Sup.	252	324
Muchenberger v. Santa Monica, Sup.	252	727
Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Hughes v., Sup.	252	575
Murasky; Allyne v., Sup.	254	564
Murdock v. Fisher Finance Corporation, App.	251	319
Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Clark, App.	254	306
Naffziger v. Illbeg, App.	254	276
Napolitano v. Superior Court within and for Los Angeles County, App.	254	647
National Bank of New Zealand v. Finn, App.	253	757
Neilson v. Houle, Sup.	254	891
Nelson; Nichols v., App.	252	739
Netherlands Fire & Life Ins. Co. of The Hague, Holland; Siskin v., Sup.	251	922
New York Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	252	775
Niagara Fire Ins. Co. of New York; Siskin v., Sup.	251	922
Nichols v. Nelson, App.	252	739
Noll v. Baida, App.	254	623
Norland v. Gould, Sup.	254	560
North; People v., App.	252	1063
North Elk Oil Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	254	582

P.

	Vol.	Page
Nuetzel v. Mackie, App.	253	166
Ocean Industries v. Superior Court of California, in and for Santa Cruz County, Sup.	252	722
O'Connell, Ex parte, App.	251	661
O'Connor, Ex parte, App.	252	730
O'Connor; People v., App.	254	630
O'Connor's Estate, In re, Sup.	254	269
Odell; Los Angeles City School Dist. of Los Angeles County v., Sup.	254	570
Offeman v. Robertson-Cole Studios, App.	251	830
Offerdahl v. Motor Transit Co., App.	252	773
O'Kuna v. Small Claims Court of Palo Alto Tp., Santa Clara County, App.	254	291
Olds & Stoller v. Seifert, App.	254	289
Olds & Stoller Interexchange; Lackey v., App.	252	672
Oles v. Kahn Bros., App.	253	158
Olympic Auditorium v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	253	944
O'Marr; Hayes v., App.	253	749
Otten v. Riesener Chocolate Co., App.	254	942
Otto; Gould v., App.	254	272
Owen; People v., App.	251	686
Pacific Bone, Coal & Fertilizer Co. v. Bleakmore, App.	254	618
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Forbell v., Sup.	254	890
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Phillips v., App.	252	628
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Zolkover v., App.	254	926
Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co.; Firpo v., App.	251	657
Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings Bank v. Ross, App.	253	351
Padilla; People v., App.	254	585
Palo Verde Land & Water Co. v. Edwards, App.	254	922
Pann; Banks v., App.	254	937
Parker's Estate, In re, Sup.	251	907
Parkinson; People v., App.	254	612
Pasadena Tournament of Roses Ass'n; Francisco & Ellington v., App.	252	652
Passarello; People v., App.	251	949
Patterson; Hunt, Mirk & Co. v., Sup.	253	317
Patterson v. Southern Trust Co., App.	251	938
Patton; People v., App.	254	291
Payne; Simpson v., App.	251	324
Peairs, In re, App.	252	745
Pedel; People v., App.	254	298
Pengelly v. Pengelly, Sup.	253	323
People v. Allan, App.	252	779
People v. Allison, Sup.	253	318
People v. Alpine, App.	254	281
People v. Arnold, App.	252	635
People v. Bacciocco, App.	251	817
People v. Bargala, App.	253	938
People v. Bateman, App.	251	335
People v. Bealey, App.	254	628
People v. Bedoy, App.	252	1061
People v. Black, App.	251	321
People v. Blackwell, App.	253	964
People v. Bocchio, App.	251	672
People v. Brocco, App.	253	1115
People v. Brown, App.	253	735
People v. Calvert, App.	251	244
People v. Carmona, App.	251	315
People v. Chaffin, App.	254	291
People v. Chiappari, App.	253	338

	Vol.	Page
People v. Costa, App.	253	940
People v. Coyle, App.	254	597
People v. De Fehr, App.	254	588
People v. Denault, App.	253	151
People v. Domenighini, App.	254	292
People v. Emmons, App.	252	666
People v. Ferrari, App.	251	692
People v. Ford, App.	253	966
People v. Fraser, App.	253	340
People v. Frazer, App.	252	633
People v. Ghysels, App.	252	1067
People v. Hale, App.	254	639
People v. Harris, App.	251	823
People v. Johnson, App.	254	1118
People v. Keller, App.	254	580
People v. Kelley, App.	253	773
People v. Kopp, App.	253	1115
People v. Lee, App.	252	763
People v. Lopez, App.	253	169
People v. Lyons, App.	251	648
People v. McConnell, App.	252	1068
People v. McGowan, App.	251	643
People v. McKee, App.	251	675
People v. McNett, App.	251	688
People v. Mahoney, App.	254	932
People v. May, App.	253	961
People v. Mazzola, App.	251	222
People v. Mitchell, App.	251	682
People v. North, App.	252	1063
People v. O'Connor, App.	254	630
People v. Owen, App.	251	686
People v. Padilla, App.	254	585
People v. Parkinson, App.	254	612
People v. Passarello, App.	251	949
People v. Patton, App.	254	291
People v. Pedel, App.	254	298
People v. Perry, App.	253	1115
People v. Price, App.	254	640
People v. Rabe, App.	254	602
People v. Ramos, App.	251	941
People v. Reid, App.	251	219
People v. Richards, App.	253	162
People v. Russell, App.	251	699
People v. Sandoval, Sup.	254	893
People v. Seiffert, App.	253	189
People v. Shaffer, App.	254	666
People v. Shaw, App.	253	747
People v. Simon, App.	252	758
People v. Smith, App.	251	958
People v. Smith, App.	253	1116
People v. Spaulding, App.	254	614
People v. Stafford, App.	253	183
People v. Sugarman, App.	251	949
People v. Swigart, App.	251	343
People v. Taylor, App.	252	729
People v. Turlock Home Telephone & Telegraph Co., Sup.	253	1108
People v. Warrington, App.	251	327

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Woollacott, App.	251	826
People v. York, App.	253	1116
People v. Young, App.	253	1116
Perkins Mfg. Co. v. Jordan, Sup.	254	551
Perry; People v., App.	253	1115
Peter R. Gadd, Inc., v. Workman, Sup.	253	700
Phillips v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., App.	252	628
Phœnix Assur. Co., Limited, of London v. Texas Holding Co., App.	252	1082
Platt Music Co.; Rubin v., App.	251	243
Poole; Merz v., App.	254	914
Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Railroad Commission of California, Sup.	254	258
Povlitzki, Ex parte, App.	251	940
Price v. Manuel, App.	253	746
Price; People v., App.	254	640
Proper; Hartwig v., Sup.	253	734
Pugliese v. Pugliese, Sup.	254	266
Pyle Co. v. Fossler, Sup.	252	599
Rabe; People v., App.	254	602
Railroad Commisssion of California; Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v., Sup.	254	258
Ramm; Russell v., Sup.	254	532
Ramos; People v., App.	251	941
Rauschan v. Gilbert, App.	253	173
Ray; Hull v., App.	251	810
Reclamation Dist. No. 108; Browning v., Sup.	254	551
Reclamation Dist. No. 108; Hershey v., Sup.	254	542
Reclamation Dist. No. 1619; Hutchison v., App.	254	606
Redo y Cia v. First Nat. Bank, Sup.	252	587
Reid; People v., App.	251	219
Reidy; Fred W. Hauger Motors Co. v., Sup.	253	1114
Rheinschild, In re, App.	254	931
Riccardi, In re, App.	251	650
Richards; People v., App.	253	162
Rider's Estate, In re, Sup.	251	805
Rider's Estate, In re, Sup.	251	807
Rider's Estate, In re, two cases, Sup.	251	799
Riesener Chocolate Co.; Otten v., App.	254	942
Riley; Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v., Sup.	251	207
Ringel; Fashion Hat Frame Co. v., App.	254	275
Riverside County v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., App.	252	776
Robbins v. Hercules Gasoline Co., App.	251	697
Roberts v. Roberts, App.	253	1112
Robertson-Cole Studios; Offeman v., App.	251	830
Robinet v. Hawk, Sup.	252	1045
Rose v. Superior Court in and for Imperial County, App.	252	765
Rosenberg v. San Francisco Storage Co., App.	254	909
Ross; Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings Bank v., App.	253	351
Ross v. Ross, App.	254	683
Rubin v. Platt Music Co., App.	251	243
Ruppe, Ex parte, App.	252	746
Russell; People v., App.	251	699
Russell v. Ramm, Sup.	254	532
Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Riley, Sup.	251	207
Salomon; Curtin v., App.	251	237
Salzberger & Sons; Wright v., App.	254	671
San Dimas Lemon Ass'n; Binney v., App.	253	346
Sandoval; People v., Sup.	254	893

	P. Vol.	Page
San Francisco Breweries v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	251	935
San Francisco Storage Co.; Rosenberg v., App.	254	909
San Francisco & S. R. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	251	931
San Joaquin Grocery Co. v. Trewhitt, App.	252	332
Santa Monica; Muchenberger v., Sup.	252	727
Sarnow; Sutton-Watts v., App.	251	654
Schainman v. Sommer, App.	253	783
Schmeiser Mfg. Co.; Willett v., App.	251	932
Schrader; Smith v., App.	251	967
Schultz v. City of Venice, Sup.	251	913
Schurman v. Los Angeles Creamery Co., App.	254	681
Scott, Ex parte, App.	254	596
Scott v. Beck, App.	254	637
Search v. Doe, Sup.	253	1115
Sebastiani; Engelberg v., App.	253	340
Seelye; Johnson v., App.	251	646
Seifert; Olds & Stoller v., App.	254	289
Seiffert; People v., App.	253	189
Sexton v. Daly, Sup.	251	778
Sexton's Estate, In re, Sup.	251	778
Shaffer; People v., App.	254	666
Shaw; People v., App.	253	747
Sheean v. Foster, App.	251	235
Sheehan v. All Persons, etc., App.	252	337
Sherman v. Sherman, App.	253	945
Sides; DeWitt v., App.	254	668
Silva; First Nat. Bank v., Sup.	254	262
Simon; People v., App.	252	758
Simpson v. Payne, App.	251	324
Siskin v. Alliance Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, Sup.	251	922
Siskin v. Netherlands Fire & Life Ins. Co. of The Hague, Holland, Sup.	251	922
Siskin v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. of New York, Sup.	251	922
Skellenger v. England, App.	253	191
Sloane v. Hammond, App.	254	648
Small Claims Court of Palo Alto Tp., Santa Clara County; O'Kuna v., App.	254	291
Smith; Burckard v., App.	251	663
Smith v. Chin Chew, App.	254	599
Smith; People v., App.	251	958
Smith; People v., App.	253	1116
Smith v. Schrader, App.	251	967
Smith v. Smith, Sup.	254	567
Smith v. Smith, Sup.	254	1117
Smith v. Spaulding, Sup.	252	325
Smith; Turlock Merchants & Growers v., App.	251	683
Smith's Estate, In re, Sup.	252	325
Smith's Estate, In re, Sup.	254	567
Snodgrass v. Snodgrass, two cases, App.	253	755
Sommer; Schainman v., App.	253	783
Southern California Edison Co.; Herminghaus v., Sup.	252	607
Southern Pac. R. Co.; Brenot v., App.	254	917
Southern Trust Co.; Patterson v., App.	251	938
Southwestern Const. Co.; Fraters Glass & Paint Co. v., Sup.	254	1097
Spaulding; People v., App.	254	614
Spaulding; Smith v., Sup.	252	325
Stafford; People v., App.	253	183

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Staley, Ex parte, App.	252	752
Standard Oil Co.; Morris v., Sup.	252	605
Standard Realty Co.; Tatterson v., App.	253	770
Stanton v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, two cases, App.	253	973
Stearns v. Abbott, Sup.	251	907
Stempel; Cosulich v., App.	253	344
Stitzinger v. Truitt, App.	253	971
Stock; Turner v., App.	251	814
Stransky v. Callan, App.	253	960
Studley; Johnson v., App.	252	638
Sugarman; People v., App.	251	949
Sullenger; Arnold v., Sup.	254	267
Sunderland; Linkous v., App.	254	919
Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; McKeon v., App.	254	944
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Meyer v., Sup.	254	1108
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; San Francisco Breweries v., App.	251	935
Superior Court in and for Imperial County; Rose v., App.	252	765
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Abbott v., App.	251	221
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Chaplin v., App.	253	954
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Martello v., App.	254	658
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Mazuran v., App.	253	951
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Olympic Auditorium v., App.	253	944
Superior Court in and for Mendocino County; Wessels v., Sup.	253	135
Superior Court in and for Santa Cruz County; Felton Water Co. v., App.	254	915
Superior Court of California, in and for City and County of San Francisco; Archer v., App.	254	939
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Maclay Rancho Realty Co. v., App.	254	287
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Manriquez v., Sup.	251	1118
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Stanton v., App.	253	973
Superior Court of California, in and for Santa Cruz County; Ocean Industries v., Sup.	252	722
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Booth v., App.	254	617
Superior Court of Glenn County; Charles L. Donohoe Co. v., App.	252	659
Superior Court of Santa Barbara County; Blodgett v., App.	254	913
Superior Court within and for Los Angeles County; Lillywhite v., App.	251	945
Superior Court within and for Los Angeles County; Napolitano v., App.	254	647
Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, App.	251	654
Swigart; People v., App.	251	343
Tassey, Ex parte, App.	253	948
Tatterson v. Standard Realty Co., App.	253	770
Taylor; People v., App.	252	729
Texas Holding Co.; Phœnix Assur. Co., Limited, of London v., App.	252	1082
Thomas; Langford v., Sup.	252	602
Thompson v. Watkins, Sup.	253	697
Thompson's Estate, In re, Sup.	253	697
Thomson v. Thomson, App.	254	644
T. I. Butler Co.; Katz v., App.	254	679
Tilden v. Tilden, App.	254	310
Title Insurance & Trust Co.; Riverside County v., App.	252	776
Toler; Wagg v., App.	251	973

P.

	Vol.	Page
Trewhitt; San Joaquin Grocery Co. v., App.	252	332
Truitt; Stitzinger v., App.	253	971
Trull v. Dunn, App.	251	226
Tully; Kimball v., Sup.	252	591
Turlock Home Telephone & Telegraph Co.; People v., Sup.	253	1108
Turlock Merchants & Growers v. Smith, App.	251	683
Turner v. Stock, App.	251	814
Turner Hardware & Implement Co. v. Justice's Court of Township No. 1 in Shasta County, App.	254	601
Tuttle; Haub v., App.	251	925
United Const. Co.; Bates v., App.	253	328
Van der Vliet v. Van der Vliet, Sup.	254	945
Vaughan v. Caldwell, Sup.	253	929
Vickers; City of Los Angeles v., App.	254	687
Vieux v. Vieux, App.	251	640
Wagg v. Hatch, App.	253	1116
Wagg v. Toler, App.	251	973
Walker v. Clark, App.	252	334
Wallace v. Zinman, Sup.	254	946
Waller v. Ewald, Sup.	252	1052
Walrond; Dickey v., Sup.	253	706
Warner; Ball v., App.	251	929
Warrington; People v., App.	251	327
Washer, Ex parte, Sup.	254	951
Watkins; Thompson v., Sup.	253	697
Waybright v. Anderson, Sup.	253	148
Weaver; Lindgren v., App.	252	669
Wessels v. Superior Court in and for Mendocino County, Sup.	253	135
Western Electric Co. v. Cooley, App.	251	331
Western Pipe & Steel Co. of California; Byrne v., App.	253	776
Western Union Tel. Co.; McKenry v., App.	253	333
Westover; Bandy v., Sup.	252	593
White Bros.; Kruse v., App.	253	178
W. H. Marston Co. v. Kochritz, App.	251	959
Willett v. Schmeiser Mfg. Co., App.	251	932
Williams v. Babb, Sup.	252	1039
Wilson v. Cole, App.	252	757
Wood; Emigh v., App.	253	947
Woollacott; People v., App.	251	826
Workman; Peter R. Gadd, Inc., v., Sup.	253	700
Wright v. Salzberger & Sons, App.	254	671
Yoakum; Mix v., Sup.	254	557
Yoder, In re, Sup.	251	205
Yoder v. Yoder, Sup.	251	205
York; People v., App.	253	1116
York Junction Transfer & Storage Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	254	279
Young; People v., App.	253	1116
Yule v. Miller, App.	252	733
Yule; Miller v., App.	252	737
Zellerbach; Globe Cotton Oil Mills v., Sup.	252	1038
Zinman; Wallace v., Sup.	254	946
Zolkover v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., App.	254	926

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

251 PACIFIC REPORTER

80 Cal. App. 459

CORNBLETH et al. v. ALLEN et al. (Civ. 5507.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 28, 1926. Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 24, 1927.)

1. Deeds 🔑181—Reformation of instruments 🔑11—Equity may supply conditions in deed, omitted through mutual mistake, and parties may effect same result by written agreement.

Where conditions have been omitted from deed through mutual mistake, court of equity may supply omission, and same result may be extrajudicially effected by written agreement of parties.

2. Deeds 🔑144(1), 155—Conditional estate is created by deed reverting title to vendor on breach of restrictions; re-entry clause being unnecessary.

Deed and agreement restraining use of land, except for certain type of residence under penalty of reversion of title to vendor, show intention to create conditional estate in which case clause of re-entry is unnecessary.

3. Deeds 🔑158—Grantor under deed reverting title for breach of restriction reserved interest against subsequent purchaser, though original deed made no reference to dominant tenement.

Though deed by adjoining owner, restricting use of property to certain type of dwelling under penalty of reversion of title to grantor, contained no reference to dominant tenement, grantor reserved interest in property conveyed against purchaser of original grantee having constructive knowledge of restriction.

4. Deeds 🔑147—Owner of property has right to annex condition to conveyance.

Right to annex condition to conveyance is necessary incident to right to own and convey property.

5. Vendor and purchaser 🔑231(16)—Purchasers of property have constructive notice of recorded agreement restraining use of property described and referring to original deed (Civ. Code, §§ 1213, 1215).

Agreement between grantor and grantee restricting use of property described and referring to deed, which it was intended to reform, was an instrument affecting title to property described, under Civ. Code, § 1215, and, under section 1213, its recordation was constructive notice to purchasers of property.

6. Deeds 🔑158—Grantee of original purchaser, having constructive or actual notice of condition subsequent in deed to grantor, acquires title subject to condition.

Condition subsequent attached to title in conveyance is binding on grantee under subsequent deed having constructive notice by record or actual notice that title would be subject to condition, though subsequent deed does not recite condition contained in deed to grantor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ralph H. Clock, Judge.

Action by Lou Cornbleth and another against E. L. Allen and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants Georgina E. Freeman and another appeal. Reversed.

Wm. A. Freeman and Altes H. Campbell, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. M. Smuckler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. An action was brought by plaintiffs to quiet title to all of lot 53 of Minelita tract except the north 20 feet thereof; the property described being situated in the county of Los Angeles.

On July 8, 1920, the property was conveyed by grant deed executed by Henry and Georgina E. Freeman, two of the defendants, who are the appellants here, to Anna S. Swenson. The deed, which was recorded on August 5, 1920, contained the following provision:

"Subject to taxes for the fiscal year 1920—21, conditions, restrictions, and reservations of record, and the following: No offices, stores, flats, lodging house, double house, bungalow court, apartment house, or business building of any kind to be erected, kept, or maintained on said property, but a private two-story residence to cost not less than $5,000, and to be placed at a uniform distance of 42½ feet from property line, no building to be erected less than 10 feet from north line of lot conveyed by this deed, these restrictions run until 1920, the penalty for violation is reversion of title to vendor."

Subsequently the grantors and grantee entered into an agreement in writing dated August 19, 1921, and recorded August 26, 1921, which, after reciting the execution of the deed mentioned and that "certain errors were made in the statement of restrictions as contained in said deed, which the parties hereto mutually desire to correct," provided as follows:

"It is agreed by and between the parties hereto that the restrictions set forth in the said deed hereinbefore referred to shall be deemed withdrawn and canceled, and that in lieu of said restrictions and in the place and stead thereof it is mutually agreed that the said real property in the said deed and herein described shall from and after the execution of this agreement be subject to the following restrictions and no others:

"(1) Any and all restrictions which were of record and of force and effect at the time of the execution of the said deed of July 8, 1920.

"(2) Also the following restrictions, which shall have the same force and effect as though they had been embodied in the said deed of July 8, 1920, in the place and stead of erroneous restrictions which were so embodied in said deed: 'No offices, stores, flats, lodging house, double house, bungalow court, apartment house or business building of any kind shall be erected, kept or maintained on the said property. The only buildings which may be erected, kept, or maintained upon the said property shall be a two-story private residence to cost not less than $5,000 and to be placed at a distance of not less than 42½ feet from the front property line and not less than 10 feet from the northerly line of said property conveyed by said deed, together with a private garage and usual and customary outbuildings, which garage and outbuildings shall be placed at a distance of not less than 140 feet from the front property line. These restrictions shall be binding upon the grantee, her heirs, or assigns, during the life of such restrictions, but the restrictions shall become null and void and of no effect after January 1, 1940. In the event of the violation of these restrictions or any part of them by the vendee, her successors or assigns, then the property described herein shall revert to the vendors and their assigns, successors, heirs or devisees."

On January 18, 1922, Anna S. Swenson by grant deed conveyed the property to plaintiffs. In the conveyance no reference was made to the conditions and restrictions contained in the original deed to said grantor or in the subsequent agreement; nor by its terms was the transfer made subject thereto. The answer alleged that appellants at the time of the execution of the deed to Swenson were and still are the owners of the adjoining property and that the provisions of the deed and the agreement were made for their and its benefit. While no findings on these allegations were made, that appellants at all the times mentioned resided on and owned the adjoining property, including the 20 feet excepted from the deed to Swenson, is not disputed. These facts with the testimony of Freeman as to the plan of construction followed, which was likewise undisputed, support no other conclusion than that the object of the provisions mentioned was to effect the benefits alleged.

[1] Where, through mutual mistake, conditions have been omitted from a deed, it is competent for equity to supply the omission (Rice v. Hall [Ky.] 42 S. W. 99, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 814; Tilton v. Tilton, 9 N. H. 385; Sims v. Camp Creek School Dist., 117 S. C. 461, 109 S. E. 148; Hamilton County v. Owens, 138 Ind. 183, 37 N. E. 602); and the same result might be extrajudicially effected by the written agreement of the parties.

[2] The provisions of the deed and agreement sufficiently show an intention to create a conditional estate (Papst v. Hamilton, 133 Cal. 631, 66 P. 10; Behlow v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 130 Cal. 16, 62 P. 295; Los Angeles, etc., Land Co. v. Marr, 187 Cal. 126, 200 P. 1051); and where this is the case a clause of re-entry is unnecessary (Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, 164 Cal. 493, 129 P. 794, 44 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1229; 4 Kent's Comm. [14th Ed.] p. 124).

The restrictions in question were restraints on the use of the property and not upon its alienation, were imposed by way of condition and not by covenant; the distinction, as said in Los Angeles Investment Co. v. Gary, 181 Cal. 680, 186 P. 596, 9 A. L. R. 115, being a decided one, and the principles applicable being quite different.

[3] Respondents contend that, no reference having been made in the original instruments to a dominant tenement, no interest in the property conveyed was reserved, citing Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945; Berryman v. Savoy Hotel Co., 160 Cal. 559, 117 P. 677, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 5. Neither of the cases cited supports respondents' contention; the question there considered being whether the restrictive covenants contained in certain deeds from the original grantors created servitudes and easements as between the parcels conveyed. It was held that to have that effect the intention must be expressed in the grants, and that, in the absence of language indicating that the land conveyed was part of a larger tract, the balance of which the grantor retained, or that the restrictions were intended for the benefit of other lands, or to inure to or pass with other lands, and without any description or designation of a dominant tenement, the restrictive covenants were not enforceable as between the original covenantors or their successors in interest. McBride v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 152, 215 P. 678.

[4] The right to annex a condition to a conveyance is a necessary incident to the right to own and convey property. 18 Cor. Jur. "Deeds," p. 359, § 373. As was said in Los Angeles Investment Co. v. Gary, supra:

> "The instances in which conditions restricting the use of property conveyed have been enforced are exceedingly numerous and the conditions enforced of almost every conceivable variety."

In the instant case the conditions restricting the use of the property were not materially different from those upheld in Firth v. Marovich, 160 Cal. 259, 116 P. 729, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1190, and Strong v. Shatto, 45 Cal. App. 29, 187 P. 159.

[5, 6] The court found that respondents had no notice, actual or constructive, of the agreement mentioned at the time they acquired title on January 18, 1922. The agreement, however, which was recorded on September 10, 1921, was signed and duly acknowledged by the parties, described the property to which it related, and referred to the deed which it was intended to reform, stating the names of the parties thereto, its date, with the date when and the book and page, according to the records of Los Angeles county, in which it had been recorded. The agreement was an instrument affecting the title to the real property described therein and in the deed to which it referred (section 1215, Civ. Code), and its recordation was constructive notice to respondents (Civ. Code, § 1213). A condition subsequent is attached to the title and runs with it as against the grantee of a subsequent deed who has constructive notice by the record or actual notice that his title would be subject to the condition, and it is immaterial that the subsequent deed does not recite the condition contained in the deed to the grantor. Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 P. 855.

It appearing that appellants have an interest in the property conveyed (Strong v. Shatto, supra; Johnston v. City of Los Angeles, 176 Cal. 479, 168 P. 1047), and that the finding that respondents acquired their title without notice thereof is without support, the judgment as to appellants is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

199 Cal. 716

In re METCALFE'S ESTATE. (L. A. 9269.)*

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 3, 1926.)

1. Wills ⚷467—Testator's "desire" that executor pay mortgage out of specific funds on property devised to joint tenant held to require executor to pay it (Code Civ. Proc. § 1560).

Expression in will of testator's "desire" that executor pay mortgage on property devised to mother out of specific funds held to require executor to pay it, notwithstanding that mother was joint tenant with deceased of property in question, where will showed intent to leave mother in possession and ownership of property free from debt; in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1560, "desire" in such case not being precatory.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Desire.]

2. Wills ⚷440, 441, 470—Intention of testator is ascertained from will, taken as whole and in view of circumstances under which it was made.

Intention of testator is to be ascertained from words of will, read as a whole and taken in view, when necessary and appropriate, of circumstances under which it was made.

3. Wills ⚷821(1)—Direction for payment of incumbrance evinces intent of testator that estate shall pass to devisee unincumbered.

Direction in will for payment of incumbrance on estate of decedent evinces intent that estate shall pass to devisee unincumbered.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Mary E. Metcalfe, deceased. From an order denying a petition for an order compelling the executor to liquidate a mortgage, Claude Jennings and another appeal. Reversed, with instructions.

E. J. Miller, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. C. Bowen, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, denying the petition of the appellants for an order of said court compelling the executor of said estate to pay out of the funds of said estate the balance remaining due upon a certain indebtedness of the decedent, secured by a mortgage upon certain real estate, and to thereby relieve the real estate of the incumbrance and penalties of said mortgage through the settlement and dismissal of an action to foreclose said mortgage pending at the time of filing said petition and of the denial thereof by said court. The facts are not in dispute. Mary E. Metcalfe died in Los Angeles on or about the 18th day of November, 1921, being at said time and having been for several years prior thereto a resident of the county of Los Angeles. At the time of her death she was occupying as her residence the real property involved in this controversy. In the year 1920 the deceased and her mother, Fannie Jennings, had acquired said property as joint tenants, and as a part of the purchase price thereof they had given back to the grantors a mortgage thereon for the sum of $5,600, which secured two notes executed by them, each for the sum of $2,800, one of which was to become due on or before June 20, 1922, and the other on or before June 20, 1923. Mary E. Metcalfe left her last will and testament, executed upon March 15, 1921, and which will was admitted to probate on May 26, 1922. The following are the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof:

> "I desire that my just debts be well and truly paid as soon after my decease as conveniently may, from whatever ready cash I may have on hand at the time of my decease, and in case of insufficient cash on hand at the time of my decease, that the remainder of my said debts be paid from the rents from my flat building known as No. 282 and 284 South Rampart street, city of Los Angeles, state of California.
>
> "I hereby give, devise and bequeath unto my beloved mother Fannie Jennings of the city and county of Los Angeles, Cal., my residence known as No. 5334 Victoria avenue, city and county of Los Angeles, Cal., also three promissory notes made and executed and delivered June 1, 1920, by H. M. Kirchbaum of Sioux City, Iowa, wherein and whereby he promised and agreed to pay to me the sum of $4,400 on the 1st day of June, 1922, $4,400 on the 1st day of June, 1923, and $4,400 on the 1st day of June, 1924, the same being three of a series of five notes of the same amount and date each for $4,400, and which said series of notes were secured by a certain real estate mortgage on property in Sioux City, Iowa, which said mortgage I hereby also give, devise and bequeath unto my said mother for the use of herself in the foreclosure or collection of the said notes. I also desire that the said notes be collected, and the proceeds thereof, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be applied upon the payment of the indebtedness against the residence herein given to my said mother, and the balance of the proceeds of the collection of the said notes be paid to my mother, by my executor hereinafter named."

The foregoing will having been duly admitted to probate, V. M. Smith, who was named therein as executor of said will, having been duly appointed and having qualified as such executor, on the 24th day of June, 1922, presented an application to said court, setting forth that one of said notes secured by the aforesaid mortgage had become due and that he had collected and had on hand from the source provided for in said will for the payment of said notes, sufficient money to pay the first of said notes then due, and he therefore prayed for and in due course received an order authorizing and directing him to pay said note, and also to pay the interest then due upon said mortgage to date; and the said note and interest were thereupon paid in accordance with said order. Thereafter, and on August 3, 1925, a petition was presented to said court by Edd Jennings, Claude Jennings, and Martina Jennings, the latter two of whom who are the appellants herein, asking for an order to compel the executor to pay the principal and interest due upon the second of said promissory notes, amounting to the balance secured by said mortgage, and to relieve said property from the lien thereof. It was set forth in said petition that the executor had made collection of the funds provided in decedent's said will for the payment of said indebtedness, and had such funds on hand; that in the meantime an action had been commenced to foreclose said mortgage, which action was then pending, and petitioners prayed that the said executor be required to settle and cause to be dismissed said action and to relieve said property from the incumbrance of said mortgage and of the threatened foreclosure thereof.

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied December 30, 1926.

The respondents herein presented an answer to said petition, admitting, in the main, the allegations thereof, but denying that it was the duty of said executor under the terms of the will to pay and discharge the mortgage; and further setting forth that Fannie Jennings, the mother of said deceased, had acquired the whole of said property, not under and by virtue of the last will of said deceased, but under and by virtue of her right of survivorship as a joint tenant with her said daughter in the ownership of said property, and that subsequent to the death of said deceased, and prior to her own death on November 2, 1922, Fannie Jennings conveyed said property and the whole thereof to Claude Jennings, one of said petitioners and appellants herein, who had thereby become of record the owner and holder thereof. The said petition having come on for hearing upon the issues tendered by the answer of the respondents thereto and the foregoing facts having been presented in evidence, the court made and entered its order denying said petition, from which order this appeal has been taken.

[1, 2] The main question presented is as to whether or not, under the terms of said will above quoted, the executor was thereby required to pay and satisfy said mortgage out of the specific funds provided in said will for the payment of said notes and mortgages, the contention of the executor being that the language of the will in relation thereto is merely precatory and does not amount to an express direction by the testatrix which would be binding upon the executor of her estate.

The language of said will, upon which the foregoing contention of the respondents is predicated, is as follows:

> "I also desire that the said notes be collected and the proceeds thereof, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be applied upon the payment of the indebtedness against the residence hereby given my said mother and the balance of the collection of said notes be paid to my mother by my executor hereinafter named."

It is a cardinal rule for the construction of wills that the intention of the testator is to be ascertained from the words of the will, read as a whole and taken in view, when necessary or appropriate, of the circumstances under which it was made. Estate of Heydenfeldt, 106 Cal. 434, 39 P. 788; Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 666, 669, 61 P. 964, 64 P. 1071. Applying this principle in its fullness to the last will and testament of the decedent, Mary E. Metcalfe, for the purpose of ascertaining the scope, effect, and intent of her use of the word "desire" in the foregoing clause of her will, we discover in the first of the foregoing subdivisions thereof a definitely expressed purpose with respect to the payment out of certain specified assets of what might be termed her ordinary outstanding obligations and indebtedness, as distinguished from the particular obligation referred to and provided for in the second subdivision of her will, which is also above set forth. It is to be noted that the testatrix also uses the word "desire" in relation to the foregoing purpose as expressed in the first subdivision of her will, and the use of this term in that connection would seem to bring that clause of her will within the provisions of section 1560 of the Code of Civil Procedure, reading as follows:

> "If the testator makes provision by his will, or designates the estate to be appropriated for the payment of his debts, the expenses of administration, or family expenses, they must be paid according to such provision or designation, out of the estate thus appropriated, so far as the same is sufficient."

By the second subdivision of her will, the testatrix undertook to devise to her mother certain specific property; viz., First, the residence property involved in this controversy; second, three promissory notes executed by one H. M. Kirchbaum of Sioux City, Iowa, each for the sum of $4,400, due respectively on June 1, 1922, June 1, 1923, and June 1, 1924, secured by a real estate mortgage upon property in said city, which mortgage she also devises and bequeaths to her said mother. Then follows the clause last above quoted from her said will and upon the terms of which the respondents herein rely as being merely precatory and not compelling upon the executor of her will. While it is true that the use of the word "desire" in a will has often been held to be precatory, in the sense of merely indicating a request rather than a direction, as was held in the Estate of Marti, supra, and certain of the cases collated therein, yet that case, as well as the other cases cited and relied upon by the respondents herein, will, when examined, be found chiefly to relate to provisions in wills with respect to which it was contended that trusts were imposed thereby upon legatees or devisees who otherwise, under the express provisions of the will, would be entitled to the whole interest in the estate; as in the Estate of Marti the testator, after clearly devising to his widow his entire estate in fee and after appointing her executrix without bonds and with full power of management and of sale without order of court, proceeded to say:

> "Upon the death of my wife, I desire that one-half of the property bequeathed to her shall be devised by her to my relatives."

Such a provision was properly held to be merely precatory. So, also, in the case of Kauffman v. Gries, 141 Cal. 295, 74 P. 846, wherein the testatrix devised a certain piece of real estate and followed the express language of said devise with the words, "It is my desire and I hereby request my said husband to convey in such manner and at such times as he may deem best, * * * the said above-described 99.58 acres of land to Ventura Lodge," etc., the use of the word "desire" in its above connection was also held not to import a binding obligation or create a trust in favor of the lodge enforceable in a court of equity. Where, however, as in the case at bar, the testatrix had devised to her mother the entire fee in the real estate in question and in addition thereto had bequeathed to the latter the whole sum due and to become due upon the three promissory notes, which are mentioned in the provision in her will immediately following such devise, there can remain no doubt but that the testatrix intended that the entire fee in the real estate so devised should go to the devisee, coupled with the bequest of sufficient money or its equivalent to clear off the incumbrance upon it, thus leaving her mother in possession and ownership of the property which had been the family home of both, free of debt. In order to render effective this clearly defined intention, the testatrix proceeded to instruct her executor as to the course to be pursued by him in achieving the desired result.

[3] A direction in a will for the payment of incumbrances upon the estate of a decedent evinces an intent that the estate shall pass to the devisee unincumbered. Estate of De Bernal, 165 Cal. 235, 131 P. 375, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 26; Estate of Heydenfeldt, supra. When the intent of the testatrix is thus apparent to broaden, not to limit, the principal devise, the use of the word "desire" in an instruction to her executor, and for the purpose of achieving this result, has been held to have the effect of a direction, as distinguished from a mere request, and to be binding upon the executor of her estate. In Estate of Pforr, 144 Cal. 127, 77 P. 825, wherein an executor was directed to make a sale of certain real estate and distribute the proceeds among certain beneficiaries, the use of the word "desire" in giving such direction was held to be the equivalent of the words "I will," and to be binding upon the executor and the esrate. In that case, this court distinguished between the use of said term in cases like Estate of Marti and Estate of Kauffman, supra, and pointed out that in the first of said last-named cases this distinction was expressly drawn. We have no doubt as to the correctness of the rule of interpretation laid down in Estate of Pforr, supra, nor of its direct application to the facts of the case at bar. The respondents, however, urge that it is a fact, as fully shown by the record herein, that the mother of the decedent, being a joint tenant with her daughter in the ownership of the real estate in question, derived her title thereto upon her daughter's death, not from the latter's will, but from the termination of the joint estate, and was therefore not a devisee thereof under her daughter's said will, and hence that the case of Estate of Heydenfeldt, supra, and Estate of Pforr, supra, have no application to the case at bar. There is no merit in this contention, for the reason that in the interpretation of said will we are looking to the intent of the testatrix and not to the effect or even the validity of her particular devise, and since it was clearly the testatrix's intent that her mother should succeed to the entire ownership of said real estate freed of its incumbrance, regardless of the means by which that succession was in law to be accomplished, the meaning to be given to the word "desire" as expressive of her binding will in that regard would not be changed.

The order is reversed, with instruction to the trial court to make and enter its order granting the petitioners' application in conformity with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.

199 Cal. 699

In re YODER et al.

YODER v. YODER et al.

(L. A. 8468.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1926.)

1. Adoption ⚿16—Order of adoption could be set aside for fraud as to one of two children, if vacation was applied for within six months (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Order adopting two children could, on petition of aggrieved party, be set aside and vacated as to one child on ground of fraud, if vacation was applied for within six months, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, an action to set aside adoption contract being unnecessary.

2. Appeal and error ⚿935(1)—Unless it appears that petition for vacating order was not called to court's attention in time, seasonable application will be presumed (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

In absence of showing that petition for vacating court order, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, requiring application to be made within six months, was not brought to court's attention within such time, court on appeal will presume that application was seasonably made and will refuse to dismiss appeal from order refusing vacation, notwithstanding hearing was had after time.

3. Appeal and error ⚿82(3)—Order vacating adoption order as to one child for fraud, and refusing vacation as to another, held appealable as to part refusing vacation (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2).

Where order vacated former adoption order as to one child for fraud, but refused vacation as to another, that part of order refusing vacation was appealable as special order made after final judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2, because appeal from first order would have been in vain for lack of a record showing rights of aggrieved party.

4. Appeal and error ⚿659(6)—Diminution of record will not lie to include order material to part of order vacating former proceeding, but immaterial to part appealed from (Civ. Code, §§ 225, 226).

Motion for diminution of record will not lie for inclusion of nunc pro tunc order showing order for vacating adoption as to one child was for nonconsent, under Civ. Code, §§ 225, 226, where appeal was taken from another portion of such order refusing to vacate adoption as to another child, such nunc pro tunc order being immaterial to part of order appealed from.

5. Appeal and error ⚿122—In proceeding to vacate adoption of two children, order vacating as to one and not as to other held severable.

In proceeding to vacate adoption of two children, part of order refusing to vacate adoption order as to one child held severable and distinct from part vacating adoption order as to other child.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Petition by Laura E. Yoder against Earl M. Yoder and another for vacating order of adoption of Wilma Corrine Yoder and another. From an order refusing to vacate and set aside the order of adoption as to Wilma Corrine Yoder, petitioner appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal and for diminution of record. Denied.

Percy Hight, H. D. Lawrence, W. F. Schoch, and Edmund J. Callaway, all of Long Beach, for appellant.

Louis Luckel and J. Marion Wright, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This proceeding presents a motion to dismiss the appeal herein and a motion for diminution of record.

Appellant is the natural mother of Dorothy Irene Yoder and Wilma Corrine Yoder, who were of the ages of 12 and 10 years, respectively, at the time the adoption proceedings hereinafter referred to were commenced. Proceedings were instituted by the respondents in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, looking to the adoption of said children by them. After hearing thereon, the petition of respondents was granted and an order was made and filed on October 11, 1923, wherein and whereby the children named were declared to be adopted by said respondents. The respondent Earl M. Yoder is the paternal uncle of the children.

The instant proceeding was initiated by the appellant filing a petition in the above-named superior court on April 9, 1924, wherein it was alleged that her consent to the adoption proceedings was secured by fraud and undue influence, and praying that the order of adoption be vacated and set aside as to both of said children. On September 27, 1924, an order was made granting the petition as to Dorothy Irene Yoder, and the order of adoption, in so far as it affected her, was thereupon vacated and set aside. As to Wilma Corrine Yoder, the petition was denied, however, and the order of adoption, in so far as it concerned her, remained in force. The appellant prosecutes this appeal from that part of the order refusing to vacate and set aside the order of adoption as to said Wilma Corrine Yoder.

Respondents urge two grounds in support of their motion to dismiss the appeal. First, it is asserted that there is no statutory authority for this proceeding to revoke the order of adoption and therefore no statutory authority for the appeal herein, it being urged that appellant should have brought an "equitable action to set aside the contract of adoption." As their second ground for dismissal of the appeal, the respondents contend that the order refusing to set aside and vacate the adoption proceedings as to Wilma Corrine Yoder is not an appealable order, within the provisions of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] We find no merit in respondents' contention touching the remedy pursued by appellant to vacate and set aside the order of adoption. It has been held that such an order may be set aside and vacated, under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the grounds of fraud, mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Guardianship of Van Loan, 142 Cal. 423, 76 P. 37; Bell v. Krauss, 169 Cal. 387, 146 P. 874; In re McGrew, 183 Cal. 177, 190 P. 804. The instant proceeding was instituted within six months from the making of the order appointing respondents as guardians, and may properly be considered to have been authorized by the provisions of said Code section.

[2] In so declaring, we are not unmindful that the order of adoption was made and entered on October 11, 1923, and that the petition to vacate and set aside the same was filed on April 9, 1924—two days prior to the expiration of the six months' period prescribed by section 473, Code of Civil Procedure. Nor are we unmindful that the authorities are to the effect that an application is not made within said six months' period by the mere filing of a petition for relief within that time. It has been repeatedly held that the court must be moved for the desired relief within said period. Brownell v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 703, 710, 109 P. 91, 94; Thomas v. Superior Court, 6 Cal. App. 629, 92 P. 739. As stated in Brownell v. Superior Court, supra:

> "It is the application which is to be made within six months. A motion is an application for an order. * * * The attention of the court must be called to it and the court moved to grant it."

Though the petition did not come on for hearing until after the expiration of the six months' period, there is nothing in the record herein to indicate that said petition was not brought to the attention of the court below prior to the expiration of said six months' limitation. The "petition and motion" having been filed within said period and no showing having been made that the matter was not called to the attention of the lower court prior to the expiration of said period, it will be presumed that the application was seasonably made.

Moreover, the respondents here, as in Re McGrew, supra, "appeared in court at the trial and contested the matter without making any objection to the form of the proceeding, or to the manner of service of process."

[3] Respondents' further contention that the order denying relief in part is not an appealable order is also without merit. Guardianship of Van Loan, supra; Bell v. Krauss, supra; In re McGrew, supra. In each of said cases an appeal was allowed from a similar order. It is stated in 2 Cal. Jur. 169, section 31, that:

> "An appeal may be taken from an order denying a motion made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to vacate a judgment."

Such an order is a "special order made after final judgment," and as such is appealable, under subdivision 2 of section 963, Code of Civil Procedure. Though the general rule is that an appeal does not lie from an order denying a motion to vacate a judgment where "the motion merely calls upon the court to repeat or overrule the former ruling on the same facts" (2 Cal. Jur. 164, § 30 et seq.), nevertheless there are certain well-defined exceptions to said rule, and such an order is appealable where the circumstances are such that "an appeal from the first order would be vain for lack of a record showing the rights of the aggrieved party" (2 Cal. Jur. 167, § 31 et seq.). As the petition herein to vacate and set aside the order of adoption was founded on alleged fraud in procuring the same, it follows that, on an appeal from said order of adoption, the record therein would not show the "rights of the aggrieved party." For the foregoing reasons, the motion to dismiss the appeal must be denied.

In support of their motion for diminution of record, the respondents assert that the written consent of Dorothy Irene Yoder was not secured to the adoption proceedings, as required under the provisions of sections 225 and 226 of the Civil Code, where children over the age of 12 years are involved; that this fact came to the attention of the lower court upon the hearing of the petition to vacate the order of adoption as to both children; that said court thereupon set aside the order of adoption as to said Dorothy Irene Yoder solely on the ground that she had not given her written consent thereto; and that a nunc pro tunc order was entered in the adoption proceedings by said lower court subsequent to the appeal herein, which tends to show that the order of adoption as to Dorothy Irene Yoder was vacated and set aside solely on said ground and not upon the ground of fraud and undue influence. It is then urged by respondents that said nunc pro tunc order be made a part of the record herein.

In opposition to this motion, the appellant contends that the "clerk's transcript," on file herein, contains the entire judgment roll of the adoption proceedings; that the nunc pro tunc order entered therein and sought to be included in the record herein was made more than a year after this appeal was perfected; that said nunc pro tunc order was therefore without and in excess of the jurisdiction of the court below.

A perusal of the "clerk's transcript" reveals that the entire judgment roll in the adoption proceedings is included therein. This is indicated by the clerk's certificate to that effect appearing on page 12 thereof.

In passing upon the instant motion, we do not find it necessary to decide whether the nunc pro tunc order above referred to is properly a part of the judgment roll in the adoption proceedings and should for that reason be included therein, nor do we feel impelled to determine the validity or effect of said nunc pro tunc order. In our opinion, the motion for diminution of record must be denied for other reasons. The nunc pro tunc order sought to be included in the record herein merely concerns the order appealed from, in so far as said order set aside the adoption proceedings as to Dorothy Irene Yoder. But as no appeal has been prosecuted from that part of the order, it would appear that a subsequent nunc pro tunc order tending to explain the reason for so vacating the order of adoption as to said Dorothy Irene Yoder would serve no purpose in determining whether relief was properly denied as to Wilma Corrine Yoder. The inclusion of such nunc pro tunc order in the record herein would not tend to enlighten this court upon the issue presented by this appeal; namely, whether the order of adoption as to Wilma Corrine Yoder should have been vacated and set aside on the ground that it was procured through fraud and undue influence. The papers now making up the record herein, together with the evidence produced at the trial, will enable this court to determine whether or not the lower court rightly disposed of said issue.

[4, 5] Assuming the respondents are correct in asserting that the adoption proceedings were vacated and set aside as to Dorothy Irene Yoder solely on the ground that she had not given her written consent thereto, and that the subsequent nunc pro tunc order would so indicate, we are still unable to perceive what purpose it would serve to include said order in the record herein, as this appeal is only from that part of the prior order which refused to set aside the adoption proceedings as to the other child. It is our view that said nunc pro tunc order has no bearing upon the issue presented by this appeal and therefore need not now be made a part of the record herein. As stated in 2 Cal. Jur. 155, § 25:

> "When an appeal from a part of a judgment or order is properly taken, obviously the appellate court will review only that part of the judgment or order from which the appeal is taken, provided that portion is severable from the remainder of the judgment or order."

There can be no question but that that part of the order appealed from, which refused to vacate the order of adoption as to Wilma Corrine Yoder, is severable and distinct from that part of the order which vacated the order of adoption as to Dorothy Irene Yoder.

For the foregoing reasons, the motion to dismiss the appeal and the motion for diminution of record are and each is hereby denied.

---

199 Cal. 668

SACRAMENTO AND SAN JOAQUIN DRAINAGE DIST. et al. v. RILEY, State Controller, et al. (Sac. 3924.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1926. On Rehearing Nov. 13, 1926.)

1. Levees and flood control 🔑33.

Where funds were available for installments of state's appropriation, under St. 1919, p. 1209, for drainage district, it was duty of state controller to draw warrants therefor and treasurer to pay them, and duty of reclamation board to apply them in manner provided.

2. Statutes 🔑225¼.

Where appropriation act (St. 1919, p. 1209), was adopted contemporaneously with two other acts having reference to affairs of same drainage district, the three acts should be interpreted together.

3. Levees and flood control 🔑32.

Where precise procedure was designated, under St. 1919, pp. 1092, 1122, 1209, for providing funds for work on drainage district, mode thus provided was measure of powers and duties of agencies charged with prosecution of work and disposition of funds.

4. Levees and flood control 🔑34—Offer of warrant holders to purchase bonds of drainage district held not in compliance with statute (St. 1919, p. 1092, §§ 33, 34, and page 1209, § 1).

Offer by holders of warrants drawn against assessment on account of project of drainage district to purchase bonds of the district at par to an amount which could be redeemed from moneys appropriated by St. 1919, p. 1209, § 1, provided the proceeds were deposited for liquidation of warrants, and the bonds were redeemed, held not in compliance with St. 1919, p. 1092, §§ 33, 34, and not to warrant writ of mandate to compel any action respecting such offer by state controller and state treasurer.

5. Mandamus 🔑100—Not granted to compel particular application of proceeds of drainage district bonds not yet sold (St. 1919, p. 1092, §§ 36, 40).

The state reclamation board and a drainage district held not entitled to writ of mandate to require state controller and state treasurer to place moneys from sale of bonds of the district in fund prescribed by St. 1919, p. 1092, §§ 36, 40, where it affirmatively appeared the bonds had not been sold.

6. Levees and flood control 🔑33—State treasurer held not required to pay warrants as funds became available, where bonds had been authorized, but had not been sold.

State treasurer held not required, by Reclamation Board Act, § 15 (as added by St. 1913, p. 272, amended by St. 1925, p. 615), and St. 1919, p. 1092, § 40, to pay warrants payable from drainage district assessment as funds became available, where bonds had been authorized to provide funds for the payment of such warrants, but had not been sold.

On Rehearing.

7. States 🔑119—Appropriation of public money to redeem bonds issued to pay warrants outstanding at date of acts held not invalid as gift of public money (Const. art. 4, §§ 31, 32; St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 117; St. 1913, p. 266, § 7; Stats. 1919, p. 1209).

Since, under St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 117, St. 1913, p. 266, § 7, and St. 1919, p. 1209, Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district is a public project undertaken by the state, appropriation of public money under St. 1919, to redeem bonds issued to pay warrants outstanding at date of act, held not violative of Const. art. 4, §§ 31, 32, as gift of public money.

8. Levees and flood control 🔑5—In distributing proposed reclamation work, Legislature merely called into being state agencies to carry on work (St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 117).

Legislature, in distributing proposed work of reclamation in Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district under St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 117, among districts organized under control of reclamation board, did not thereby create separate entities, but merely called into being state agencies in form of districts to carry on proposed work.

9. Levees and flood control 🔑5—That Legislature defined power of reclamation agencies held not to affect state's attitude toward project as a public work (St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 117; St. 1913, p. 266, § 7; St. 1919, p. 1209).

That Legislature defined powers of state agencies created to carry on reclamation work in drainage district under St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 117; St. 1913, p. 266, § 7; St. 1919, p. 1209—held not to affect state's attitude toward project as a public work.

10. States 🔑119—That landowners were benefited by drainage district held not to affect state's right to appropriate public money therefor.

That landowners in drainage district were benefited through restoration of lands to fertility held not to affect right of state to appropriate public money therefor when project in entirety was public.

11. Levees and flood control 🔑32—That chief burden of providing funds was imposed on property owners benefited held act to affect state's right to determine portion of cost it would bear.

That Legislature imposed chief burden of providing funds for public drainage district on landowners benefited thereby held not to affect state's right to determine what portion of cost of improvement it would bear, nor manner, extent, and time it would assume it.

12. States 🔑132—Act held not to have limited power of later Legislatures to make appropriations for drainage district (St. 1913, p. 276).

That Legislature, in appropriating public money for drainage district (St. 1913, p. 276), declared that state should not be liable in excess of amount appropriated, held not to limit power of state through later legislation to make further appropriations.

13. Levees and flood control 🔑33 — Money available from state's appropriation held applicable to payment of outstanding warrants of drainage district, regardless of issuance (St. 1919, p. 1209, and page 1130, § 34).

Under St. 1919, p. 1209, and page 1130, § 34, money available to reclamation board from state's appropriation, unless otherwise directed by Legislature, held applicable to payment of outstanding debts of drainage district in form of issued, registered, but unpaid, warrants, regardless of time when warrants were issued, but were payable in order of registration.

In Bank.

Original application for mandamus by the Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District and others against Ray L. Riley, as Controller of the State of California, and another. Writ granted.

Downey, Brand, Seymour & Dunn, Stephen W. Downey, and Fred H. Pierce, Jr., all of Sacramento, for petitioners.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, amici curiæ.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Chief Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioners herein apply to this court for the issuance of a writ of mandate to be directed to the defendant Ray L. Riley, as controller, and to Charles G. Johnson, as treasurer, of the state of California, commanding each of these state officials to severally do and perform certain acts as set forth in said application. The official acts thus sought to be compelled are such, according to the averments of the petitioners, as have arisen in the course, and as the result, of a long and involved series of events which have attended the history and development of that vast project having for its purpose the reclamation and flood control of the region lying along the course of the Sacramento river, and which has become known as "Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6." The details of the legislative and judicial history of that project have been already several times set forth in recent decisions by this court, and need not be again reviewed for the purposes of the instant case. Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Johnson, 192 Cal. 211, 219 P. 442; Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Riley, 194 Cal. 624, 229 P. 957. The petitioners here are "the reclamation board of the state of California," and Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, a state agency under the management and control of said reclamation board. The petitioners, after setting forth the progress of the plans for reclamation and flood control within said district, and the steps taken toward the levy and collection of an assessment upon the lands within the same for the purpose of paying the cost thereof, and the validation of such assessment by judicial proceedings conducted in accordance with law, and the proceedings undertaken for a bond issue in aid of such assessment, and the validation thereof by such further judicial action as was provided by law for such purpose, proceeded to allege:

> "That for purposes of co-operation in the construction of the public works included in, and provided for by the reclamation board in, said 'Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6,' the state of California did, by an act approved May 27, 1919, and which became effective July 27, 1919 (Statutes 1919, c. 556), appropriate out of any moneys in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated for the benefit of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, in connection with said 'Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6,' the sum of $3,000,000, 'to be applied as it is now or may hereafter be provided by law by the said reclamation board, in connection with said Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 of the said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district.'"

The appropriation of $3,000,000 provided for in the foregoing act was to be payable in certain annual installments of $300,000, extending over a period of ten years, commencing on July 1, 1921, and to be payable on the 1st day of July during said successive years, down to and including, the year 1930. The petitioners allege that there is at present in the state treasury the sum of $590,920.92 derived from such appropriation and from the last two installments, which have become available therefrom in pursuance of said act, which said sum of money, the petitioners assert, the reclamation board is presently entitled to have deposited to its credit in the state treasury and in a certain special fund therein, and to be thus made available to said board for the purposes to which the successive installments of said appropriation were to be applied under the terms of the act making such appropriation. The act of 1919, above referred to, expressly provided, both by its title and by the terms of section 1 thereof, that the purpose of the state in making said appropriation of $3,000,000 was that of "co-operation in the construction of the public works included in and provided for by that certain project, heretofore adopted by the reclamation board, known as Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district." The act further provided, in section 4 thereof, that—

> "The controller of the state of California shall, * * * during the fiscal year commencing on the first day of July, 1921, draw his warrant in favor of the Reclamation Board for the sum of three hundred thousand dollars; and shall, * * * during the fiscal year commencing on the first day of July, 1926, draw this warrant in favor of said Reclamation Board for the sum of three hundred thousand dollars."

The act further and in the same section provides that—

> "The treasurer of the state of California is hereby directed to pay each of said warrants out of any moneys in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated. All of said sums shall be applied by the reclamation board in the manner as provided by section 1 of this act."

Recurring to section 1 of said act, we find that the closing clause thereof reads as follows:

> "There is hereby appropriated the sum hereinafter set forth out of any moneys in the state treasury, not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the said reclamation board, for the benefit of the said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, in connection with the said Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6, or any modifications or amendments thereof that may hereafter be made, in accordance with law, the same to be applied as it is now or may hereafter be provided by law by the said reclamation board, in connection with said Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 of the said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district."

[1] It would appear from the foregoing provisions of said appropriation act that it is the present duty of the state controller to draw and deliver to the reclamation board his warrant in favor of said board for such sums as have been made available for the uses of said board by virtue of the fact that the installments of said total appropriation for the fiscal years 1925 and 1926 have become payable. It is not denied that the sum of $590,920.92, being approximately the aggregate of these two installments, is presently available in the state treasury. We can therefore see no reason why the state controller should not be required to draw his warrant for such aggregate sum in favor of the reclamation board, nor can we discover any valid reason why the state treasurer should not be directed to pay said warrant out of such available funds, the same to be applied by the reclamation board in the manner provided by the last above quoted provision of section 1 of said Appropriation Act.

Thus far we can see no objection to granting this writ, but, when we look to the further purposes for which the petitioners seek to have a writ of mandate issue herein, we are confronted with a more serious situation. The petitioners, in substance, aver that, as the result of operations carried on in the course of the work of reclamation and flood control by said reclamation board for the benefit of said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, with special reference to Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6, prior to July 27, 1919, there were issued and are now outstanding and unpaid warrants drawn against Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6 in the sum of $1,390,509.59 principal, upon which the interest accrued prior to February 6, 1926, amounts to the sum of $716,747.91; that subsequent to July 27, 1919, in pursuance of the further prosecution of said work warrants against said Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6 have been issued by said reclamation board in the further sum of $7,475,375.22 principal, upon which sum interest up to February 4, 1926, had accrued in the sum of $1,921,607.62; that the authorized bonds of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, which are based upon and are secured by Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6, amount to the sum of $7,133,000, and that said bonds to the extent of said last-named sum remain unsold; that the owners and holders of certain of the earliest registered unpaid warrants, issued prior to July 27, 1919, are desirous of purchasing the said bonds of said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district at par to an amount which would be redeemable through the use of the said sum of $590,920.92 available out of the installments which have become payable during the years 1925 and 1926 on account of said appropriation, provided said bonds so purchased by them to that amount are forthwith redeemed by such use of said moneys; that the petitioners herein have approved said plan and proposition on the part of said warrant holders, and have accordingly adopted a resolution so providing, in which resolution it is further provided that the controller of the state of California be, and is hereby, directed to immediately draw his warrant or warrants in favor of said reclamation board in the sum of $590,920.92, and that the treasurer of the state of California be, and he is thereby, directed to pay said warrant or warrants out of any money in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, and that thereupon said money shall be deposited with the state treasurer as a special fund for the redemption of such bonds; and that, when said bonds have been sold as aforesaid, the state controller be, and he is thereby, directed to authorize the state treasurer, and the state treasurer be, and is thereby, directed to place the money derived from the sale of said bonds, less certain expenses of sale, to the credit of the construction fund of said assessment, as provided in section 40 of the Bonding Act (St. 1919, p. 1092), and that said state treasurer be, and he is thereby, further directed to pay warrants payable out of said fund in the order of their registration.

[2, 3] The foregoing averments of the petitioners suggest a number of interesting problems, but we seriously question whether they present an aspect of the situation with which this court is either required or permitted presently to deal. Section 4 of the Appropriation Act of 1919, after providing for the amounts and times of payment of the annual installments on account of said appropriation, proceeds to state that "all of said sums shall be applied by the reclamation board in the manner as provided by section 1 of this act." Section 1 provides that said appropriation is "to be applied as it is now or may hereafter be provided by law by the said reclamation board, in connection with said Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 of the said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district." The Appropriation Act of 1919 was adopted by the Legislature of that year contemporaneously with two other acts having application to the affairs of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district. This being so, these three acts are for purposes of interpretation to be read together. Sacramento, etc., Drainage Dist. v. Johnson, 192 Cal. 211, 218, 219 P. 442. The first of said acts to be considered is the act approved May 27, 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 1122), purporting to amend the general Reclamation Board Act, approved December 24, 1911 (St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 117), and the several later amendments made thereto. By its terms a new section was added to said enactment, numbered section 34, and in which new section it was provided that "all moneys which may be hereafter paid to the said reclamation board * * * under and by virtue of the provisions of an act entitled 'an act,'" etc. (referring to the Appropriation Act contemporaneously adopted), "shall be applied on said Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6, by said reclamation board, to the pro rata payment of such portions of said assessment as are based upon flood control benefits." The said added section further provides that—

> "The moneys so received by the reclamation board from the state shall, unless bonds based upon said assessment shall have been authorized by law, be by the reclamation board paid over forthwith to the state treasurer, * * * to be used and expended in the same manner as funds collected from landowners upon said assessment. But if at the time of the receipt of any such money by the reclamation board from the state, bonds based upon said assessment shall have been authorized by law, the money so received from the state shall be deposited by the reclamation board with the state treasurer to be held as a special fund for the redemption of such bonds and shall, under the direction and as required by the reclamation board, be applied to the payment and cancellation of such bonds in the manner following, to wit."

The foregoing provision of said act, as enacted in 1919, has direct reference to the other of said three enactments contemporaneously adopted, viz. the act entitled "An act to authorize the issuance and sale of bonds of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district based upon assessments levied by the reclamation board upon lands in said district." Stats. 1919, p. 1092. The above enactment embraces the details of a procedure for the authorization, issuance, sale, and redemption of bonds of said district in aid of the endeavor of the reclamation board to finance the already accrued cost of the work of reclamation and flood control, which had been in progress during several previous years in connection with Sutter-Butte bypass project No. 6, through the issuance and sale of the bonds of said district to an amount substantially corresponding to the cost of said work, and which bonds were to be redeemed out of funds to be collected by the reclamation board by means of the assessment already levied upon the lands of the property owners in said district, but which had thus far for several reasons remained uncollected, and also out of such other moneys as might come into the hands of said board from such sources as are designated in the provisions of one or the other of said contemporaneously adopted enactments. When the bonds of said district have been duly authorized, validated and executed in accordance with the earlier provisions of said Bonding Act, section 33 thereof provides:

> "The state treasurer shall receive and place the said bonds to the credit of said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, and shall when and as directed by the reclamation board sell any of said bonds for the best price obtainable therefor, but in no event for less than ninety-five per cent. of the face value of such bonds and the accrued interest thereon. Before making a sale of any of said bonds, notice shall be given by the state treasurer that he will sell a specified amount of said bonds, stating the day, hour and place of said sale. Such notice shall state that sealed proposals will be received by him for the purchase of said bonds or any part thereof at the day and hour named in the notice. Such notice shall be given by publication once a week for three successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation published in the city of Sacramento. At the time and place appointed in said notice the state treasurer shall open the bids and shall award the purchase of the bonds or any part thereof to the highest responsible bidder, or if the highest bid is not equal to par and accrued interest he shall notify the reclamation board of the amounts of the highest bids received, and reject any or all bids if so required by said board."

It is further provided in section 34 of said Bonding Act:

> "The money derived from the sale of any of said bonds shall be received by the state treasurer and shall be by him safely kept and placed to the credit of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district in a fund to be designated as the 'construction fund of (giving name and number of the assessment upon which the bonds are based),' and may be drawn and expended upon warrants drawn by the state controller at the request of the reclamation board upon and payable out of said construction fund, in the same manner as provided by section fifteen of the said reclamation board act with reference to the expenditure of moneys collected upon assessments as in said reclamation board act provided."

It would thus be seen from an examination of the foregoing and the other provisions of these three contemporaneous enactments that a complete statutory method of procedure was therein provided for the procurement of the moneys required to finance said work of reclamation and flood control within said district; that, in accordance with such method, when an assessment had been levied and duly validated, and when the issuance of bonds to the amount thereof had been duly authorized, and when the validation of such bonds had been judicially accomplished, such bonds, or such amount thereof as may by the reclamation board be deemed advisable, are to be offered for sale by the state treasurer under the direction of the reclamation board in accordance with the method provided by section 33 of the said Bonding Act. The method thus provided for the sale of such bonds is as follows: Before making such sale, notice shall be given by the state treasurer that he will sell a specified amount of said bonds, stating the day, hour, and place of such sale, and at which time and place sealed proposals will be received by him for the purchase of said bonds or any part thereof. At the time and place appointed in said notice, he shall open the bids and award the purchase of the bonds, or any part thereof, to the highest responsible bidder. If the highest bid is not equal to par and accrued interest, he shall notify the reclamation board of the amounts of the highest bids received, and reject any and all bids, if so required by the reclamation board. If the bonds are sold to the highest responsible bidder, the money received therefor from such bidder by the state treasurer shall be by him placed to the credit of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district in a fund to be known as the "construction fund," and may be drawn and expended upon warrants drawn by the state controller at the request of the reclamation board in the same manner as is provided by section 15 of the Reclamation Board Act (as added by St. 1913, p. 272, amended by St. 1925, p. 615), with reference to the expenditure of moneys collected upon assessments as in said act provided. When such bonds have been thus sold and transferred to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, upon receipt by the state treasurer of the purchase price they are subject to redemption in the manner provided in the succeeding sections of said Bonding Act, and by the application thereto of the money received by the reclamation board through the collection of the assessment already levied upon the lands within said district, and from such other moneys as may have been received by the reclamation board from the state under the provisions of the contemporaneous Appropriation Act, and in accordance with the provisions of section 34 of the act amendatory of the Reclamation Board Act.

[4] It will thus be apparent, from a consideration of the foregoing provisions of these several acts as they existed prior to the year 1923, that a precise statutory mode of procedure had been designated for the provision of the funds required to pay the cost of the work done in the way of reclamation and flood control within said drainage district. It requires no authority to sustain the proposition that the mode thus provided is the measure of the powers and duties of those state agencies and officials who are charged with the prosecution of said work and with the disposition of the funds derived from the foregoing several sources in payment of the cost of such work and of the outstanding warrants which evidence such cost. It is to be noted at this point in the discussion that section 34, which was added to the Reclamation Board Act in the year 1919, was amended in the year 1923 by the adoption, as an emergency measure, of an act (Stats. 1923, p. 640) which had for its purpose, as expressly set forth therein, the making available of certain moneys which had come into the state treasury since the year 1919 from the receipt of certain installments payable and paid under the provisions of the said appropriation act of that year, in order to carry forward the constructive work upon Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6. The provisions of said amendment to said section 34, as adopted in the year 1919, were the subject of comment and construction by this court in the two cases of Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Johnson, 192 Cal. 211, 219 P. 442, and Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Riley, 194 Cal. 624, 229 P. 957. The petitioners herein do not, however, rely upon any of the provisions of said Act of 1923 in support of their claim of right to the issuance of the writ sought herein by any averment in their petition; while in their briefs, and also in the briefs of amicus curiæ in support of their said claim, reliance upon the terms of said amendment is expressly disclaimed. In other words, the petitioners herein have based their asserted right to the remedies sought herein solely upon the provisions and procedure of the several enactments of the Legislature adopted in the year 1919, to which reference has above been made. Keeping in mind, therefore, the foregoing provisions of these several enactments, we may again recur to the averments of the petitioners' application herein for the purpose of determining whether the procedure outlined therein has been so far followed by these petitioners as to entitle them to still further invoke the processes of this court so as to compel the respondents herein, or either of them, to take any further present action in the due performance of their official duties than that which they have either taken or have been thus far directed to take. By so doing we discover that neither these petitioners, nor the warrant holders in whose interest they are assuming to act, have complied, or even attempted to comply, with the provisions and procedure outlined in said enactments of 1919, and which are essential prerequisites to the remedies they herein seek to invoke. The following are some of the most serious defects of their petition in the foregoing regard: The petitioners, after alleging the due authorization for the issuance of the bonds of said district under the aforesaid Bonding Act, and also the due execution and deposit of said bonds in the office of the state treasurer as required by said act, and the termination of judicial proceedings validating said bond issue, proceed to aver that the reclamation board thereupon proceeded to direct the state treasurer to offer for sale said bonds; that "notice of said sale of said bonds was given by the state treasurer from time to time as directed by the state reclamation board, but, notwithstanding said offers of sale, no offer has been made for the purchase of said bonds, except as hereinafter specifically set forth." In another portion of their application the petitioners aver that "the board has not been able to sell said bonds or any of them." Before proceeding to further consider what offer or offers to purchase said bonds, or any of them, have been made according to the averments of the petition herein, it is important to take note of the only mode and method by which offers to purchase said bonds could be made under the provisions of the Bonding Act above set forth. That mode or method consists in the submission of sealed proposals or bids for such portion of such bonds as the bidder or bidders wish to purchase at the time and place fixed for the sale of said bonds in the notice of such sale given by the state treasurer. "At the time and place appointed in said notice the state treasurer shall open the bids and award the purchase of the bonds or any part thereof to the highest responsible bidder." Such bid or bids for such bonds may be in a sum above par, or at par with accrued interest; but, if the highest bid is not equal to par and accrued interest, the state treasurer shall notify the reclamation board of the highest bids received, and may, if directed by it, reject all bids. Do the petitioners herein allege that any such procedure has been pursued? They do not, but, in lieu thereof, they proceed to allege—

> "that the owners and holders of certain of the said registered unpaid warrants drawn against 'Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6' prior to July 27, 1919, have offered to purchase bonds of said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, based upon and secured by 'Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6' at par to an amount equal to the amount which can be redeemed out of said moneys so accrued to date as aforesaid under said state appropriation, provided that proceeds from said bond sale are deposited for the liquidation of warrants drawn against 'Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6' in the order of their registration, and that said bonds so purchased be forthwith redeemed out of said $590,920.92 so available, as aforesaid, for bond redemption."

[5] It is plainly to be seen that the foregoing averment of a conditional offer upon the part of the "owners and holders of certain warrants" to purchase the amount of such bonds specified therein utterly fails of even a semblance of compliance with requirements of the Bonding Act regulating the mode and manner by which the said bonds of the district may be bid for and sold. The warrant holders in respect to the purchase of said bonds are in no different position as bidders therefor than any other would-be purchaser of said bonds, and it cannot surely be contended that either the state treasurer or the reclamation board would be justified in selling and issuing these bonds to any person who might happen to offer to purchase the same at par without any regard for, or attempted compliance with, the foregoing rigid requirements of these statutes regulating the mode and manner of their disposal. One of the main reasons why bonds of public bodies or agencies are required to be sold at public bidding, after notice, is that they may be sold, if possible, for a sum above par, if a responsible bidder in such sum can thus be secured. It thus becomes apparent that the proposed purchasers of these bonds have in no respect complied, in either letter or spirit, with the provisions of said statute regulating the mode and method of their sale. But, even if they had done so, or if the petitioners herein had so alleged, they would still have come far short of being shown to be entitled either to receive said bonds as the purchasers thereof, or to have any action taken in the way of the redemption of said bonds, since it nowhere appears that the would-be purchasers of said bonds have paid into the state treasury the sum of money they are alleged to have proposed to pay as the purchase price thereof. On the contrary, it appears from the express averments of the petition herein that the aforesaid proposed purchasers of said bonds do not intend to pay any sum whatever into the state treasury, since, by the very terms of their conditional bid for said bonds, the procedure that they propose is that of turning over the warrants owned and held by them to the amount in value of $590,920.92 in payment for said bonds, equaling in par value said amount, when and whenever the state controller and the state treasurer shall consent to pay over to them said sum of money in redemption of said unsold, undelivered, and as yet unpaid for bonds. The further specific relief which the petitioners herein demand in the prayer of their petition is that said respondents, and each of them, be directed "to place all moneys derived from sale of bonds based upon and secured by Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6, after retaining such sums as may be necessary in accordance with the provision of section 36 of said Bonding Act to the credit of the construction fund of said assessment as provided in section 40 of said Bonding Act." In view of the fact, as affirmatively shown by the petition herein, that thus far no moneys derived from any sale of bonds has yet been received by respondents or either of them, for the reason that no bonds have been sold, it seems plain that the petitioners are not presently entitled to the relief above demanded.

[6] The further prayer of the petitioners is that the respondent Charles G. Johnson, as state treasurer, be directed "to pay warrants payable out of such Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6 as funds become available therefor in their proper order of registration as provided in section 15 of the 'Reclamation Board Act' and of section 40 of said Bonding Act." But since, as we have hereinbefore sought to make plain, these provisions of said act are not available for such purpose when the bonds of the district have been authorized and are subject to sale for the provision of funds for the payment of such warrants, and, since such bonds have been so authorized, but still remain unsold, the petitioners herein are not, upon the facts as set forth in their said petition, entitled to any present writ embracing the direction which they last above seek.

It follows from what has heretofore been stated in this opinion that the petitioners herein are entitled to the issuance of a writ of mandate directing the respondent herein Ray L. Riley, as state controller, to forthwith draw his warrant or warrants in favor of the petitioner, reclamation board, in the sum of $590,920.92, and further directing the respondent Charles G. Johnson, as state treasurer, upon the due presentation of said warrant or warrants, to deposit said sum of $590,920.92 in the state treasury, to be held as a special fund for the redemption of bonds based upon, and secured by, Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6; but that said petitioners are entitled to no other and further relief upon the facts as set forth in their petition herein.

Let a writ of mandate accordingly issue.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [7] A rehearing was granted herein upon the request and stipulation of the respective parties hereto in order that the court might consider and determine a further question not presented upon the former record, but which seems to be embraced in the additional considerations set forth in said stipulation. The question thus presented is this: Had the Legislature the power, by and under the several acts of 1919, to provide for an appropriation of public money to be applied to the redemption of bonds issued, or to be issued, under said acts, when the proceeds from the sale of such bonds had been, or were to be, devoted to the payment of outstanding warrants issued prior to July 27, 1919, the date of said enactments, and which warrants had been issued in the prosecution of the work of reclamation and flood control undertaken in pursuance of the Reclamation Act of 1911 and of the amendments thereto made prior to the year 1919? It is the contention of the respondents herein that any application which the reclamation board might make, or attempt to make, of the installment or installments which would come under its control by virtue of our decision herein, to the redemption of bonds the proceeds of the sale of which had been, or were to be, applied to the payment of warrants issued on account of construction work done by such drainage district prior to the year 1919, and to the date of approval of said Appropriation Act, would be void as in violation of sections 31 and 32 of article 4 of the Constitution relating to gifts of public money.

We are unable to agree with this contention. The work of reclamation and flood control in that important and extensive region which is embraced within the boundaries of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district is, and from its earliest inception has been, considered to be essentially a public project undertaken by the state of California in its interest and in the interest of its people at large. It was so regarded by the state in its action approving the report of the California débris commission in the year 1911, and by the act of its Legislature of that year. Stats. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 117. It was expressly declared to be such by the enactment of the Legislature of the following year amending said former act (Stats. 1913, § 7, pp. 252, 266), wherein it was stated that—

> "The state of California and the people thereof are hereby declared to have a primary and supreme interest in having erected, maintained and protected on the banks of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers and their tributaries and the by-passes and overflow channels mentioned herein, good and sufficient levees and embankments or other works of reclamation, adequately protecting the lands overflowed by said streams, and confining the waters of said rivers, tributaries, by-passes and overflow channels within their respective channels, and it shall be the duty of the reclamation board at all times to enforce on behalf of the state of California and the people thereof the erection, maintenance and protection of such levees, embankments and channel rectification as will, in their judgment, best serve the interests of the state of California."

The foregoing declaration on the part of the Legislature as to the public nature of the work of reclamation and flood control which had been, and was to be, undertaken and carried forward to completion was in entire harmony with the conclusion which had been already reached and declared by this court as to the essentially public nature of such work in that region in the case of People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 P. 207, and in which case the court also concluded that, since such work was essentially of such public character and benefit, the Legislature in so determining had power to provide either for the payment of the entire expense of such public work by the state itself through direct appropriations therefor, or to provide that some portion of the expense thereof might be imposed upon the adjacent lands specially benefited thereby, be means of assessments in proportion to such benefits. It was doubtless the the foregoing declaration by this court upon both of the above questions which guided the framers of the legislation of the year 1913 (Stats. 1913, supra), and of the subsequent acts in amendation and amplification thereof down to, and including, the action of the Legislature undertaken in the year 1919 in the three contemporaneous acts of the latter year.

[8-12] It is not necessary herein to review with much of detail the course of that legislation, in view of our detailed recital and examination thereof in recent cases. Two observations may, however, at this point in the discussion be aptly made. The first of these is that the state Legislature, in distributing the proposed work of reclamation and flood control in this vast region among the various reclamation and drainage districts which were formed for its prosecution under the general control of the reclamation board, was not to be understood as creating separate and independent entities for the carrying forward of such purposes, but was calling into being certain agencies of the state in the form of such reclamation and drainage districts for the more convenient handling of the intricate and involved details of such a gigantic undertaking. This was expressly so held by the appellate tribunal in the case of Argyle Dredging Co. v. Chambers, 40 Cal. App. 332, 342, 181 P. 84, and also in the case of Reclamation Board v. Chambers, 46 Cal. App. 476, 481, 189 P. 479, both of which decisions had special reference to the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, and both of which have been given the full approval of this court in its recent decisions enunciating the same principles affecting the same district. The fact that the state of California saw fit to commit the details of the prosecution of the work of reclamation and flood control to the various reclamation and drainage districts provided for in the several and successive legislative enactments creating these agencies and defining the scope of their activities, procedure, and powers within the same, is not to be taken to have in any degree affected the attitude of the state toward the project in its entirety as to its being a public work, conceived and carried forward chiefly for the benefit of the state and of its people at large. The fact that the owners of lands lying within the areas to be affected and benefited by said project and work would also be directly benefited through the restoration of their said lands to fertility and cultivation could not be held to affect the right and power of the state to provide from its public treasury all of the moneys required in the course of undertaking and carrying to completion said work. It was so expressly declared in the cases of Argyle Dredging Co. v. Chambers and Reclamation Board v. Chambers, supra, which as we have seen, have met with the approval of this court. This being so, we are led to our second observation, which is that the fact that the Legislature, in the adoption of the plan or project for the prosecution of said work and for the provision of the funds which would be required in the course thereof, which is to be found embodied in the provisions of its enactments in 1913, 1915, and 1917, saw fit to impose the chief burden of providing such funds upon the landowners within the areas which were or were to be directly and beneficially affected through the prosecution and completion of said plan or project, did not, in any manner or to any extent, affect or diminish the power of the state through the action of its Legislature to determine what portion of the burden of the cost of such improvement it would bear, nor how nor in what manner, nor to what extent, nor at what time, it would resolve by appropriate legislation to assume and bear the same, or such proportion thereof as the development of such work might disclose to be just and practical and proper in order to carry the same to a successful consummation; nor do we think that the fact that the Legislature, in connection with the appropriation of the sum of $100,000 which it made in the year 1913 for the use of the reclamation board (Stats. 1913, p. 276) undertook to declare that "the state of California shall not be liable, directly or indirectly, for any obligation, claim, or liability of any kind or character, arising under, or by reason of this act, or any of the provisions thereof, in excess of one hundred thousand dollars in and by this act appropriated," can be held to have limited the power of the state through later legislation to make such further appropriations or direct the application thereof to the payment of the cost of such work as the progress thereof might seem to require.

With the foregoing considerations in mind, we shall briefly review the salient facts in relation to the progress and cost of the work of reclamation and flood control within the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district between the years 1913 and 1919 inclusive. By the act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 117), the reclamation board, conformably to the report of the California débris commission, approved by said act, was created, and its powers in the way of control over all plans and work for the reclamation and flood control along or near the Sacramento river and its tributaries were generally declared and defined. By the act of 1913 amending and amplifying said former act, the drainage district to be known as Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district was created, its boundaries defined, and its powers and procedure under the direction and control of the Reclamation Board outlined. By the terms of said act the reclamation board was invested with large powers in the way of acquiring lands, levees, easements, and all such other property or material requisite or necessary for by-passes, canals, overflow channels, embankments, and such other purposes as would be needful in the execution of the general project of reclamation and flood control within said district. The board was also empowered to levy an assessment or assessments upon the lands within said district for the provision of money needed for the carrying out of the foregoing purposes; which money, when collected by the methods provided for in said act, together with all other moneys received from any source, was to be deposited with the state treasurer in a fund which was thereby created to be known as the "Sacramento and San Joaquin district fund"; and was to be paid out upon warrants to be drawn by the state controller upon said fund upon the presentation to him of drafts of the reclamation board for construction work. In case there was not sufficient funds on hand for the payment of such warrants, the state treasurer was to indorse thereon the date of presentation and register the same; and such warrants were to draw interest thereafter at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and were eventually to be paid in the order of their registration. The sum of $100,000 was appropriated for the use of the reclamation board, one-half of which was to be repaid the state out of the moneys received from the assessment levied and collected; and, as we have seen, the responsibility of the state for the work done or the liabilities incurred by the district in excess of the amount of said appropriation was limited thereto. The work of reclamation and flood control went forward under the provisions of said act and also of the act of 1915 amendatory thereof, wherein, in section 7 thereof (Stats. 1915, pp. 1338, 1340), it was again expressly declared that the state of California and the people thereof "have a primary and supreme interest" in the work of reclamation and flood control conceived and being carried forward along the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers and their tributaries and the lands subject to overflow by said streams. By the terms of section 20 of said act of 1915, the sum of $50,000, which by the terms of the act of 1913 was to be repaid into the state treasury, was reappropriated for the uses of the reclamation board in the form of a continuing revolving fund, was to be used by the reclamation board from time to time for any purpose for which the funds of said board or of said district, "whether raised by assessment or otherwise provided may be lawfully used." In the meantime the preliminary details for the levy and collection of an assessment for the purpose of providing the funds required for the prosecution of the work of reclamation and flood control were being worked out by the reclamation board under many difficulties arising out of the magnitude of the undertaking and the involved and often conflicting rights of those interested in and to be primarily burdened thereby. The resultant delays and impediments in the course of determining the amount of the assessment and the proper distribution of its burdens necessarily resulted in the present depletion of the meager funds which had already been provided during the initial stages of the project to such an extent that by the beginning of the year 1919 the registered and outstanding warrants drawn against said fund amounted to the sum of $1,340,358.47, with accrued interest. In the meantime the amount of the assessment, which had, after various amendments, been fixed at the sum of approximately $10,600,000, but which was subject to still further changes, remained uncollected, except as to a small portion thereof, and was being impeded as to its levy and collection by litigation in various forms. Such was the condition of the project of reclamation and flood control within said district with which the Legislature of 1919 was confronted. It was abundantly apparent that the state of California must provide remedial legislation of some sort in aid of its imperiled project of reclamation and flood control. The Legislature of 1919 accordingly adopted the three contemporaneous acts of that year, the nature, object, and interpretation of which have been set forth in detail by this court in the case of Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District, etc., v. Johnson, 192 Cal. 211, 219 P. 442. The only one of these three contemporaneous acts with which we are particularly concerned in the instant proceeding is that providing for an appropriation of $3,000,000 in aid of said project. The purpose of said appropriation as expressed in section 1 of the act was that "of co-operation in the construction of the public works, included in and provided for by that certain project heretofore adopted by the reclamation board, known as Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district." The act further contains the general provision that the money thus appropriated is to be paid to said reclamation board "for the benefit of said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district in connection with said Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 or any modifications or amendments thereof that may be hereafter made in accordance with law, the same to be applied as it is now or may hereafter be provided by law." The foregoing provisions of said act are somewhat further clarified by a reference to the provisions of the contemporaneous act of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 1130), purporting to amend section 34 of the Reclamation Board Act of previous years, wherein direct reference is made to the appropriation provided for in its companion statute by the provision to the effect substantially that all money which may be paid to the reclamation board in aid of carrying out the project of reclamation and flood control under any statute then in existence, "or by any law of similar import which has been or may be hereafter adopted by the Legislature of the state of California, shall be applied on said Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6, by said reclamation board, to the pro rata payment of such portions of said assessment as are based upon flood control benefits"; and said amendment to said section 34 further provided that—

> "the money so received by the reclamation board from the state shall, unless bonds based upon said assessment shall have been authorized by law, be by the reclamation board paid over forthwith to the state treasurer and by him credited to the funds of said assessment, to be used and expended in the same manner as funds collected from landowners upon said assessment. But if at the time of the receipt of any such money by the reclamation board from the state, bonds based upon said assessment shall have been authorized by law, the money so received from the state shall be deposited by the reclamation board with the state treasurer to be held as a special fund for the redemption of such bonds and shall, under the direction and as required by the reclamation board, be applied to the payment and cancellation of such bonds."

[13] The clear intendment of the above interlocked provisions of these two contemporaneous acts is that whatever moneys became available to the reclamation board from the resource of said $3,000,000 appropriation was, unless otherwise directed by the Legislature, to be applied to identically the same purposes to which the moneys derived, or to be derived, from an assessment or from whatever funds were to be provided by an authorized bond issue in and of such assessment were to be applied; that is to say, to the payment of the outstanding indebtedness of the drainage district in the form of the issued, registered, but unpaid, warrants which had been drawn by the district against the aforesaid fund of the reclamation board, regardless of the time when such warrants had been issued, but in the order of their registration. It is thus made plain that it was the purpose of the Legislature through the passage of these three contemporaneous remedial acts to provide a speedy method for the liquidation of the outstanding obligations of the drainage district in the form of these issued and registered warrants which it had duly issued for work done upon this vast public project, and that the appropriation of $3,000,000 thus made by it was, unless otherwise directed, to be applied to the payment of such obligations, regardless of whether they had arisen before or were to arise after the adoption of said enactments. By so providing, the Legislature of 1919 recognized, and in a very definite sense reaffirmed, the express declarations of the Legislatures of 1913 and 1915 as to the essentially public nature of the project for reclamation and flood control within said drainage district and the supreme interest of the state of California and of its people therein, and in the ultimately successful consummation thereof.

This being so, and it having been already determined that, in view of the essentially public nature of said project the state of California might properly have undertaken to pay the entire cost of its prosecution at the time of its inception, we are brought face to face with the proposition as to whether the state might not also at any stage in the prosecution of said public work undertake to assume and bear such portion of the burden as it might see fit through appropriate legislative action, notwithstanding the fact that it might for the time being have laid that burden upon others; that is to say, upon the landowners of said district, by whom it was reluctantly or indifferently being borne, with the effect of delaying or endangering the successful consummation of the project itself. We entertain no doubt that the state in its sovereign capacity had power so to do, and that in so doing to the extent of its appropriation of $3,000,000 made by the enactment of 1919, or of so much as may become available to the uses of the reclamation board, as the installments thereof fall due, unless otherwise diverted under the terms of said act, the state Legislature would not be violating the constitutional inhibition against gifts of public money. In the case of City of Oakland v. Garrison, 194 Cal. 298, 228 P. 433, this court considered the scope of section 31 of article 4 of the Constitution as to its application to appropriations of public money in aid of projects which were essentially public in their character as distinguished from such appropriations for purely private purposes, and in so doing distinguished the earlier case of Conlin v. Board of Supervisors, 114 Cal. 404, 46 P. 279, 33 L. R. A. 752, from the facts of the later case; and this court, in upholding the validity of the instant appropriation, decided that the fact that incidentally a private use or benefit might thereby be subserved did not affect the validity of the appropriation; the main purpose and benefit thereof being a public one. We deem the principles declared in that case and the authorities therein relied upon in support of its ruling directly applicable to the instant situation. It is, however, argued by the respondents herein that this court, in the cases of Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District v. Johnson, supra, and of Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District v. Riley, 194 Cal. 624, 229 P. 957, has decided that the owners and holders of warrants for construction work or materials furnished said district prior to the adoption of the acts of 1919 did not have a vested right to compel the application of any portion of the $3,000,000 appropriation of that year to the preferential payment of their claims. It is true that this court so held in those cases, but it does not follow therefrom that the reclamation board may not apply some portion of the moneys derived from said appropriation to the liquidation of said claims when the vastly greater interest and object of such application is that of aiding the advancement of the public project of reclamation and flood control. The fact that the owners or holders of such warrants are to be benefited by the speedier adjustment of their claims than that already provided through the slower process of the assessment and its collection is but a minor and incidental benefit as compared with the public interest involved, a greater benefit arising from the liquidation of these warrants than that accruing to the holders thereof accrues to the district and the landowners therein through the lessening to the extent thereof of their liability on account of the assessment; but even this benefit is overshadowed by the yet vaster benefit to the state at large from the pro tanto advancement of its great project for reclamation and flood control in the extensive and valuable area within this drainage district; for the confinement of the waters of its principal rivers to their proper channels, and for the scientific devotion of such waters to the fructification of its fertile lands. To appropriations of public money for such public purposes the inhibitions of the Constitution against gifts of public money can have no application.

The former opinion of this court is hereby reaffirmed.

We do not deem it necessary to extend the compulsions of the writ of mandate, at this stage of the instant proceeding, any further than that already indicated in the main opinion.

Let a writ accordingly issue.

---

79 Cal. App. 734

DUFFEY v. DUFFEY. (Civ. 5518.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 20, 1926.)

1. Divorce 🔑231—On dissolution of marriage, court may, in addition to dividing community property, compel husband to make suitable allowance for wife's support (Civ. Code, §§ 139, 146, 147).

Court must, on dissolution of marriage, divide community property, and it may in its discretion compel husband to make suitable allowance for wife's support during her life or for shorter period under Civ. Code, §§ 139, 146, 147.

2. Divorce 🔑286—Decision as to maintenance and support will not be set aside except for abuse of discretion (Civ. Code, § 142).

Trial court has extensive discretion as to provisions for maintenance and support under Civ. Code, § 142, and its decision will not be disturbed on appeal except on showing of abuse of discretion.

3. Divorce 🔑238—Possibility that divorced wife may invest her share of community property unwisely is not ground for allowing maintenance (Civ. Code, § 142).

Where wife, having received share of community property, brings suit for divorce, fact that she may possibly make poor investments will not be considered in making provisions for maintenance, under Civ. Code, § 142, providing that, where wife has sufficient property to give her support, court may in its discretion withhold any allowance.

4. Divorce 🔑235—Where income from wife's share of community property was not proved insufficient, denial of maintenance held not abuse of discretion.

Denial of maintenance held not abuse of discretion, where divorced wife had received over one-half of community property and was awarded only two of six children, in the absence of any evidence as to insufficiency of income from such property for support of herself and children.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by Addie S. Duffey against Homer N. Duffey. Judgment for plaintiff, and she appeals from a portion thereof. Affirmed.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, and Schauer & Ryon, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Heaney, Price & Postel, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. This action was one originally brought by plaintiff against defendant for separate maintenance. At the time of the trial, by leave of the court, an amended complaint was filed, praying for a divorce on the ground of willful desertion. Defendant filed an answer and cross-complaint. Under his cross-complaint he also alleged desertion. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff. There were six living children, issue of the marriage, four of whom at the time of the trial were minors. During the marriage relation, the parties had accumulated community property of the value of $127,956.25, subject to an indebtedness of $40,649, or a net value of $87,207.25.

Prior to judgment, they entered into a stipulation concerning all of their property rights. By the terms of this agreement the net value of the property was divided equally between them. In addition to the one-half of the community property received by plaintiff, defendant paid to her the sum of $5,600, which represented an agreed indebtedness between the parties. At the time the judgment was rendered, plaintiff, by reason of these arrangements, was the owner of property in excess of $49,000 in her own right. It also appeared that at this time plaintiff was the recipient of an income of $25 a month, which she received from the United States government on account of the death of a son while in the army. The property settlement of the parties became a part of the decree.

In awarding judgment for the plaintiff, the custody of two of the minor children was given to her and the others to defendant. The court found that plaintiff was not entitled to any payment from the defendant for alimony, maintenance, or support, in consequence of which no power was retained by the court to alter this finding in the future. The court further found that, at the time of the granting of the interlocutory decree, plaintiff was not entitled to and should not receive from defendant any allowance for the support or maintenance of the minor children, whose custody was awarded to her. This latter finding provided for a modification from time to time, depending upon circumstances. Plaintiff has appealed from that portion of the judgment denying her an allowance for her maintenance and support, and also from the portion thereof denying her an allowance for the support of the two minor children whose custody she was awarded. It is first claimed that the portion of the decree which denies plaintiff an allowance for her support is unjust and inequitable for the reason that she was entitled to the portion she received as of right, and, being a woman, is liable through her inexperience to seriously impair the fund set apart to her, in which event there is no safeguard provided for her future, for which reason the court abused its discretion in making the order that it did. The evidence upon this subject shows that plaintiff has received as her share of the community property a sum totaling almost $50,000, the income of which, together with her allowance from the government, ought to yield about $275 per month. The defendant's share of the community property is subject to an indebtedness of $67,500, in consequence of which his income therefrom amounts to about $100 per month, a portion of which she seeks for her protection. Under these facts it is difficult to see how the claim can be made that the trial court abused its discretion. To have given the plaintiff a greater sum to safeguard her future would have been to practically strip defendant of all interest in the income derived from the accumulations of the parties.

[1, 2] It is the duty of the court, at the time of dissolving the marriage relation, to make proper division of the community property (Civ. Code, §§ 146, 147), and it may, under section 139 of the same Code, in its discretion, compel the husband, in addition, to make what it deems suitable allowance for the future support of the wife during her life or for a shorter period, depending upon circumstances. Ex parte Spencer, 83 Cal. 460, 23 P. 395, 17 Am. St. Rep. 266. The amount to be given, if anything, as permanent alimony, is a matter within the reasonable discretion of the court. Farrar v. Farrar, 41 Cal. App. 452, 182 P. 989. This discretion is controlled by the circumstances, and no fixed rule is provided for. Various conditions may be considered in reaching a conclusion in the matter, but the conclusion when reached will not be disturbed on appeal except upon a showing of an abuse of the exercise of such discretion. Section 142 of the Civil Code expressly provides that, where the wife has sufficient property to give her support the court may in its discretion withhold any allowance to her.

[3, 4] Plaintiff asked for and obtained a divorce and a division of the community property. The fact that she may possibly make poor investments with the funds is not a fact to be considered. That is a peril common to all who possess property. What we have said applies with equal force to the second point raised. The court by its decree provided that plaintiff was not entitled to the payment of any money from the defendant for the maintenance or support of the minor children awarded to her, reserving the power to amend this order at any future time upon proper showing. The trial court has an extensive discretion in this respect, and its conclusion will not be set aside in the absence of clear abuse. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 352, 173 P. 582; 9 Cal. Jur. 790. No such showing is here made. The record is silent upon the subject as to whether or not the income enjoyed by plaintiff is sufficient to support herself or her children. Under such circumstances we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in making the order it did. Defendant is maintaining the children awarded to him in private schools, a fact the court was entitled to consider as a circumstance in connection with all the other facts in reaching the conclusion it did.

The question of the right of the trial court to modify the decree with respect to the maintenance or support of the minor children under the finding or its right to make provision for their support, independent of the decree, are questions that are not before us.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

---

80 Cal. App. 77

PEOPLE v. REID. (Cr. 1261.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 30, 1926.)

1. Arson 🔑37(1)—Evidence, though circumstantial, held to support conviction for arson (Pen. Code, § 447).

Evidence, though circumstantial, held to support conviction for arson, under Pen. Code, § 447, though defendant made extrajudicial statement at time of arrest that she started fires to get insurance on furniture, which offense is punishable under section 548.

2. Criminal law 🔑448(2)—In arson case, fireman's testimony as to location and lack of communication between fires held admissible, not being opinion evidence.

In prosecution for arson where three fires had been started in apartment, testimony by battalion chief of fire department relative to location and lack of communication between such fires held admissible, not being expert or opinion evidence.

3. Criminal law 🔑406(6)—Defendant's extrajudicial statement that she set fires held admission against interest.

In prosecution for arson, defendant's extrajudicial statement when arrested that she set fires to burn insured furniture held admissible, not as confession of guilt, but as admission against interest.

4. Criminal law 🔑409—Testimony that defendant made extrajudicial statement freely and voluntarily held proper.

In prosecution for arson, testimony that defendant made extrajudicial statement, when arrested, that she set fires to burn insured furniture, freely and voluntarily and without promises, threats, or inducements, held proper.

5. Criminal law 🔑829(1)—Refusal of instruction held not error, where subject-matter was covered by instruction given.

Refusal of proposed instruction, proper subject-matter of which was covered by instructions given, held not error.

---

*Rehearing denied December 28, 1926. Hearing denied by Supreme Court January 27, 1927.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Bertha Reid was convicted of arson, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Stanislaus A. Riley, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen,, and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. Defendant was tried upon an information charging the crime of arson. From the judgment following the verdict of conviction and from the denial of her motion for a new trial, she has appealed upon a typewritten record.

[1] The defendant occupied an apartment at 818 Stanyan street in the city of San Francisco. On June 21, 1924, at about 8:30 a. m. of that day, fire occurred in the apartment and members of the fire department appeared upon summons and extinguished the fire. Upon investigation it appeared that three separate fires had been set, two in a room designated as a living-room and a third in a closet of the bedroom adjoining, and an examination of the premises immediately thereafter disclosed that all the fires had been started by the use of coal oil. As a result of this investigation the defendant was taken into custody and made a full statement to the police and fire department officials to the effect that she started the fires for the purpose of burning her furniture so that she could collect insurance thereon, but that she did not intend to burn the building. Upon the trial it appeared that the defendant claimed that while filling a lamp some coal oil was spilled upon her corset, which was lying upon a bureau or table, and that when she endeavored to light the lamp the corset took fire; that she then seized the corset and ran to the closet for the purpose of procuring a bath mat to aid her to extinguish the fire, and in so doing set fire to the clothing in the closet. The evidence in the record, together with the free and voluntary admissions of the defendant at the time of her arrest, fully support the verdict of conviction.

[2] Defendant complains of the ruling of the trial court relating to the state's inquiries directed to a battalion chief of the fire department covering the location and lack of communication between the separate fires which were discovered when he answered the fire call. It is said that some of these questions called for the opinion and conclusion of the witness, but the witness was merely asked to detail the location of the separate fires and to state whether there was any communication between them, and whether the partition between the two rooms showed that the fire had been in contact with it. The witness was merely asked to state the facts as he saw them and was not asked for expert or opinion evidence of any character.

[3, 4] Error is assigned in the admission of the extrajudicial statement of the defendant and in the examination of the witnesses called by the state for the purpose of showing that this statement was freely and voluntarily given. This examination was unusually fair to the defendant, and the cross-examination of the witnesses and the evidence of the defendant herself went to the full limit of propriety in that respect. The statement was not a confession of guilt of the crime charged and was not introduced as such, but was offered as an admission against interest. The witnesses called by the state were asked the usual questions as to whether the statement was made freely and voluntarily and without promises, threats, or inducements. There was no error in the examination of the witnesses nor in the admission of the statement.

It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of guilty of the crime of arson as defined in section 447, Penal Code, but that the evidence tended to prove that the defendant was guilty of the crime of destroying property for the purpose of collecting insurance thereon as denounced in section 548, Penal Code. The argument is based on the extrajudicial statement of the defendant that she denied the intention of burning the house, but admitted that she set fire to the furniture for the purpose of collecting insurance thereon, It appears that she did not own the house, but had rented an apartment therein and that at the time of the fire the personal property belonging to her which was located in the apartment was insured for the sum of $1,500. The evidence is that the defendant set fire to a bureau or table standing in one room of the apartment, and that she then set fire to clothing and material in a closet in another room, and it was within the province of the jury to infer whether these acts evidenced an intention to set fire to the building within the meaning of the Code section. The jury found against the defendant upon this issue and upon evidence which was competent and as complete as circumstantial evidence of acts of this character could reasonably be.

[5] Criticism is made of the refusal of the trial judge to give a number of instructions proposed by the defendant. All these instructions were refused for the reason assigned by the trial court that they were covered by other instructions given. No complaint is made as to any of the instructions given by the trial judge. We have examined with care all the instructions proposed and refused and all the instructions given by the trial judge, and are satisfied that in every respect the subject-matter covered by the instructions refused was carried into the instructions given wherever proper, and that in every respect the jury was fully and properly instructed in accordance with the law applicable to the case being tried.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

79 Cal. App. 746

ABBOTT v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 5370.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 22, 1926.)

1. Justices of the peace ⟹166(2)—Setting case for trial by nonappealing party after expiration of year held not written stipulation to extend time (Code Civ. Proc. § 981a).

Dismissal of case appealed from justice court and set for trial by nonappealing party after expiration of year held proper, under Code Civ. Proc. § 981a, providing appeal from justice court must be tried within one year unless time is extended by written stipulation; such act not amounting to a written stipulation.

2. Justices of the peace ⟹166(2)—Setting case for trial over year after appeal from justice court did not estop nonappealing party to claim time had expired (Code Civ. Proc. § 981a).

By setting case appealed from justice court for trial after expiration of year, nonappealing party was not estopped to set up Code Civ. Proc. § 981a, requiring, in the absence of written stipulation for extended time, that cases so appealed be brought on for trial within one year.

Application by H. Bernard Abbott for a writ of mandate to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, W. C. Doran and another, Judges, requiring respondent to proceed with the trial of an appeal from a justice court. Writ denied.

William G. Randall and Mart Coles, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Frank J. McDougal, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. Petitioner was defendant in a certain action in the justice court. Judgment was there rendered against him, and he prosecuted an appeal to respondent superior court. The appeal was perfected on March 10, 1925. Thereafter upon the application of the plaintiffs in the action, after written notice of motion, respondent court set it down for trial on April 30, 1926. The plaintiffs moved the court, on March 30, 1926, after due notice of motion, to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the appealing party had not brought the action on for trial in respondent court within one year, as required by section 981a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and thereupon the appeal was ordered dismissed. On April 30, 1926, the day upon which the action had been set down for trial in respondent court, the defendant, petitioner here, appeared before the court and demanded that the trial proceed. Respondent court refused the demand and ordered the cause stricken from the calendar. Thereupon petitioner presented to this court his petition in this proceeding for the purpose of requiring respondent to proceed with the trial, and we issued an alternative writ. Respondents have made no return to the writ, although they have been permitted to brief the points involved in the proceeding.

Section 981a of the Code of Civil Procedure contains the provision that an appeal must be dismissed where the appealing party has not brought the appealed cause to trial within a year (Reynolds v. Superior Court, 69 Cal. App. 445, 231 P. 354), "unless such time be otherwise extended by a written stipulation by the parties to the action. * * *"

[1, 2] A question similar to the one here presented was recently before another division of the District Court of Appeal. It was then determined that when a cause is appealed to the superior court and is set down for trial upon the application of the nonappealing party for a date more than one year after the date upon which the appeal was perfected, such action upon the part of the nonappealing party, if it does not amount to a stipulation waiving the requirement of section 981a, estops that party to avail himself of the requirement. See California L. & A. Co. v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. App. 767, 234 P. 408. At the time when this decision was rendered the cause of Miller & Lux v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 333, 219 P. 1006, apparently was not called to the attention of the court. The latter cause arose under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for a dismissal of actions when the plaintiffs have not brought them to trial within five years after answer filed, "except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended." The Supreme Court in the case last cited expressed views as to the effect of section 583 which we think are inconsistent with the conclusion reached in California L. & A. Co. v. Superior Court. We think the fact that in the present instance the nonappealing party caused the appealed cause to be set for trial for a date more than a year after the perfecting of the appeal neither amounted to a written stipulation nor operated as an estoppel. Before reaching this conclusion we have examined Swim v. Superior Court, 193 Cal. 539, 226 P. 2.

The alternative writ of mandate is vacated, and a peremptory writ is denied.

I concur: CRAIG, J.

THOMPSON, J., being disqualified, does not participate in the foregoing decision.

80 Cal. App. 583

PEOPLE v. MAZZOLA. (Cr. 1396.)*

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 7, 1927.)

1. Intoxicating liquors 🔑202 — Information charging maintenance of place where liquor was "kept" need not allege keeping for beverage purposes.

Information, charging that defendant "did willfully and unlawfully maintain a place where intoxicating liquor was manufactured and kept," held not insufficient for failure to add "for beverage purposes," or "for sale, barter, or other commercial purposes," since "kept" implies such use.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Keep.]

2. Indictment and information 🔑110(31)—Indictment, under statute for maintaining place where liquor was manufactured and kept, held sufficient (Wright Act).

Information, charging that defendant "did willfully and unlawfully maintain a place where intoxicating liquor was manufactured and kept," held sufficient under Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79).

3. Indictment and information 🔑86(3)—Information for maintaining place where liquor was manufactured and kept need not state particular place in county where alleged offense was committed.

Information for maintaining place where intoxicating liquor was manufactured and kept held not defective for failure to state particular place in county where alleged offense was committed.

4. Intoxicating liquors 🔑223(1)—In prosecution for maintaining place where liquor was "kept," state must prove that liquor was kept for commercial purposes.

In prosecution under information for maintaining place where liquor was manufactured and "kept," refusal of instruction requiring proof, beyond reasonable doubt, that liquor was manufactured and kept for purpose of sale, barter, or other commercial purposes, held reversible error, since state was required to prove allegation, implied by "kept," that liquor was kept for commercial purposes.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Andy Mazzola was convicted of maintaining a place where intoxicating liquor was manufactured and kept, and he appeals. Reversed.

C. B. Conlin and E. R. Simon, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the offense of "maintaining a place where intoxicating liquor was manufactured and kept."

The prosecution was had under the provisions of the Wright Act (Stats. 1921, p. 79), which in terms adopts the provisions of the National Prohibition Act, or the so-called Volstead Act, of date October 28, 1919, and which latter act, among other things, contains the provision that—

> "Any room, house, building, boat, vehicle, structure, or place * * * where intoxicating liquor is sold, manufactured, kept * * * or bartered in violation of" this title, "and all intoxicating liquor and * * * property kept and used in maintaining" the same, "is hereby declared to be a * * * common nuisance," etc. U. S. Comp. St. § 10138¼c.

[1] The information charged that defendant "did willfully and unlawfully maintain a place where intoxicating liquor was manufactured and kept. * * *"

Appellant contends that, because it is not alleged in the information that the intoxicating liquor was manufactured and kept "for beverage purposes" or "for sale, barter, or other commercial purposes," the information failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense.

In support of such contention, appellant relies principally upon the cases of People v. Mehra (Cal. App.) 238 P. 802; United States v. Dowling (D. C.) 278 F. 630, and State v. Bulloch, 151 La. 593, 92 So. 127. In the case first cited it is held that evidence of mere possession or "keeping" of intoxicating liquor is insufficient to support a conviction of maintaining a common nuisance as defined in the statute, but that additional evidence of facts or circumstances reasonably raising the inference of a purpose to sell such liquor must be presented. The case of United States v. Dowling, in which the defendant was charged with the crime of conspiracy to violate the National Prohibition Act, holds that an indictment which charged the defendant with possession of certain intoxicating liquors without alleging any facts to show that such possession was unlawful did not charge an offense. In the third case it is held that an information which merely charged the defendant with the offense of selling intoxicating liquor was insufficient, in that it contained no allegation that such liquor was sold "for beverage purposes," as provided by statute.

It is apparent that each of the authorities to which reference has been had is pertinent and applicable to the issues herein involved, and, in the absence of countervailing authorities, if not wholly convincing, would be most persuasive. It remains, however, to consider certain other cases directly bearing upon the question of the sufficiency of the information. In each of the several authorities to which attention has been directed, the importance to be placed on a proper construction or interpretation of the word "kept" is emphasized. In the case of Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., 254 U. S. 88, 41 S. Ct. 31, 65 L. Ed. 151, 10 A. L. R. 1548, in speaking of the significance to be properly attached to the word "kept" in the section of the National Prohibition Act there and here under consideration, the Supreme Court said:

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court March 3, 1927.

> "The word 'kept' in this section is the only one of possible application to the case at bar, and the words with which it is immediately associated are such that as here used it plainly means kept for sale or barter or other commercial purpose."

In Singer v. United States (C. C. A.) 288 F. 695, a conclusion identical in all respects with that reached in the case last cited is reached by the circuit court. In the Mehra Case (Cal. App.) 238 P. 802, upon which reliance is especially placed by defendant, the court quotes with approval the foregoing language used by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., supra.

[2] It therefore may be accepted as having been judicially determined that the word "kept," as used in the section of the National Prohibition Act here under consideration, carries with it the meaning that the intoxicating liquor was illegally held or stored for the purpose of selling the same, or of devoting it to other commercial purposes. The language used in the pleading to which objection is made may therefore be said to have legally conveyed to the defendant the information that, included within the charge against him, he was accused of the offense of unlawfully keeping intoxicating liquor for sale, barter, or other commercial use. But, aside from such judicial interpretation of the word "kept," it is settled law that, generally speaking (subject to some exceptions), an information drawn substantially in the language of the statute is sufficient. 14 Cal. Jur. §§ 27, 38, and cases there cited.

In the case of People v. Johnson, 63 Cal. App. 178, 218 P. 449, the defendant was charged with "the crime of maintaining a common nuisance, as said crime is defined by section 21 of the so-called 'Wright Act,'" as was the effect of the charge against the defendant in the instant case. There, as here, an objection was made that the information did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. In discussing the question, the court said in part that—

> "The charge as laid is substantially in the language of the statute, which itself fully and clearly describes the offense, and that it is, therefore, in all respects sufficient to inform and to have informed the accused of the specific crime with which he was charged so as to enable him to prepare and interpose thereto any defense available to him. This is all that is required of any criminal pleading."

In People v. Frankovich, 64 Cal. App. 184, 221 P. 671, the defendant was likewise charged with the offense of committing a common nuisance by reason of his violation of the provision of the National Prohibition Act, as adopted by the Wright Act; and, in speaking to the question raised by the appellant on an objection similar to that here under consideration, the court said:

> "We think, however, that the information, with the requisite clearness and directness, charges the offense sought to be therein stated. It is substantially in the language of the section of the Wright Act or Volstead Act (sec. 21) upon which it is founded, * * * and involves a statement of the acts constituting the offense denounced by said section 'in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.' Section 950, subd. 2, Pen. Code. No more is required of a criminal pleading than that 'it be direct and certain, and allege all the acts and facts which the Legislature has said shall constitute the offense charged.' * * * No language could be added to section 21 of [title 2 of] the Volstead Act [U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½jj] adopted by the Wright Act, which would render its definition of the crime of maintaining a common nuisance clearer or more direct, and hence the general rule that it is sufficient if a crime be stated in an information or indictment in substantial agreement with the language of the statute applies here."

As a conclusion to be deduced from the several authorities to which reference has been had, it is clear that the defendant was in no wise misled by reason of the form of the accusation, but, to the contrary, that in law he was fully cognizant of the charge that was preferred against him.

[3] It is also urged by appellant that the information is defective, in that it fails to state the particular place in the county of San Bernardino where the alleged offense was committed. But it appears that such a statement is unnecessary. People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 441, 48 P. 389; People v. Sheldon, 68 Cal. 434, 9 P. 457; People v. Wooley, 44 Cal. 494; People v. Eveart, 1 Cal. Unrep. 217; People v. Redman, 39 Cal. App. 566, 179 P. 725; People v. Burke, 18 Cal. App. 72, 122 P. 435.

[4] Prejudicial error is also predicated upon the refusal by the trial court to give to the jury each of three several instructions, by which it was proposed to inform the jury that, before the defendant could be found guilty of the offense of which he was charged, the jury must be convinced from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the intoxicating liquor alleged to have been kept at the place specified in the information was manufactured or kept by the defendant for the purpose of sale or barter, or other commercial purposes.

By reference to the authorities cited herein, particularly the cases of Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., 254 U. S. 88, 41 S. Ct. 31, 65 L. Ed. 151, 10 A. L. R. 1548, and Singer v. United States (C. C. A.) 288 F. 695, it will be remembered that the word "kept," contained within the information herein, "means kept for sale or barter, or other commercial purpose." The information therefore must be considered as though it actually had appropriately inserted therein the language which it impliedly contains; so that it must have been legally understood by the prosecution, as well as by the defendant, that the charge against the defendant included the accusation that at a certain time and place he "did willfully and unlawfully maintain a place where intoxicating liquor was manufactured and kept for sale or barter, or other commercial purpose." With such an implied allegation in the information, it necessarily devolved upon the prosecution to prove the purpose for which the defendant kept the intoxicating liquor in question. If no evidence was offered as to such allegation, necessarily the case for the prosecution would have failed. On the other hand, if any evidence was offered with reference to such allegation, the defendant was clearly entitled to have the attention of the jury directed thereto in order that the defendant might have the judgment of the jury as to whether the facts adduced were sufficient to convince the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the purpose of the defendant in manufacturing or keeping the intoxicating liquor was that of making an illegal sale or barter thereof or to devote it to other commercial purposes. As has been indicated herein, although not expressly so stated, the allegation (whether express or implied) of the purpose of the defendant in manufacturing or keeping the intoxicating liquor in question was an essential element or factor in the information against him. In order to support a verdict of guilty against the defendant, it was as necessary to make proof of that particular allegation as it was to prove any other allegation in the information. If the defendant was entitled to any instruction in the case, it was that the prosecution was compelled to prove beyond a reasonable doubt each and every material allegation of the information. No such instruction nor the equivalent thereof was given. To the contrary, as affecting the particular point here under consideration, in effect the jury was instructed only in the formal language of the information that, if it believed that defendant did willfully and unlawfully maintain a place where intoxicating liquor was manufactured or kept, its duty was to find the defendant guilty. No attempt was made to define the word "kept." Without such definition the jury may have had an entirely erroneous understanding of the meaning of the word as applied to the statute here under consideration. The requested instructions which were refused by the trial court sought to instruct the jury as to its duty with reference to an element in the case which was of vital importance to the defendant. It is manifest that, in the refusal of the trial court to so instruct the jury, the defendant was deprived of a substantial right.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

79 Cal. App. 545

TRULL v. DUNN et al. (Civ. 3136.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 24, 1926.)

1. Quieting title 🔑10(1)—Plaintiff, seeking to quiet title, must prevail on strength of own title, and weakness of defendant's asserted title is immaterial.

In action to quiet title, plaintiff must prevail on strength of own title, and part of opinion dealing with weakness of defendant's asserted title as to payment of taxes and listing of property was not material to decision of case.

2. Adverse possession 🔑95—That defendants, claiming title, did not pay taxes or list lots in controversy for assessment, as affecting adverse possession, held shown by evidence.

In action to quiet title, evidence held to show that defendants had not paid taxes on lots in controversy, and had not, for period longer than required by statute of limitations, listed any of lots for assessment purposes.

3. Adverse possession 🔑115(1)—Question of tax payments, in determining issue of adverse possession in action to quiet title, held for trial court.

In action to quiet title, question of payment of taxes was for trial court, in determining issue of adverse possession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

On rehearing. Denied.
For former opinion, see 250 P. 185.

Wm. T. Kendrick and Victor H. Kendrick, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.
R. D. McLaughlin and H. R. Collins, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appellants, in their petition for rehearing, state that "the case stated in the opinion of the above-entitled court differs materially from the case as it appears in the record in the following particulars," and then refers to the testimony of John J. Dunn, the son of the defendant James T. Dunn, as to the lands leased to the said John J. Dunn by the defendant James T. Dunn; the opinion stating: "Nowhere does it appear from the testimony that there was any definite agreement as to the particular land to be farmed." A reference to folio 167 of the transcript, setting forth the testimony of John J. Dunn, will show that we have quoted the language of the witness word for word as to the land leased by father to son for the purpose of being farmed by the son.

[1, 2] Exception is also taken to the statement of the court as to the payment of taxes by the plaintiff, and also to the statement in the opinion that the defendant had paid no taxes on the property, and that the lots in controversy were never listed by him for assessment purposes, and the effect of such failure, as shown by the case of Janke v. McMahon, 21 Cal. App. 781, 787, 133 P. 21. This part of the opinion was not material to a decision of the cause, for the reason that it dealt with the weakness of the defendant's asserted title in an action where the plaintiff must prevail upon the strength of her own title, but was in answer to the argument made by the defendants upon this appeal. The language of this court should have been that the evidence was amply sufficient to satisfy the trial court that the defendants had not paid taxes on any of the lots in controversy, and had not for a period much longer than that required by the statute of limitations listed any of the lots for assessment purposes. Just for the sake of accuracy in this particular, we have re-examined the testimony in this case and find the following: That the plaintiff claims under a color of title by a deed made and executed on the 19th day of April, 1900, conveying all the lots in controversy to the then husband of the plaintiff, and a subsequent decree of distribution, dated October 30, 1913, distributing all of the lots in controversy to the plaintiff.

The testimony of Ella Smith Trull was directly in point to the effect that the taxes levied upon the property were paid by her husband during his lifetime, and after his death, up to some time about the year 1922, since which date the taxes were paid on the premises in controversy by a bank, when they were turned over in trust to a bank to secure certain advances. The testimony of the witness R. D. McLaughlin shows that the taxes on several of the lots, just how many not stated, were not paid and the same became delinquent and were sold. His testimony is as follows:

> "I made a memorandum, and checked that with the receipts that she gave me from the years 1907 to 1916, inclusive. At that time we redeemed everything, up to and including 1916. The tax receipts brought down by Mrs. Trull, and which I went over, covered the years 1907 to 1916, inclusive. I checked the receipts for the redemptions for all the lots during that period."

This is very persuasive evidence that the defendants had not paid the taxes on the lots. The record does show that, for the year 1913, lot 24 in block D, lots 25 and 28 in block 80, and lots 11 and 12 in block 85 were assessed to the defendant James T. Dunn; but in 1916 lots 25 and 26, block 80, and lots 11 and 12, block 85, were assessed to Ella Smith, now Ella Smith Trull. The same is true for the year 1922 as to lot 24 and lots 25 and 26, supra. In 1917, 1918, 1919, all the property described in the complaint, with the exception of one lot, to wit, lot 24 in block V, was assessed exclusively to the plaintiff.

This record we think sufficiently showed to the trial court that the defendant was not listing said lots until the controversy herein arose, and then only listed a few of the lots described in plaintiff's complaint for a very short period of time. The testimony of the plaintiff is to the effect that, when she discovered that the defendant James T. Dunn had had his name inserted on the assessment roll as to two of the lots in 1917, she called upon him in relation thereto.

The petition for rehearing also quotes the language of the defendant James T. Dunn as a witness in his own behalf, as follows: "I paid the taxes on those lots." The context of the testimony, however, eliminates the force of this testimony. It appears in the transcript as follows:

> "There were two or three people that farmed a little piece at different places. There were no lots fenced. There were two lots set out in blue gum in the tract. I think there is one or two fenced. I think you can't get on it. There is no other fence. The lots I speak of are not any of those in question here. I paid the taxes on those lots."

The witness then testified as to how he paid his taxes by sending a signed blank check to the tax collector. The assessment roll of the county of Los Angeles for the years from 1907 to 1922, inclusive, were admitted in evidence, and it was stipulated that all the taxes levied upon the lots described in plaintiff's complaint during those years had been paid; but the record, however, does not disclose anything except as herein referred to.

We were slightly in error as to the year 1913 as to the assessment of the property; but it does not appear that the defendant listed the same, and the fact that for some years afterwards his name does not appear on the assessment roll as to any of these lots amply supported the statement of this court in its opinion deciding this cause.

[3] The question of the payment of taxes was a matter primarily for the trial court in determining the question of adverse possession, and we think the record, as herein cited, justifies the conclusion of the trial court in so far as it was necessary under the law relating to adverse possession to find as to the payment of taxes.

Rehearing denied.

---

79 Cal. App. 762

HODOIAN v. GARABEDIAN. (Civ. 3168.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 23, 1926.)

1. Gifts 🔑19(1)—Grantor, executing and delivering formal conveyances of all property to brother, together with manual custody of personalty, held to have intended absolute delivery of instruments.

Where grantor, afflicted with fatal disease, executed and delivered formal conveyances of all property to brother, together with manual custody of personalty, grantor held to have intended absolute delivery of instruments in spite of his subsequent requirement of written agreement to redeliver in case of recovery.

2. Deeds 🔑54, 56(3)—Delivery of deed, and grantor's intent to relinquish all rights, is necessary to effect transfer.

To effectually transfer title to land, delivery of deed, together with intent to relinquish all control by grantor, is essential.

3. Deeds 🔑56(2)—Intent behind transfer of instrument must be determined from surrounding facts and circumstances.

Intent with which instrument is transferred is question of fact to be determined by consideration of all circumstances surrounding particular transaction.

4. Evidence 🔑461(2)—Parol evidence of grantor's intent when delivering deed held admissible.

Intent with which grantor delivered deed of conveyance may be shown by oral testimony.

5. Deeds 🔑66—Question of whether grantor intended to relinquish all rights under instruments on delivery is one of fact.

Question of whether grantor intended to divest himself of title, and relinquish all control over instrument on delivery, is one of fact for jury or trial court.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Trial court's finding as to whether grantor intended to relinquish all control of instrument on delivery held controlling in case of conflicting evidence.

In case of conflict in evidence as to whether grantor intended to relinquish all control over instrument, findings of trial court are controlling.

7. Deeds 🔑207, 208(6)—One, denying valid transfer to holder of realty conveyance, has burden to prove no conveyance or acceptance by preponderance of evidence.

Burden is on him who denies valid transfer to one holding deed of conveyance to real property to show by preponderance of evidence that there was no conveyance or acceptance.

8. Deeds 🔑208(3, 6)—Grantee's possession of deed is prima facie evidence of both delivery and acceptance.

Possession of deed by grantee, or one holding under him, is prima facie evidence of both delivery and acceptance.

9. Deeds 🔑60—Delivery of deed with intention to convey title only in event that grantor fails to survive operation held absolute and final (Civ. Code, § 1056).

Where grantor delivers deed to grantee with intent that it shall convey title only in event that grantor shall fail to survive contemplated operation, delivery is absolute and final, as provided by Civ. Code, § 1056.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by John M. Hodoian, also known as and called Mugerditch Garabedian, a minor, by his guardian, Emostuhi Hodoian, against Avak Garabedian, to set aside conveyances of real estate and assignment of personal property. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Peckinpah & Carter and M. G. Gallaher, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Power & McFadzean and J. Thomas Crowe, all of Visalia, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment upholding the due execution and delivery of two deeds of conveyance to real property, and an assignment of certain notes and bank accounts. The only question involved is whether the instruments were delivered by the grantor to the grantee with the intent to thereby divest himself of title, and to relinquish all dominion and control over the instruments.

The issues of unsound mind and undue influence which were presented by the pleadings were specifically waived by appellant at the trial. The plaintiff is a nephew of Iseal Garabedian, an Armenian, named in the pleadings as E. Garabedian, who was the grantor mentioned in the instruments in question. For 23 years prior to his death he had lived with his brother, Avak, who was the grantee. He had no other relatives except plaintiff, and the family of his brother, Avak. The grantor owned 20 acres of land near Merced, two lots in the town of Fowler, and several notes, together with money in bank, represented by certificates of deposit and cash on open account. The value of the personal property was about $12,000. For some time the grantor had been in ill health, and about two months prior to his death he had an attack of influenza, which led his physician to order him to be taken to the hospital. This was done 10 days before his death. He died of pneumonia May 8, 1923. Avak and his daughter, Karat, visited him daily while he remained at the hospital. On May 2d he told his brother, Avak, to get an attorney by the name of George F. Gill, with whom he had transacted business for 3 years past, and bring him to the hospital. Pursuant to this request the brother and Mr. Gill visited him during the forenoon of that day. The grantor told Gill that he wanted to dispose of his property, and was thereupon asked: "What do you want to do with your property?" Turning to his brother Avak, the grantor said: "Whatever I got, I going to give you." Then, after considerable talk about making a will, the attorney told him that if he made a will it would have to be probated. He then said that he wanted to save the expense of probating, and that he did not wish to make a will, but would deed the property directly to his brother.

Mr. Gill testified with respect to this part of the conversation:

> "I went down to the hospital, and I asked whether he wanted to make some disposition of his property. * * * I assumed he wanted to make a will. * * * He wanted to know what the expense would be. I told him it would have to be probated. * * * He didn't want that, * * * I then reported to him that he would have to put it in escrow, or make a conveyance and put it in the bank, and give it to him absolutely. * * * They decided they didn't want to put them in the bank."

The notes, certificates of deposit, and old deeds containing a description of the land and property to be conveyed were kept in a safe deposit box at the bank. Mr. Gill explained that it would be necessary for him to obtain these documents, in order to draw up the instruments of conveyance, and for that purpose he visited the bank to inquire what procedure was necessary for him to gain access to the box. Upon securing the necessary information, he returned and prepared a written authorization, the necessity of signing which Avak explained to him, and he said: "You bring anything down; I sign them." This authorization, in the following language, was then signed by the grantor:

> "Tulare, Cal., May 2, 1923.
>
> "Tulare Branch of Southwest Trust & Savings Bank—Gentlemen: This is to authorize you to permit A. Garabedian to open my safe deposit box No. 5082, and to remove any and all the contents thereof.
>
> "I do hereby assign and deliver to the said A. Garabedian all the contents of said safe deposit box.
>
> "You are released from any and all liability by reason of following these instructions.
>
> "Very sincerely yours,
> "[Signed] E. Garabedian."

When the grantor was first taken to the hospital, he handed his keys, including the safe deposit box key, to his brother, saying: "You keep that." Having procured the written authorization, the attorney and Avak went to the bank and took out all of the documents from the box. They then made an engagement to meet at the hospital in the afternoon, and the attorney went to his office and prepared the two deeds and the assignment in question. Pursuant to arrangement, they again met in the sickroom about half past 1 o'clock. These instruments were first read and explained to the grantor by both Mr. Gill and Miss Karat. The grantor was able to speak the English language, but at times expressed himself with difficulty, and for this reason a part of the conversation regarding the disposition of the property was conducted through the niece, Karat, acting as an interpreter. After reading and explaining these instruments of conveyance to the grantor, he signed them in the presence of witnesses and handed them to the grantee, without reservation.

Regarding this portion of the transaction, the attorney testified:

> "We went back to the hospital, and I explained to him, in English, the substance of the deed, and the substance of the assignment. Then I asked the young lady to read the assignment to him, and explain it as she went along. And she did this in Armenian. Then I asked him if that was the way he wanted it, and he said, 'Yes.' Then he gave them either to the girl, or to his brother; I don't know which. Anyway, as far as my part of it was concerned, it was finished. Then I went to go. Then the young lady told me he wanted to know what would happen in case he got well. So I told him nothing would happen, because I would draw an instrument for his brother to sign, that he would return the property in case he got well. * * * That was after the delivery of the deed, * * * and just before I was leaving. The deeds were (then) acknowledged and turned over to Avak. I told them there had to be a delivery—I remember that."

All conversations regarding the transfer and the execution and delivery of the instruments took place at the hospital, in the presence of the grantor, his brother, Avak, his niece, Karat, the attorney, and a nurse. The grantee, Avak, testified:

> That, when Mr. Gill asked his brother if he wanted to make a will, he said: "No, I'm going to deed to him; * * * whatever I got, I going to give to you (Avak)." That the attorney then said: "All right; if you want to I give it to your brother; I will make out a paper, and give it to him." The grantor further said to his brother: "I have got one house; one 20-acre ranch, I am going to deed to you; besides that, some money too. * * *" But, he says, "If I get well, you have to give back to me." And the grantee said, "All right; I am going to give you white and black," meaning that he would give him a written agreement to return the property, if he recovered from the disease from which he was suffering.

Respecting the delivery, the grantee testified:

> "As soon as he go down to the hospital, and he (the grantor) sign up, my brother hand to me."

He then said that he put the documents in his pocket, and, taking them down to the bank, he placed them in the safe deposit box belonging to the grantor, to remain there until the death of his brother. During all of which time the grantee retained the possession of the key and so reserved entire dominion and control over the instruments and property which had been given to him.

After the execution and delivery of the instruments, and pursuant to the request of the grantor, and the promise of the grantee, Avak went with the attorney to his office, where an agreement to reconvey the property, in the event of the grantor's recovery, was prepared, executed, and left in the custody of Mr. Gill. This document contained the following language:

> "I hereby admit that the delivery of the above-described property is on the condition that, should my brother, E. Garabedian, recover from his present illness, and demand the return of his said property to him, I will so redeliver it to him; but, in the event of his death, the transfer and delivery of said property is absolute."

Six days after this transaction the grantor died, and the grantee immediately recorded the deeds and assignment.

Upon these facts the trial court found that the grantor duly delivered to the grantee the instruments of conveyance, and the custody of the personal property without reservation or condition, and with the intent to thereby divest himself of the title thereto, but that, after the delivery and conveyance of title, the grantor requested, and the grantee promised to execute an agreement to reconvey the property in the event that the grantor should recover from his illness, but that he died on May 8, 1923, and that the defendant was the owner of the property described.

[1] Realizing that he was afflicted with a fatal disease from which he expected to soon die, the grantor apparently intended to transfer all his property to his brother, Avak, with whom he had lived on friendly terms for 23 years. With this purpose in view, he summoned his attorney and formally executed and delivered to his brother conveyances to all his property to take effect inter vivos. The transfer was accompanied with the manual custody of the personal property. The fact that he afterwards required a written agreement to reconvey the property in the event of his recovery in no way impairs the validity of the transfer.

The appellant contends that when the grantor used the following language to his brother: "I am going to deed to you, * * * but, if I get well, you have to give back to me," meant that he was insisting that, if he got well, the deeds and assignment must be given back to him. However, in view of the careful explanation on the part of the attorney that he must make an absolute delivery of the deeds, and that he said to his brother, "Whatever I've got, I'm going to give to you," and that the grantee immediately proceeded to prepare and execute an agreement to redeliver the property, and not the instruments, in the event of his recovery, leads us to conclude that the grantor intended to relinquish all control over the instruments when he handed them to his brother. This interpretation of the language is more persuasive, since the grantor did not request the grantee not to record the instruments; in fact, he gave no instruction which would lead to an inference that he was reserving any control over the use or disposition of the instruments after he delivered them. Moreover, it should be remembered that these Armenians expressed themselves in English with difficulty. The conduct of all the parties concerned indicates that the grantor intended to make an absolute delivery of the instruments.

[2] In order to effectually transfer the title to land, the delivery of a deed is absolutely essential. The act of delivery is analogous to what was formerly termed livery of seisin. Delivery is said to be the force that vitalizes the instrument of conveyance, without which it is entirely void. The manual transfer of the deed alone is not sufficient. It must be accompanied with an intent on the part of the grantor to relinquish all control over the instrument and to presently divest himself of the title. White v. Hendley, 185 Cal. 614, 198 P. 22; Follmer v. Rohrer, 158 Cal. 755, 112 P. 544; Hotaling v. Hotaling, 193 Cal. 368, 382, 224 P. 455; Duffy v. Duffy, 71 Cal. App. 251, 235 P. 62.

[3] The intent with which the instrument is transferred is a question of fact to be determined from all the circumstances surrounding the particular transaction. 9 Cal. Jur. 153, § 52; 1 Devlin on Real Estate, 385, § 262; Hefner v. Sealey, 175 Cal. 18, 164 P. 898; Hotaling v. Hotaling, 193 Cal. 368, 224 P. 455.

[4] It is now a settled rule of evidence in this state that the intent with which a grantor delivered a deed of conveyance may be shown by oral testimony. De Cou v. Howell, 190 Cal. 741, 214 P. 444; Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703; Cummings v. Eiszler, 70 Cal. App. 67, 232 P. 723.

[5, 6] The question of the existence of the intent on the part of the grantor to divest himself of title and relinquish all control over the instrument when he delivered it is one of fact to be determined by the trial court or jury. Where there is a conflict of evidence as to the intent, the finding of the trial court is controlling. Moore v. Trott, 162 Cal. 268, 122 P. 462; Hefner v. Sealey, 175 Cal. 18, 164 P. 898; Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 39 P. 797; Smith v. Flynn, 64 Cal. App. 218, 221 P. 384; Duffy v. Duffy, 71 Cal. App. 258, 235 P. 62.

[7, 8] The appellant contends that there is no evidence of acceptance of the deeds of conveyance by the grantee. But the burden is on him who denies a valid transfer to one who holds a deed of conveyance to real property to show by a preponderance of the evidence that there was no conveyance or acceptance. The possession of a deed by a grantee, or those holding under him, is prima facie evidence of both delivery and acceptance. 8 R. C. L. 999, § 62; 2 Tiffany on Real Property, 1750, § 461; Stewart v. Silva, 192 Cal. 405, 409, 221 P. 191; Ward v. Dougherty, 75 Cal. 240, 17 P. 193, 7 Am. St. Rep. 151.

[9] Where the grantor delivers a deed to his grantee, with the intent that it shall convey title only in the event that the grantor shall fail to survive a contemplated operation, the delivery is governed by the provisions of section 1056, Civil Code, and becomes absolute and final. 9 Cal. Jur. 166, § 61; Fisher v. Fisher, 23 Cal. App. 310, 137 P. 1094. Section 1056, Civil Code, provides:

> "A grant cannot be delivered to the grantee conditionally. Delivery to him, or to his agent as such, is necessarily absolute, and the instrument takes effect thereupon, discharged of any condition on which the delivery was made."

The facts in the case of Duffy v. Duffy, 71 Cal. App. 251, 235 P. 62, are strikingly similar to those of the instant case. In that cause the grantor was about to undergo a dangerous operation for cancer of the throat, which the doctor warned him might prove fatal. Thereupon he executed a deed of conveyance to his brother and sister, with the object, in the event of his death, of saving the expense of probating the will. Evidently he expected to procure a reconveyance of the property, in case he survived the operation. He delivered the deed to the grantees, saying: "I give you and Bill my property; if I get well, you will deed it back?"—to which the sister replied: "Oh, yes." It does not appear that the operation was performed, but within five months thereafter he died. The trial court held this to be an unconditional delivery of the deed and a present transfer of title. That judgment was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal and a rehearing denied by the Supreme Court.

For the foregoing reasons, this judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 27

Ex parte GAVIN. (Cr. 953.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 27, 1926.)

1. Insane persons 🔑49—Inebriate suffering from disordered mind may be committed to insane hospital (Pol. Code, §§ 2168, 2185c).

That applicant for release from hospital for insane is suffering from disordered brain and unable to control habit of drinking intoxicating liquor, placing him within Pol. Code, § 2185c, relating to inebriates, does not necessarily prevent him from coming within section 2168, relating to persons whose mentality is so far disordered as to render them proper subjects for commitment thereunder.

2. Insane persons 🔑49—Inebriate with disordered mind need not necessarily be committed to State Hospital for Insane under section relating to inebriates because alcohol renders him more dangerous (Pol. Code, §§ 2168, 2185c).

That alcoholic stimulants render one suffering from mental disorder more injurious to himself and others does not necessitate commitment of inebriate with disordered mind, under Pol. Code, § 2185c, relating to such persons, rather than under section 2168 relating to persons with disordered minds.

3. Insane persons 🔑49—Disordered mental condition, requiring commitment to insane hospital, is question of fact (Pol. Code, § 2168).

Whether subject for commitment to insane hospital is suffering from disordered mental condition requiring his commitment under Pol. Code, § 2168, is question of fact, and not necessarily determined by causes that have superinduced his condition.

4. Habeas corpus 🔑25(1)—Patient of State Hospital for Insane may not be discharged on habeas corpus because hospital officials are willing to grant leave of absence on condition that he be safeguarded.

That officials of State Hospital for Insane are willing to grant patient leave of absence under condition that would prevent him from becoming a menace is not sufficient reason for order discharging him by way of writ of habeas corpus.

Application by Michael Gavin for a writ of habeas corpus, to be directed to the Superintendent of the State Hopsital for Insane. Writ denied, and petitioner remanded.

W. F. Stafford, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner, by a judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, was committed to the State Hospital for the Insane at Napa, state of California, by an order of commitment dated the 27th day of October, 1919, and has applied to this court by way of a petition for writ of habeas corpus to be released from restraint under said commitment and ordered discharged.

The commitment, among other things, recites: That the court, being satisfied from the testimony of the witnesses and of the proof of the matter set forth in the certificate that said Michael Gavin is insane and so disordered in mind as to endanger health, person, and property, and that it is dangerous to life, health, person, and property for such person to be at large, and that his condition is such as requires care and treatment in a hospital for the care and treatment of the insane, commitment therefore ordered.

The record presented to us upon this hearing discloses that an examination of the present mental condition of the petitioner was recently had at a conference of the physicians constituting the medical staff of the Napa State Hospital and, also, of an application made by the petitioner to the superior court of the county of Napa for release on habeas corpus, and the testimony taken in both of said hearings is presented to us by way of stipulation of counsel for our consideration. This record shows that the petitioner some years prior to his commitment to the state hospital at Napa had at different times been committed to the state hospital at Stockton, subsequently discharged therefrom, and, also, committed to the state hospital at Mendocino and subsequently discharged therefrom. The record in both of said previous commitments set forth that the applicant was suffering from mental deterioration superinduced by alcoholism, his condition being associated with what is called "arterial sclerosis."

The record shows that the medical staff of the Napa State Hospital was willing to grant the applicant a leave of absence, provided some friend or relative would obligate himself to become responsible for the applicant and to take such supervision of him as would prevent the applicant from becoming a menace either of himself, to others, or in any wise injurious to life or property; that no relative or friend has consented to become so responsible for the applicant. Upon the hearing before this court, oral testimony was taken, which testimony was to the effect that, if granted a leave of absence from said hospital, the applicant was in such a mental condition as not to be able to take care of himself, being more or less irresponsible, and should at all times be under the supervision of some one who would be able to guard him with the same degree of care that is exercised over patients at the Napa State Hospital. The testimony introduced in this case further shows that for a period of about one month during this year the applicant was absent from the Napa State Hospital, having left the same without permission, and that his return to the hospital was necessitated by a condition alleged to be that of alcoholism.

[1-3] The testimony further introduced upon the hearing of this cause, and, also, the record presented from the two proceedings herein referred to, leads to the conclusion that the applicant is not simply a person who has lost the power of self-control in relation to the use of alcoholic liquors, but that his mentality has been seriously impaired and that he is now a subject suffering from a disordered brain. This is a condition, of course, rendering the applicant less able to control his appetite for intoxicating liquor, and, in a sense, places him in the class of persons referred to in section 2185c of the Political Code relative to the commitment of persons who have lost the power of self-control in relation thereto, but we think, these facts being admitted, the conclusion that the applicant is not also within the class of persons referred to by section 2168 of the same Code, having to do with commitment of persons whose mentality is so far disordered or affected as to render them proper subjects for commitment thereunder, does not necessarily follow, nor does it follow that, because of the disordered mental condition of a person, he is more likely to indulge in alcoholic stimulants, nor does the fact that alcoholic stimulants render one suffering from mental deterioration more injurious or inimical to himself or the person or property of others necessitate commitment under section 2185c of the Political Code and not commitment under section 2168 of the same Code. It is simply a question of fact whether the subject is or is not suffering from a disordered mental condition such as requires commitment under section 2168, supra, and not what causes have primarily superinduced his condition. The line of demarcation is one of fact, and when the facts are ascertained the respective sections apply. In the case at bar it would appear from the testimony that the applicant is so far mentally affected as to require some one to look after and care for him all the time, and that he cannot be safely discharged without some one ready and willing to take the place of supervision now exercised over the patient by the Napa State Hospital.

[4] The fact that the officials of the Napa State Hospital are ready and willing to grant the applicant a leave of absence under conditions that would safeguard the applicant and prevent him from becoming a menace either to himself or to others is not a sufficient reason for an order of discharge by way of a writ of habeas corpus. We find nothing in the case of In re Harcourt, 27 Cal. App. 642, 150 P. 1001, nor in the other authorities cited, when applied to the case at bar, which would lead to the conclusion that the applicant should be released.

The application is denied and the petitioner remanded.

---

80 Cal. App. 20

CLAVEY v. LONEY. (Civ. 2941.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 26, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error ⚷931(1), 1071(1) — Findings, though liberally construed, are ground for reversing judgment where material, irreconcilable, and at variance.

Though findings should be liberally construed to support the judgment, where those complained of are material, irreconcilable, and at variance, judgment must be reversed, as it is then impossible to determine which findings controlled decision of trial court.

2. Trusts ⚷63¾—Resulting trust may be declared for one injured by judgment procured by extrinsic fraud.

Equity will, in a proper case, relieve one injured from effect of judgment or decree obtained by extrinsic fraud, not the result of negligence or laches of complainant, by declaring a resulting trust in his favor.

3. Judgment ⚷511—Equity will not interfere where judgment, collaterally attacked, was procured by intrinsic fraud only.

While equity may give relief against extrinsic fraud, it will refuse to interfere in a case where judgment or decree has been procured by intrinsic fraud only.

4. Executors and administrators ⚷315(6)—In collateral attack on decree of distribution for mistake, in absence of evidence as to nature of mistake, no injury is presumed.

In collateral attack on decree of distribution for mistake, in the absence of evidence as to nature of mistake or manner of occurrence, it is presumed that complainants had full knowledge of proposed distribution and that mistake was merely a mistake of law, not the subject of equitable interference.

5. Quieting title 🔑10(2)—Decree of distribution furnishes sufficient color of title on which to base action to quiet title (Code Civ. Proc. § 322).

Adverse possession under decree of distribution furnishes one with sufficient color of title on which to base action to quiet title, under Code Civ. Proc. § 322.

6. Executors and administrators 🔑315(6)—On collateral attack on decree of distribution, it is presumed that due notice of hearing was given and bound parties interested (Civ. Code Proc. § 1634).

In collateral attack on decree of distribution for mistake in action to quiet title, it must be presumed that notice of time and place of hearing petition for distribution was given, according to Civ. Code Proc. § 1634, and bound parties interested in estate.

7. Executors and administrators 🔑315(6)—Collateral attack on decree of distribution held barred by laches after 17 years, in absence of showing fraud or excuse for delay.

In action to quiet title, brought under decree of distribution in force for 17 years and deed thereunder on record for 14 years, defense that decree was erroneous is barred by laches, in absence of showing of disability of heirs, nature of mistake, or excuse for delay.

8. Judgment 🔑256(5)—Finding that decree of distribution, under which plaintiff claimed, was erroneous held reconcilable with judgment quieting title in plaintiff for adverse possession thereunder.

In action to quiet title under decree of distribution in force 17 years, where defense was attack on decree for mistake, finding that decree under which plaintiff claimed made improper distribution of property held to support judgment quieting title in plaintiff, by reason of adverse possession and defendant's laches.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; J. T. B. Warne, Judge.

Action by William R. Clavey against Jesse Loney, administrator of the estate of James Loney, Sr., deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Grayson, of Sonora, for appellant.
Rowan Hardin, of Sonora, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff quieting title to real property situated in Tuolumne county. The complaint is in the usual form. The appellant contends that the findings are irreconcilable, and that the judgment should theerfore be reversed. The evidence adduced at the trial is not before this court.

The trial court found the following facts: That Jerome Loney was the owner of 160 acres of land, situated in Tuolumne county, at the time of his death; that he died June 4, 1897, without issue, but leaving surviving him, as his heirs at law, a mother and father, named, respectively, Catherine and James. October 30, 1897, Catherine was appointed and qualified as administratrix of the estate of her son, Jerome. May 9, 1904, James, the father, died intestate, possessed of an undistributed one-half interest in this ranch, and leaving surviving him his wife, Catherine, and several children. His estate was never administered. Subsequently, in the estate of Jerome, the son, the entire interest in the ranch was distributed April 1, 1907, by mistake, to Catherine, the mother. January 31, 1910, she conveyed the entire interest in this ranch to Julius, one of their sons. April 21, 1921, Julius conveyed the land to plaintiff, who has ever since occupied and claimed title to the land openly, notoriously, and adversely. All taxes which were levied against the property, for more than five years immediately preceding the commencement of the action, were paid by plaintiff and his predecessor in title, who claimed adverse title under the decree of distribution, which conferred a color of title upon them.

The suit was commenced April 21, 1924. Upon the findings, the main features of which are mentioned above, the court rendered judgment quieting title in plaintiff.

The inconsistency in the findings, which is alleged to exist, is that plaintiff's grantor took possession and claimed the land in question under the decree of distribution which vested them with a color of title, and thereafter, since April 1, 1907, they have been in open, notorious, and adverse possession, and have paid all taxes which have been assessed against the same; and that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to possession, and that the defendant has no right, title, or interest in said land or any part thereof. While, upon the contrary, the trial court found:

> "That the whole of said property was distributed to said Catherine Loney, evidently through mistake, while an undivided one-half interest therein * * * should have been distributed to the estate of James Loney, Sr., deceased."

Defendant contends that the decree of distribution which erroneously gave an undivided one-half interest in this 160-acre tract to Catherine, instead of distributing it to the estate of her husband to which it belonged, automatically created a resulting trust in her, for the benefit of her children, to the extent of this one-half interest.

[1] Findings should be liberally construed to support the judgment, if possible. Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 390, 35 P. 1005; Goodwin v. Snyder, 70 Cal. App. 98, 232 P. 763. But where the findings complained of are material, irreconcilable, and at variance, the judgment must be reversed, for the reason that it then becomes impossible to determine which findings controlled the trial court in rendering judgment. Los Angeles & Arizona Land Co. v. Marr, 187 Cal. 126, 132, 200 P. 1051; Estep v. Armstrong, 91 Cal. 659, 27 P. 1091.

[2] Equity will relieve an injured party from the effect of a judgment or decree procured by extrinsic fraud, which was not the result of negligence or laches on the part of the complainant (Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, 67 P. 282, 87 Am. St. Rep. 98; Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 P. 317; Simonton v. Los Angeles T. & S. Bank, 192 Cal. 651, 656, 221 P. 368; Estate of Ross, 180 Cal. 651, 658, 182 P. 752) and in a proper case, will declare a resulting trust in favor of the injured party (Sohler v. Sohler, Id.), unless the property has reached the hands of an innocent purchaser, who claims it in good faith, and without knowledge or notice of the fraud (3 Pom. Eq. Jur. [4th Ed.] 2405, No. 1053).

In the leading case of Sohler v. Sohler, Id., Xavier Sohler died testate, leaving a wife and two posthumous children and pretermitted heirs. The wife was appointed executor of his will. She had another child, by a former husband, who was named Paul Reuss. Upon distribution of the estate the widow conspired with her son, Paul, who was in no way interested in the estate, and deceived and misled the court and the parties interested into believing that he was also a son of the deceased, and thereby procured distribution of one-eighth share of the estate. While this estate was still in control of the guilty party, the court held that the facts alleged in that case, coupled with the fact that the widow was not only the executrix, but mother and guardian of the injured, dependent, infant offspring whom it was her duty to protect, that the evidence conclusively showed extrinsic fraud, and declared a trust for the benefit of the defrauded infants.

While, in a proper case, equity will relieve against extrinsic fraud, it is equally true that equity will refuse to interfere in a case where a judgment or decree has been procured by intrinsic fraud only. Wollenshlager v. Riegel, 186 Cal. 622, 628, 200 P. 726; Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 133, 25 P. 970, 27 P. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159; Hanley v. Hanley, 114 Cal. 690, 46 P. 736; Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73, 63 P. 158; Estate of James, 99 Cal. 374, 33 P. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60; Lynch v. Rooney, 112 Cal. 282, 44 P. 565; Estate of Cahalan, 70 Cal. 604, 12 P. 427; Dean v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 473.

[3] A judgment procured by forged documents or perjured testimony is the result of intrinsic fraud and cannot be vacated in a collateral attack. The extrinsic fraud, which alone will warrant a court of equity in setting aside a judgment or decree, consists of such fraud as prevents a real trial upon the issues involved in the case, like conduct which prevents the injured party from receiving notice of the action, or which causes the absence of necessary witnesses. Sohler v. Sohler, Id.; Flood v. Templeton, 152 Cal. 148, 92 P. 78, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579.

[4] But in the instant case, there is no finding of the trial court that plaintiff or his predecessors in title were guilty of extrinsic fraud or any fraud at all. The only finding complained of, is that the decree of distribution was "evidently made through mistake." Since the evidence adduced at the trial is not before this court, it is impossible for this court to determine what the nature of the mistake was, or how it occurred. For aught that appears in the record before us, this mistake may have been due to the negligence or conduct of the parties represented by the defendant. Every intendment is in favor of the judgment, and, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, we must presume that the complainants were suffering from no disability, that they had full knowledge of the proposed distribution, and that the mistake was a mere mistake as to the law, concerning which equity will not interfere.

[5] It is specifically found by the court that the plaintiff and his predecessor in title took possession under the decree of distribution, which furnished them with color of title. A decree of distribution furnishes sufficient color of title upon which to base an action to quiet title. Owsley v. Matson, 156 Cal. 401, 104 P. 983; Wilson v. Atkinson, 77 Cal. 485, 20 P. 66, 11 Am. St. Rep. 299; Gavin v. Phillips, 12 Cal. App. 34, 106 P. 424; Akley v. Bassett, 189 Cal. 625, 640, 209 P. 576; Grossman v. Yip Wing, 62 Cal. App. 121, 128, 216 P. 634; Pereira Farms Corp. v. Simas, 69 Cal. App. 159, 163, 230 P. 976. Section 322, Code of Civil Procedure, provides:

> "When it appears that the occupant, or those under whom he claims, entered into the possession of the property under claim of title, exclusive of other right, founding such claim upon a written instrument, as being a conveyance of the property in question, or upon the decree or judgment of a competent court, and that there has been a continued occupation and possession of the property included in such instrument, decree, or judgment, or of some part of the property, under such claim, for five years, the property so included is deemed to have been held adversely."

[6] In support of the judgment, also, it must be presumed that notice of the time and place of hearing the petition for distribution complained of was duly given, according to the provisions of section 1634, Code of Civil Procedure. It has been repeatedly said by our courts that the giving of this notice summons the world before the court (William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 P. 323; Warren v. Ellis, 39 Cal. App. 542, 547, 179 P. 544), and binds those, at least, who are interested in the estate. In the Estate of Ross, 187 Cal. 454, 465, 202 P. 641, 646, it is said:

> "The 'distribution' of an estate includes the determination of the persons who by law are entitled thereto, and also the 'proportions or parts' to which each of these persons is entitled."

[7] The decree of distribution complained of was made in 1907, and this action was not commenced until April, 1924. With the presumption that the heirs were then under no disability as to their age or competency and had full knowledge of this decree, they would be guilty of laches which would bar their defense to this action, after a lapse of 17 years with no excuse offered for such delay. Moreover, the deed from Mrs. Loney to her son, Julius, was executed and recorded in 1910. Certainly this would set the statute of limitations in motion, and the defense to this action would have been barred within four years therefrom. Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 586, 49 Am. Rep. 100; Bath v. Valdez, 70 Cal. 350, 11 P. 724; Feliz v. Feliz, 105 Cal. 1, 38 P. 521; Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 123, 8 P. 818; Alvarado v. Nordholt, 95 Cal. 116, 30 P. 211; Winterburn v. Chambers, 91 Cal. 170, 27 P. 658; Akley v. Bassett, 189 Cal. 625, 640, 209 P. 576.

Then, in April, 1921, the deed to plaintiff was executed and recorded, and he took possession with continuous claim of title, openly, notoriously, and adversely exercised. During these 17 years, with all these hostile acts of ownership, no complaint was ever made. We are therefore of the opinion that the defendant has waived whatever rights he may have enjoyed.

[8] For the reason that the defense set up in this action constitutes a collateral attack upon the decree of distribution and that it furnished color of title under which adverse title was acquired, we are of the opinion that the findings of the court are not at variance, but can be reconciled to support the judgment.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 56

SHEEAN v. FOSTER. (Civ. 3169.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 29, 1926.)

1. Automobiles 🔑181(1)—Only ordinary care required of automobile driver as to one not passenger for hire (Civ. Code, §§ 1714, 2096).

Plaintiff, riding in car driven by defendant, who was not a passenger for hire, was entitled only to exercise of ordinary care and diligence by defendant for her safe carriage, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1714, 2096.

2. Automobiles 🔑244(20)—Evidence held to show driver of automobile striking tree did not exercise ordinary care for safety of occupant.

Evidence, in suit for injuries received when defendant's car ran into tree while he was looking for switch key, held to show that defendant did not exercise ordinary care for safety of occupant.

3. Automobiles 🔑245(87)—Contributory negligence of occupant of automobile striking tree held for jury.

Contributory negligence of occupant of automobile striking tree while driver looked for switch key held for jury.

4. Trial 🔑253(4)—Instruction omitting element that plaintiff's negligence must have been proximate cause of automobile accident to bar recovery held erroneous.

In suit by automobile passenger for injuries, instruction omitting element that plaintiff's negligence must have been proximate cause of accident to bar recovery held erroneous.

5. Damages 🔑216(8)—Instruction limiting damages for loss of time to time of filing complaint held erroneous.

Instruction that one suing for damages for injuries received in automobile accident was limited to damages for loss of time occurring before date of filing complaint held erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by Margaret Sheean against W. B. Foster. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Theo. L. Breslauer, of San Francisco, and J. O. Goldstein, of Chico, for appellant.

Clinton W. Johnson, of Oroville, for respondent.

PULLEN, Justice pro tem. This is an action for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff while riding in the automobile of defendant, which left the road and collided with a tree standing near the highway. The cause was tried by a jury and verdict for the defendant returned. Following the entry of judgment thereon plaintiff appeals, urging as a ground for reversal the insufficiency of the evidence to show contributory negligence and the giving by the court of certain instructions.

Defendant, Foster, was at the time referred to herein the proprietor of a mountain resort at Berry creek, about 18 miles from the city of Oroville. Upon the day in question Foster had arranged to go to Oroville, and, according to the testimony of defendant, plaintiff said to him, "I would like to go to Oroville with you," to which defendant replied, "there will be an awful crowd—it is crowded; and I said, 'There is four men going and you make the fifth, and there would be six in the car, and it would make it awful crowded'; * * * and when I came out (of ice cream parlor) and she was in the car."

The circumstances surrounding the injury to plaintiff are depicted in the testimony of defendant, called by plaintiff as a witness under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure:

> "Q. How did that accident occur? A. It occurred just like this: This key had fallen out and every time when it fell it always fell to the right because the key is on that side of the post and she would be—being crowded I couldn't reach down. It was impossible for me to reach it because she was a good-sized woman, and I was crowded, and it fell down on her side, and I was driving along slowly, and I took my foot this way and kicked it over, and I guess every one was looking out the window, I don't know, no one said anything, and the first thing I knew some one said 'look out,' and just about that time I hit the tree with the top and windshield, and she was then down after this key, and it was about 20 feet to the next tree. And I think about that—it might have been less—and I just stepped on the brake, and I hit the other tree, and that jarred the windshield loose just as she rose up. I was sitting in there, and the other man was sitting in there, and we never got a scratch, and it never hurt my motor, and she got out, and the motor run right along, and there was a car come along, and the man driving it he took her to the hospital right away as soon as he could, and I never killed my motor.
>
> "Q. When you run off of the road you were looking at the bottom of the car? A. I was looking somewhere—I wasn't looking at the road. I was trying to get the key.
>
> "Q. How far did you go before you hit that tree when you left the road? A. Oh, probably 60 or 70 feet maybe.
>
> "Q. Then, if you say were going 12 or 15 miles an hour, do you mean that you could not stop your car before hitting that tree 60 or 70 feet away? A. If I was looking and saw it, I suppose I could have stopped; sure I could. I could stop the car within a few feet. * * *
>
> "Q. How long a space would it take you to stop a car going 12 to 15 miles an hour? A. 10 or 12 feet.
>
> "Q. On this occasion even though you were going 12 to 15 miles an hour and you left the road you traveled about 60 to 70 feet before you hit the tree? A. Possibly so.
>
> "Q. Please tell the jury what happened to the car when you hit the tree. A. When I grazed the first tree that caught the side of the windshield and the top, and that is what broke everything loose, this is what broke the glass in the windshield and it was just—that is why my attention was called to it—just as I got to the first tree, and I shoved on the brakes and went into the other tree in about 20 feet, not that far, I don't know. I don't think it was over 10 feet. You can get the measurement where they are; they are there.
>
> "Q. You side-swiped one tree first and that tree was about 40 feet from the road where you left the road? A. No, sir.
>
> "Q. How many feet was it from the road when you side-swiped the first tree? A. It was right by the road.
>
> "Q. How many feet from the point where you hit? A. I don't know exactly; 35 or 40 or 50 feet. I never measured it.
>
> "Q. After you side-swiped that tree your car still went forward and you crashed headon into another tree? A. The man called my attention that I was off of the road, and I stepped on the brake and stopped it when I hit the other trees.
>
> "Q. During the time your car was traveling off of the road side-swiping the tree you were still looking for the key? A. When it struck the first tree they called, and I looked, and I felt the jar, and I stepped on the brake."

By the key referred to above was meant the ignition key that fits into a lock on the steering post of the particular type of automobile driven by the defendant. It appeared that the key or keyhole was worn and occasionally it would fall out of the switch and thereby cut off the spark, causing the engine to miss fire and stop, which condition defendant further testified had continued for some time and was known to him to exist prior to the beginning of the trip on the day of the accident.

> "Every one is responsible, not only for the result of his willful acts, but also for an injury occasioned to another by his want of ordinary care or skill in the management of his property or person, except so far as the latter has, willfully or by want of ordinary care, brought the injury upon himself." Section 1714, Civ. Code.

Defendant in his answer set up the plea of contributory negligence, claiming that the act of plaintiff in becoming a passenger and riding in the front seat of the automobile between the driver, defendant herein, and another man, was upon her part such an act of negligence as to preclude her from recovering for any injuries proximately caused by the negligence of defendant.

[1-3] Plaintiff attempted to prove that she was a passenger for hire, which would by operation of law impose upon defendant a certain degree of care. We are of the opinion that there was no proof that she was such passenger for hire and that defendant owed her merely ordinary care and diligence for her safe carriage. Under the provisions of section 2096 of the Civil Code "a carrier of persons without reward must use ordinary care and diligence for their safe carriage." And we are of the opinion that defendant did not, in view of the facts adduced at the trial, exercise such degree of care and diligence for the safety of plaintiff, and that, as a matter of law, the defense of contributory negligence was not established.

[4, 5] Appellant also criticizes two instructions given by the court as follows:

> "Before you can find a verdict for the plaintiff in this case you must believe from the evidence that plaintiff's injuries, if you believe she suffered any injuries from that accident, were caused solely from the negligence of the defendant, and also you must believe that the plaintiff was without negligence on her part, and in determining this question as to whether the defendant exercised ordinary care in driving the machine, and whether the plaintiff exercised care for her own safety on that trip, you will consider all the testimony bearing upon the question describing the manner in which the defendant was driving the car and the manner in which the plaintiff acquired her seat in the said car and her actions during the trip while she was seated in said car, and especially at the time of the accident," —which instruction omitted the necessary element that the negligence must have been the proximate cause of the accident, and the instruction:

"You will further find for her the value of her lost time if you believe she has lost time, not, however, beyond the period of the filing of this suit, September 20, 1923, and not to exceed the sum of $20 per week," —which erroneously limits the value of the lost time of appellant to a period not beyond the date of the filing of the suit, which is not the limit of time imposed by law, but the jury may consider any period of time if it is made to appear to them that the injury will extend beyond the filing of the complaint. Defendant urges that this court cannot review these instructions, inasmuch as the record does not disclose at whose request they were given. But, without passing upon that question, we merely point out the error, so that upon a new trial of this action it may not be repeated.

For the foregoing reasons, we are of the opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 470

CURTIN v. SALOMON. (Civ. 3195.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1926.)

1. Pleading 🔑121(2)—Denial that plaintiff has complied with statute relating to doing business under fictitious name cannot be based on want of information (Code Civ. Proc. § 437; Civ. Code, § 2466).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 437, a denial that plaintiff or his assignors have complied with Civ. Code, § 2466, relating to doing business under a fictitious name, cannot be made on information and belief, and hence denial based on ground that pleader has not sufficient information on the subject to enable him to answer is insufficient.

2. Pleading 🔑121(2)—Denial of corporate capacity of plaintiff's assignor cannot be based on want of sufficient information (Code Civ. Proc. § 437).

Denial of the corporate capacity of plaintiff's assignor in action for goods, wares, and merchandise cannot be based on want of sufficient information, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 437.

3. Pleading 🔑121(4)—Existence of fact which can be ascertained by inspection of public record cannot be put in issue by denial on information and belief.

When the existence of a fact may be ascertained by an inspection of a public record, its existence cannot be put in issue by a denial solely on information and belief.

4. Pleading 🔑121(1)—Under statute denial of allegations can be based only on lack of both information and belief (Code Civ. Proc. § 437).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 437, denial of allegations of complaint can only be made for lack of both information and belief.

5. Pleading 🔑343—In action for goods, wares, and merchandise, defendant's refusal to go forward with proof of affirmative allegations held to entitle plaintiff to judgment on pleadings.

In action for goods, wares, and merchandise where defendant affirmatively pleaded delay in delivery and defects reducing value of goods delivered, his refusal to go forward with proof of his affirmative allegations on motion of plaintiff entitled plaintiff to judgment on pleadings.

6. Depositions 🔑92—Alleged irregularities in taking deposition, which was never completed and admitted only as statement, held immaterial.

Alleged irregularities in taking deposition of defendant held immaterial, where deposition was never completed and admitted only as statement and not deposition of defendant.

7. Parties 🔑59(2)—Substitution as party plaintiff of one succeeding to all plaintiff's rights held proper under statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 385).

In action for goods, wares, and merchandise, substitution as party plaintiff of one shown to have succeeded to all rights of plaintiff in the action held properly allowed under Code Civ. Proc. § 385.

8. Depositions 🔑53—Assignment that so-called deposition was taken before notary later substituted as plaintiff held not to disclose error in view of facts.

Assignment that so-called deposition was taken before a notary public who was later substituted as plaintiff held not to disclose error, where so-called deposition was taken by stipulation before a stenographer and was in fact never completed but used only as a statement of defendant not as a deposition.

9. Parties 🔑63—Assignment that substituted plaintiff had not complied with statute relating to use of fictitious name held not to disclose error, in view of statute (Civ. Code § 2466; Code Civ. Proc. § 385).

In action for goods, wares, and merchandise where successor in interest of plaintiff was substituted as plaintiff, assignment that such substituted plaintiff had not complied with

Civ. Code, § 2466, relating to doing business under a fictitious name, held not to disclose error, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 385, permitting action to be continued in name of original plaintiff.

10. Corporations ⊂⊃659—Defendant in action for goods, wares, and merchandise held estopped to assert that plaintiff's assignor, foreign corporation, was unlawfully doing business under fictitious name (Civ. Code, §§ 354, 355, 2466).

Defendant in action for goods, wares, and merchandise held estopped to assert defense plaintiff's assignor was a foreign corporation doing business under a fictitious name, in violation of Civ. Code, §§ 354, 355 notwithstanding compliance with section 2466.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by E. E. Curtin, doing business under the name and style of D. A. Curtin, against M. I. Salomon, in which E. M. Casey was substituted as plaintiff. From judgment for plaintiff, and from order for substitution of parties plaintiff, defendant appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Milton A. Nathan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walter Christie and Paul A. McCarthy, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiff for goods, wares, and merchandise upon assigned claims. Plaintiff had judgment and defendant appeals. Two appeals are presented upon one transcript, one from the judgment and one from the order of substitution of E. M. Casey as party plaintiff.

The transcript shows substantially the following facts: The American Type Founders' Company, a New Jersey corporation, authorized to transact business in the state of California, maintains a branch in San Francisco and also owns and does business in an allied industry under the designation of Printers' Machinery Supply Company. Section 2466, Civil Code, relating to doing business under a fictitious name, appears to have been complied with. The appellant owned and operated two printing establishments, one in San Francisco and one in Los Angeles. Appellant purchased certain wood type at the agreed price of $1,631.82 from the American Type Founders' Company, which was delivered to him in Los Angeles; appellant also purchased from Printers' Machinery Supply Company a printing press and certain supplies at the agreed price of $3,624.40. This press and supplies were also delivered in Los Angeles. Appellant has paid nothing to the American Type Founders' Company on the purchase price of the wood type; on the purchase price due to Printers' Machinery Supply Company, appellant has paid the sum of $1,000. The claim of the American Type Founders' Company was assigned to D. A. Curtin, as likewise was the claim of Printers' Machinery Supply Company. D. A. Curtin is a fictitious person, under which E. E. Curtin, the original plaintiff, did business. This plaintiff had also complied with the requirements of section 2466, Civil Code.

The answer of the appellant admitted the purchase of the merchandise referred to and then sets forth certain affirmative matters, to wit: That the merchandise ordered from the American Type Founders' Company at the agreed price of $1,631.82 was to be delivered to him in Los Angeles, free and clear of freight and cartage charges, but was delivered subject to such charges and the appellant had to pay therefor the sum of $200; that there was delay in the delivery of said merchandise, which reduced the value of said merchandise to $500 less the sum of $200 paid out by him and that there was not due to plaintiff upon account of the purchase of said merchandise any other than the sum of money so admitted; that the press purchased by the appellant was for the sum stated in plaintiff's complaint; that said press was to be in good working condition, with no broken parts; that the press had never been in good working condition and certain parts were broken; that by reason of which the press was worth only $1,500, on which he had paid the sum of $1,000, leaving a balance due of $500. The defendant then alleged his willingness to pay this sum and allow judgment to be entered therefor.

The answer of the appellant purported to deny the assignment of the claims to the plaintiff; also purported to deny the incorporation of American Type Founders' Company; also purported to deny compliance with section 2466, Civil Code. These denials are in the following form:

> "Said defendant avers that he has not sufficient information on the subject sufficient to enable him to answer paragraph 1 of said second amended complaint and basing his denial upon said ground, the said defendant denies," etc.

This denial refers to the doing of business under the fictitious name of D. A. Curtin by the plaintiff and also the filing of the necessary certificate by the plaintiff. On the same ground the defendant denies that the American Type Founders' Company is a corporation, etc.; on the same ground denies that said American Type Founders' Company had filed the necessary certificate. Changing the wording slightly, the answer reads:

> "Defendant avers that he has not sufficient information on the subject sufficient to enable him to answer the allegations contained in paragraph 4 of said second amended complaint, and basing his denial upon said ground, said defendant denies that heretofore or prior to > the commencement of this action said American Type Founders' Company transferred its indebtedness to the plaintiff."

---

⊂⊃For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

After denying the indebtedness of the Printers' Machinery Supply Company and alleging the matters which we have hereinbefore stated, the defendant follows the form of denial herein last set forth in denying the assignment of said claim to the plaintiff. The allegation in the complaint of business being done under the firm name and style of Printers' Machinery Supply Company, a fictitious name, is undenied.

[1-3] All the grounds urged upon this appeal for reversal are strictly technical. There does not seem to be a single assignment of error which has anything of merit, or tending in the least to show that the defendant had any reasonable cause whatever to contest the entry of judgment in the lower court for the value of the merchandise sold and delivered to the defendant, as alleged by the plaintiff's assignors. For this reason we do not deem it necessary to set out the proof in the transcript establishing the facts alleged in plaintiff's complaint, but will content ourselves with saying that the transcript contains sufficient testimony to support the findings of the trial court. We do this, because there is a sufficient technical answer to every technical objection made by the appellant. The denials in the answer that the plaintiff and the plaintiff's assignors had not complied with section 2466, Civil Code, could not be made upon information and belief. In this case the denial is not even upon information and belief, but simply setting forth that the defendant has not sufficient information upon which to deny the allegations in the complaint, and basing his denial upon the lack thereof, denies, etc. The law is well settled, as stated in Art Metal Const. Co. v. A. F. Anderson Co., 182 Cal. 29, 186 P. 776, that:

> "When the existence of an alleged fact may be ascertained from an inspection of a public record its existence cannot be put in issue by a denial based solely upon information and belief."

See, also, Lincoln County Bank v. Fetterman, 170 Cal. 357, 149 P. 811; Mulcahy v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 484, 35 P. 144; Montgomery v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 69 Cal. App. 251, 230 P. 993; Yokohama Specie Bank v. Trans. Oceanic Co., 54 Cal. App. 533, 202 P. 346.

[4] The denials as to the corporate capacity of plaintiff's assignor is likewise insufficient to raise an issue. Section 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits a defendant who has no information or belief upon the subject sufficient to enable him to answer the allegations of a complaint to base his denial thereon, but he cannot base his denial simply upon lack of information. He can only do so upon a want of both information and belief. The answer in the form filed in this case tenders no issue. Naftzger v. Gregg, 99 Cal. 83, 33 P. 757, 37 Am. St. Rep. 23; Turner v. Watkins, 36 Cal. App. 503, 172 P. 620; Nave v. Graham, 37 Cal. App. 332, 174 P. 76. Thus it appears that in compliance with section 2466 of the Civil Code the corporate existence of the American Type Founders' Company stands admitted in this cause and, also the doing of business by the Printers' Machinery Supply Company is admitted and required no proof, even though the trial court did require proof to be made.

[5] At the beginning of the trial the plaintiff moved that the defendant be required to submit proof as to the affirmative allegations contained in his complaint. The defendant declining to go forward, the plaintiff moved for judgment upon the pleadings. This was in accordance with the procedure laid down in the cases cited in Cooney v. Gray, 49 Cal. App. 664, 194 P. 61. The court denied the motion for judgment on the pleadings. It is evident the plaintiff's motion should have been granted. The plaintiff then made proof of the sale and delivery of merchandise as alleged in the pleadings and also made proof of all other matters therein contained. The defendant offered no proof.

[6, 7] Objection is made that there was irregularity in the taking of the deposition of the defendant. The record shows, however, that this deposition was never completed, was never signed by the defendant, and was introduced only as his statement and not as his deposition. After the trial had been concluded, judgment entered and motion for a new trial denied, upon the application of E. M. Casey, showing that he had succeeded to all the rights in this action theretofore owned and possessed by E. E. Curtin, substitution of plaintiff was ordered. It is from this order that the appellant also appeals. The record shows that at the time of the institution of the action the cause of action was owned and possessed by E. E. Curtin; that during the continuance of the action all the rights of the plaintiff were assigned and set over to E. M. Casey. Section 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure expressly provides that in such cases the assignee may be substituted as the party to whose interest he has succeeded, or that the action may be continued in the name of the original party. See, also, Northern Railway v. Jordan, 87 Cal. 23, 25 P. 273; Hohn v. Pauly, 11 Cal. App. 724, 106 P. 266; Walsh v. Soule, 66 Cal. 443, 6 P. 82.

[8, 9] The objection is further assigned that the so-called deposition of the defendant to which we have referred was taken before E. M. Casey, as a notary public. The record shows, however, that the so-called deposition of the defendant was taken by stipulation before a stenographer, and that E. M. Casey, the notary public before whom it purported to be taken, need not be present. The deposition, however, was not certified to, never completed, never signed, and therefore the objection of the defendant is without merit. As a statement of the defendant no objection appears to have been made to its admission, and therefore it does not require any further consideration on our part. The assignment of the plaintiff E. E. Curtin was first made to E. J. Casey and E. M. Casey and then fully taken over by E. M. Casey. Objection is now made that there is no showing that E. M. Casey has complied with section 2466, Civil Code. As stated in Amundson v. Shafer, 36 Cal. App. 398, 172 P. 173, noncompliance with the Code in this respect to such filing and publication constitutes matter of special defense to be raised by answer and need not be alleged affirmatively. Furthermore, as the law permits an action of this kind to go to final determination under the name of the original plaintiff, who has complied with the section, we do not very well see how this objection is tenable when E. M. Casey does not come into the cause until after entry of judgment.

[10] It is further insisted that the doing of business under the designation of "Printers' Machinery Supply Company" is beyond the power of the American Type Founders' Company, a corporation, and therefore that recovery cannot be had for the value of the press sold and delivered to the defendant. In this particular, the appellant admits that he has found no authority on the subject and simply presents for our consideration sections 354 and 355 of the Civil Code, in connection with section 2466 of the same Code, and insists that compliance with the latter section is not sufficient. It is not necessary for us to determine whether a foreign corporation can, or cannot, or whether a domestic corporation can or cannot, do business in this state under a fictitious name, for the simple reason that there is another principle announced which estops a creditor from using this convenient method of discharging his obligation. In Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 558, 29 P. 1111, we find the following:

> "It is alleged that the San Joaquin Lumber Company, the assignor of the plaintiff, is a copartnership formed from the Hanford Lumber Company and the Puget Sound Lumber Company (corporations). The legality of the formation of the partnership is attacked by defendant, but under the principles of Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Warner, 72 Cal. 383 [14 P. 37], and cases there cited, the defendant is estopped from making such a defense. It is there decided that 'when one has contracted with an alleged corporation, and is sued for failure to perform his contract, he cannot be heard to say that the corporation has no existence, and for that reason no contract was made."

This rule applies both ways. Thus, in Karns v. Olney, 80 Cal. 90, 22 P. 57, 13 Am. St. Rep. 101, the court says:

> "When the owners of land use a corporate name in making a contract for its sale, and instruct their agent to prepare and sign the contract in that form, they cannot impeach the contract because made in such name."

In Fresno Canal, etc., Co. v. Warner, 72 Cal. 379, et seq., 14 P. 37, supra, the following statement found in Lehman v. Warner, 61 Ala. 455, is quoted with approval:

> "It is too well settled now to be controverted that a party who contracts with a corporation, whether it be by subscription for its stock, or by promissory note, bond, mortgage, or other form of contract, is estopped from denying the existence of the corporation."

And then adds:

> "It has often been said that when a corporation sues, its corporate existence must be shown if it is controverted. When the action is against one contracting with it in its corporate capacity, the contract furnishes the evidence."

Quoting also from Close v. Glenwood Cemetery, 107 U. S. 477, 2 S. Ct. 275 (27 L. Ed. 408):

> "One who deals with a corporation as existing in fact is estopped to deny as against the corporation that it has been legally organized."

Other cases are also there cited, but the foregoing are sufficient to show that appellant is not in a position to raise that technical defense as a bar to the collection of the money due for the merchandise purchased by him.

It may be further stated that the substitution of E. M. Casey as plaintiff in this action was caused by the fact that some time after judgment was entered herein E. E. Curtin died.

The appellant in this case having chosen to introduce no evidence whatever to establish the affirmative allegations of his answer and the other matters appearing, which we have stated, there appears no valid reason why we should lengthen this opinion by setting forth testimony showing that the findings of the trial court, upon which the judgment is based, are supported.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PRESTON, Justice pro tem.

79 Cal. App. 726

BLUMENTHAL v. LARSON et al. *
(Civ. 5661.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 19, 1926.)

1. Statutes 🔑181(1)—Statutes should be construed to effectuate legislative intent.

Primary rule of construction of statutes is to ascertain and give effect to legislative intent.

2. Statutes 🔑190—Unambiguous statute leaves no room for construction.

Where statute is unambiguous, there is no room for construction.

3. Statutes 🔑189—Mere literal construction of statute ought not to prevail if opposed to legislative intent, apparent from act itself.

Mere literal construction of statute ought not to prevail if opposed to intention of Legislature, apparent from act itself, and, if words are sufficiently flexible to admit of some other construction, it should be adopted to effectuate the intention.

4. Statutes 🔑184, 211—Act should be construed in view of its title and purpose, and language thereof expanded or restrained to effectuate such purpose.

Statute should be construed in view of its title and purpose, and, when this is ascertained, general words or phrases may be restrained to it, and, if it is of narrower import, may be expanded to effectuate the intent.

5. Brokers 🔑4—Statute requiring broker's bond, conditioned on faithful compliance "with provisions of law," held not applicable to broker's mere breach of contract (Corporate Securities Act, § 5, subd. 3, as amended by St. 1923, p. 90, and section 14).

Provision of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) § 5, subd. 3, as amended by St. 1923, p. 90, providing that broker's bonds shall be conditioned on faithful compliance "with the provisions of law" by applicant, held applicable to such statute only and not to all laws generally, and, being enacted to prevent fraud in sale of securities, as defined by section 14, did not apply to broker's mere breach of contract for sale of securities.

6. Brokers 🔑4—Statutory broker's bond is not credit insurance contract, and liability thereon does not extend beyond express terms of act (Corporate Securities Act, § 5, subd. 3, as amended by St. 1923, p. 90).

Broker's bond, required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) § 5, subd. 3, as amended by St. 1923, p. 90, is not contract of credit insurance, but is strictly a statutory bond, liability on which does not extend beyond terms of act, doctrine of strictissimi juris being applicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Charles J. Blumenthal, doing business under the name and style of the A. E. White Company, against J. W. Larson and others. From an order dismissing the action against the defendant United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding former opinion, 248 P. 681.

Harry C. Bocchio and Ralph Starke, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Horace W. B. Smith and P. R. Lund, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

Joseph G. De Forest, L. W. Irving, Redman & Alexander, Jesse H. Steinhart, John J. Goldberg, Hartley Peart, Gus L. Baraty, John Ralph Wilson, Ernest T. Hall, Cooley & Gallagher, and Guy Leroy Stevick, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ on behalf of respondent.

H. Raymond Hall, of Oakland, amicus curiæ.

TYLER, P. J. Appeal from an order dismissing an action against a surety on a bond given under the Corporate Securities Act.

There is no dispute as to the facts. The complaint contained two counts arising out of the same transaction. The first is an open book account for securities, bought and sold by plaintiff for the account of the defendant Larson, under which it is sought to recover the sum of $620. The second is for a breach of a contract for the sale and purchase of securities, sold by plaintiff and purchased by the defendant, and it alleges that by reason of such breach plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $620. The complaint further alleges, in each count thereof, that defendant Larson was an investment securities broker, duly licensed as such by the commissioner of corporations; that on the 30th day of June, 1924, the defendant United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company executed to the commissioner of corporations the bond required by the Corporate Securities Act to be filed by all applicants for certificates authorizing them to act as investment securities brokers at the time of filing their application therefor; that said bond was in the sum of $5,000 and was executed by defendant Larson, as principal, and by the defendant United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company as surety, said bond being given to guarantee the faithful compliance with the provisions of law on the part of defendant Larson, and on the part of his salesmen, agents, and employees; that said bond was renewed on the 15th day of February, 1925, by said principal and surety and during all the times mentioned in the complaint was in full force and effect. Defendant surety company interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, alleging that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against it. The court sustained the demurrer and upon plaintiff's failure to amend entered judgment dismissing the action as to said defendant surety company. This is an appeal from the ruling on demurrer and from the judgment of dismissal.

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court January 17, 1927; Waste, C. J., and Curtis, J., dissenting.

The action, in so far as it affects the surety company, is bottomed upon subsection 3 of section 5 of the Corporate Securities Act, as amended in 1923. Stats. 1923, p. 90. The subdivision reads as follows:

> "At the time of filing an application for a broker's certificate, the applicant shall deliver to the commissioner of corporations, a good and sufficient bond for $5,000 payable to the state of California, to be executed by said applicant, together with a surety company, and to be approved by the commissioner of corporations. Said bond shall be conditioned upon the faithful compliance with the provisions of law by said applicant and by all agents representing the said applicant, and shall provide that upon failure to so comply the applicant shall be liable to pay any and all persons who may suffer loss by reason thereof."

The sole question here presented is the meaning to be given to two phrases contained in the above-quoted paragraph of the act in question, reading as follows:

> "Said bond shall be conditioned upon faithful compliance with the provisions of law by said applicant * * * 'and' upon failure to so comply the applicant shall be liable to any and all persons who may suffer loss by reason thereof."

It is appellant's contention that the phrase "with the provisions of law" should be so construed as to include the transaction in question, and that this being so, the bond is liable for the loss suffered by plaintiff by reason of defendant Larson's refusal to accept and pay for the balance of the stock ordered purchased for his account.

[1-4] While the phrase "provisions of law" is a very broad and general one, we are of the opinion that it only refers to the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. There are numerous rules of statutory construction to guide courts in ascertaining the true meaning of a statute. A statute is to be construed according to the intent of the law-making body. The intent is the vital part, and the primary rule of construction is to ascertain and give effect to that intent. If a statute is plain, certain, and unambiguous, so that no doubt arises from its own terms as to its scope and meaning, a bare reading suffices and there is no room for construction. The mere literal construction, however, ought not to prevail if it is opposed to the intention of the Legislature apparent by the act itself; and, if the words are sufficiently flexible to admit of some other construction, it should be adopted to effectuate the intention. The intent prevails over the letter, and the letter will, if possible, be so read as to conform to the spirit of the act. The language of an act should be construed in view of its title and its purpose. It is indispensable to a correct understanding of the statute to inquire first what is the subject of it and what object is intended to be accomplished. When this is ascertained, the answer is found to all its intricacies. General words or phrases may be restrained to it, and those of narrower import may be expanded to effectuate the intent.

[5] Guided by these rules, it seems plain to us that the phrase in question relates solely to the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act, and not to all laws generally. The title of the act in question declares it to be one for the regulation and supervision of companies, brokers, and agents, to prevent fraud in the sales of securities, and it provides for the enforcement of the act and punishment for violation of its provisions. The manifest and declared purpose is to prevent fraud in the sale of securities, as the same are defined by section 14 of the statute. This section sets forth the prohibited acts which would constitute fraud, the prevention of which was the purpose of the statute and bond. It reads as follows:

> "Every officer, agent, or employee of any company, and every other person, who knowingly authorizes, directs, or aids in the issue or sale of, or issues or executes, or sells, or causes or assists in causing to be issued, executed, or sold, any security, in nonconformity with a permit of the commissioner then in effect authorizing such issue, or contrary to the provisions of this act, or of the Constitution of this state, or who, in any application to the commissioner, or in any proceeding before him, or in any examination, audit, or investigation made by him or his authority, knowingly makes any false statement or representation, or who, with knowledge of its falsity, files or causes to be filed in the office of the commissioner any false statement or representation concerning such company or the property which it then holds or proposes to acquire, or concerning its officers or its financial condition or other affairs, or concerning its proposed plan of business, or who, with knowledge of the falsity of any such statement or representation, issues, executes, or sells, or causes to be issued, executed, or sold, any security, without first informing the commissioner of the falsity of such statement, in writing, or who, directly or indirectly, knowingly applies, or causes or assists in causing to be applied, the proceeds, or any part therof, from the sale of any security to any purpose contrary to the provisions of the permit authorizing the issue of such security, or to any purpose specified in such permit in excess of any amount limited in such permit to be used for such purpose, or who, with knowledge that any security has been issued or executed in violation of any of the provisions of this act, sells or offers the same for sale, or who, with knowledge that any advertisement, pamphlet, prospectus, or circular concerning any security contains any statement that is false or misleading, or otherwise likely to deceive a reader thereof issues, circulates, or publishes the same, or shall cause the same to be issued, circulated, or published, or who, in any other respect, willfully violates or fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, or who, in any other respect, willfully violates or fails, omits, or neglects to obey, observe or comply with any order, permit, decision, demand, or requirement, or any part or provision thereof, of the commissioner under the provisions of this act, is guilty of a public offense and shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years, or in a county jail not exceeding two years, or by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment." 1 Deering, Gen. Laws, 1923, p. 1414.

It is clearly apparent from a reading thereof that the section is confined solely to sales of worthless securities and that it has no application to transactions between brokers and their clients generally. The law affords an ample remedy for the breach of a contract or for any illegal act with reference to sales of legitimate securities, but it is not to be found in an action against the bond given in conformity to the provisions of the act in question.

[6] The bond required under the act was never intended to be a contract of credit insurance. It is strictly a statutory bond and liability thereon does not extend beyond the terms of the act. The doctrine of strictissimi juris applies. Here no fraud was alleged in the sale of any security, good or otherwise. The defendant Larson did not fully comply with the terms of his contract of purchase. In a broad sense, he may be said to have violated the substantive law in breaching his contract of sale, but this is not the violation of law for which the bond was given. To so construe the phrase would be to create a right of action under innumerable circumstances and conditions. The bond, in our opinion, was not given to insure, on the part of Larson, his proper adherence to all laws, substantive and otherwise, but solely for a compliance with the provisions of the statute, which, as we have seen, was enacted for the purpose of preventing the formation of corporations and the sale of stock thereof without the supervision of the corporation commissioner. This is the manifest intent and purpose of the act, and the bond beyond any question was given solely for the purpose of securing compliance with its provisions. People ex rel. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Willcox, 200 N. Y. 423, 94 N. E. 212.

We are cited to the case of Zapf v. Redenour, 198 Iowa, 1006, 200 N. W. 618, as upholding appellant in his contention. The bond upon which the action was predicated in that case was given in conformity to a statute much broader in its terms than the one with which we are here dealing. It is therefore not authority upon the question. Statutes of the character here involved are being amended so as to be more comprehensive in their scope. Our own statute has been so amended. Stats. 1925, p. 962. The present controversy, however, is in no manner affected by the change, as the cause of action here alleged arose long prior to such amendment. The extent of the liability of a bond given under the law as it now stands is a question we are not called upon to consider or discuss. From what we have said, it follows that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.; KNIGHT, J.

79 Cal. App. 756

RUBIN v. PLATT MUSIC CO. (Civ. 5378.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 23, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑939—Objections to settlement of transcript, filed within six months after default in giving notice of request therefor, are presumed overruled or waived.

Where transcript has been settled by trial judge within six months after default in giving notice of request for transcript, it is presumed that objections to its settlement were raised in trial court, and relief from default, granted, or that respondent waived default by failure to object in trial court.

2. Appeal and error 🔑939—Objections to transcript settled on stipulation as to its correctness within 6 months after default in giving notice of request are presumed waived.

Respondent, certifying to correctness of transcript filed within six months after default of appellant in giving notice of request for transcript, is presumed to have waived default by failure to object in trial court.

3. Appeal and error 🔑627(2)—Appeal will not be dismissed for want of transcript, where appellant's brief raised questions not requiring transcript, and judgment roll was on file.

Where appellant's opening brief raised points which would not necessitate transcript, and papers making up judgment roll were on file, appeal will not be dismissed on ground that reporter's transcript was not filed in time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Henry Rubin against the Platt Music Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Glen E. Huntsberger and Peyton H. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Harry Sherr, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that no transcript or bill of exceptions was filed within the time required. It appears that judgment was entered on February 16, 1926, and notice of entry thereof given on the same day; that notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed within the time and on February 26, 1926; that nothing further was done with respect to the motion for a new trial, and therefore it was denied by lapse of time on April 16, 1926; on March 3, 1926, the appellant gave notice that it appealed; the motion to dismiss the appeal was served on May 13, 1926, and came on for hearing on the 14th day of June, 1926. In the meantime, and on June 5, 1926, both the clerk's transcript and the reporter's transcript were filed in this court.

The two transcripts having been filed prior to the time that the motion came on for hearing, the real ground of the motion to dismiss is that the appellant did not give notice of the request for a transcript of the testimony within ten days after notice of the entry of the judgment, or within ten days after motion for a new trial was denied by lapse of time.

In the case of In re Barney, 191 Cal. 18, 214 P. 853, it is said:

> "It has been frequently held and is now thoroughly established that the failure to give the notice to prepare the typewritten record for use on appeal is not a ground for a dismissal of the appeal. If, however, it appears from the entire record that, in the absence of a properly authenticated reporter's transcript, there is no record upon which a reversal of the decision could be predicated, then the proper course is to move for an affirmance of the judgment on that ground, and upon such application the court will consider the question as to whether or not the record was properly prepared."

And in Mill Valley v. Massachusetts, etc., Co., 189 Cal. 52, 207 P. 253, it is held that diligence in the preparation of the record on appeal should ordinarily be subject to investigation and determination in the trial court rather than in the appellate court.

[1, 2] In re Barney, supra, would be decisive of the question were it not for the fact that in that case the transcript was settled more than six months after the default of the appellant in giving his notice for the preparation of the transcript, which delay was considered to rob the trial court of its jurisdiction to relieve the appellant of his default. But where, as here, the transcript has been settled by the trial judge within the six months' period, it must be presumed, either that the objections to its settlement were raised, as they should have been, in the trial court, and the settlement was the equivalent of relief from that default, or that the respondent waived the default by failure to object in the trial court. The latter would seem to be the situation here, as is evidenced by the stipulation of respondent to the correctness of the transcript.

[3] There is another feature of this case, however, which is determinative of the motion. The appellant's opening brief is on file, together with the clerk's transcript, including those papers going to make up the judgment roll, notice of appeal and the notice to the clerk to prepare transcript. From an inspection of the plaintiff's opening brief, we observe that points are raised which would not necessitate the reporter's transcript, the merits of which we cannot determine at this time, because a determination of the merits would effect an unwarranted advancement of the case. Under a similar state of facts the Supreme Court, in the case of Weaver v. Fickett, 196 Cal. 401, 238 P. 87, refused to dismiss the appeal on the ground that no bill of exceptions or reporter's transcript was required. What is said there is applicable to the situation here.

Motion denied.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 50

PEOPLE v. CALVERT. (Cr. 924.) *

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 29, 1926.)

1. Intoxicating liquors ⟹236(9)—Evidence held to sustain conviction of maintaining liquor nuisance.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of maintaining a common nuisance by keeping and habitually selling intoxicating liquor on premises ostensibly conducted as a restaurant and soft drink parlor.

2. Intoxicating liquors ⟹143—Single sale does not establish nuisance.

A single sale of intoxicating liquor is not sufficient to establish a charge of nuisance.

3. Criminal law ⟹721(1)—Purpose of statute declaring that defendant's failure to testify shall not be used against him is to protect persons not desiring to testify for legitimate reasons (Pen. Code, § 1323).

Purpose of Pen. Code, § 1323, declaring that defendant's neglect or refusal to testify shall not prejudice him nor be used against him on trial, is to protect innocent persons not desiring to be witnesses because of excessive timidity, nervousness, possible confusion, and embarrassment by offenses charged, or compromise by association with others.

4. Criminal law ⟹1119(4)—District attorney's statement, "Why didn't you take the stand and deny it?" held not reversible error, where record did not cite as misconduct, nor appropriately describe, manner of delivery.

District attorney's statement in argument, "She admitted she had a drink of whisky; why didn't you take the stand and deny it?" held not ground for reversal of seller's conviction of maintaining common nuisance, where record did not cite statement and manner of delivery as misconduct nor describe manner thereof by appropriate language, but rather indicated that court and counsel regarded pronoun "you" as addressed to defendant's counsel personifying defense, not as referring to defendant.

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court January 27, 1927; Waste, C. J., and Richards and Langdon, JJ., voting for a transfer.

5. Criminal law ⚷721(3)—It is prejudicial error for district attorney to call jury's attention to defendant's failure to testify and comment thereon as warranting inference of guilt.

It is prejudicial error for district attorney to call jury's attention, directly or indirectly, to fact that defendant has not testified in his own behalf, and to comment thereon as warranting inference that he is guilty.

6. Criminal law ⚷721(5)—District attorney may point out that certain evidence of prosecution is uncontradicted (Pen. Code, § 1323).

District attorney may point out that certain evidence of prosecution stands uncontradicted, without violating Pen. Code, § 1323, providing that defendant's failure to testify shall not prejudice nor be used against him.

7. Criminal law ⚷1171(5)—District attorney's argument concerning failure to deny certain fact and uncontradicted testimony of prosecution held not reversible error.

District attorney's statement in argument, on being interrupted by defendant's counsel, that, "She admitted she had a drink of whisky; why didn't you take the stand and deny it?" and that certain testimony of prosecution stood uncontradicted, held not ground for reversal of seller's conviction of maintaining common nuisance, in view of evidence clearly showing maintenance thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

J. C. Calvert was convicted of maintaining a common nuisance, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Donald E. Wachhorst and Wallace Sheppard, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PULLEN, Justice pro tem. The defendant herein was charged and convicted of maintaining a common nuisance, and from the judgment of conviction and the order overruling defendant's motion for a new trial he prosecutes this appeal.

[1] It appears from the evidence that on and for some time prior to November 28, 1925, appellant was conducting a place of business in Sacramento county, ostensibly as a restaurant and soft drink parlor. That the appellant was so operating and conducting the place of business is sufficiently established by the evidence, it appearing therefrom that the name of appellant was on a sign outside the building, and a witness testified that frequently during the year prior to the 28th of November he had seen appellant in and about the premises serving food to the patrons in the restaurant, and particularly is this evidence sufficient in view of the fact there was no evidence offered controverting the fact of management and control other than, of course, the presumption of innocence raised by the plea of not guilty.

About two weeks prior to the day in question a deputy constable saw men and women going into the restaurant or café, and upon looking through the window saw defendant serve a man and woman with a dark liquid in what is commonly known as whisky glasses, and saw the parties drink the liquid from the glasses, and saw the appellant open and close the cash register. Upon a subsequent occasion and about a week before the arrest of appellant a witness testified she bought from appellant at the premises in question three drinks of whisky. On the night of the arrest certain witnesses testified to seeing through a window a number of persons being served by appellant with liquid of some kind in whisky glasses. The officers immediately entered, and appellant was found standing in a small room adjacent to the dining room with a bottle of liquor in his hand and a man near by holding an empty whisky glass. The liquid contents of the bottle in appellant's possession was by analysis found to contain a very large percentage of alcohol of high degree. Shortly after the arrest and while defendant in the custody of a peace officer was arranging for a bail bond, he stated to the officer that he "would never sell another drop."

The foregoing briefly is the testimony adduced at the trial, and is set forth in some detail for the reason that one of the grounds urged by the appellant is the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the conviction, but as to that point the testimony, if believed by the jury, was amply sufficient to sustain the judgment.

[2] Appellant urges that the prosecution failed to prove the essential elements of the charge of maintaining a common nuisance—namely, that the liquor was kept on the premises and—"was sold, kept, or bartered habitually, continually, or recurrently." U. S. v. Butler (D. C.) 278 F. 677. It is true that a single sale of such, standing alone, is not sufficient upon which to predicate a charge of nuisance, but here there were other circumstances which, if believed by the jury, and taken into consideration with the statement of appellant to the arresting officer and the direct proof of sale to the witness Mrs. Wade of the three drinks of whisky, are sufficient to establish a prima facie case of nuisance.

[3] The point urged by appellant to which he devotes the most attention in his brief is the alleged misconduct of the district attorney in commenting upon the fact that the appellant did not take the witness stand during the trial. That the neglect or refusal of a defendant in a criminal action or proceeding to be a witness cannot in any manner prejudice him nor be used against him on the trial or proceeding is declared by section 1323 of the Penal Code. The reason for this enactment is well expressed by Mr. Justice

Field in the case of Wilson v. United States, 149 U. S. 60, 13 S. Ct. 765, 37 L. Ed. 650, wherein he says:

> "At common law no one accused of crime could be compelled to give evidence in a prosecution against himself, nor was he permitted to testify in his own behalf. The accused might rely upon the presumption of the law that he was innocent of the charge, and leave the government to establish his guilt in the best way it could. This rule, while affording great protection to the accused against unfounded accusation, in many cases deprived him from explaining circumstances tending to create conclusions of his guilt which he could readily have removed if permitted to testify. To relieve him from this embarrassment the law was passed. * * *" (Giving him the right if he so desired of testifying on his own behalf.)
>
> "But the act was framed with a due regard also to those who might prefer to rely upon the presumption of innocence which the law gives to every one, and not wish to be witnesses. It is not every one who can safely venture on the witness stand though entirely innocent of the charge against him. Excessive timidity, nervousness when facing others and attempting to explain transactions of a suspicious character, and offenses charged against him, will often confuse and embarrass him to such a degree as to increase rather than remove prejudices against him. It is not every one, however honest, who would, therefore, willingly be placed on the witness stand. The statute, in tenderness to the weakness of those who from the causes mentioned might refuse to ask to be a witness, particularly when they may have been in some degree compromised by their association with others, declares that the failure of the defendant in a criminal action to request to be a witness shall not create any presumption against him."

[4] Appellant quotes from the record a number of instances occurring in the argument of the district attorney and during the taking of the testimony. One instance is as follows:

> "But, nevertheless, her testimony is not denied; there was three people there when the drink was purchased, and nobody has denied that the drink was purchased, and I take it that you will accept that testimony, unless you say Mrs. Wade is not capable of telling the truth. Now, that issue is preliminary—
>
> "Mr. Shepard (interposing): I hate to interrupt the district attorney, but—
>
> "Mr. Henderson (interposing): She admitted she had a drink of whisky; why didn't you take the stand and deny it?
>
> "Mr. Shepard: I ask that the court instruct the jury to disregard any statement regarding any witnesses not taking the stand."

Appellant claims that the foregoing was dramatically addressed directly to the appellant, and, if so, an appellate court should not hesitate to reverse the case, but the record does not so show. If such an incident took place counsel should immediately cite the statement and its manner of delivery as misconduct and by appropriate language describe the manner of delivery so the record will show the assignment and an opportunity given the court to see that the citation in the record is a correct narration of the actual occurrence; otherwise, of course, the record of the reporter shows merely the words and not the objectionable dramatic attitude, gestures, emphasis, or other act complained of. There is no such record before us, and, in fact, the record seems to indicate that both court and counsel did not at the time construe the pronoun "you" as referring to the defendant, but rather was used as a pronoun addressed to Mr. Shepard as counsel personifying the defense.

[5] Numerous other excerpts are cited by appellant from the argument of the district attorney to the jury to the effect that certain testimony of the prosecution stood uncontradicted, and, as Justice Chipman said in the case of People v. Wademan, 38 Cal. App. 116, 133, 175 P. 791, 797:

> "The defendant is not required to testify in a criminal case and the statute is intended to prevent the prosecuting officer from taking advantage of the defendant by reason of his failure or refusal to testify. The reviewing courts have very properly held it to be prejudicial error for the district attorney to call the attention of the jury to the fact that the defendant has not testified in his own behalf and to comment on the fact as warranting the inference that his silence is evidence of guilt. The district attorney should not be permitted by indirection to accomplish what the law frowns upon when done directly. And where his address to the jury shows on its face that the district attorney intended to invite attention to the failure of the defendant to take the witness stand and deny the charge and had the apparent effect to emphasize such fact and suggest an inference of guilt, such conduct should receive quick condemnation."

In this case of People v. Wademan the district attorney in his address to the jury said:

> "If her story was contradicted, you might be in doubt, but the defense has left the story stand where it is unimpeached and undisputed, and when you go into the jury room to consider whether the girl was telling the truth, ask yourself this question: 'Is her testimony contradicted by a single witness in this case?' and I say 'No.' Under those circumstances, gentlemen of the jury, you have got to believe that girl; you cannot do anything else."

This was in our opinion a stronger statement than the remarks assigned as misconduct in the case before the court, and there the court used these words:

> "We do not think, however, it can fairly be claimed that the district attorney intended to invite attention to the fact of defendant's not having testified or to suggest any inference deducible from the fact. In speaking of the testimony of the prosecutrix in the way he did he had a right to claim that it was uncontradicted and that no witness had been called to impeach her testimony. * * * We cannot say that the remarks of the district attorney were so far prejudicial as to justify a reversal."

[6] In view of the authorities construing section 1323 of the Penal Code, the district attorney is permitted to point out that certain evidence of the prosecution stands uncontradicted (People v. Kromphold, 172 Cal. 512, 157 P. 599; People v. Wademan, 38 Cal. App. 116, 175 P. 791; People v. McLeod, 30 Cal. App. 435, 158 P. 506), and from an examination of the foregoing we do not believe the district attorney overstepped his rights.

[7] In view of the evidence which to our minds clearly shows that the appellant was maintaining a common nuisance as charged, we do not believe that, even if the allusions of the district attorney in his argument somewhat overstepped the bounds laid down by the Penal Code and the ethics of a prosecuting attorney, there has been a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

79 Cal. App. 669

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. HANNON et al.*
(Civ. 5365.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 9, 1926. Rehearing Denied and Opinion Amended Dec. 9, 1926.)

1. Judgment 🔑214.

Minute order for judgment is not a "judgment."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Judgment (In Law).]

2. New trial 🔑61.

Delay in filing findings and judgment is not ground for new trial, under Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

3. Judgment 🔑210—Statute, requiring decision to be filed within 30 days, is directory merely (Code Civ. Proc. § 632).

Code Civ. Proc. § 632, requiring decision to be filed within 30 days after submission of cause, is merely directory, and judgment subsequently entered is not affected by failure to comply therewith.

4. Eminent domain 🔑172.

Trial court did not lose jurisdiction of action of eminent domain during period of 4½ years in which there was no objection made or action taken by either party.

5. Eminent domain 🔑246(3)—Delay in securing entry of judgment held not implied abandonment of proceedings.

Mere delay of city in securing entry of judgment in eminent domain proceeding, not constituting violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1255a, providing for abandonment of condemnation proceedings, does not constitute an implied abandonment.

Thompson, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action in eminent domain by the City of Los Angeles against Catherine Hannon and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and E. H. Delorey, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiff and respondent instituted this action in eminent domain on June 10, 1915, to condemn lands of the defendants for the purpose of opening and widening Long Beach avenue, in the city of Los Angeles. Referees appointed by the superior court filed their report on June 18, 1918, awarding to the appellant the sum of $6,805.20 and $15 costs. To such report appellant filed exceptions, and a hearing before the court below was had on July 20, 1919, on which date the trial court ordered judgment in favor of Catherine Hannon in the sum of $9,640.70 for the land sought to be taken, $4,295.72 as compensation for consequent damages to other property, and costs. No further steps were taken until February 27, 1924, or about 4 years and 7 months after the date on which the court had fixed the valuation. On the date last mentioned an interlocutory judgment, providing for the payment to appellant of the amounts so determined on July 20, 1919, was signed, and it was entered on March 10, 1924. In said judgment it was recited that the exceptions of the defendant Catherine Hannon to the report of the referees were well taken, and should be sustained in part; that the report should be so modified "that the total compensation proper to be paid to the defendant Catherine Hannon as the owner of said parcel of land is the sum of $13,951.42, instead of the sum of $6,820.20, the amount awarded by the referees as total compensation proper to be paid to said defendants."

Appellant moved for a new trial upon grounds 3, 4, 6, and 7 of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The notice of intention to move for a new trial was accompanied by affidavits of real estate experts which tended to show that the value of the property had greatly increased since the trial of the issues presented by the pleadings. The trial court denied the motion, stating that it so ruled "for the reason that the grounds on which the motion is really based are not, in my judgment, cognizable by the court in passing on this motion."

It is urged that by the delay in entering judgment the respondent must be held to have abandoned the proceedings, and forfeited its right to the property, and that the trial court lost jurisdiction of the case. The appellant invokes the provisions of section 632 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the decision of the court, when a case is tried without a jury, "must be given in writing and filed with the clerk within thirty days after the cause is submitted for decision." It is contended that the rendition and filing of the decree herein was, after such delay, not only in contravention of said section, but in violation of article 1, § 14, of the Constitution, which latter forbids the taking of property without just compensation.

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court January 3, 1927; Preston, JJ., dissenting.

[1] The law is established in this state that a minute order for judgment is not a judgment. Canadian & American Mortgage & Trust Co. v. Clarita Land & Investment Co., 140 Cal. 672, 74 P. 301; Cuneo v. Cuneo, 40 Cal. App. 564, 181 P. 229; United Taxpayers' Co. v. San Francisco, 55 Cal. App. 239, 203 P. 120; McKannay v. McKannay, 68 Cal. App. 709, 230 P. 218; Prothero v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 439, 238 P. 357. Hence appellant was afforded no opportunity for an appeal until 4½ years after the date of trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 664), unless prompted to move the court below or to take other proper steps to procure an earlier filing and entry of the judgment.

Appellant does not complain that error was committed during the trial, nor in fixing the amount of the award. It is urged that, since the property was to all intents and purposes in custodia legis, appellant could not convey, incumber, or lease it for a term; that she was compelled to sit by and see it quadruple in value, and was burdened with a corresponding increase in taxes, though precluded from improving the premises for the purpose of increasing their revenue. It is further insisted that, although appellant was permitted to retain possession and a limited use of the property, yet the title was suspended by the delay in entering judgment, thus enabling the plaintiff to elect, at its option, to dismiss its action or to accept the property at any time without payment of interest upon the amount adjudicated.

[2] Respondent ignores this point, and confines its argument principally to the proposition that a new trial was properly denied. It has been decided that a delay in filing findings and judgment is not one of the grounds for a new trial under section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Kepfler v. Kepfler, 134 Cal. 205, 66 P. 208. But this is not, nor could it be, an appeal from the order denying a new trial. It is taken from the judgment, which, if by reason of the delay the trial court lost jurisdiction to enter, would require a reversal.

[3] Prior to its amendment in 1874 section 632 of the Code of Civil Procedure required that decisions be filed within 20 days after submission of the causes, and provided that "unless the decision is filed within that time the action must again be tried." The section, as amended (Amendments to the Codes 1873–74, p. 312), extended the time to 30 days, omitting the penalty, and has ever since been held merely directory. In so holding it has repeatedly been said that the validity of a judgment subsequently entered is not affected by failure to comply with the statute. Oakland First National Bank v. Wolff, 79 Cal. 69, 21 P. 551, 748; Heinlen v. Phillips, 88 Cal. 557, 26 P. 366; Rosenthal v. McMann, 93 Cal. 505, 29 P. 121; Marshall v. Taylor, 97 Cal. 422, 32 P. 515; Edwards v. Hellings, 103 Cal. 204, 37 P. 218; Neihaus v. Morgan, 5 Cal. Unrep. 391, 45 P. 255; Churchill v. Louie, 135 Cal. 608, 67 P. 1052; Hutchinson v. Marshall, 49 Cal. App. 307, 193 P. 164; McLennan v. Bank of California, 87 Cal. 569, 25 P. 760.

[4] Nor can it be successfully contended that the trial court lost jurisdiction through procrastination during which there was no objection made nor action taken by either party. In Brady v. Burke, 90 Cal. 1, 27 P. 52, the cause was tried in 1878, and judgment was ordered; an appeal was taken, although the judgment was not entered until 1882, which latter fact was not called to the attention of the Supreme Court; when the remittitur was returned, execution issued, and the property involved was sold. Upon a second appeal it was contended that the superior court had lost jurisdiction of the case, and that the judgment entered 4 years after the date of trial, and the execution, were void. In affirming the judgment it was said:

> "Until the judgment is entered, such court retains complete jurisdiction of the case, of which it cannot be divested by any unauthorized appeal to this court. * * * It follows that the superior court had jurisdiction to enter the judgment of January 7, 1882, and that the execution sale thereunder, under which plaintiff purchased, was not void."

In other jurisdictions having similar statutes limiting the time within which decision must be filed and entered, the rulings have been the same in this respect. In Toole v. Weirick, 39 Mont. 359, 102 P. 590, 133 Am. St. Rep. 576, the following language was used:

> "If Mrs. Myers had desired action upon the matter at an earlier date, this court was open to her to apply for a writ of mandate to compel the district court to decide the case. California and Utah each has a statute similar to our section 6763 above [Rev. Codes 1907], and in each state it has been held that the statute is directory, and the failure of the court to render its decision within the time limited does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to decide it at a later date. * * *"

In Lynch v. Coviglio, 17 Utah, 106, 53 P. 983, it was observed that the statute under consideration was a verbatim copy of section 632 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California. The court there said:

> "A court, therefore, trying a case without a jury, has jurisdiction to file its findings of fact, conclusions of law, and decision after the expiration of the time designated in the statute."

To the same effect are Rawson v. Parsons, 6 Mich. 401; McCray v. Humes, 116 Ind. 103, 18 N. E. 500; Vogle v. Grace, 5 Minn. 294 (Gil. 232); People v. Dodge, 5 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 47; McCrady v. Jones, 36 S. C. 136, 15 S. E. 430; Body v. Jewsen, 33 Wis. 402; Cramer v. Hanaford, 53 Wis. 85, 10 N. W. 15.

Appellant relies upon the reasoning employed in Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Co., 13 Cal. 306, 73 Am. Dec. 575, which is claimed to be particularly applicable here. We are unable to discover any principle there stated which can be said to apply to this proceeding, except in the ruling that a plaintiff in a condemnation suit must comply with the terms of the statute, and that it will not be permitted to acquire title or possession under a void judgment. In the cited case the commissioners' report was filed August 23, 1853; on December 17 of the same year the plaintiff withdrew its deposits and collateral security, and the court made a minute order dismissing the action; on December 25, 1856, 3 years after dismissal, the plaintiff procured an order confirming the report of the commissioners; and on June 29, 1857, a final order for judgment condemning the property and directing that the water company be let into possession was made without notice to the owner of the premises. In 1859 the latter filed a petition reciting that the company was threatening to and would, unless enjoined, take possession, excavate, build embankments, and divert valuable waters of springs and streams. A decree of injunction was granted, which was affirmed upon appeal. No municipal corporation was involved, objection was not made to the commissioners' report, the defendant was given no opportunity to be heard, nor was the appeal taken from the judgment itself. We need not pause to conjecture as to what might have been the reasoning of the Supreme Court, had there been no dismissal and withdrawal of the deposit, and had the judgment, though delayed, been regular in other respects. Since the decision itself has no bearing upon the issues here presented, we must be governed by the rule established by authorities in point, wherein courts of last resort have spoken uniformly.

This condemnation proceeding was instituted under the statutes of 1911, as amended, which contain provisions not enacted at the time of the rendition of the decisions in Bensley v. Mountain, etc., Co., supra. Section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure contains a definite provision concerning the method by which condemnation proceedings once instituted may be abandoned. It reads as follows:

> "Abandonment of Condemnation Proceedings. Plaintiff may abandon the proceedings at any time after filing the complaint and before the expiration of thirty days after final judgment, by serving on defendant and filing in court a written notice of such abandonment; and failure to comply with section 1251 of this Code shall constitute an implied abandonment of the proceeding. Upon such abandonment, express or implied, on motion of defendant, a judgment shall be entered dismissing the proceeding and awarding the defendant his costs and disbursements, which shall include all necessary expenses incurred. * * *"

[5] Apparently it was the intention of the Legislature that an abandonment might be implied from "failure to comply with section 1251 of this Code." It is not contended in the instant case that there had been an express abandonment or a failure to comply with any of the provisions of said section 1251. Since the Legislature saw fit to make express provision for the manner in which an implied abandonment might take place, under the maxim, Expressio unius est exclusio alterius, the mere delay on the part of the parties in a condemnation suit to take one of the necessary steps, which delay does not constitute a violation of the designated section, cannot be said to constitute an implied abandonment. Lewis' Suth. State Const. (2d Ed.) §§ 627–633, and cases cited.

It may also be observed that in that part of the statute above quoted under which this action is maintained provision is made for the dismissal of the proceeding where an abandonment, express or implied, has occurred, upon motion of the defendant. If in this case she had desired the return of her property, in addition to the remedies which are mentioned elsewhere in this opinion, if an abandonment had actually taken place, she had no need to wait for the court to render its decree, but might at any time have availed herself of the right to move to dismiss. At any rate, the fact that she possessed this as well as other remedies removes in a large measure the force of the claim that a hardship has been worked by reason of the fact that the price of the property condemned has greatly enhanced in value since the filing of the suit. However, if in fact it may have decreased in value, the city, in acquiring the property, would still be bound to pay the amount originally allowed.

Much stress is laid upon provisions of the Constitution relating to just compensation and upon "the Supreme Court's views on fair dealing in eminent domain cases." However, from the views expressed herein it becomes apparent that neither the question of adequacy of the award nor that of expediency in such cases can arise. This being an appeal from the judgment, to which no objection is raised, and the court below having had jurisdiction to enter it, an affirmance is the logical and legal result.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: WORKS, P. J.

THOMPSON, J. I dissent. The question is, Did the inaction of the plaintiff municipality for 4 years and 7 months constitute an implied abandonment of the proceedings? It must be conceded that the trial court had not lost jurisdiction by the delay, even though the delay of nearly five years may render the judgment erroneous. In determining the true effect to be given to this unconscionable, unreasonable, and wholly unjust lapse of time, consideration must be given to the fact, first, that the right of eminent domain provided for by statute is in derogation of common right, and therefore must be strictly construed. Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Company, 13 Cal. 306, 73 Am. Dec. 575; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 19 Cal. 47; Trumpler v. Bemerly, 39 Cal. 490; Chase v. Putnam, 117 Cal. 368, 49 P. 204.

A careful study of the statutes providing for the exercise of the right of eminent domain clearly indicates an intent on the part of the Legislature to prevent any unreasonable delay. For example: In the Improvement Act of 1903 (Statutes of 1903, p. 376, § 9) it is provided:

> "The referees shall at once proceed to view the land sought to be condemned."

And, again (St. 1909, p. 1038):

> "They shall make and file with the clerk a written report of their findings, and of their necessary expenses, within thirty days after the date of their appointment: Provided, however, that the time so allowed may be extended, upon good cause shown, by the court or judge thereof, but such extension shall not exceed ninety days."

It is also well to note that section 10 provides that the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the order appointing the referees or of the order setting the cause for trial.

Further light for the proper interpretation to be placed upon the delay is found in section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that, upon condemnation, payment must be made by the plaintiff within 30 days after final judgment, except that, in case it appears by affidavit that bonds of the state or of public corporations must be sold in order to provide the money, the sum may be paid within one year, and excepting, further, that if the bonds cannot be sold by reason of litigation the time during which such litigation is pending shall not be considered a part of the one-year period. Section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the plaintiff may abandon the proceedings at any time after filing the complaint and before the expiration of 30 days after final judgment by serving on defendant and filing in court a written notice of such abandonment, and "failure to comply with section 1251 of this Code shall constitute an implied abandonment of the proceeding." It is true that, as suggested in respondent's brief, the abandonment provided for in the Improvement Act of 1903 does not mention an implied abandonment. Nevertheless, this cannot be considered as controlling in the premises, for the reason that it not only appears from a strict construction, but also it appears to have been the intent of the Legislature, that payment for property taken under the statutes providing for eminent domain and the acquisition of property without the consent of the owner and against his will should be paid for within a limited period of time. Under the general procedure, if the trial is delayed for more than one year after the commencement of the action, damages are deemed to have accrued at the date of the trial rather than at the date of the issuance of summons (section 1249, Code Civ. Proc.); another clear indication that the Legislature contemplated no unreasonable delay in proceedings having for their purpose the acquisition of another's property without his consent.

It is true that in the case of Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Company, 13 Cal. 306, 73 Am. Dec. 575, it appeared that the court had made an order dismissing the action and that the deposits and collateral security had been withdrawn. In this case the commissioner's report was filed on August 23, 1853; the order of dismissal had been entered December 25, 1856; and on June 29, 1857, final order for judgment condemning the property was entered. It is also true that that was an action brought to enjoin the defendant from exercising any right claimed under the judgment. The court, however, gave little consideration to these facts, but says:

> "But to steer clear of any disputed facts, the broader question may be made, whether the party, after procuring an order for the condemnation of property, to public use, can lay by for 4 years without complying at all with those requirements of the proceeding which are of service to the owner, and then without notice give effect to the previous and initiatory acts, through which he deraigns his title. This statutory power of taking property from the owner, without his consent, is one of the most delicate exercises of governmental authority. It is to be watched and guarded with jealous scrutiny. Important as the power may be to the government, the inviolable sanctity, which all free Constitutions attach to the rights of property of the citizen, constrains the strict observance of the substantial provisions of law, which are prescribed as modes of the exercise of the power, and to protect it from abuse. All statutory modes of divesting titles are strictly construed, and to be strictly followed. He who relies for a title upon an extraordinary mode of acquisition given him, not by the will of the owner, expressed or implied, but against his will and by the mandate of the law, must show for his warrant a strict compliance with those statutory rules from which his title accrues."

And, again:

"If we were to hold that by force of these proceedings, in 1853, this company had a right to wait until 1857, and then insist upon giving them effect, we must necessarily hold that the property condemned need not be paid for according to its valuation or real value in 1857, the time when really taken, but may, in effect, be paid for according to its assessed value in 1853, when proceedings were first instituted, and be paid for, not in cash, but on four years' credit, without security. Nay, more, that it might be taken at the mere option of the company, without any sort of obligation on their part to take it, if they chose to decline, as, possibly, they might, if it deteriorated in value. It would be a unilateral contract, binding one party, but not binding the other, and translated into plain English, would mean: 'If we (the company) choose, we will take your (Emerson's) land 4 years hence, by paying for it what is now assessed as its value. You are to keep it for us, and not sell it, for all that time; but if it declines in value, or we do not choose to take it, we will not do so.' No sane man, if left to his volition, would make such a trade, and we think we have shown that the law is not so unjust or arbitrary as to make such a bargain for a citizen when it subjects him to its power."

And again the court says:

"To entitle the company to take the property on those terms, they must avail themselves of the privilege within the proper time. The lapse of a reasonable time without availing themselves of the privilege was itself an abandonment of all claim to it. To say the very least, when a year had passed and no offer made, the proceedings were effectually discontinued."

We think it is well to note that on a petition for a rehearing this statement is made:

"The main principle upon which we went in the opinion is this: That, after proceedings for a condemnation, which proceedings result in an assessment of damages, the money must, within a reasonable time, be paid or deposited; and, if 4 years intervene before such an act is done, the proceedings must be held to be discontinued; and that a deposit does not mean merely formally putting the money into court and then withdrawing it."

To the same effect is Port Townsend Southern R. Co. v. Barbare, 46 Wash. 275, 89 P. 710; Wagner v. Bealmear & Son, 135 Md. 690, 109 A. 466; and Nichols, The Power of Eminent Domain, § 342. It might be argued that there is a difference in this case from one in which the time started to run and the delay occurred after the entry of the interlocutory judgment, but in the absence of all statutory regulations the time after the entry of the interlocutory judgment would be a reasonable time, and the same cogent reasons apply to an unreasonable delay after trial which apply to an unreasonable time after interlocutory judgment. In principle there is no distinction.

Assuming for the purpose of argument contrary to the undisputed fact that the delay was occasioned not by the plaintiff, but by the court in its failure to render its decision, it does appear that those things which would constitute an abandonment by the plaintiff, if done by the plaintiff, would, if suffered to be done by the court, constitute error, and the court should have declined to sign the findings and interlocutory judgment. The latitude permitted by the directory character of section 632 of the Code of Civil Procedure should have been limited and controlled by the nature and character of the action here involved. That section must have some effect, and where, as here, the character of the action is such and the delay so great that it is wholly inequitable to go forward, it is error for the decision to be entered. If equity would interfere to restrain the assertion of rights founded on the judgment, as was done in Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Company, supra, the reasons impelling equity's interference should have restrained the hand of the court in the first instance and impelled it to enter a dismissal if it is found impossible under the authorities to have granted damages as of the date of resetting the cause for trial. The writer is of the opinion, however, that the motion for a new trial waived the right of dismissal if the new trial were granted.

It is plaintiff's position that the defendant acquiesced in the delay, and therefore cannot be heard to complain. This position might be tenable, had the defendant ever agreed or consented to the disposition of her property; but, if she chose to permit the abandonment by lapse of time or otherwise, it seems that the city, upon whom is cast the duty of meeting statutory requirements and equitable compensation, cannot urge her acquiescence as an excuse for its own delay. In fact, she may have been more than willing that they delay, but the record does not disclose anything actively done by her to bring about the delay, and therefore it does not seem that she should be chargeable in any way therewith.

The affidavits used on the motion for a new trial, without contradiction, show a great increase in value and it is no answer to suggest that the value might have decreased because then the injury would fall where it belonged, upon the slothful.

199 Cal. 705

In re MOELLER'S ESTATE.

MAHER et al. v. LAIOGHIS HOSPITAL AND HOMES COMMITTEE OF PORTLAIOGHIS.

(S. F. 11511.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1926. Rehearing Denied Dec. 30, 1926.)

1. Wills 🔑417—Document admitted to probate held to include writing on both sides of paper.

Document admitted to probate as will of deceased held to be entire writing, and not that on one side of paper only, where order contained no such limitation, and court subsequently admitted evidence of handwriting expert to show that writing on back of paper was added at later date.

2. Wills 🔑421—Supreme Court is not bound by superior court's construction of order admitting will to probate.

Supreme Court is not bound by construction which superior court placed on its own order admitting will to probate.

3. Wills 🔑421—Supreme Court will presume that judge of probate court knew better than any one else what document he admitted to probate.

Supreme Court will presume that judge of probate court knew better than any one else what document he had in mind when he signed order admitting it to probate as last will of deceased.

4. Wills 🔑421—Attempt cannot be made at hearing of petition for distribution to show part of will to be invalid.

After final order admitting paper to probate as last will, attempt cannot be made at hearing of petition for distribution to show that writing on reverse side of such paper was invalid because executed at later date.

5. Charities 🔑19—Bequest to Mount Mellish Union Workhouse held valid bequest to Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee, having control of Mountmellick Union Workhouse.

Bequest to Mount Mellish Union Workhouse held valid bequest to Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee, statutory body having control of Mountmellick Union Workhouse, though at time will was made institution was managed by Mountmellick poor law guardians.

6. Charities 🔑32—Workhouse, managed by poor law guardians and hospital and homes committee, held presumed to be charitable institution.

Mountmellick Union Workhouse, which was under management of Mountmellick poor law guardians until Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee assumed control, held presumed to be charitable institution, since such names indicate purpose of administering charity.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Elizabeth Brady Moeller, deceased. From a decree directing distribution to John Maher and others, Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee of Portlaioghis appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Wallace & Ames, of San Francisco, for appellant.

David Livingston, Lawrence Livingston, and Livingston & Livingston, all of San Francisco, for respondents Maher and others.

Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco, for respondent Hynes.

CURTIS, J. The deceased, Elizabeth Brady Moeller, died in the city and county of San Francisco on the 6th day of November, 1921. She left what purported to be an olographic will written on both sides of a single sheet of paper. On one side thereof was written the following:

"Alameda April the 22 1907 What ever is left after My Death and Buirel goes to My Nephew Peter Brady of Dublin Ireland Son of My Brother Peter Brady Who Belonged to the 48 Regement of the English Army enlisted at the Time of the Crimes War served 21 years and died in Dublin leaving one son every thing goes to him Elizabeth Brady Moeller."

The reverse side of said sheet of paper contained the following writing:

"if My Nephew is Not Living it goes to Mount Mellish Union Workhouse where I was take care of when i was young and helpless in the Poor House Queens county Ireland. Elizabeth Brady Moeller."

There is no question but that all of the writing upon said sheet of paper was that of deceased. This paper was filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court of said city and county of San Francisco, together with the petition of the public administrator of said city and county, "praying for admission to probate of a certain document dated the 22d day of April, 1907, * * * purporting to be the last will and testament of Elizabeth Brady Moeller, deceased." Thereafter, and on the 8th day of December, 1921, said superior court made an order by which it was "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said document filed herein, purporting to be the last will and testament of Elizabeth Brady Moeller, alias, deceased, be admitted to probate as and for the last will and testament of said * * * deceased." No contest was ever filed to the probate of said will, either before or after the order admitting same to probate. Upon the hearing of the petition for distribution, evidence was admitted showing that Peter Brady, named in said will as a devisee thereunder, had died prior to the death of deceased. It was further proven upon said hearing that the respondents herein were her sole heirs at law, being children of her deceased brother, who died prior to her death. Evidence was also introduced at the hearing of the petition for distribution of a handwriting expert, who testified that the writing upon the reverse side of the sheet of paper upon which the will was written was later in date than the writing upon the other side, or first page, of said paper; and, basing a finding upon this evidence, the court found that the writing upon the reverse side of said paper did not constitute a legal codicil, or a legal will, or a legal documentary disposition of any kind. This finding was predicated upon the contention that the second page, having been written at a later date, and, therefore, at a different time than that on which the first page was written, and being without date, failed to meet the requirements of the statute defining an olographic will. The writing on the second page was accordingly held to be no part of the will of said deceased, and to be invalid as a testamentary disposition. The court further found that "there is not and never was any person, firm, entity, body, or corporation by the name or title of Mount Mellish Union Workhouse, or bearing any similar name or title, capable under the law of taking by will any property of the said decedent." The decree of distribution, based upon these findings, distributed all the property of said deceased to the respondents herein as the heirs at law of said deceased. From this decree the Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee of Portlaoighis has appealed.

The first contention of appellant is that the last will and testament of said decedent was the entire document filed in said court, consisting of the writing on the front and reverse sides of said paper, and that by the order admitting the will of said deceased to probate this entire document was the instrument intended and designated in said order, and which was ordered and decreed therein to be the last will and testament of said decedent. Appellant accordingly contends that, as no contest of said will was ever filed, the order admitting it to probate became final and binding upon all parties affected by said will, and that the court was without any power thereafter to admit evidence upon the hearing of the petition for distribution or at any other time to show that the writing on the reverse side of the paper was written at a different time than that on which the first page thereof had been written, and accordingly was invalid on account of the failure of the testatrix to date the writing on the reverse side of said paper. We will assume that, if the writing on the reverse side of the paper had been written at a different date than that on the first page, and that the latter bore no date, then it was fatally defective as an attempt to make a testamentary disposition of property.

[1] The first question, therefore, to determine is what document was admitted to probate as the last will and testament of said deceased. Was it the first page of said paper or was it the whole document containing not only what was written on the first page, but also what was written on the reverse side of said paper? Neither the petition for probate of the will nor the certificate of the proof and facts, found as required by section 1317, Code of Civil Procedure, are contained in the record on appeal. The order admitting the will to probate, however, contains certain recitals and other language which we think in themselves are determinative of the question here involved. In the first place, the order admitting the will to probate recites that—

> "The petition of W. J. Hynes, etc., praying for the admission to probate of a certain document, dated the 22d day of April, 1907, and filed in this court, purporting to be the last will and testament of Elizabeth Brady Moeller, alias, deceased."

[2, 3] And again we find in said order that "the court hereby finds the fact to be that said document is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the said Elizabeth Brady Moeller herself," and finally it is decreed in said order "that said document filed herein, purporting to be the last will and testament of said Elizabeth Brady Moeller, alias, deceased, be admitted to probate as and for the last will and testament of said" deceased. The document presumably at least referred to in said order must have been the entire instrument, including the writing on the first and second pages of the paper before referred to. Had the court intended to limit said order to any particular portion of said document, or had the court intended to designate any portion of said paper as not being a part of the last will of said decedent, we would expect some reference to such intention in the order itself. Finding none, we must conclude that the court by said order admitted the entire document to probate as the last will of said deceased. We are somewhat confirmed in this interpretation of said order by the action of the court admitting at the hearing of the petition for distribution evidence of the handwriting expert to the effect that the writing upon the reverse side of said paper was written at a later date than that on the first page thereof. Had the court considered said order as only admitting to probate the writing on the first page of said paper, then it would not have been necessary to have attempted to have shown on the hearing of the petition for distribution the illegality of the writing on the reverse side of said paper. By the admission of said testimony, the probate court unquestionably considered that the whole document had been admitted to probate as the last will of said deceased. While we are not bound by the construction which the court placed upon its own order, yet, when the same judge who signed the order admitting the will to probate thereafter admitted evidence for the purpose of showing that a portion of a document on file in said court, and claimed to be the last will, was illegal on account of its defective execution, we must conclude that the trial judge of said court considered that the alleged illegal portion thereof had been in the first instance admitted to probate as a part of the last will of said deceased. We must assume that the judge of the probate court knew better than any one else what document he had in mind when he signed the order admitting it to probate as the last will of said deceased, and it is not unreasonable to conclude that, when he later permitted evidence to be introduced which tended to invalidate a portion of said document, he considered that said document as a whole had been admitted to probate as the will of said deceased by his previous order. We think it therefore sufficiently apparent from the record before us that the document admitted to probate as the last will of said deceased was the entire writing of said deceased found on either side of the paper on file in the probate court. As the order admitting the same to probate was never appealed from, and no contest was ever filed to said will, said order became final. Estate of Parsons, 196 Cal. 294, 237 P. 744.

[4] We think it follows without the necessity of any argument that the attempt to show at the hearing of the petition for distribution that the writing on the reverse side of said paper was executed at a later date than the writing on the first page thereof, and was invalid by reason of its being without date, was an attack upon a final order of the court, and was without warrant of any law whatever. The finding of the court, therefore, that the writing upon the back of said paper does not constitute a legal document, or a legal will, or a legal testamentary disposition of any kind, finds no support in the record before us.

[5] The only other question in the case is as to the validity of the bequest made in the said will in favor of the Mount Mellish Union Workhouse. We have already referred to the finding of the court that there is no such person or corporation by that or any other similar name capable under the law of taking by will any property of the decedent. Upon the hearing of the petition for distribution the appellant appeared and contested the right of the respondents to share in the distribution of said estate. On said hearing appellant offered to prove certain facts, more particularly hereinafter set forth in the affidavit of Thomas Reilly. It was "stipulated by all parties that the matter of the distribution of the estate of said decedent should be submitted to the court for decision and that the facts stated in said affidavit should be considered as an offer of proof by Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee; that said affidavit contains all the facts which said committee could prove in its behalf; that, in the event that the court should determine that said affidavit did not contain facts sufficient to entitle said committee to distribution of any of the estate of the decedent, it should order distribution in favor of the said heirs at law; that if, on the other hand, the trial court should determine that the affidavit did contain facts sufficient to entitle said committee to distribution of any of the estate of the decedent, it should thereupon announce its decision to that effect, and a reasonable opportunity would be given said committee to present legal and competent proof of the facts stated in said affidavit."

Said affidavit was as follows:

"In the goods of Elizabeth Brady Moeller, deceased, I, Thomas Reilly, the secretary of the Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee, aged twenty-one years and upwards, make oath and say as follows:

"(1) The Mountmellick Union Workhouse was a governmental institution created by statute, vested in, controlled and managed by, the Mountmellick poor law guardians under the control of the late local government board for Ireland. The institution is in existence for a period of nearly one hundred years. After the treaty signed between Great Britain and Ireland and ratified in December, 1921, all government property in Ireland became vested in the provisional government of Ireland, and all public boards and institutions were transferred to the control of the provisional government.

"(2) For the purposes of economy and administration all boards of guardians of Ireland, including the Mountmellick poor law guardians, were done away with, and all institutions in every individual county in Ireland formerly vested in and controlled by poor law guardians were vested in and the control of the same transferred to county hospital and homes committees by decree of Dail Eireann (the Irish Parliament) and by order of the local government board for Ireland. Under these powers the Laoighis Hospital and Homes Committee assumed control of the Mountmellick Union Workhouse.

"(3) By act of Parliament of Dail Eireann, the Irish Free State Parliament, called the Local Government Temporary Provisions Act 1923, previous acts and things done by the provisional government of Ireland were confirmed, and under the said act the Laoighis Hospital and Homes Committee are the statutory body having control of and in which is vested the Mountmellick Union Workhouse.

"(4) All legal documents to which public boards, committees or councils in Ireland are parties are legally executed by such public bodies by the chairman of the said board, committee or council affixing the seal of the said body in the presence of the members thereof. The power of attorney in this matter, signed by the chairman of the Laoighis Hospital and Homes Committee was duly and legally executed.

"Thomas Reilly.

"Sworn before me at Maryborough in the Queen's county by said deponent Thomas Reilly who is personally known to me, on the 14th day of January, 1924.

"[Seal] Patrick J. Meehan, Notary Public."

The court, by ordering distribution of said estate to respondents, and by its finding last above referred to, in legal effect, rejected said offer of proof by appellant, and denied it the right and opportunity to present proof of the facts set forth in said affidavit. We think this offer of proof, if followed up by legal and competent evidence of the facts stated in said affidavit, sufficient to entitle the appellant to have distributed to it the residue of said estate. It is true that there is a slight discrepancy between the true name of the beneficiary and that used by the testatrix in referring to it in her will. It is referred to in the will as Mount Mellish Union Workhouse, and in the offer of proof, as set out in the affidavit of Thomas Reilly, as the Mountmellick Union Workhouse. We hardly think that this slight error in the spelling of the name of the beneficiary should defeat a legacy in its favor. In Re Casement, 78 Cal. 136, 141, 20 P. 362, 364, it was held, where a bequest was made to "Old Ladies' Home of San Francisco," that "under the liberal rules of construction applicable to legacies to charitable institutions, the court might properly have distributed the money to" Protestant Episcopal Old Ladies' Home. In Re Gibson, 75 Cal. 329, 331, 17 P. 438, 439, it was held "if from the will itself, or evidence aliunde, the object of the testator's bounty can be ascertained, a misnomer of a legatee or devisee, whether a natural person or a corporation, will not invalidate the provision."

[6] It is claimed, however, by respondents that it is necessary for appellant, in order to be entitled to the bequest, to show that the Mounfmellick Union Workhouse is a charitable institution, and that the offer of proof fails to show that fact. Conceding that respondents are correct in their contention that appellant can succeed to such bequest only by showing that the institution under its control is a charitable institution, we think that the offer of proof tended to show the charitable character of the said beneficiary. Up to the time its control was assumed by the agencies of the Irish Free State, it was under the management of the Mountmellick poor law guardians. Under the present government of the Irish Free State, the control is vested in appellant, the Laoighis Hospital and Homes Committee. The names of each of these agencies or boards of control, one the poor law guardians and the other the hospital and homes committee, fairly indicate that their object and purposes were those of administering charity, and we think we are justified in assuming from these names that the Mountmellick Union Workhouse is a charitable institution.

It is next contended by respondents, as the management and control of said workhouse has been by law taken from the Mountmellick poor law guardians, acting under the local government board for Ireland, as said board formerly existed at the date of the execution of said will, and transferred to appellant, whose power is derived from the Irish Free State Parliament, that it cannot be assumed that the testatrix intended that the property of her estate should ever be used for the benefit of said workhouse under such changed conditions and management. We see no force in this argument of respondents. At the time the will was executed, as we have already seen, the workhouse was a governmental institution created by statute, and was administered by guardians under authority of a local government board. Subsequently, as shown by said affidavit, "for the purposes of economy and administration," a change was made in such management, and all such governmental institutions were by statute placed under the control of poor law guardians. Under said statute the Laoighis Hospital and Homes Committee is the statutory body, having control of, and in which is vested, the Mountmellick Union Workhouse. There is no showing whatever that there is any difference in the manner of conducting said workhouse or in the object or purposes thereof under the new committee than that which was in effect under the Mountmellick poor law guardians. In fact, the affidavit of Thomas Reilly, above referred to, in effect negatives any intention to change the character of said institution or the manner in which it had formerly been conducted by providing a different legal agency to administer its affairs. Said affidavit shows that the change was brought about for the purposes of economy and the better administration of the institutions involved. It was the intention of the testatrix to aid by the bequest in her will the operation and maintenance of said poorhouse, and to better provide for the inmates therein, and no good reason has been shown or advanced by respondents, nor does any occur to us, why this intention on the part of the testatrix cannot be carried out as effectively under the present management as well as it could have been had the administration of the affairs of said workhouse still remained under the direction of the Mountmellick poor law guardians.

Finally the respondents contend that, as the bequest was in favor of the Mountmellick Union Workhouse, the appellant herein, the Laioghis Hospital and Homes Committee, is without any right to receive said bequest, and had no standing in the probate court to contest the right of respondents to have the property of said estate distributed to them. As we have already seen, the bequest in favor of said Mountmellick Union Workhouse was a charitable gift. Its purpose was to benefit the inmates of said workhouse, and to assist in the maintenance and operation of the same in caring for said inmates. The appellant offered to prove that it was the legal "statutory body having control of and in which is vested the Mountmellick Union Workhouse." While the Mountmellick Union Workhouse is in itself incapable of taking or holding property, as we may assume from the affidavit of Thomas Reilly, it being merely a building and the premises used in connection therewith wherein the inmates are cared for, the appellant, according to said affidavit, is the agency established by the government, whose legal duty it is to direct and carry on the affairs of said workhouse and to have charge and dominion over its property. As such, there is no question but that it would be the proper and legal body to receive said bequest. The mere fact that the testatrix made the bequest in favor of the workhouse and not in favor of the committee legally in charge of said institution should not defeat said bequest. A case similar to this arose in this state where the decedent made her will in favor of the Old Ladies' Home at St. Mary's Hospital. It was proven to the satisfaction of the court that it was the intention of the testatrix to make said bequest in favor of a department in the St. Mary's Hospital called the Old Ladies' Home, the expenses of which had always been paid by the Sisters of Mercy, who also control said department. The decree of distribution distributed the bequest to the Sisters of Mercy, and the said decree was affirmed on appeal. In re Gibson, 75 Cal. 329, 17 P. 438. We think the same reason for the application of the rule in the above case applies to the bequest before us, and we conclude, therefore, that the court erred in denying the appellant the right to prove the matters set forth in its offer of proof under the stipulation of the parties made in reference to said offer, and that, if the facts stated in said offer of proof are proven by legal and competent evidence, it will be the duty of the probate court to distribute said property to appellant.

The decree of distribution is reversed, with directions to the probate court to permit appellant a reasonable opportunity within which to present proof of the facts set forth in its offer of proof as shown by the affidavit of Thomas Reilly, hereinbefore referred to.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.

80 Cal. App. 159

PEOPLE v. CARMONA. (Cr. 1356.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 7, 1926.)

1. Indictment and information 🔑110(3)—Failure to aver particular circumstances of statutory offense which are necessary to constitute complete offense vitiates information or indictment.

Offense may be charged in language of statute, but, where particular circumstances of offense are necessary to constitute complete offense, they should be stated and averred, and failure to do so will vitiate information or indictment.

2. False pretenses 🔑20—Making and passing fictitious instrument may be prosecuted either under forgery statute or under statute relating to uttering fictitious instruments (Pen. Code, §§ 470, 476).

Making and passing a fictitious instrument may be prosecuted either under Pen. Code, § 470, relating to forgery and counterfeiting, or under section 476, relating to making, passing, or uttering fictitious instruments.

3. False pretenses 🔑2—Amendment to forgery statute did not affect statute relating to uttering fictitious instruments (Pen. Code, §§ 470, 476).

Amendment of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 673) to Pen. Code, § 470, relating to forgery in general, did not affect section 476, prohibiting passing or uttering fictitious bills, checks, etc.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied January 3, 1927. Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 3, 1927.

4. False pretenses 🔑26—Information charging uttering "fictitious" check need not allege that it was uttered as true and genuine (Pen. Code, § 476).

Information charging defendant with making, passing, uttering, and publishing fictitious check, in violation of Pen. Code, § 476, need not allege that he made, uttered, passed, and published same as true and genuine; "fictitious" meaning feigned, imaginary, not real, counterfeit, false, not genuine.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fictitious.]

5. False pretenses 🔑26—Essential elements to be alleged in information charging issuance of fictitious check are uttering and publishing of check, knowing same to be fictitious (Pen. Code, §§ 470, 476).

In indictment or information laid under Pen. Code, § 470, or section 476, founded on check bearing name of imaginary or fictitious person, essential elements to be alleged are uttering and publishing of such check, knowing same to be fictitious.

6. False pretenses 🔑26—Information charging issuing fictitious check held sufficient (Pen. Code, § 476).

Information charging violation of Pen. Code, § 476, in substance, by making, passing, uttering, and publishing fictitious check, with intent to defraud certain bank, where there was no such person as party whose check it purported to be, and defendant knew that same was fictitious, held sufficient.

7. Indictment and information 🔑71—Information need merely enable one of common understanding to know what was intended, and set forth facts enabling court to pronounce judgment (Pen. Code, §§ 950–952).

All that is required under Pen. Code, §§ 950–952, is that information be sufficient to enable defendant or any person with common understanding to know what was intended, and set forth facts so as to enable court to pronounce judgment on conviction.

8. False pretenses 🔑29—Information charging issuance of fictitious check held to show trick or deception used to acquire property (Pen. Code, § 476).

Information charging issuance of fictitious check, in violation of Pen. Code, § 476, by uttering of fictitious check purporting to be check for payment of money of certain person, whereas in truth there was no such person, held to set forth trick or scheme used to acquire property.

9. False pretenses 🔑49(1)—Corpus delicti in prosecution for issuing fictitious checks held established by testimony that bank had no account under name used on checks (Pen. Code, § 476).

In prosecution for issuing fictitious check in violation of Pen. Code, § 476, corpus delicti held established by testimony of chief clerk of bank on which check was drawn that he was familiar with accounts of bank, and knew there were no accounts under name of party whose name was used on check as drawer, since this testimony is prima facie evidence of nonexistence of drawer of check claimed to be fictitious.

10. Criminal law 🔑805(1)—Instruction using words "prima facie" held not error as not in English as required by Constitution (Const. art. 4, § 24; Code Civ. Proc. § 1833).

Instruction, in prosecution for issuing fictitious checks, that evidence that there was no bank account under name of one named as drawer was "prima facie" evidence of fictitious character of check, held not error as violating Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring use of English in judicial proceedings, since words "prima facie" are readily understood by person of common understanding, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1833, defines it.

11. Criminal law 🔑763, 764(1)—Instruction that evidence that drawer had no account with drawee was prima facie evidence that check was fictitious held not on evidence (Pen. Code, § 476).

Instruction, in prosecution for issuing fictitious checks in violation of Pen. Code, § 476, that evidence that no such person as one whose name was signed on check had any account with drawee bank was prima facie evidence of fictitious character of check, held not error as invading province of jury, since it merely declares general principle of law.

12. Criminal law 🔑374—Where corpus delicti was established, in fictitious check prosecution, admission of evidence of similar transactions held properly admitted (Pen. Code, § 476).

In prosecution for issuing fictitious checks in violation of Pen. Code, § 476, where corpus delicti had been established, admission of certain evidence of similar transactions held properly admitted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Frank S. Carmona, Jr., alias Leo T. Levin, was convicted of issuing fictitious checks, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Leo R. Friedman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, of San Francisco, for the People.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. Defendant was tried and convicted upon an information filed by the district attorney of Alameda county, charging a violation of section 476 of the Penal Code. From the judgment following the verdict of guilty, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, the defendant has appealed.

The information is in the language of the statute, and the charging part thereof is as follows:

"Frank S. Carmona, Jr., alias Leo T. Levin, is accused by the district attorney of the county of Alameda by this information of the crime of felony, to wit, a violation of section 476 of the Penal Code of the state of California, to wit, making, passing, uttering, and publishing a fictitious check with intent to defraud, committed as follows: The said Frank S. Carmona, Jr., alias Leo T. Levin, prior to the time of filing this information, and on or about the 20th day of August, A. D. nineteen hundred and twenty-five, at the said county of Alameda, state of California, did then and there willfully, unlawfully, knowingly, fraudulently, feloniously, and with intent to defraud the Farmers' & Merchants' Savings Bank, a banking corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, make, pass, utter, and publish to the said Farmers' & Merchants' Savings Bank a certain fictitious check purporting to be the check for the payment of money of Edward J. Caswell, which said fictitious check was and is in the words and figures as follows, to wit:

" '90-1-12 The Oakland Bank 90-1-12
" 'Established 1867. No. 632.
" 'Oakland, Calif., August 19, 1925.

" 'Pay to the order of Leo T. Levin $497.50, four hundred ninety-seven and 50/100 dollars, Levin note in full. Edward J. Caswell.'

"Whereas, in truth and in fact there was then and there no such bank, corporation, copartnership, person or individual as Edward J. Caswell in existence at the time said Frank S. Carmona, Jr., alias Leo T. Levin, so made, passed, uttered, and published said fictitious check as aforesaid, and as the said Frank S. Carmona, Jr., alias Leo T. Levin, then and there well knew, and the said Frank S. Carmona, Jr., alias Leo T. Levin, at the time he made, passed, uttered, and published said check as aforesaid, well knew that the same was fictitious."

The defendant demurred generally and specially to this information, and the demurrer was disallowed by the trial court. Defendant challenged the sufficiency of the information on various grounds; among others, that it did not state a public offense and that it did not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code of the state of California, in that it did not contain a statement of the acts constituting any offense in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.

[1] It is well settled under our system of pleading in criminal cases that an offense may be charged in the language of the statute, but, where particular circumstances of an offense are necessary to constitute a complete offense, they should be stated and averred, and a failure to do so will vitiate the information or indictment. People v. Neil, 91 Cal. 465, 27 P. 760; People v. Perales, 141 Cal. 581, 75 P. 170; People v. Earl, 19 Cal. App. 69, 124 P. 887.

The point relied upon in support of the general demurrer is that the information failed to allege that the check in question was uttered, published and passed to the Farmers' & Merchants' Savings Bank as true and genuine.

[2, 3] Since the amendment of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 673) to section 470 of the Penal Code, the making and passing of a fictitious instrument may be prosecuted either under section 470 or section 476 of the Penal Code. People v. Bernard, 21 Cal. App. 56, 130 P. 1063; People v. Lucas, 67 Cal. App. 452, 227 P. 709; 12 Cal. Jur. 654, 655. Prior to 1905, section 470 was primarily a forgery and counterfeiting statute, and did not contain the words "signing of the name of a fictitious person," and prosecutions were had under that section, and many cases failed solely because, upon an information charging forgery, a defendant would cause it to appear that the check was fictitious, and thereby defeat the ends of justice, and the Legislature, to correct this evil, amended section 470 as indicated, so that a prosecution for forgery, where it is accomplished by passing a fictitious check, may now be had under either section 470 or section 476 of the Penal Code. This amendment applies only to the "signing of the name of a fictitious person," with intent to defraud, etc., and did not affect section 476. People v. Harben, 5 Cal. App. 35, 91 P. 398.

It will be noted that the information here charges the defendant with making, passing, uttering, and publishing a fictitious check, with intent to defraud. The information further alleges that the defendant willfully, unlawfully, knowingly, fraudulently, feloniously, and with intent to defraud the Farmers' & Merchants' Savings Bank, did make, pass, utter, and publish to said Farmers' & Merchants' Savings Bank a certain fictitious check, purporting to be the check for the payment of money of Edward J. Caswell. The information sets forth the check in hæc verba, and then further alleges that there was no such bank, corporation, copartnership, person, or individual as Edward J. Caswell in existence, and that the defendant knew the check to be fictitious at the time he made, passed, uttered, and published the same.

[4] Webster defines fictitious as "feigned, imaginary, not real, counterfeit, false, not genuine." See, also, People v. Harben, supra.

It would seem, therefore, where the information charges, as it does here, the defendant with making, passing, uttering, and publishing a fictitious check, knowing it to be fictitious, that it obviates the necessity of also informing the defendant that he made, uttered, passed, and published the same as true and genuine. If the name signed to the check is fictitious, it certainly could not be the true and genuine signature of any person.

[5, 6] If the defendant had been charged under section 470 with forging the name of a real person to a check, and passed and published the same, then it would have been necessary to also allege that he passed and published the same as the true and genuine check of the person whose name was signed to it, in order to constitute a complete offense of forgery, but, where an information or indictment is laid under either section 470 or section 476 of the Penal Code, and is founded upon a check bearing the name of an imaginary or fictitious person, then the essential elements to be alleged are the uttering and publishing of such a check, knowing the same to be fictitious, etc. We conclude, therefore, that the information states a complete public offense, and that the general demurrer was properly disallowed.

[7] We think that the special demurrer urged, that the information does not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code, is without merit. All that is required in this regard is that the information be sufficient to enable the defendant, or any person of common understanding, to know what was intended, and to set forth the acts charged with such degree of certainty as to enable the court to pronounce judgment upon conviction. People v. Gordon, 13 Cal. App. 678, 110 P. 469.

[8] Complaint is also made by the defendant that the information fails to set forth the particulars showing what the artifice, trick, scheme, or deception was that defendant used to acquire the property of the bank. A sufficient answer to this contention is found in the information—there it is alleged that the trick or scheme used was the uttering of a fictitious check purporting to be the check for payment of money of Edward J. Caswell, whereas, in truth and fact, there was no such person in existence. The information fully meets these requirements.

[9] It is also contended by defendant that the corpus delicti was not established, in that the prosecution failed to prove that Edward J. Caswell was or is a fictitious person. The witness A. K. Gibbs, who was chief clerk of the Oakland Bank, upon which the check was drawn, testified that he was familiar with the accounts of the bank; that he had looked particularly for the account of Edward J. Caswell, and had not found any such account; and that he could state positively there were no accounts under the name of Edward Caswell. This testimony has been uniformly held to be prima facie evidence of the nonexistence of the drawer of a check claimed to be fictitious. People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 36, 38 P. 538; People v. Bernard, supra; People v. Walker, 15 Cal. App. 401, 114 P. 1009; People v. Thal, 61 Cal. App. 48, 214 P. 296. This prima facie showing was supplemented by a great deal of other testimony to the effect that the name Edward J. Caswell, signed to the check in question as maker thereof, was a myth.

The defendant also complains of the following instruction given by the court to the jury:

> "You are instructed that, in a case where a check is drawn upon some bank, banker, or depositary for money, purporting to be signed by an individual, evidence that no such person as the one whose name purports to be signed to such check had any account with said bank, banker, or depositary for the payment of money, at the time of making, drawing, or uttering of such check, is prima facie evidence of the fictitious character of the check."

[10] One of the objections raised by the defendant to this instruction is that it uses the words "prima facie"; claiming that these words are Latin, and to use Latin words in instructing the jury is a violation of article 4, § 24, of the Constitution of the state of California. This objection seems to be highly technical. The words "prima facie" have, by long usage, become a part of the English language, and their meaning is readily understood by a person of common understanding. Our Code of Civil Procedure (section 1833) recognizes the phrase, and defines it as evidence which suffices for the proof of a particular fact, until overcome by other evidence. This is practically the same definition of the words as used in Webster's Dictionary, which defines the words as evidence sufficient to establish a fact in question unless rebutted.

[11, 12] The next objection to the instruction is that it invades the province of the jury. This objection is also wholly without merit. The instruction merely declares a general principle of law, and has been approved by this court in People v. Thal, supra, as being correct in law and proper in form. Defendant also contends that the court erred in the refusal of certain instructions proposed by the defendant and in the giving of other instructions. We have examined these alleged errors, and we find them without merit. Defendant also complains of the admission of certain evidence of similar transactions, for the reason that the corpus delicti had not been established. What we have already said is a sufficient answer to this contention, and the testimony was properly admitted.

Many other errors on the part of the trial court are urged by defendant, but we have examined all these contentions, and, if any errors at all were made, they are of a trivial character, and did not affect the substantial rights of the defendant, and would not be sufficient for reversal of the judgment of conviction, in the absence of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. In fact, after a careful examination of the entire record, including the evidence, we are firmly of the opinion that the defendant was fairly tried and justly convicted upon evidence that does not admit of any doubt. The defendant's counsel has made a strong presentation of an exceedingly weak case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

79 Cal. App. 787

MURDOCK v. FISHER FINANCE CORPORATION. (Civ. 5435.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 24, 1926.)

1. Infants 🔑58(2)—Restoration or offer to restore consideration held condition precedent to maintenance of minor's action to rescind contract for purchase of car (Civ. Code, § 35).

In minor's action to rescind contract for purchase of car, restoration of consideration or offer to restore it held a condition precedent to maintenance of action under Civ. Code, § 35.

2. Infants 🔑58(2)—Equity requires restoration or offer to restore personal property contracted for by minor for his use in as good condition as when received, or payment of equivalent, before rescission by him.

A minor, to rescind contract for purchase of personal property for his own use, must first restore or offer to restore it in as good a condition as when received by him, or to pay its equivalent.

3. Infants 🔑58(1)—In minor's actions to rescind contract for purchase of car, accounting of charges and countercharges of each party held necessary to do equity.

In action by minor to rescind contract for purchase of automobile, where he returned it in a partially depreciated condition after having it in possession for about four months, during which time he used it for both business and pleasure, and value of another car taken in exchange by defendant as part payment was not shown, accounting of charges and countercharges as to each party held necessary to do equity.

4. Judgment 🔑252(2)—Court can give judgment for relief consistent with case made by complaint and embraced within issue, if complaint is answered (Code Civ. Proc. § 580).

Where complaint is answered, trial court is empowered by Code Civ. Proc. § 580, to give judgment for any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue.

5. Infants 🔑58(1)—Minor seeking to rescind contract for purchase of automobile should be charged with its use and depreciation while in his possession.

In minor's action to rescind contract for purchase of automobile, held, he should be charged with its use and depreciation during four months it was in his possession.

6. Infants 🔑58(1)—Where minor sought to rescind contract for purchase of automobile, seller, who took another car in part payment, was chargeable with its use and depreciation.

In action by minor to rescind contract for purchase of automobile, where he gave in part payment thereof another car, held, seller was chargeable with use and depreciation, if any, of such other car.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis R. Ward, Judge.

Action by William A. Murdock by Chas. E. Knight, his guardian ad litem, against the Fisher Finance Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Franklin T. Poore, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Roy A. Bronson and E. D. Bronson, Jr., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff, a minor of the age of 19, sued to rescind his contract with the defendant for the purchase of an automobile. The plaintiff recovered judgment for $615.97, with interest, and the defendant has appealed on a typewritten transcript.

On June 17, 1924, the parties executed their written contract, whereby the plaintiff agreed to purchase from the defendant a Stutz automobile for the stipulated purchase price of $917.12, $450 thereof to be paid upon the execution of the agreement and the balance in equal monthly installments of $51.90 each. Plaintiff satisfied the initial payment by delivering to defendant a Ford automobile, and thereafter paid in cash the sum of $165.75. On October 7, 1924, the plaintiff in writing notified the defendant of his disaffirmance of this contract, offered to restore the Stutz car, and demanded payment of the sum of $615.75. During the period of 3⅔ months, when the plaintiff had possession of the car, he had driven it something over 3,000 miles, using it for both business and pleasure. While driving the car, he had been in collision with another car and had destroyed one of the fenders; he had stripped the gears and otherwise damaged the car to the extent of $128 in repairs, which the defendant was required to pay. When he attempted to rescind the contract, he made no offer to restore the consideration, nor specifically to reimburse defendant for the use of the car, the depreciation through ordinary use, or the cost of the repairs. He merely offered to restore the car in its damaged condition, and demanded that the defendant pay him the sum of $615.75 in money, though he, the plaintiff, had covered $450 of that sum by the delivery to defendant of a second-hand Ford car.

Section 35 of the Civil Code permits a minor to disaffirm his contract upon returning the consideration or paying its equivalent. This right to disaffirm, like the right to rescind accorded a party under section 1688 et seq. of the same Code, is based upon the equitable consideration that, where a contract is made under the circumstances enumerated in the Code, the court should be permitted to use its equity power to place the parties in statu quo as nearly as this may be done. For this reason section 35 provides that a minor over the age of 18 may disaffirm, upon restoring the consideration or paying its equivalent. Section 1691 provides that a party to a contract may, under certain conditions, rescind, but that he must restore to the other party everything of value which he has received, or must offer to restore the same.

[1] It is the settled rule of law that, as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action in rescission, the plaintiff must have restored the consideration or must have offered to do so. 4 Cal. Jur. pp. 764, 765; Crouch v. Wilson, 183 Cal. 576, 584, 191 P. 916. This rule has become so well established that it has been held that the plaintiff, seeking rescission, must allege and prove that he has either restored or offered to restore the consideration. Crouch v. Wilson, supra. There are no California cases directly on the point, but the reasoning of the cases arising under section 1691 is equally applicable to those arising under section 35, and cases from other jurisdictions arising under similar statutes support the conclusion that, when a minor over 18 years of age seeks to disaffirm his contract, he must, as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action, either restore the consideration he has received or pay its equivalent, or he must offer to do so.

[2] When the subject of the contract is the purchase of personal property for the use of the minor, equity demands that he restore or offer to restore it in as good condition as when delivered to him, or that he pay its equivalent. Petit v. Liston, 97 Or. 464, 184 P. 328, 191 P. 660, 11 A. L. R. 487; Gaither v. Wallingford, 101 Or. 389, 200 P. 910; Luce v. Jestrab, 12 N. D. 548, 97 N. W. 848; Sparandera v. Staten Island Garage, 117 Misc. Rep. 780, 193 N. Y. S. 392, 395; Rice v. Butler, 160 N. Y. 578, 55 N. E. 275, 47 L. R. A. 303, 73 Am. St. Rep. 703. Pettit v. Liston, supra, involved the purchase of a motorcycle by a minor, and the opinion contains some language which is particularly appropriate here:

> "We think, where the minor has not been overreached in any way, and there has been no undue influence, and the contract is a fair and reasonable one, and the minor has actually paid money on the purchase price, and taken and used the article, that he ought not to be permitted to recover the amount actually paid, without allowing the vendor of the goods the reasonable compensation for the use and depreciation of the article, while in his hands. * * * We think this rule will fully and fairly protect the minor against injustice or imposition, and at the same time it will be fair to the business man who has dealt with such minor in good faith. This rule is best adapted to modern conditions, and especially to the conditions in our far Western States. Here minors are permitted to and do in fact transact a great deal of business for themselves, long before they have reached the age of legal majority. Most young men have their own time long before reaching that age. They work and earn money, and collect it and spend it, oftentimes without any oversight or restriction."

Plaintiff insists that the case is within Le Baron v. Berryessa, etc., Co., 248 P. 779, decided by this court on June 26, 1926. But that case is clearly not in point, because the notice of disaffirmance in that case contained the specific offer to restore the entire consideration moving to the minors out of the transaction, and the trial court found, after a full hearing and upon conflicting evidence, that the entire consideration had been restored. The offer to restore was complete, and the finding was supported by competent evidence; but such is not the case here.

Before proceeding further, it is proper to state that plaintiff had possession of the Stutz automobile for about 4 months, used it for business and for pleasure, and drove it about 3,000 miles. When he returned it to the defendant, it was "in a partially depreciated condition." At the time of the disaffirmance the evidence does not disclose whether the defendant still held the Ford car which it had received in part payment; nor whether that car had been in use, and, if so, the value of that use, and whether that car had been depreciated in value, and, if so, how much, and what was the value of the Ford car at the time that the defendant received it, or at the time of the disaffirmance.

[3-6] Where the original transaction involves such complicated facts as we have recited, it is clear that equity cannot be done until an accounting is had of the charges and countercharges as to each party. Where the complaint is answered, the trial court can give judgment for any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue. Code Civ. Proc. § 580. Moreover, in a case where it is necessary to have an accounting to ascertain the sum to be repaid, the rule regarding a tender, etc., is not so strict, because the court will be able to fix the amount after hearing the evidence and thus do equity between the parties. California, etc., Co. v. Schiappa-Pietra, 151 Cal. 732, 740, 91 P. 593. That the plaintiff should be charged with the use and with the depreciation of the Stutz car is clear. Bray v. Lowery, 163 Cal. 256, 124 P. 1004. For the same reasons the defendant is chargeable with the use and depreciation if any on the Ford car. If, perchance, it had sold the Ford car, its liability on that element would be the reasonable value of the Ford car at the time it received it from the plaintiff, less the sum of $50 which this defendant paid to the former owner thereof to obtain a bill of sale. Blahnik v. Small Farms, etc., 181 Cal. 379, 384, 184 P. 661.

The fourth finding made by the trial court was as follows:

> "That heretofore, and prior to the commencement of this action, plaintiff paid the defendant on account of said purchase price the sum of $615.75."

The only evidence regarding his payments is that he made three separate payments of $51.90, or $155.70. To ascertain the items of the account above referred to will require the taking of additional evidence and the making of findings thereon.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the trial court for the taking of the additional evidence, and for the purpose of obtaining a finding of that court in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: CABANISS, Presiding Justice pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 605

PEOPLE v. BLACK et al. (Cr. 1389.)*

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 10, 1927. Rehearing Denied Feb. 8, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 10, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑1136—Defendant cannot complain because codefendant was convicted of lesser offense.

Defendant, convicted of burglary in first degree, cannot complain because codefendant was found guilty of burglary in second degree.

2. Burglary 🔑41(1)—Evidence held to justify conviction of burglary in first degree.

Evidence that dwelling was entered in nighttime, with identification of defendant, who was found with property taken from dwelling in his possession, justified conviction of burglary in first degree.

3. Criminal law 🔑1175—Defendant cannot complain of conviction of offense less than justified by evidence.

Defendant, convicted of burglary in second degree, cannot complain that evidence justified conviction of burglary in first degree.

4. Burglary 🔑41(1)—Conviction of burglary in second degree held warranted.

Evidence held sufficient to justify conviction of burglary in second degree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Bodie Black was convicted of burglary in the first degree and Blanche Welch of burglary in the second degree, and they appeal. Affirmed.

John F. Hyland, of Los Angeles, for appellant Black.

Hal R. Clark, of Los Angeles, for appellant Welch.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendants were charged and jointly tried upon a charge of burglary. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of burglary in the first degree against the defendant Bodie Black and a verdict of guilty of burglary in the second degree against the defendant Blanche Welch. From the judgments pronounced upon the verdicts the defendants prosecute this appeal.

The facts as disclosed by the testimony are as follows: Mrs. Caldwell, whose home was entered during her absence, returned at about 12:10 a. m. on the morning of January 27, 1926, in company with a friend named Brown. Upon arriving at the steps to the front porch, they found an upholstered chair and victrola records, and, upon entering the house, discovered that rugs, lamps, bric-a-brac, console, gas stove, clothes, shoes, and other furniture and personal effects had been taken from the house; that the glass in the rear door had been broken in, a key which had been tied to another key with a ring had been turned in the door, and were then missing, which keys were subsequently found by the officers in the hip pocket of the defendant Black. Prior to the discovery of the chair and victrola records, and upon approaching Mrs. Caldwell's home, she and Mr. Brown saw a Buick automobile standing in a ravine near the house, and a man standing near it, who put his hand in his pocket, and yelled, "Don't come near me, don't come near me." Both Mrs. Caldwell and Mr. Brown identified this man as the defendant Bodie Black. The automobile belonged to the defendant Welch, and in it were found a coat, cloak, and vanity case belonging to her. In it also were found several of the articles removed from Mrs. Caldwell's home. The defendant Bodie Black was seen depositing dishes taken from the Caldwell home in the back yard of the Welch home, and the remainder of the property taken from the house was found in what was described as a vacant house about 75 feet from the Welch house, accessible thereto through the back yard of the Welch place. There is a statement in the transcript that the property was found in the automobile, the vacant house, back yard, and Mrs. Welch's parlor. Bodie Black and Mrs. Welch were seen to pass in front of an adjoining house about 12:30 on the morning of the burglary, and later were heard to hold a conversation in the rear of the residence of the defendant Mrs. Welch, in which Bodie Black stated to her, "Don't worry, I have got it all planted, they will have nothing on us." Both defendants took the stand in their own behalf, and endeavored to explain their late hours and the presence of the personal effects of Mrs. Welch in the automobile by saying that they had been to a café that night, drinking heavily, and did not remember what had occurred after their arrival home, except that Blanche Welch had to be assisted from the automobile, and also the defendant Bodie Black says that he remembers that he was awakened by Bob Welch, the husband of the defendant Welch, asking him to carry the dishes in. Contradictory statements, however, made by the defendant Blanche Welch were introduced, in which she said that she went up to the house that was robbed, saw what was going on, got out of the car, and went home. This statement was made to two witnesses on different occasions. The defendant Black was a sort of handy man employed by Mrs. Welch in the operation of a "chili house" where she lived. The arresting officers who arrived between 20 and 30 minutes after Mrs. Caldwell reached home, and saw both defendants shortly thereafter, saw nothing to indicate that defendants were seriously intoxicated.

---

*Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

The appellant Bodie Black complains of his convicton on two grounds, first, that the defendant Blanche Welch was only convicted of burglary in the second degree, while he was convicted of burglary in the first degree. The appellant Blanche Welch complains of the verdict because, there having been no testimony that Bodie Black was armed with a deadly weapon or that he assaulted any person, she could not have been convicted of burglary in the second degree while he was convicted of burglary in the first degree, and also joins with the codefendant in complaining that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict.

[1, 2] In so far as the appeal by the defendant Bodie Black is concerned, it is without merit. In effect, it is solely that the evidence does not justify the verdict. He cannot complain because a codefendant was found guilty of a lesser offense. The bare recital of the testimony is sufficient to show that the jury could not possibly have done anything except to return a verdict of guilty as against him. The dwelling was entered in the nighttime; the defendant was identified; he had the property taken therefrom in his possession; the keys which were left in the door were found in his possession. These things would be sufficient to justify the verdict without the other testimony.

[3, 4] In so far as the appeal by the defendant Blanche Welch is concerned, there is more of a question. She cannot, however, be heard to complain that she was convicted of an offense less than that justified by the evidence. In other words, if the evidence justified a conviction of burglary in the first degree, she cannot complain that she was convicted of burglary in the second degree. There are many cases to this effect. It is sufficient to cite People v. Coulter, 145 Cal. 66, 78 P. 348; People v. Cramley 23 Cal. App. 340, 138 P. 123; People v. Tugwell, 32 Cal. App. 520, 163 P. 508; People v. Maroney, 109 Cal. 277, 41 P. 1097, and People v. Lowen, 109 Cal. 381, 42 P. 32. The last two were cases where the defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree. We are therefore confronted only by the claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. In our opinion there is sufficient testimony to justify the jury in returning its verdict. Were it not for the admission made by the appellant Welch that she had been to the house, and the positive identification of her voice in her own back yard talking to Bodie Black, in which Bodie Black said, "Don't worry, I have got it all planted, they will have nothing on us," the case against her would be more doubtful. However, the admissions made by her, the conversation held by her with Bodie Black, the evidence establishing the ownership of the automobile, the ownership of the personal effects in the car, the dishes found in the back yard, the fact that Bodie Black was a handy man for her in the operation of the "chili house," and the fact that she was up and around at that time of the night, not under the influence of liquor so far as the officers could observe, is amply sufficient to establish her connection with the burglary.

The judgments appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

80 Cal. App. 147

BASALT ROCK CO., Inc., v. MacMILLAN, State Commissioner of Corporations.*

(Civ. 3225.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 3, 1926. Rehearing Denied Dec. 31, 1926.)

1. Licenses 🔑25—Permit of commissioner to sell stock only after stock formerly illegally issued was returned held not void (Corporate Securities Act, § 4).

Where corporation failed to sell shares of stock for cash as required by permit of commissioner, commissioner's order issuing new permit for sale of stock to take effect when all shares issued without authority should be returned to secretary of corporation held not void as specifying conditions governing sale other than imposed by Corporate Securities Act, § 4 (St. 1925, p. 966).

2. Licenses 🔑22—Whether stock previously illegally sold was given for valid consideration held not determinable in proceeding to which stockholders were not parties.

Where corporation had sold stock illegally because not sold for cash, and new order of commissioner allowed further sales only upon returning certificates illegally sold, question whether stock illegally sold and not surrendered was given for valid consideration could not be determined in proceeding to which holders of stock were not parties.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied December 31, 1926. Hearing denied by Supreme Court January 31, 1927.

3. Licenses ⚿22—Order of commissioner forbidding sale of stock until return of certificates previously illegally sold held not abuse of discretion (Corporate Securities Act, § 11).

Order of commissioner of corporations permitting sale of stock of corporation only on return of certificates illegally sold held not shown to be an abuse of discretion so as to be reviewable under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1925, p. 969) § 11, where possible liability existed to holders of illegally issued stock.

Original application for writ of certiorari by the Basalt Rock Company, Inc., to Clifford J. MacMillan, as State Commissioner of Corporations, to review an order of the Commissioner. Order affirmed.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Thomas H. Christiansen, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an original application for a writ of review.

September 26, 1924, the commissioner of corporations duly issued a permit, authorizing the petitioner herein to issue and sell a certain number of shares of its capital stock upon conditions specified in the permit. The corporation thereafter sold a large number of such shares of stock in conformity with the terms of the permit and other shares in violation of such terms. For part of the stock illegally sold the corporation received $17,375 in cash, the full par value thereof. The particulars in which the sale of such stock was made in violation of the permit are immaterial to any issue in this proceeding. One of the conditions of the permit was that the stock should be sold at par for cash. The petition alleges that the corporation issued 500 shares of preferred stock to persons named in the petition and that such persons "did not pay or give said corporation any consideration for the issuance of the 500 shares of preferred stock, * * * either in cash or in property; that the question as to whether they gave any valid or legal consideration for the purported issuance of said purported shares was and is a disputed question of fact; that the petitioner alleges and maintains that said persons gave or paid no consideration to said corporation for the issuance of said purported shares to them, unless it was a usurer's bonus or premium upon a loan which was made to the corporation at the time said purported shares were issued to said persons, and which loan has since been wholly paid and discharged." The corporation thereafter ordered the cancellation of the stock so issued without consideration, but the holders thereof refuse to surrender their certificates of stock for cancellation.

In a petition for an amended permit, filed with the commissioner in 1926, and in a petition for a rehearing, the foregoing facts are set forth, and it is therein alleged that such illegal sales of stock were made by the directors of the corporation "in ignorance of the law"; that the purchasers of stock illegally issued, who paid cash therefor in the total sum of $17,375, have surrendered the certificates issued to them, and that the corporation is indebted to them in the sum of $17,375, the purchase price paid by them for the stock; that "petitioner is informed and believes and therefore alleges that all of said persons are willing to buy said stock and pay for the same at par if this commission will permit it to be issued and sold." The final request of the corporation was for a permit authorizing it to issue stock to the persons last named for the respective amounts paid by them for stock illegally issued, "without waiting for the surrender of the void certificates."

[1] The commissioner thereupon issued a permit for the sale of stock upon conditions, of which no complaint is made. The last paragraph of the permit reads as follows:

> "That this permit shall not become effective for any purpose unless and until all certificates purporting to represent any of the shares of stock issued without authority from the commissioner of corporations, or in nonconformity with the terms of the permit issued September 26, 1924, shall be returned to the secretary of said applicant and canceled."

Section 4 of the Corporate Securities Act provides:

> "The commissioner may impose conditions requiring the deposit in escrow of securities, the impoundment of the proceeds from the sale thereof, limiting the expense in connection with the sale thereof and such other conditions as he may deem reasonable and necessary or advisable to insure the disposition of the proceeds of such securities in the manner and for the purpose provided in such permit." Stats. 1925, p. 966.

Petitioner contends that the commissioner is not authorized to impose any conditions upon the sale of stock other than those specified in section 4, and that therefore the last paragraph of the permit is void. That paragraph, however, does not purport to specify the conditions governing the sale of stock under the permit, but the condition upon the performance of which the permit itself shall become effective. It is not contended that the commissioner might not properly have required the corporation to bring about the surrender and cancellation of the stock illegally issued as a condition precedent to the granting of a permit to make further sales, but this is in effect the very thing the commissioner did.

[2, 3] Petitioner alleges that it is a "disputed question of fact" whether "any valid or legal consideration" was given for the alleged illegal issuance of the stock which has not been surrendered. That "disputed question of fact" cannot be determined in this proceeding, to which the holders of such stock are not parties. If the corporation has incurred an enforceable liability to the holders of that stock, such liability affects the value of the stock which it proposes to sell. The requirement, therefore, that the corporation clear up the question of such liability before the permit shall become effective appears to be a reasonable exercise of the discretion vested in the commissioner. Section 4 of the act provides that a permit shall not be issued to an applicant unless the commissioner shall find "that the securities that it proposes to issue and the methods to be used by it in issuing or disposing of them are not such as, in his opinion, will work a fraud upon the purchaser thereof." The par value of the stock which the commissioner required to be surrendered is more than $10,000. To sell stock to purchasers who are in ignorance of this outstanding liability of the corporation, if it shall finally be determined that it is a liability, would be to work a fraud upon them. By section 11 of the act, the court is "limited to a consideration and determination of the question whether there has been an abuse of discretion on the part of the commissioner." No such abuse has been shown. Doble Steam Motors Corp. v. Daugherty, 195 Cal. 158, 232 P. 140; Agnew v. Daugherty, 189 Cal. 446, 209 P. 34.

The order of the commissioner issuing the permit upon the conditions specified therein is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

---

79 Cal. App. 780

SIMPSON v. PAYNE, County Auditor.*

(Civ. 5349.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 24, 1926.)

1. Clerks of courts 🔑11—Board of supervisors of county operating under freeholders' charter held unauthorized to fix salary of clerk of municipal court at lower figure than that stipulated by Legislature (Const. art. 11, § 7½, and article 6, §§ 1, 11, 12, 18, as amended in 1924; St. 1925, p. 648, § 7).

Board of supervisors of Los Angeles county, which operates under freeholders' charter, held not authorized by Const. art. 11, § 7½, to fix salary of clerk in criminal department of municipal court of Los Angeles at lower figure than that stipulated in St. 1925, p. 648, § 7, in view of Legislature's power to fix salary under Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 11, 12, 18, as amended in 1924.

2. Counties 🔑24—County legislation authorized by Constitution under freeholders' charter supersedes inconsistent legislative acts relative to same subject-matter.

Wherever Constitution authorizes county to enact legislation on particular subject-matter under provisions of freeholders' charter, such legislation is exclusive and supersedes all inconsistent acts of Legislature relative to same subject-matter.

3. Constitutional law 🔑26—State's legislative power is vested in people, except as expressly prohibited by Constitution.

Entire legislative power of state is vested in people, acting either by initiative and referendum or through Legislature, except as expressly prohibited by Constitution.

4. Counties 🔑21½—Counties have no legislative authority except as expressly delegated to them.

Counties of state only have such legislative authority as may have been expressly conferred or delegated to them.

5. Clerks of courts 🔑1—"Clerks of municipal courts" are not "officers of an inferior court," or "county officers" (Const. art. 11, § 7½).

"Clerks of municipal courts" are not "officers of an inferior court," within Const. art. 11, § 7½, and are not "county officers," but are necessary adjuncts to municipal court.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Clerk of Court; County Officer.]

Application for writ of mandate by T. F. Simpson, prayed to be directed to H. A. Payne, as County Auditor of the County of Los Angeles, to compel him to issue to petitioner a warrant for payment of compensation for services as deputy clerk in the criminal department of the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles for the month of February, 1926. Peremptory writ granted.

Hewitt, Ford & Crump, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and R. C. McAllaster, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent

THOMPSON, J. The stipulated facts show that a municipal court was established in the city of Los Angeles on February 1, 1926; that the petitioner is a clerk in the criminal department of said municipal court, as provided in section 7 of "an act authorizing the establishment of municipal courts, prescribing their constitution, regulation, government, procedure and jurisdiction, and providing for the election and appointment of the judges, clerks and other attachés of such courts, their terms of office, qualification and compensation and for the selection of jurors therein," approved May 23, 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 648); that the salary of the office held by petitioner is fixed, by section 7 of the act above mentioned, at the sum of $225 per month, but the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county, acting upon the theory that the salary fixed by the Legislature was without authority so far as counties operating under freeholders' charters were concerned, fixed the salary of the office at $165 for the month of February, 1926, and $175 per month thereafter.

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court January 21, 1927.

This proceeding is brought, then, for the difference between $165 for the month of February, as fixed by the board of supervisors, and $225 a month, as fixed by the Legislature.

[1] The question presented is: Does the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county, under the freeholders' charter and section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution, which provides that charters so adopted shall make provision "for the number of justices of the peace and constables for each township, or for the number of such judges and other officers of such inferior courts as may be provided by the constitution or general law, for the election or appointment of said officers, for the times at which and the terms for which said officers shall be elected or appointed, and for their compensation, or for the fixing of such compensation by boards of supervisors, and if appointed, for the manner of their appointment," give to the board the power of fixing the salaries of the officers or attachés of municipal courts, or does the Legislature have that power under section 1 of article 6 of the Constitution of California, as amended in 1924? That section, as so amended, reads as follows:

> "The judicial power of the state shall be vested in the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a Supreme Court, District Courts of Appeal, superior courts, such municipal courts as may be established in any city or city and county, and such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county or city and county."

As amended, section 11 of article 6, after making provision for the cities in which municipal courts may be established and giving the Legislature authority to determine the number of judges and providing for certain jurisdiction, states:

> "The Legislature shall provide by general law for the constitution, regulation, government and procedure of municipal courts, and for the jurisdiction thereof except in the particulars otherwise specified in this section, and for the establishment of municipal courts in cities or cities and counties governed under charters framed and adopted under the authority of this constitution, and having the population hereinbefore in this section specified. Upon the taking effect of such general law, a municipal court may be established in any such city or city and county whenever the charter thereof or amendment to such charter shall provide that there shall be a municipal court therein, or whenever the assent of a majority of the qualified electors of such city or city and county voting upon the question of the establishment of such municipal court, and expressed in such manner and form as the Legislature shall by general law prescribe, is given to the establishment thereof. The manner in which, the time at which, the term for which the judges, clerks and other attachés of municipal courts shall be elected or appointed, the number and qualifications of said judges and of the clerks and other attachés, except as such matters are otherwise provided in this article, shall be prescribed by the Legislature. The compensation of the justices or judges of all courts of record, shall be fixed and the payment thereof prescribed by the Legislature."

By section 12 of article 6 the municipal courts are made courts of record, and section 18 of the same article provides that judges "of the municipal court shall be ineligible to any other office or public employment than a judicial office or employment during the term for which they shall have been elected or appointed, and no justice or judge of a court of record shall practice law in any court of the state during his continuance in office."

On these constitutional provisions it is asserted that the board of supervisors have the right to fix the salaries of the attachés of the municipal court, for the following reasons: First, that county ordinances enacted pursuant to a freeholders' charter supersede any general law enacted by the Legislature on the same subject; second, that section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution confers on the board of supervisors operating under a freeholders' charter the exclusive authority to fix the salaries of judges and officers of all courts in the county except the superior court or police courts or courts established by city charters; third, that municipal courts are inferior courts within the meaning of subdivision 3 of section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution; fourth, that the amendment to section 11 of article 6 of the Constitution does not deny to the board of supervisors the right to fix the salaries of attachés of a municipal court; and, fifth, that the petitioner, as clerk in a criminal department of the municipal court, is an officer of an inferior court within the meaning of section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution.

In addition to asserting the unsoundness of the propositions advanced by respondent, the petitioner contends that the board of supervisors has no power to fix the salaries of clerks of the municipal court of Los Angeles city, because the provisions of the charter in that behalf are null and void in that they do not comply with the requirements of section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution, and also that the power to make provision for the salaries of the attachés of a municipal court was never conferred upon the county.

[2] We think it is conceded and established that wherever the Constitution authorizes the county to enact legislation upon a particular subject-matter, under the provisions of a freeholders' charter, such legislation is exclusive and supersedes all acts of the Legislature relative to the same subject-matter and inconsistent therewith. Graham v. Mayor, etc., of Fresno, 151 Cal. 465, 91 P. 147; Martin v. Election Commissioners, 126 Cal. 404, 58 P. 932. The general law or act of the Legislature applies, however, where there has been no provision in the charter or legislation thereunder. Fleming v. Hance, 153 Cal. 162, 94 P. 620. It would seem to us, therefore, that the first essential inquiry is as to the proper interpretation to be given to the amendment of the organic law of 1924. In so doing it is well to note that prior to the amendment of 1924 the judicial power of the state was disposed of and vested in the Supreme Court, District Courts of Appeal, superior courts, and such inferior courts as the Legislature might establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county, or city and county, and that this was the case at the time section 7½ of article 11 was adopted. In other words, the only authority that could be conferred upon the counties operating under freeholders' charters by section 7½ of article 11 was referable to such inferior courts as the Legislature might then establish. The fact that the language of section 7½ of article 11 reads, "such inferior courts as may be provided by the Constitution or general law," does not alter the situation because the only inferior courts in mind or provided for by the Constitution were those the Legislature was authorized to create. And in arriving at the true intent it is well to note that prior to 1911 when section 7½ of article 11 was added and section 1 of article 6 was amended, justices of the peace were directly provided for in the Constitution and distinguished from "such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish." This amendment, however, did not abolish the justices' courts theretofore established by the Constitution. In re Woods, 161 Cal. 238, 118 P. 792; People v. Creeks, 170 Cal. 368, 149 P. 821. In view of this fact it is as though the provision read, "such inferior courts as may be provided" by general law under the constitutional provision therefor or those heretofore established by the Constitution. It must be granted that the Legislature had no authority to establish municipal courts with the jurisdiction and powers of the municipal courts, the establishment of which was provided for in the amendments of 1924 to the Constitution. Perhaps it is not helpful to endeavor to classify the municipal court as an inferior court for the reason that inferior is such a relative term that it ranges all the way from next to omnipotence to next to nothing. It is of importance, however, to determine whether or not they are the kind of courts within the contemplation of section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution. In addition to the fact that they could not possibly have been in the mind of the voters in 1911 when that section was adopted, it must also be remembered that the municipal courts are granted jurisdiction greatly in excess of that exercised by justices of the peace and police courts, or any inferior court which might have been created without constitutional amendment. We may well ask the question: Did the people of California and the Legislature intend to surrender to the counties any portion of their authority relating to the establishment of courts for the purpose of exercising a jurisdiction with which the counties theretofore had no voice? We think they did not.

[3] At this juncture it seems proper to refer to an established principle of law that the entire legislative power of the state is vested in the people acting either by way of the initiative and referendum or through the Legislature, except as expressly prohibited by the Constitution of the State. Sheehan v. Scott, 145 Cal. 684, 79 P. 350; Mendenhall v. Gray, 167 Cal. 233, 139 P. 67; People v. Rinner, 52 Cal. App. 747, 199 P. 1066, and In re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 296, 28 P. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106.

[4] The converse of this proposition is also true, that political subdivisions of the state only have such legislative authority as may have been expressly conferred or delegated. Unless we can find, therefore, that the authority has been conferred or delegated to the county, such authority must still be resident in the Legislature. It appears, therefore, from the fact that municipal courts as provided for in the amendments of 1924 were not in mind at the time section 7½ of article 11 was adopted, that the jurisdiction of the municipal courts as adopted is much more extensive in character than the inferior courts therein provided for, and from the further fact that the municipal courts were designed for the purpose of exercising a large share of the judicial power of the state as courts of record with judges devoting their entire time and attention to judicial functions, that we cannot say that any authority over their functions or management either with relation to its attachés or otherwise was delegated to counties operating under a freeholders' charter. We think the very fact that the voters of the cities were required to assent to their establishment is indicative of the true purpose and intent of the Constitution (article 6, § 11a), to wit, to "provide by general law for the constitution, regulation, government and procedure of municipal courts" unhampered by any other legislative action.

[5] Holding, as we do, that the municipal courts are not inferior courts within the meaning and intent of section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution, the attachés of that court are not officers of an inferior court within its meaning. Nor must we confuse their status with that of the county clerk and his deputies, who are county officers. Clerks and attachés of the municipal court are necessary adjuncts of that court. Noel v. Lewis, 35 Cal. App. 658, 170 P. 857; Martin v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 93, 227 P. 762.

Under the view we entertain it is unnecessary to determine whether or not the provisions of the charter under which the ordinance is enacted are valid.

The peremptory writ will issue

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 167

PEOPLE v. WARRINGTON. (Cr. 1343.)*

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 7, 1926.)

1. Principal and agent 🔑99—General power of attorney does not authorize agent to divert funds intrusted to him for specific purpose.

General power of attorney, reciting that it is for all purposes to buy, incumber, and sell realty, personalty, and choses in action, given to agent for specific purpose, does not authorize agent to divert funds intrusted to his care for specific purpose.

2. Larceny 🔑40(8)—Objection to introduction of checks on ground that they were not lawful money of United States as charged held properly overruled.

In prosecution of agent for larceny of lawful money of United States obtained from principal, objection to introduction in evidence of checks obtained from principal on ground that they were not lawful money of United States held properly overruled.

3. Criminal law 🔑1144(13)—Appellate court must consider in strongest light evidence tending to support verdict and disregard inconsistent evidence.

Appellate court must consider in its strongest light all evidence tending to support verdict and disregard conflicting evidence inconsistent therewith.

4. Witnesses 🔑388(7)—Papers in civil proceeding should have been shown prosecuting witness before questions concerning contents were asked for impeachment purposes (Code Civ. Proc. § 2052).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, papers in civil proceeding brought by prosecuting witness should have been shown to her before any questions concerning contents thereof were asked for purpose of impeaching her testimony in larceny case.

5. Larceny 🔑47—In prosecution of agent for larceny of principal's money directed to be paid on escrow agreement, admission in evidence of such agreement held not error.

In prosecution of agent for larceny of money received from principal to be paid under escrow agreement, admission of evidence as to terms of escrow agreement and discussion thereof by district attorney held not error, notwithstanding agent was not party to such agreement.

6. Witnesses 🔑268(1)—Refusal to permit cross-examination of prosecuting witness in larceny case, who denied having heard of certain deal, as to what she heard respecting deal, held not error.

In prosecution of agent for larceny of principal's money, in which principal denied that she gave money to agent to be applied on oil deal and had not heard of such deal until after money was received by agent, refusing to permit cross-examination as to what she heard of such deal held not error.

7. Criminal law 🔑1170(4)—Exclusion of accused's testimony on certain issue, if error, held not prejudicial, where he subsequently testified fully thereon.

In prosecution of agent for larceny of principal's money, exclusion of defendant's testimony as to why he paid money to certain person, if error, was not prejudicial, where he subsequently testified fully as to such matters.

8. Indictment and information 🔑132(3)—Refusal to require district attorney to elect on which count of indictment he would rely held not error (Pen. Code, § 954).

Under Pen. Code, § 954, refusal to compel district attorney to elect on which of ten counts in indictment he would rely held not error.

9. Larceny 🔑14(1)—Instruction that procuring possession by fraud or artifice with intent to steal it is "larceny" if owner retains title held correct.

Instruction that obtaining possession of property from another by fraud or artifice with felonious intent of stealing it when accused gets possession thereof constitutes "larceny" if owner retains title held correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Larceny.]

10. Larceny 🔑65—Evidence held to warrant conviction of agent for grand larceny of principal's money.

Evidence held to warrant accused's conviction of grand larceny in diverting principal's money from purpose for which it was given to accused.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

L. B. Warrington was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. Light, of Glendale, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was indicted by the grand jury of Los Angeles county in ten counts charging embezzlement, grand larceny, and obtaining money under false pretenses. The last four counts were dismissed, and the jury found the defendant not guilty of embezzlement, but convicted him of grand larceny as charged in counts numbered 2, 4, and 6 of the indictment.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied January 6, 1927. Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 3, 1927; Shenk, J., dissenting.

It appears that appellant was a neighbor and friend of one Emma J. Baker, who testified that she had confidence in him and trusted him; that prior to August 8, 1923, he represented to Mrs. Baker that he was the owner of interests in oil lands and leases, and that he contemplated the establishment of an oil refinery upon certain land adjoining that of one Frank Hutter; that if she would purchase Hutter's property for $30,000, such investment would yield large returns. It is admitted that appellant brought Mrs. Baker and Hutter together, and that on said date she signed escrow instructions and deposited her check for $1,000 with a bank at the city of Long Beach. On September 11, 1923, the prosecuting witness delivered to the defendant another check for $1,000, upon which he wrote, "For Ranch"; $2,300 was likewise given him on September 20, 1923, and on October 20, 1923, he received $800. It was testified that each such payment was solicited by Warrington and delivered to him by Mrs. Baker to be paid into the escrow or to Hutter. She averred that her experience in handling money was exceedingly limited, and that she did not know how the defendant intended to handle the payments, but that she had never given him permission to apply them otherwise than by delivery to the bank or to Hutter, and that it was immaterial to her so long as she got the land; that she "did not want him to have it for nothing." Nevertheless, that not one dollar of the moneys received by Warrington from Mrs. Baker was paid to Hutter or into the escrow, or returned to her, was established by an abundance of uncontradicted evidence. Hutter and Mrs. Baker ultimately closed the escrow, the $1,000 deposited by the latter was returned to her, and she subsequently sued the appellant for approximately $2,300 and instituted this criminal proceeding.

Counsel for appellant stresses the asserted importance of a general power of attorney which appeared to have been executed to him by the prosecuting witness on May 14, 1923, giving the defendant full authority for all purposes to buy, incumber, and sell real property, as well as goods, wares and merchandise, choses in action, and other property in possession or in action. However, the power of attorney contains no reference to the transaction here involved. Mrs. Baker testified that the defendant "came to us in a great rush one day, and said he could make us a lot of money if we gave him a power"; that they proceeded to the office of a Mr. Griffith, "and he told Mr. Griffith, 'You might as well make it a power of attorney' "; that "he fixed up the power of attorney, but it was never used except to defraud us"; that a few days later she demanded it, but that appellant replied, "Oh, I tore it up." This latter statement proved to be false, since it was introduced in evidence at the trial, and appellant attempted to show that it authorized him to use the escrow moneys above mentioned as he might see fit.

[1] We are cited to no authority, nor are we aware of any, which could be said to sanction the exercise of authority under a general power of attorney executed in May, 1923, to divert funds intrusted to an agent in confidence for a specific purpose which was limited and made definite by his principal. The prosecuting witness testified that the defendant had never rendered her an accounting of the moneys obtained from her, nor offered to return any part of them. During her cross-examination she was shown and identified a paper which was introduced in evidence, purporting to account for various amounts paid to persons not connected with the escrow transaction. She testified that "he stayed away for a week or two, then came to the house and gave me a paper where he stated he gave Looney $3,000"; that "he said, 'Now here is your paper and I am through with you; that is what I have done with the money.' I had never had any dealing with Looney or any one." Among the items so charged to Mrs. Baker appeared $58.30 and $100 to lawyers, $20 for chicken feed, $120 for chickens, $35 for a cow, "one thousand dollars ($1,000) to W. R. Looney, * * * and twenty-three hundred dollars ($2,300) check which was to be used in escrow or as Mr. L. B. Warrington saw fit, but was to go to Mr. W. R. Looney three thousand dollars ($3,000) escrow amount, or he was to use his own judgment as long as it was to take care of Mr. Looney's escrow interests, with a receipt to the escrow department."

It appears at once that the defendant did not attempt to account for any money in accordance with the terms of his trust. Hutter testified that Looney had an oil lease on the property in question, but was not entitled to any money under the escrow; that Looney and others gave him a quitclaim deed to their interests on October 30, 1922, but that he subsequently discovered that they had assigned all their interests therein to Warrington, so that the quitclaim was worthless. Notwithstanding that fact, it appears that the defendant obtained the funds from Mrs. Baker upon representations that he would clear the title, and that she would lose the land if she "did not have the money to make a big payment." The defendant testified that Looney was indebted to him in a considerable amount, but admitted on cross-examination that the Baker moneys were at times paid to Looney, and at other times deposited to the defendant's personal account in a bank as a credit against the Looney debt to himself.

[2] Objection was repeatedly interposed by the defendant to the Baker checks being offered in evidence, upon the ground that they were not "lawful money of the United States," which he was charged with having obtained from her. Such objections were overruled, and the action of the trial court is here assigned as prejudicial error, but there is no merit in this contention. The checks were drawn upon Mrs. Baker's account in the bank which held the escrow, and were cashed by Warrington. He does not argue that he expended approximately $4,100 in lawful money of the United States belonging to Mrs. Baker, "as Mr. L. B. Warrington saw fit," nor that he availed himself of the most effective, though meretricious, methods of obtaining it, but the jury were warranted upon the evidence before them in concluding that such was the fact.

Several other real estate transactions of Mrs. Baker were injected into the defense, and she was interrogated about them on cross-examination, obviously for the purpose of showing that some of her money was expended in connection therewith. However, the terms of his trust did not permit of such expenditures and Mrs. Baker testified that she had never had any other dealings with the defendant. A $500 check was also offered in evidence by the defendant, which amount he contended he had paid to Mrs. Baker. But she denied that she received any money from him, and swore that she deposited money in the bank for Warrington and gave him a check, that she later drew the money and delivered it to him in person, and that he then handed to her the check in question.

[3] The greater portion of appellant's alleged grievances as argued at the time of the trial, and advanced here as grounds for reversal, consist of criticisms of witnesses for the people and of sharp conflicts between their evidence and that of the defense. An appellate tribunal, however, is not authorized to discredit testimony which, by their verdict, a jury has indicated that they believed to be true. As recently said by this court, in passing upon the sufficiency of the evidence we must consider in its strongest light all evidence tending to support the verdict, and disregard such conflicting evidence as is inconsistent with the jury's decision. People v. Ferlin (Cal. App.) 250 P. 690.

[4] It having appeared during the trial that Mrs. Baker had filed a civil suit for the moneys herein mentioned, defendant's counsel sought to examine her regarding such civil proceedings, to which the district attorney objected upon the ground, among others, that no proper foundation had been laid. The objections were sustained. Thereupon counsel for the defendant offered the judgment roll, and read the verification to the complaint contained in it, but objections were sustained against his attempts to secure admittance of this evidence in the manner indicated, the court basing its rulings upon the ground that no proper foundation had been laid. Defendant's counsel indicated the purpose of these questions to be to show contradictory statements of the witness. Obviously the method of impeachment prescribed by section 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where the alleged impeaching statement is contained in a writing, was not followed. The witness should have been shown the writing before any question was put concerning it. The objections were therefore properly sustained.

[5] It is argued that the defendant was prejudiced by the admission of the original escrow instructions in evidence, but he later admits that he was "not seriously prejudiced" thereby, although he was not a party to them and did not know their contents. They were offered by the district attorney, and at first admitted, for the purpose of showing that Looney was not mentioned in, nor a party to, the escrow. During the argument the district attorney was permitted to read and discuss some of the terms of the escrow agreement. This was objected to at the time, and is assigned as error. It appears that the defendant caused the parties to execute such agreement, and obtained money from Mrs. Baker to apply thereon, but later insisted that he was authorized to and did apply the money as he saw fit. The court had previously ruled that either party might read from the documents in evidence, and it seems eminently desirable that the jury should understand the whole transaction. It was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove the offense charged, and, if Mrs. Baker was induced to enter into a contract with Hutter, with which Looney had no connection, and the defendant was paying to Looney money which it was intended that he should apply on the Hutter sale to Mrs. Baker, the escrow agreement and instructions, together with the report of the bank, constituted material evidence tending to show what was required and that no such amounts were received by the latter. The terms of the escrow agreement were not in themselves in any way prejudicial to the defendant, and being material, it was not error for the district attorney to discuss and explain them in his argument to the jury.

[6] Mrs. Baker testified that the $800 check was given to Warrington in the same transaction and that she had no other dealings with him. Upon her cross-examination she was asked if as a matter of fact she did not give him said check to be applied on a Texas oil deal. She replied that she did not hear of the Texas land until after the defendant had received the $800. She was then asked what she heard about the Texas deal, to which an objection that it was not proper cross-examination was sustained. There was no error in the ruling last mentioned.

[7] During the direct examination of the defendant a juror asked him why Looney should receive the Baker money, to which he replied that Looney had expended $7,500 on the property. The witness was then interrupted by an objection of the district attorney that it was immaterial, but that he would later show the connection, and such objection was sustained. It appears that the prosecuting witness was subsequently called and testified that Looney had never been mentioned to her in connection with the transaction. It is argued here that to sustain the objection amounted to a ruling that, inasmuch as the evidence sought by the juror was immaterial, the defendant's acts were not justified, and that the case was decided by the court. We think the defendant was entitled to testify fully to his theory of the transaction, and to give his reasons for evading or varying the alleged trust agreement between himself and Mrs. Baker. However, both prior to and succeeding the ruling in controversy the defendant and his witnesses testified extensively, and documentary evidence was introduced, as to the general power of attorney, as to other realty transactions of Mrs. Baker, and the disposition of the moneys, and the defendant had ample opportunity to, and apparently did, state his reasons for each of his acts, which the evidence of the prosecution flatly and unqualifiedly denied. It was, therefore, for the jury to believe either contention which, from all the evidence before them, seemed to have been established. Hence, we do not deem the error to have been of appreciable consequence or sufficient to justify a reversal, even if we concede for the sake of argument that there was error.

[8] As heretofore stated, the indictment contained ten counts. The defendant at various stages of the trial sought to compel the district attorney to elect upon which counts the people would rely, but the court below denied each motion, and the rulings in that regard are assigned as prejudicial error. Section 954 of the Penal Code expressly provides that two or more different offenses connected together in their commission, or different statements of the same offense, may be charged under separate counts, and that the prosecution is not required to elect between them.

[9, 10] Other points argued are obviously so untenable that we deem it wholly unnecessary to discuss them. The jury were fully instructed upon the credibility of witnesses, and as to the constituents of embezzlement and grand larceny. They were charged that "when, by means of fraud or artifice, or any other kind of contrivance, the possession of property is fraudulently obtained from another, and the party obtaining this possession acquires it by means of this fraud or artifice, with the felonious intention of stealing it when he gets possession of it, then the crime is larceny, provided that the owner" retains title thereto. Under this proper statement of the law the facts as delineated by the people's witnesses justified the verdict rendered by the jury. People v. Raschke, 73 Cal. 378, 15 P. 13; People v. Arnold, 20 Cal. App. 35, 127 P. 1060; People v. Knox, 32 Cal. App. 158, 162 P. 407; People v. Dye, 29 Cal. App. 169, 154 P. 875.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

80 Cal. App. 74

BRUN v. EVANS et al. (Civ. 5534.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 29, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑870(3)—Order denying change of venue, being appealable, cannot be reviewed on appeal from judgment (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 939, 956, 963).

An order denying change of venue being appealable, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 939, 963, is not reviewable on appeal from judgment under section 956.

2. Appeal and error 🔑959(3)—Pleading 🔑236(4)—Motion for leave to file amended answer after trial is addressed to discretion of court, and order not disturbed save for abuse.

Motions for leave to file amended answer after trial of cause are addressed to discretion of court, whose orders will not be disturbed except for plain abuse.

3. Pleading 🔑236(4)—Denial of leave to amend answer after trial of action to recover deposit made to secure performance of lease held not abuse of discretion.

In action to recover deposit made to secure performance of covenants of lease, refusal to permit amendment of answer after trial of cause held not abuse of discretion.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—In action to recover money deposited to secure performance of lease, failure to find that money was to be forfeited if any of conditions were broken held not prejudicial.

In action to recover money deposited as security for performance of covenants of lease, failure of court to find that money was to be forfeited if any of terms and conditions of lease were broken held not prejudicial, where evidence showed that breaches complained of were consented to by defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by B. J. Brun against J. A. Evans and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. E. Davis, L. E. Dadmun, and Davis & Dadmun, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Albert I. Loeb, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to recover the sum of $2,000 paid to the defendants as security for the performance of the covenants and conditions of a certain lease of real and personal property between the parties. Plaintiff had judgment for $1,555.56, and the defendants have appealed on a typewritten record.

The lease contained the condition that the sum of $2,000 was to be paid "as security for the performance of all the covenants and conditions herein contained * * * to be returned by said lessors to said lessee when the term of this lease shall have expired, but is to be forfeited should any of the terms or conditions of this lease be broken by the said lessee." The trial court found that the lease was terminated by mutual agreement, and that at that time the plaintiff owed the defendants the sum of $444.44. This sum was deducted from the amount sued for, and this accounts for the judgment as rendered. The points advanced by appellants will be treated in order.

[1] The order denying appellants' motion for a change of venue was based upon conflicting affidavits. Appellants insist that the motion should have been granted. The order is one from which an appeal may be taken (section 963, Code Civ. Proc.), provided notice thereof is given within 60 days from entry of the order (section 939, Code Civ. Proc.). This was not done, and the merits of the order cannot be considered on this appeal from the judgment (section 956, Code Civ. Proc.; Bohn v. Bohn, 164 Cal. 532, 539, 129 P. 981).

[2,3] About 90 days after the cause was fully tried and submitted to the trial court for decision the appellants asked leave to file an amended answer. The proposed amendment was based upon some parol testimony offered by the appellants in contradiction of the express writings made at the time of the termination of the lease. The trial court refused the application for leave to amend, and this is assigned as error. Motions of this nature are primarily within the discretion of the trial court, and its orders will not be disturbed unless such discretion is plainly abused. 21 R. C. L. 572, 594. We are satisfied that in this instance this discretion was properly exercised.

[4] The appellants complain that the trial court failed to find in accordance with the strict terms of the lease that the money was to be forfeited if any of the terms and conditions of the lease were broken. They point out that oral testimony was taken to show that certain conditions of the lease relating to the cutting of trees and the care of the linen and other household effects were not complied with. This evidence was in direct conflict with their own written stipulations—express consent to the cutting of the trees having been given in writing and an express "O.K." having been given to the inventory on the return of all the personal property. Thus, though the finding may be technically incorrect, it is apparent that no prejudice resulted from it, as appellants have not shown how a finding favorable to them could have been made.

Other points do not require consideration. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

79 Cal. App. 770

WESTERN ELECTRIC CO., Inc., v. COOLEY et al. (Civ. 2944.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 24, 1926.)

1. Electricity 🔑8—"Property" subject to mechanic's lien includes all material used in construction of electric power line (Const. art. 20, § 15).

Within Const. art. 20, § 15, providing that mechanics and materialmen shall have a lien on the property, electric light poles, wires, and whatever material is used in construction of power line constitutes "property."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Property.]

2. Mechanics' liens 🔑24—Within statute giving materialmen lien on building or "other structure," quoted term includes all objects built on the soil, which is property, within Constitution, having permanency and put in place to accomplish some definite purpose (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183; Const. art. 20, § 15).

Within Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, giving materialmen lien on building or "other structure," quoted phrase is not limited to objects similar in kind, but includes all objects built on the soil, and, in some instances, beneath the surface which is property, within Const. art. 20, § 15, having permanency and put in place to accomplish some definite purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Other.]

3. Electricity 🔑8—Electric power line is "structure," within statute giving lien on building or other structure (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Within Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, giving materialmen a lien on the building or other structure, an electric power line is a "structure," it being attached to the soil to enhance its value and owner's comfort, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Structure.]

4. Deeds ⚷117—Electric power line, is "improvement" and passes as appurtenant to land.

An electric power line, consisting of poles and wires, would pass as appurtenant to the land by deed to the soil and is included within the term "improvement."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Improvement (of Land).]

5. Electricity ⚷8—Materialmen may have lien on electric power line, though built on highway (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

That electric power line was built on public highway, owned and controlled by state, used for highway and not subject to lien, could not prevent materialmen's lien attaching to power line, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, since the lien attaches primarily to the superstructure and to the land only, as embraced in common ownership with it, in view of section 1192.

6. Electricity ⚷8—In foreclosing lien on electric power line, one interested in private line to be connected need not be joined.

That individual was not made party to action to foreclose materialmen's lien on electric power line was immaterial, where he was interested only in a private line to be connected with it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action to foreclose materialman's lien on an electrical power line, brought by the Western Electric Company, Inc., against Ida E. Cooley and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Willard P. Smith, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. E. Ebert, of Marysville, and A. C. McLaughlin, of Yuba City, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Action to foreclose lien upon an electric power transmission line on account of materials furnished for and used in the construction thereof. Defendants had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

The pleadings set forth the necessary allegations concerning the corporate existence of the plaintiff, the business in which it was engaged, and the furnishing of materials used in the construction of an electric power line, the nonpayment therefor, the filing and recording of the lien and the time showing that this action was begun within the period limited by the statutes.

The facts, as found by the court, necessary to be set forth herein are substantially as follows:

That Clayton avenue is a public road and highway extending north and south through a certain tract called the Los Plumas tract in section 24, township 13 north, range 3 east, M. D. B. and M., Sutter county; that defendants herein own small tracts of land adjoining said Clayton avenue; that Clayton avenue is intersected by a certain other public road called Central avenue, along which the Pacific Gas & Electric Company maintains an electric power line; that the defendants, desiring power for irrigation and other purposes, entered into a contract with Lester W. Lack and Eldon J. Robinson, doing business under the firm name and style of Lack & Robinson, to erect a power transmission line along Clayton avenue in front of the properties belonging to said defendant, this power line to be connected by private lines to pumping plants situated on tracts of land owned by the different defendants; the line along Clayton avenue was about a half mile in length and was intended to be connected with the power line maintained by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. The record shows the power line was erected by the said Lack & Robinson; that supplies, including poles, insulators, wires, and the various kinds of material necessary to be used in the construction of a power line, were furnished by the plaintiff to the said Lack & Robinson and used in the construction of the said half mile of power line on said Clayton avenue; that the amount due upon the contract for materials furnished by the plaintiff and so used in the construction of said power line was the sum of $435.99. After finding these facts and others not necessary to be set forth herein, the court made the following findings, Nos. 26 and 27, to wit:

> "(26) That said power transmission line so built by said Lack & Robinson, on Clayton avenue, as aforesaid, was built as specified in contracts 2 and 3, as set forth in finding 10 hereof, and is not a 'structure,' as defined in section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California.
>
> "(27) That the said power transmission line is built on a public highway which is owned and controlled by the state of California, and during all the times mentioned in the complaint and is now used for highway purposes and is not subject to any lien of this plaintiff for any purpose whatever."

Under findings Nos. 26 and 27 there are but two questions necessary to be considered in the determination of this appeal. No other questions involving the merits of the action need be considered, as no error or irregularity in any other particular is urged upon our attention going to the merits of the action.

[1] Did the court err in holding that an electric power line, consisting of poles, wires, and other materials necessarily entering into the construction of the same, is not a structure, within the meaning of the language used by the Legislature in section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure? In answering this question, it may be profitable to first consider the language of section 15 of article 20 of the state Constitution, which reads:

> "Mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished material, for the value of such labor done and material furnished; and the Legislature shall provide, by law, for the speedy and efficient enforcement of such liens."

The language of this section is direct and positive that materialmen shall have a lien upon the property for which they have furnished material. We think it unnecessary to cite authority to support the statement that electric light poles, wires, and whatever material enters into and is used in the construction of a power line constitutes property. Again, the section of the Constitution is broad and comprehensive in its terms and intendments, having for its purpose the giving to both laborers and materialmen more security for the labor performed and the materials furnished, without specifying the kind, character of the thing or object called property upon which the labor is performed or in the construction of which the materials furnished are used. So long as it comes within the definition of property, the constitutional provision is sufficiently liberal to extend the protection of a lien. In pursuance of this constitutional provision, the Legislature, in providing the machinery for the enforcement of such liens, has used both particular and general terms of definition. So far as material here, section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, reads:

> "Materialmen, * * * furnishing materials to be used or consumed in or furnishing appliances, teams and power contributing to the construction, alteration, addition to or repair, either in whole or in part, of any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, aqueduct, well, tunnel, fence, machinery, railroad, wagon road or other structure, shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials," etc.

[2] We think the Legislature, in the use of the term "other structure," must have had in mind the comprehensive language of the Constitution where use is made of the word "property," and that a liberal and fair interpretation would lead to the conclusion that the Legislature so intended, and not that the term "other structure" is limited in its meaning to an object, which is in kind similar either to a house, a wharf, a bridge, or a wagon road, but includes all objects built upon the soil, and, in some instances, extending beneath the surface of the soil, which partake of the nature of permanency, that is, a structure is an object which is built upon the soil and is not necessarily a house, or similar to a house, a bridge, or similar to a bridge, but is property, under the constitutional definition, having the nature of permanency and put in place to accomplish some definite purpose.

In 40 Cal. Jur. p. 65, § 32, we find the following:

> "The meaning of the word 'structure.' as used in a statute authorizing a lien for labor performed or materials furnished in connection with the creation, improvement, or repair of a structure, is to be ascertained by referring to the meaning of the words associated with it, and, where all the associated terms designate classes of property attached or appurtenant to, or a part of, the land, the word 'structure' is to be likewise restricted, notwithstanding the fact that it is susceptible of other definitions."

[3] There can be little doubt that a power line constitutes property appurtenant to the land, that it is a creation or an improvement entering into the value of the land just as permanently and with the same valuable characteristics as other objects mentioned. All of the terms used in the statute, which we have quoted, relate to material improvements attached to or having to do with soil, which would lead to the conclusion that a power line which, necessarily, in the erection of its poles must be attached to the soil, is within the definition of a structure erected thereon just as much as a house or a barn. The use is different, to be sure, but the ultimate purposes are the same—the enhancement of the value of the land and the enabling of the owner thereof to subsist thereon in comfort.

In Barnes v. Montana Lumber & Hardware Co., 67 Mont. 481, 216 P. 335, the Supreme Court of Montana, in seeking to define the word "structure," uses the following language:

> "When we have a case such as the one at bar, where all other associated terms share the common element of being attached to, appurtenant to, or of the land, we believe the rule is particularly applicable. We are therefore of the opinion that, as used in section 8339, supra, the word 'structure' must be held to partake of the element which is common to the associated terms, notwithstanding other possible definitions thereof. This is especially true since the word 'structure' is ordinarily understood as meaning a building. * * * We do not wish to be understood as saying that the words 'structure' and 'building,' as used in the statute, mean the same thing. We are however, of the opinion that a 'structure,' to be lienable, must, at the same time the labor is performed upon it or the materials are used in connection with its creation, improvement, or repair, be attached to land. In other words, without partaking of that nature of fixtures which in certain instances makes them nonremovable portions of the real estate, the 'structure' must be affixed to the land or be of or appurtenant to it before a valid lien can be secured thereon."

[4] There can be no question that a power line, consisting of poles set in the ground and wires strung thereon, would pass as appurtenant to one's land upon the owner executing a conveyance of the soil upon which the poles of the power line stood or were imbedded. That such a power line comes within the term "improvement," we think beyond controversy, just as much as a water ditch or an irrigation canal.

In Ogden v. Byington, 244 P. 332, the Supreme Court of this state, speaking through Justice Richards, takes up and considers the element of permanency in relation to improvements made upon land and shows when and in what instances irrigation ditches come within the lien law, depending upon the permanent character of such improvement.

In Mendoza v. Central Forest Co., 37 Cal. App. 289, 174 P. 359, this court, in a case where a rehearing was denied by the Supreme Court, held as follows (quoting from the syllabus):

> "Under section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for mechanics' liens on specified improvements 'or other structure.' farm development consisting of ditches, drains, embankments, and roads, so correlated as to form one harmonious entity designed to convey water to and distribute it over the land, and constituting a permanent improvement thereto, increasing its value, is a 'structure.'"

In the opinion in that case, we find the following definition quoted from volume 27, Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 191, as follows:

> "In the broadest sense, a structure is any production or piece of work artificially built up or composed of parts joined together in some definite manner."

A power line is composed of definite parts, it is artificially built up, the parts are joined together in a definite manner, and it constitutes a construction having permanency and fixedness of place and a usefulness of purpose in connection with the soil. As to what constitutes a structure, under section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, is also considered at length in the case written by Justice Richards in the case of Western Well Works, Inc., v. California Farms Co., 60 Cal. App. 749, 214 P. 491. It was there held that a well sunk by the appellant constituted a structure, within the meaning of that word as used in section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure. Practically all the California cases on this subject are there cited.

We may also refer to the case of Williams v. Mountaineer G. M. Co., 102 Cal. 134, 34 P. 702, 36 P. 388, and Silvester v. Coe Quartz Mine Co., 80 Cal. 510, 22 P. 217, being instances where the word "structure" has been held to apply to shafts and tunnels. In the case of Roebling Sons Co. v. Bear Valley Irrigation Co., 99 Cal. 488, 34 P. 80, two questions were presented to the Supreme Court: Whether a telephone line was a structure within the meaning of the lien law of this state, and whether the evidence showed that the materials furnished entered into the construction of the same. Without passing upon the question as to whether the telephone line constituted a structure, the court remanded the cause for a new trial on the ground that the testimony did not show that the materials furnished were used in the construction of the same, inferentially inducing the conclusion that the court was of the opinion that a telephone line was a structure. Otherwise, the cause would not have been reversed and sent back for trial upon the single question of whether the materials furnished entered into the construction of the same.

The only case where the question we are now considering came directly in point, to which our attention has been called, is that of Forbes v. Willamette Falls Electric Co., 19 Or. 61, 23 P. 670, 20 Am. St. Rep. 793. Under a statute identical with ours in regard to the words "other structure," the Supreme Court of Oregon, in a case having to do with the determining whether a lien could exist against an electric power line, used the following language:

> "The principal question litigated on this appeal is whether or not this statute gives a lien for labor against the property described in the complaint; in other words, do these poles planted in the ground, connected together with wires and insulators, constitute a structure, within the true intent and meaning of this statute? In answering this question, but little aid can be had from the decisions of other states, for the reason that no general principle of law is involved, and such decisions have generally turned upon the special or peculiar phraseology of the particular statute. Without attempting to indulge in any refined distinctions or definitions, and having in view the object and purpose of the enactment in question, I think it may properly be held that the poles, wires, insulators, etc., mentioned in the complaint, constitute a structure, within the meaning of the statute, and that the same is subject to a lien for labor performed thereon. In reaching this conclusion, we do not find it necessary to go as far as the court did in Helm v. Chapman, 66 Cal. 291, 5 P. 352, where it was held that a mine or pit sunk within a mining claim was a structure, within the meaning of the statute giving a lien on a building, improvement, or structure."

That decisions from other states are of little value in considering our statute arises from the fact that, in almost every instance which we have examined, there is a difference in the wording employed by the Legislature, but in the Oregon case the language is identical with our own, and we think the holding of the court in that case conforms with the intent of section 15 of article 20 of our Constitution and the enactments of the Legislature, as expressed in section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, and that an electric power line, consisting of poles and wires strung thereon, insulators, and such materials as enter into the work, constitutes a structure upon which materialmen may be entitled to a lien, other provisions of the law necessary to the enforcement thereof being complied with.

The conclusion from the premises which we have laid down necessarily follows that finding No. 26, which is partly a finding of facts and also a conclusion of law, is, in so far as it is a finding of facts by reference to other findings showing the erection of the power line, as we have herein stated, is correct, but, that, in so far as it is a finding of fact or a conclusion of law that the power line so erected is not a structure, as defined by the mechanics' lien law of this state, it is contrary to the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[5] Finding No. 27, as we have said, is to the effect that a power transmission line was built upon a public highway owned and controlled by the state of California, used for highway purposes, and is not subject to any lien. Upon this finding, as well as upon finding No. 26, the trial court based its judgment.

To what extent the tracts of land owned by the defendants along Clayton avenue are coincident with the half mile stretch of the power line does not appear in the findings. Hence we pass by the usual presumption that the owner of the land along a highway has title to the center thereof and base our opinion as to this branch of the case upon the following excerpt, taken from section 15, vol. 17, p. 28, of California Jurisprudence:

> "Lien claimants are given a lien 'upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials,' as well as upon the land upon which any building, improvement, well, or structure is constructed, or so much as may be required for the convenient use and occupation thereof, to be determined by the court on rendering judgment, if at the commencement of the work or the furnishing of materials the land belonged to the person causing the improvement to be undertaken; if he owned less than a fee, only his interest is subject to the lien, except as the owner of the fee may have failed to give notice of nonliability, as provided in section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under these statutory provisions, the lien on the building, or other structure, is the primary thing, and the lien in the land is merely an incident to it. No lien can be acquired on the land, if none is acquired on the building, but a lien may exist on the building without attaching to the land. Hence it is not essential to the existence of a mechanic's lien on a building that the person causing its erection should have owned or had any interest in the real property on which it is located. This distinction between land and superstructure, the lien attaching primarily to the latter, and to the former only as it was embraced in a common ownership with the building, has existed in California from the very earliest times."

A number of cases are there cited supporting the rule stated in California Jurisprudence, only two of which need be cited: Linck v. Meikeljohn, 2 Cal. App. 506, 84 P. 309, and McGreary v. Osborne, 9 Cal. 119. This disposes of the contention that the property was so situated as not to be subject to a materialmen's lien.

[6] The objection that one Frank Souza was not made a party defendant, as urged by the respondent, is answered by finding No. 23 of the court, to the effect that Souza was not interested in the half mile power line referred to, but only in a short private line to be connected therewith.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

---

80 Cal. App. 151

PEOPLE v. BATEMAN. (Cr. 1339.) *

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 7, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑531(3)—Shorthand reporter's testimony and preliminary questions and answers held to warrant admission of confession as free and voluntary.

Shorthand reporter's testimony that no hope of reward or immunity from punishment was held out to induce defendant to make statement, nor any force, threat, duress, or intimidation used to compel him to do so, and preliminary questions and answers in confession itself held sufficient to warrant its admission.

2. Criminal law 🔑736(2), 741(3)—Whether confession was voluntary and true held for jury on subsequent evidence.

Whether confession, for admission of which sufficient foundation was laid, was freely and voluntarily made and true held for jury on evidence, offered after prosecution rested, as to promises to defendant before he was taken to district attorney's office where confession was made.

3. Criminal law 🔑736(2)—Whether confession was free and voluntary is, first for court, but ultimately for jury.

Court must first pass on question whether confession sought to be introduced was freely and voluntarily made, but jury must ultimately determine whether it was so made, and hence entitled to consideration.

4. Criminal law 🔑1158(4)—Decision supported by substantial evidence will be upheld, where evidence as to admissibility of confession is conflicting.

Where evidence on question of admissibility of confession is conflicting, reviewing court will uphold decision, if supported by substantial evidence.

5. Criminal law 🔑673(4)—Admission of codefendant's confession held not error, in view of instruction limiting purpose.

Admission of codefendant's confession, which appealing defendant argued was not binding on him, held not error, in view of instruction that it was admitted only as against codefendant and must be disregarded so far as appealing defendant was concerned.

6. Criminal law 🔑369(2)—Admission of codefendant's confession of other robberies held not error, where different transactions were inextricably interwoven.

In robbery trial, admission of codefendant's confession referring to other robberies held not error, where different transactions were so interwoven that it was impossible to separate portion dealing with robbery charged.

7. Criminal law 🔑393(1)—Prosecution held entitled to cross-examine defendant as to truth of statements in confession, contrary to those on direct examination (Pen. Code, § 1323).

Where defendant's confession was admitted, and he testified on direct examination that he answered questions therein, as detailed by shorthand reporter, prosecution had right, under Pen. Code, § 1323, to cross-examine him as to whether such statements were true, and show by his admissions that they were contrary to statements on direct examination.

---

*Rehearing denied January 4, 1927. Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 3, 1927; Curtis and Preston, JJ., dissenting.

8. Criminal law 🔑520(1)—Confession induced by promises of immunity or leniency will be rejected.

If confession is induced by any promise of immunity or leniency, it will be rejected as involuntary.

9. Robbery 🔑24(1)—Conviction of robbery held sustained by evidence aside from confession.

Evidence, aside from defendant's confession, held sufficient to sustain conviction of robbery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Ronald M. Bateman and Claude Brooks were convicted of robbery, and defendant Bateman appeals. Affirmed.

Cormac, Bolles & Surr, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, of San Francisco, for the People.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. The defendant, Ronald M. Bateman, and one Claude Brooks were jointly charged with the crime of robbery and convicted. The defendant Brooks did not appeal. The trial court having denied defendant Bateman's motion for a new trial, he has taken an appeal to this court from such order denying him a new trial and from the judgment of conviction, and the grounds of such appeal are as follows:

(1) It is claimed for defendant that the trial court erred in admitting over his objection a confession which was not freely and voluntarily made; (2) in denying his motion to strike out such confession; and (3) that there is no evidence outside of the purported confession which indicates any connection on defendant's part with the crime charged.

On the evening of January 2, 1926, a Mutual Creamery store, located at 2716 East Fourteenth street in the city of Oakland, was robbed. The defendant, Brooks, dressed in a brown overcoat and a gray fedora hat, entered the store in question, threatened the manager, Mary Hey, with a 38-caliber revolver, and took approximately $14 from the cash register. The manager followed defendant Brooks to the door and saw two people in a Ford coupé, which had been standing about 10 or 15 feet from the store, drive away. Subsequently, on the 18th day of January, a police officer of the city of Oakland noticed a Ford coupé parked on an Oakland street without a license plate on the rear of the car. A search of the coupé revealed a box of 32-caliber cartridges and a box of 38-caliber cartridges, together with certain other articles, including a holster, an overcoat, five hats and two caps. Within a short space of time the two defendants came up to the machine and were questioned by the officer. Upon being asked to produce credentials, the dedefendant Brooks attempted to draw a 32-caliber revolver. The revolver was knocked from his hand, and handcuffs were placed upon both defendants. The proof further established that defendant Brooks had traded in the 38-caliber revolver used in the robbery for the 32-caliber revolver which was found on him at the time of the arrest of the defendants. The defendant Bateman stated that he was the owner of the Ford coupé and the hats found therein. One of these hats, a gray fedora, bore the initials R. M. B. and was identified as the hat that defendant Brooks wore at the time the Mutual Creamery store was robbed. A clerk in another Mutual Creamery store in Oakland testified that she saw the defendants together in her store on the 21st of December, 1925; that there was a Ford coupé parked in the vicinity of the store, and that she saw defendants get into it and drive away; that the Ford coupé had no license plate upon the rear. In addition to this direct and circumstantial evidence, there was introduced, in evidence, a complete confession of the robbery in question, made by each of the defendants.

[1] Upon the question of whether or not the confession of the defendant Bateman was voluntary, James L. Meegan testified that he was present at a conversation held with the defendants in the office of the prosecuting attorney in the city of Oakland on January 19, 1926, and that he took notes of that conversation in shorthand; that no hope of reward or immunity from punishment was held out to induce the defendant to make a statement; and that no force or violence, threat, duress, or intimidation was used to compel the defendant to make a statement. In fact, the confession itself shows that the defendant, in making it, expected to receive no favors of any character, as will be seen from the preliminary questions asked and the answers given by the defendant in his confession preceding his acknowledgment of guilt:

"Q. You know Inspectors Sanderson and Goodwin, Captain McSorley, your brother, you understand who I am (my name is Fred L. Donahue, Deputy District Attorney), and the one taking the shorthand notes is Mr. Meegan. Now, Mr. Bateman, first, we have before us a report, police report dated January 2, 1926, of what purports to be a report of a holdup at a Mutual Creamery store, 2716 East Fourteenth street in the city of Oakland, at about 7 p. m. in the evening. We have this report before us. We have read it, and you are now here in the custody of the officers, and you know what the inquiry is going to be, do you not? A. Yes.

"Q. Are you willing to make a statement in this matter at the present time? A. Yes.

"Q. And when you make your statement, are you going to make it freely and voluntarily? A. Yes.

"Q. Tell us the truth? A. Yes.

"Q. And no reward or immunity from punishment has been granted you? A. No, sir.

"Q. And in making this statement, if you implicate any one else than yourself, you are going to tell the absolute truth, nothing but the truth, is that right? And the whole truth, is that right? A. That is right.

"Q. Now, you have listened to considerable talk about this matter, and, as I have stated, you know exactly in your own mind what you are going to tell us, and inasmuch as you have no counsel to advise you, we want to inform you now and instruct you to give this matter full consideration, that it is a serious matter, and once again I want to say to you whatever you say, tell us the truth. You understand, Mr. Bateman, that when you give this statement, that this statement will be used against you in the future at any trial or preliminary examination. You understand that? A. I understand that; yes, sir.

"Q. Now, you can make your statement, and I might state this, that in making your statement, nobody has threatened you with any violence, nor intimidated you in any way or otherwise? A. No, sir.

"Q. Make your statement in your own way."

[2] When the question of the admissibility of the confession was before the court and the witness Meegan, who had taken down the confession in shorthand, had testified that the statement was made freely and voluntarily and that no reward or immunity from punishment had been granted to the defendant, that he understood that the statement would be used against him in the future at any trial and that no one had threatened him in any way, the court, in overruling the objection, stated to defendant's counsel:

> "Now, if you claim the statement is involuntary, of course, I will give you an opportunity of showing that."

No offer was made or permission asked to call any witnesses, and the confession was read in evidence. Subsequently, however, after the prosecution had rested, the defendant called several witnesses who testified as to promises made to the defendant before he was taken to the district attorney's office, where he made the confession received in evidence. Appellant claims that, upon this evidence being given, the trial court should have stricken the confession from the record and taken it from the consideration of the jury. If this were the law, it would lie within the power of the defendant to clear from the case all confessions by his own evidence or such evidence as he might produce, and this regardless of the truth of such testimony.

[3] Where it is sought to introduce a confession of a defendant in evidence, the court is called upon primarily to pass upon the question of fact as to whether the confession was freely and voluntarily made, and it is for the jury to determine ultimately whether it was so made and therefore entitled to consideration. People v. Oliveria, 127 Cal. 376, 381, 59 P. 772; People v. Thomson, 145 Cal. 717, 725, 79 P. 435.

The foundation laid was sufficient to admit the confession, and, having been admitted, the conflict in the evidence which developed later presented a question of credibility, and it was for the jury to determine whether the confession was freely and voluntarily made, and whether it was or was not true. People v. Burns, 27 Cal. App. 227, 235, 149 P. 605. On this issue the court instructed the jury as follows:

> "The defendant Bateman has introduced testimony to establish the fact that such alleged statement or confession was not voluntary and was not therefore admissible as testimony in this case. You are instructed that the action on the part of the court in admitting such alleged statement or confession into evidence does not bind you to accept the court's conclusion. Whether such alleged confession or statement, if made, was voluntary or not is for you to decide. If you conclude that it was not made voluntarily, or was made under threats, or violence, or because of promises or improper inducements, then you have the right to and it is your duty to disregard the alleged statement or confession altogether."

[4] The deputy district attorney emphatically stated to defendant Bateman that his confession would be used at his trial or preliminary examination, and defendant replied that he understood that, and no promise of any kind had been made to him. As to whether he told the truth, when he made his confession, that no inducement had been held out to him, or whether the testimony of the witnesses who testified to promises having been made prior to defendant's going to the office of the district attorney is correct, is a question of fact, and, on the question of the admissibility of a confession where the evidence is conflicting, it is subject to the universal rule applicable to cases on appeal that the reviewing court will uphold the decision, if there is substantial evidence to support it. People v. Fowler, 178 Cal. 657, 662, 174 P. 892.

[5] The defendant Brooks also made a confession in the presence of the defendant Bateman which was, likewise, taken down in shorthand by the witness Meegan. No objection is urged on appeal that the statement of defendant Brooks was not admissible, although it is argued that the statement is in no way binding upon the defendant Bateman. On this question the court instructed the jury specifically as follows:

> "You are instructed that the alleged confession claimed to have been made by the defendant Claude Brooks is admitted only as against the defendant Claude Brooks, and you are admonished that, as the court instructed you at the time of the admission of the said alleged confession, you are to absolutely disregard it so far as the defendant Ronald M. Bateman is concerned."

[6] Reference is also made in the confession of defendant Brooks to other robberies, but it was conceded by counsel for appellant at the trial that the different transactions related in the confession are so interwoven that it is impossible to separate the portion which deals with the particular robbery under investigation.

[7] Defendant Bateman took the stand in his own behalf and testified that he was at home at the time of the robbery. He further testified that he had given the answers to the questions in his confession, as detailed by Mr. Meegan in his testimony. On cross-examination, the following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. By the way, these statements that you have made and which were taken down in shorthand by Mr. Meegan were true, were they not? A. As far as I can recollect; yes, certainly.

"Q. Everything you told then was the truth, wasn't it? A. As well as I can remember at that time they were the truth; yes."

No objection was made to this evidence at the time of its reception into the record, but it is now claimed that, by this cross-examination, defendant was compelled to be a witness against himself. There can be no question but that the prosecution had the right to fully cross-examine the defendant as to all matters concerning which he was examined in chief (Pen. Code, § 1323), and in so doing show by his admissions that he had made statements contrary to those made upon his direct examination. If such admissions constitute a confession of guilt of the offense for which the defendant is on trial, such confession could not be used in the absence of proof of its having been voluntarily made (People v. Clifton, 186 Cal. 149, 198 P. 1065). In the instant case, the confession having been received in evidence and defendant having testified concerning the same subject-matter on his direct examination, its use in the manner complained of was permissible.

[8] Counsel for appellant cites numerous California cases to the effect that our law has cast about the guiltiest prisoner the greatest safeguards to protect him from being convicted by his own extrajudicial utterances; that, if it appears that a confession is induced by any promise of immunity or leniency, the court will reject such alleged confession as not voluntary and will refuse to listen to statements thus elicited. We fully agree with counsel for appellant that the principle enunciated is the law of this state and is also the established rule in all other jurisdictions, but the question he presents was passed upon by the trial court when the confession was offered, and as the only preliminary proof before the court at the time was that the confession was freely and voluntarily made and without any hope of reward or inducement of any character, and that no one had threatened or intimidated the prisoner in any way, and that being so, the confession was properly admitted in evidence, the dispute as to its voluntary character and as to its verity became a question for the jury.

It follows that the trial court did not err in admitting the confession in evidence, and, it being properly admitted, it was not error to refuse to strike it out.

[9] As to the remaining point urged, that aside from the confession there is no evidence which indicates any connection on defendant's part with the crime charged it is sufficient to say that, aside from the confession of the defendant, the record, as a whole, strongly indicates the defendant's guilt.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

80 Cal. App. 61

ARENA v. BANK OF ITALY et al. *

(Civ. 3196.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 29, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1096(3)—Where appellants were respondents on former appeal, they will be permitted to question issue of insufficiency of evidence to support findings.

Where appellants were respondents on former appeal, and, as such, unable to attack findings of fact for insufficiency of evidence, they will be permitted to bring such issue before court for review.

2. Attachment 🔑151—One wrongfully securing release of attached property cannot, by virtue of stipulation in writ as to amount, complain of subsequent judgments secured by plaintiff as being excessive (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 537, 555).

Where property attached, under Code Civ. Proc. § 537, was released by sheriff without redelivery bond, required by section 555, one securing such release cannot attack subsequent judgment as excessive, since only purpose of stipulation in the writ of amount is to fix sheriff's liability, and to designate amount of property to be seized, and to protect interests of innocent third parties.

3. Appeal and error 🔑640—Whether record is properly authenticated to bring motion for new trial before court will be determined on consideration of merits of appeal.

Proper practice, where it is contended that motion for new trial is not properly before court because record was not authenticated, as provided by law, is to dispose of such question on consideration of merits of appeal itself.

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court January 28, 1927.

4. New trial 🔑99—Motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence of assistant vice-president of defendant bank held properly denied.

Motion for new trial because of newly discovered evidence, consisting of testimony of assistant vice president of defendant bank, who had been assistant manager of credit department and was familiar with controversy, held properly denied.

5. Appeal and error 🔑981—Refusal of new trial for newly discovered evidence will not be disturbed except for abuse of discretion.

Motions for new trial on newly discovered evidence are not favorably regarded, and appellate courts will not disturb action of trial court in refusing to grant motion, except where it clearly appears there has been abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Joseph Arena against the Bank of Italy and others for conversion. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Louis Ferrari and J. J. Posner, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

A. P. Dessouslavy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PULLEN, Justice pro tem. Upon the original trial of this case in the superior court, judgment was rendered for defendant. Thereupon an appeal was prosecuted by the plaintiff herein to the Supreme Court (reported in 194 Cal. 195, 228 P. 441), and the judgment of the trial court was reversed, with direction to enter judgment for plaintiff. A petition for rehearing was denied, but the court directed that, inasmuch as the Bank of Italy had been a coactor with its codefendant, the sheriff, in procuring an unlawful release of attachment of the property in question and the delivery thereof to itself, the bank was liable for whatever damages plaintiff had sustained by reason of the conversion of the property.

Thereupon the trial court entered judgment for plaintiff in accordance with the directions of the Supreme Court, and also gave its judgment for the amount of damages sustained by plaintiff by reason of the conversion mentioned. The facts in issue are fully set forth in the opinion of the Supreme Court written by Mr. Justice Richards and need not be repeated.

Appellants rely upon three grounds for reversal: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. (2) Excessive amount of the judgment. (3) Error of the trial court in denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

[1] It may be conceded for the purposes of this opinion that, inasmuch as on the former appeal the present appellants were respondents, they as such respondents were unable to attack the findings of fact for insufficiency of the evidence and, therefore, may in this appeal bring that issue before this court for review. Lambert v. Bates, 148 Cal. 146, 82 P. 767; 2 Cal. Jur. p. 839, § 492. Appellants contend that the evidence is insufficient in the following particulars: (1) As to the ownership of the goods. (2) As to Dellaira's pledge to the bank. (3) As to the failure of the sheriff to demand indemnity from the plaintiff upon the filing of the amended third party claim. As to the insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that Dellaira, at the time of the levy of the attachment, "was the owner and in the exclusive possession, custody, and control of said merchandise," the testimony upon that subject is, quoting from the record:

> "Mr. Ferrari: If you will admit that the transaction as set forth in the amended claim is true, that is all that we desire to prove; in other words, the warehouse receipt, the date, the time we acquired title, and those matters; I am willing to submit the matter.
>
> "Mr. Dessouslavy: You claim, I understand, that this property had been pledged to you to secure a debt.
>
> "Mr. Ferrari: It was assigned to us.
>
> "Mr. Dessouslavy: Assigned or pledged. Practically, that the property had been either assigned or pledged to you to secure a debt, and the property was warehoused, and you got the warehouse receipts as collateral, and on the 2nd or 4th of June, 1919, the warehouse receipts or the property itself came into Dellaira's possession, and he had it in his place of business on Front street. That is what you are seeking to prove?
>
> "Mr. Ferrari: That, in brief, is what I am seeking to prove.
>
> "Mr. Dessouslavy: We will admit that."

The foregoing embraces the stipulation of counsel, and those facts, under the reasoning and authorities cited by Mr. Justice Richards in the opinion rendered by the court in the case of Arena v. Bank of Italy, above referred to, fall far short of sustaining appellants' contentions. As to the question of Dellaira's pledge of merchandise to the bank previous to the pledge or assignment back to him, we believe the evidence amply sustains the finding that, prior to the levy of the writ referred to, the merchandise in question had been pledged to defendant bank by Dellaira, as does also the fact that the defendant sheriff released the property upon the filing of the amended third party claim and without notice to the respondent. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the evidence fully supports the findings.

[2] As to the second specification of error, namely, that the amount of the judgment was excessive, we also find that the claim of appellants is without merit. The sheriff was directed by the writ to attach certain property, which was done, and thereafter by means of an unlawful release the property passed into the possession of one not entitled thereto. Upon the direction of the court, the property is now restored to its original status, and, still being lawfully in the hands of the sheriff by virtue of a writ regularly issued, it is now available to respondent from which he may satisfy his judgment. The only purpose of the stipulation of the amount in the writ is to fix the liability of the sheriff, and to designate the amount of property to be seized, and to protect the interests of innocent third parties, but here neither contingency is before the court.

Section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the plaintiff may have the property of the defendant attached "as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be recovered." Section 555 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for a bond for the release of an attachment conditioned for the redelivery of the attached property "to be applied to the payment of any judgment in such action." In its opinion denying a rehearing, the Supreme Court stated that defendants were guilty of conversion. This case, then, is not one affecting the rights of innocent third parties, but involves the consequences of a tortious act as the result of which respondent was deprived of his rights to have the attached property continued to be held by the attaching officer and to be applied to the payment of any judgment he might recover. Appellants' contention that any right to limit, abridge, or cut off the amount which respondent would thus have been entitled to recover from the proceeds of the attached property could be initiated by or founded upon their own wrongful act is obviously untenable and contrary to settled principles of law.

[3] Respondent urges that the motion for a new trial is not properly before the court, in that the record is not authenticated as provided by law, but, as this court, in the case of Oberkotter v. Spreckels, 63 Cal. App. 683, 219 P. 1010, said, the proper practice is to dispose of such a question upon a consideration of the merits of the appeal itself, and upon that theory we have examined the proceedings upon the motion for a new trial.

[4] In support of the claim of newly discovered evidence, appellants have filed two affidavits, one by the assistant vice president of the Bank of Italy setting forth the transactions between various parties and the defendant bank with respect to the property here in question, which facts, as set forth, are considerably at variance with the facts stated in the original and amended affidavits on attachment and with the evidence produced at the trial, and furthermore no showing is made as to why the testimony of affiant was not produced upon the original hearing, particularly in view of the statement that the affiant is assistant vice president of the Bank of Italy and had been in the employ of said Bank of Italy continually since June 1, 1918, and that during the year 1919 he was assistant manager of the credit department of said Bank of Italy and was familiar during all of said time with the account of Luigi Dellaira doing business as California Grape Association.

The affidavit of Mr. Ferrari, one of the attorneys for appellants, also filed in support of the motion for a new trial, is indefinite and somewhat contradictory, and also does not sufficiently show a reason for not producing the evidence before the trial court.

[5] No rule is better settled in the courts of this state than that motions for a new trial upon newly discovered evidence are not favorably regarded, and that appellate courts will not disturb the action of a trial court in refusing to grant a motion of this kind, "except where it clearly appears that there has been an abuse of discretion." Fresno Estate, etc., v. Fiske, 172 Cal. 583, 601, 157 P. 1127, 1134.

And again, as is said in Gallatin v. Corning Irr. Co., 163 Cal. 405, 420, 126 P. 864, 870 (Ann. Cas. 1914A, 74):

> "The evidence could not be deemed newly discovered, since there was ample time within which the plaintiffs might have ascertained all of these facts before the trial."

Obviously, appellants cannot predicate their motion for a new trial upon evidence which was, at all times, in the bank's own files, or upon the testimony of one who was its employee at the time of the first trial.

We find nothing, therefore, in the record or argument of counsel to warrant reversal.

The order and the judgment are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

80 Cal. App. 599

CITY OF SAN DIEGO v. CUYAMACA WATER CO. et al. (LA MESA, LEMON GROVE & SPRING VALLEY IRR. DIST., Intervener). (Civ. 5353.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 10, 1927.)

1. Eminent domain 🔑253(1)—Judgment determining right to condemn realty for public use and amount of compensation is "final appealable judgment"; "final order of condemnation."

Judgment affirming right to condemn realty for public use and determining amount of compensation is final or principal judgment from which appeal lies; final order of condemnation being in nature of special order made after final judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Final Decree or Judgment; Final Order.]

2. Eminent domain 🔑257—Appeal after rendition, though before final entry of condemnation judgment, is not premature (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, appeal from portion of judgment affirming right to condemn realty for public use is not premature, though prior to formal entry of judgment, if judgment was rendered before date of notice of appeal.

3. Eminent domain 🔑257—Order in condemnation proceedings that "judgment be entered accordingly" held rendition of judgment authorizing appeal before entry thereof (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Where jury's verdict, awarding compensation and damages for condemnation of realty for public use, had been entered and fact findings made, court's order that "judgment be entered accordingly" was rendition of judgment, entitling any dissatisfied party to appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, without waiting for entry of judgment.

4. Appeal and error 🔑133—Judgment from which appeal lies exists when court adds conclusions of law to fact findings or jury's verdict and orders entry of judgment accordingly (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

While no appeal lies from fact findings and conclusions of law or jury's verdict, judgment, from which appeal lies under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, exists when court adds its conclusions of law to determinations of fact and orders that judgment be entered accordingly.

5. Appeal and error 🔑934(1)—It may be assumed that court stayed entry of judgment on verdict until determination of matters to be tried by court without jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 664).

Though record contains no order of court directly staying entry of judgment on verdict in condemnation proceedings, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 664, to relieve clerk from entering judgment within 24 hours after rendition of verdict, it may be assumed that actual entry was stayed until court's determination of matters to be tried without jury.

6. Eminent domain 🔑253(1)—Order granting new trial of issues determined by jury in condemnation proceedings does not affect right of appeal from judgment.

Order granting new trial does not absolutely vacate judgment in condemnation proceedings, so as to affect right of appeal therefrom, but judgment remains in existence pending appeal from order granting new trial of issues determined by jury, though subject to modification as to amount awarded on new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action by the City of San Diego against the Cuyamaca Water Company and others, in which the La Mesa, Lemon Grove & Spring Valley Irrigation District intervened. From a part of the judgment, and an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial of part of the case, defendants and intervener appeal. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Crouch & Sanders and Sweet, Stearns & Forward, all of San Diego, for appellants.

S. J. Higgins, City Atty., and Arthur F. H. Wright, both of San Diego, and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. In this action to condemn real property for public use, compensation and damages were assessed by a jury's verdict, which was returned and filed on the 9th day of July, 1925. Other issues relating to the action were tried before the court without a jury, and on those issues findings of fact were signed by the judge and filed on the 22d day of August, 1925. These findings, while they recite that an order had been made directing that the issues involving compensation and damages be submitted to a jury, did not directly include any statement of the amount of compensation and damages which had been awarded by the jury. The court, however, did proceed to include, with its findings of fact, conclusions of law to the effect that the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment of condemnation, and directed that judgment be entered accordingly.

Thereafter the plaintiff served and filed its notice of intention to move for a new trial of the issues submitted to and determined by the jury. On the 4th of September, 1925, the court made and entered an order granting plaintiff's said motion for a new trial of that portion of the case decided by the jury. Formal entry of the judgment of condemnation has not been made. On the 30th day of September, 1925, the defendants served and filed notice of appeal "from that certain portion of the judgment made and rendered in said action on the 22d day of August, 1925, which adjudges that the plaintiff is entitled to condemn the lands described in its complaint as amended, subject to the reservations and restrictions contained therein and the further restrictions in the findings of fact and conclusions of law specified"; also "from the order made and entered on the 4th day of September, 1925, granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial of that portion of the case decided by the jury and setting aside the verdict of the jury heretofore rendered in said action on the 9th day of July, 1925, and from the whole of said order."

Now comes the plaintiff and moves that an order be made dismissing the appeal, which is an appeal from a part of the judgment. This motion is made "upon the ground that no final judgment has been rendered, given, or entered in said action, and that said appeal was prematurely taken."

[1, 2] In an action or proceeding of this kind, the judgment which affirms the right to condemn and determines the amount of compensation to be paid, although sometimes called an interlocutory judgment, is in its nature the final or principal judgment. The so-called final order of condemnation is in the nature of a special order made after final judgment. County of Los Angeles v. Rindge, 69 Cal. App. 72, 76, 230 P. 468. The point urged by respondent here is not based upon any claim that the judgment directed by the conclusions of law will be an interlocutory and not a final judgment, so far as the nature of the judgment is concerned. The contention of respondent is that the appeal is premature because the judgment actually has not been rendered by the trial court. It is provided by section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure that no appeal shall be dismissed upon the ground that it was taken after the rendition of judgment and before formal entry.

It is not necessary to discuss here the meaning of the words "rendition of judgment," or the difference between the rendition and the entry of a judgment. The subject has been covered and the principal earlier decisions reviewed in a recent decision of the Supreme Court. Aspegren & Co., Inc., v. Sherwood, Swan & Co., 250 P. 400. In accordance with our understanding of those decisions, we are of the opinion that the appeal against which the motion is directed was not premature, if there had been a rendition of judgment prior to the date of the notice of appeal, and that we have only to determine on this motion the question whether or not the signing and filing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law—closing with the order, "Let judgment be entered accordingly," and preceded as it was by the verdict of the jury—constitutes a rendition of the judgment of such form and force that there remained only the ministerial act of entry of the judgment in order to place the same fully upon the record as the complete judgment of the court.

[3] We think that it should be conceded that at the time when the findings of fact and conclusions of law were signed and filed, the entire cause was before the court ready for decision, and that the court then and there had power to render its judgment. If the assessment of compensation and damages to be paid had been included in the matters submitted to the court without a jury, and if the findings of fact had included the items of compensation and damages, the court, having thus determined at one time all of the issues of fact in the case, could have rendered a judgment, and its order that "judgment be entered accordingly" would have been the rendition of judgment, and would have entitled any dissatisfied party to appeal without waiting for entry of the judgment. The fact that here the compensation and damages had been awarded by the verdict of a jury really makes no material difference in the situation. The verdict of the jury having been entered and the findings of fact having been made, the court had the right to and presumably did take cognizance of the record containing the verdict, as part of the basis of its order for entry of judgment. The court was vested with this authority just as completely as if the facts so determined by the jury had been included in findings of fact by a judge trying the case without a jury.

[4] In accordance with the views hereinabove expressed, we conclude that from and after the 22d day of August, 1925, there was in existence a judgment duly rendered, from which the defendants had a present right of appeal. It may be granted that there is no such thing as an appeal from findings of fact and conclusions of law or from a verdict of the jury. No doubt that is the law. But when the court has added to these determinations of fact its conclusions of law and its order that judgment be entered accordingly, there exists in contemplation of law a judgment, notwithstanding that the formal entry thereof has not been made. The provision to which we have referred, of section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure, assumes an existing judgment from and after the rendition of judgment.

[5] Counsel for respondent suggests that, giving to the conclusions of law the construction most favorable to defendants, they cannot be held to constitute a direction by the court to the clerk to enter a judgment fixing the amount of the damages, and that before any judgment was rendered the verdict was set aside and a new trial granted as to the issues affecting the amount of damages. We have stated herein our opinion that upon a reasonable construction of the conclusions of law and the order of the court that judgment be entered accordingly, these conclusions and this order, based upon all of the facts as theretofore determined, did constitute a rendition of judgment. The general rule concerning judgments based upon verdicts is established by statute. Section 664 of the Code of Civil Procedure directs that the clerk enter judgment in conformity to the verdict within 24 hours after the rendition of the verdict, unless the court order the case to be reserved for argument or further consideration, or grant a stay of proceedings. We are not aware that there is in the record any order of the court directly staying the entry of the judgment upon the vredict, but it may be assumed that the actual entry of judgment upon the verdict was stayed, as appropriately as it should have been, until the determination by the court of those matters which were to be tried by the court without a jury. As soon as those matters were settled by the filing of findings of fact and the court's order thereon to which we have referred, it immediately became appropriate to enter judgment in accordance with the verdict of the jury as supplemented by the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law.

[6] Although in connection with this point counsel for appellant have mentioned the order granting a new trial, we do not understand it to be insisted upon or claimed that the granting of the motion for new trial, if in fact a judgment had been rendered, would in any way affect the right of appeal from the judgment. An order granting a new trial does not absolutely vacate the judgment; the judgment is absolutely vacated only when such an order becomes a finality. Sherwin v. Southern Pacific Co., 168 Cal. 722, 145 P. 92.

Pending the appeal from the order granting a new trial of the issues which were determined by the jury, the judgment remains in existence as a judgment of the trial court, although subject to modification as to the amount of the awards if the order shall be affirmed and if there shall thereafter be another trial of those issues.

The motion to dismiss appeal from part of the judgment is denied.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 31

PEOPLE v. SWIGART. (Cr. 933.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 27, 1926.)

1. Homicide 🔑250—Conviction for manslaughter held sustained by evidence.

Evidence held to sustain conviction for manslaughter.

2. Criminal law 🔑1159(2)—Reviewing court must appraise probative value of testimony according to face value.

Reviewing court considering testimony is required to appraise its probative value according to its face value.

3. Homicide 🔑339—Excluding evidence on plea of self-defense that deceased had beaten others, if error, held harmless, in view of defendant seeking encounter.

In prosecution for murder, wherein defendant asserted that he acted in self-defense, exclusion of evidence that deceased, without justification, had violently beaten other men, if legally erroneous, held not prejudicial, in view of other evidence, showing defendant, with knowledge of such facts, brought about the fatal interview.

4. Homicide 🔑190(7)—Evidence of uncommunicated threats by deceased is admissible on aggression affecting self-defense.

Where defendant pleads self-defense, and question as to who was aggressor becomes pertinent, it is competent for defendant to show threats by deceased, whether or not communicated to defendant prior to homicide.

5. Criminal law 🔑720(9)—Argument of district attorney that defendant had fabricated evidence to support plea of self-defense held not improper under evidence.

In prosecution for murder, where there was evidence that defendant, after shooting deceased on highway, stopped automobile and particularly drew driver's attention to iron bar lying near deceased, argument of district attorney that defendant had shot deceased and then said to the witness, " 'See what I have done? There is the deadly weapon,' and he placed it there himself, 'and I am going to make you a witness;' that is the testimony in this case, * * *" held not improper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

John T. Swigart was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

L. B. Schlingheyde and Hugo McKinley, both of Modesto, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant, by an information filed in the superior court of the county of Stanislaus, was charged with and tried for the crime of murder, and was convicted by the jury of the crime of manslaughter. The cause has been brought to this court on an appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order denying the motion of the defendant for a new trial.

The homicide took place in the early morning of the 30th day of July, 1925, on the highway running in front of and near the Stanislaus county hospital; said hospital being situated a short distance from the city of Modesto, the county seat of said county. The defendant and the deceased, one William Sullivan, were at the time of the fatal shooting, and had been for some time prior thereto, inmates of or patients residing at said hospital.

No one, other than the defendant and the deceased, was present at the scene of the shooting when the homicide occurred. The defendant was therefore the only living witness to the circumstances immediately attending or surrounding the act of killing. Upon other circumstances, however—those occurring prior to the date of the fatal meeting between the parties, together with certain incriminatory extrajudicial statements made by the defendant before and after the homicide took place—the people relied for a conviction, and which, it is urged here by the people, constitute an impregnable barrier against just interference on appeal with the result arrived at below upon the claim by the defendant that, as a matter of law, such result is without sufficient evidentiary support.

The claim the more earnestly urged here by the defendant is that, even if it were necessary to concede that the verdict is afforded sufficient evidentiary support, nevertheless the evidence tending to prove the defendant's guilt is so slight, or, in other language, the question of guilt is, upon the evidence, so close as to have imparted to the few assigned errors carried into the court's rulings upon the question of the admissibility of certain testimony a singularly prejudicial effect upon the substantial rights of the accused in the trial of the case.

[1] The record is voluminous and is brought here in two large typewritten volumes. These we have carefully read, and our conclusion from such reading is that the verdict is supplied with abundant evidentiary support. Like all criminal cases in which the people, in making their case, are compelled, from the intrinsic nature of the situation, to rely wholly upon the proof of a multiplicity of circumstances of a varying character, the trial before the court below covered a wide field or range of inquiry. The exigencies of the case, as it stands before this court, whose function is limited to a determination of the question whether the record under review in all vital respects legally sustains the result reached below, do not require us to enter herein upon an examination of every material circumstance which might have tended to contribute either to the condemnation or the exoneration of the defendant. A general statement of the facts, with a reproduction now and then of brief excerpts from certain portions of certain testimony, will well subserve the purposes of the decision herein.

Sullivan, the deceased, had been an inmate of the county hospital of Stanislaus county for some time prior and down to the date of his tragic death. He was, at the time of the tragedy, past 70 years of age. He was afflicted with rheumatism, which had become chronic with him. His feet, at some time prior to his entrance as a patient into the hospital, had been frozen, and for that cause had been amputated "as far up as the instep" of each foot.

The defendant first entered the hospital as an inmate suffering from some heart trouble in the early part of July, 1924. He remained at the hospital until the month of November, 1924, when he took his departure therefrom. He returned, however, a few days before Christmas, 1924, remaining there until the 4th or 5th of June, 1925, when he again left the hospital. After the last-mentioned date—either late in the month of June or early in the month of July—he again entered the hospital as a patient and there remained until the 30th day of July, 1925, on which day he shot and killed Sullivan.

Defendant became acquainted with Sullivan when first he (defendant) became an inmate of the hospital in the year 1924, and it seems that it was not long after the two men became acquaintances that a bitter feeling of hostility arose between them. It appears to be well established by the evidence that the genesis of this personal enmity between the two men was in a suspicion conceived by Sullivan that the defendant became an inmate of the hospital, not only for the reason that he needed support and medical aid at the expense of the public, but largely for the reason that he (defendant) had been employed by the public authorities to locate in the institution as a detective or a spy with a view of ascertaining whether intoxicating liquors were being clandestinely furnished the inmates of the hospital by some "bootlegger" or "bootleggers." This suspicion finally and within a short time developed into a positive belief in the deceased that such was the real purpose of the defendant in registering as a patient at the hospital. Here it may be stated that the conclusion arrived at by the deceased that the defendant was being used by some one in authority as a detective for the purpose suggested seems to have been well founded, the defendant having admitted after the homicide occurred that he was a "stool pigeon" at the hospital for the sheriff to find and report on any illicit liquor traffic which might be carried on with patients at the institution while inmates thereof. Sullivan, however, was a quick and high-tempered man, and when he became convinced that Swigart was acting at the hospital in the rôle of a detective to run down any "bootlegging" business that might be in operation there, he became very much incensed and embittered against the defendant, and lost no time or occasion to denounce him in bitter terms. On nearly every occasion on which the two met (and this was at least once every day), Sullivan would call defendant a "stool pigeon," always adding force to the offensive signification of that appellation by preceding it with adjectives not to be found in the dictionary. On the return the last time of defendant to the hospital, the deceased, addressing him in opprobrious language, said, in effect: "Why have you returned here? you are a d——n old ——— 'stool pigeon'; nobody here has any use for you." And so the bickerings of the two old men (defendant was about 68 years of age), continued at frequent intervals and until defendant called on the member of the board of supervisors who issued to him the permit upon the authority of which he (defendant) entered the hospital the last time before the date of the homicide and complained to that official that a "number of old men"—patients—at the hospital were constantly "picking on" and abusing him and threatening to inflict upon him personal injury, and asked the supervisor to cause the said "old men" to be turned out of the hospital. The supervisor promised to investigate and did subsequently cause an investigation of the charge. This investigation was conducted a few days only before the date of the homicide by the superintendent of the hospital and the supervisor referred to. Both the defendant and the deceased and other inmates of the hospital were called before the officials and closely questioned regarding the trouble and occasion thereof. The details of this investigation it is not necessary to repeat herein. It is enough to say that, after full inquiry into the matter, Sullivan promised the officials to cease quarreling with and abusing the defendant or in any manner molesting him thereafter. There is, however, some testimony to the effect that the deceased, notwithstanding the promise so made, continued to "pick on" and pursue the offensive course toward the latter that brought about, on the complaint of defendant, the investigation by the supervisor and the superintendent of the hospital.

The deceased was accustomed to rising early in the morning—at 6 o'clock or thereabouts—and taking walks back and forth for short distances along the highway running in front of and bordering upon the hospital grounds. With this custom of the deceased the defendant was familiar.

The defendant was the owner of a revolver, and, on returning to the hospital in the early part of July, 1925, carried the weapon with him, but, being acquainted with the rule prohibiting inmates, while such, from carrying or having possession of deadly weapons on the hospital grounds, hid or concealed his revolver near an old creek not far distant from the hospital. He kept the weapon there for several days and then removed it to and concealed it in the branches of a cypress tree standing near the fence separating the hospital premises from the highway. On the night immediately preceding the morning of the tragedy, the defendant took the revolver from its place of concealment and "oiled it up," and then placed it in a scabbard attached to a belt. On the morning of the fatal shooting the defendant saw the deceased in the act of leaving the hospital and going to the highway mentioned above. Within a very short space of time thereafter the defendant, with his revolver on his person, carrying it in a scabbard attached to the belt, which he buckled around his waist between his shirt and vest, also went to the highway. There he met and shot and killed Sullivan, having fired at the latter twice, both shots taking effect in the body of the deceased. Immediately following the fatal shooting the defendant observed a motorist traveling in the direction of the scene of the homicide and signaled the latter to stop. The motorist paid no heed to the signal, but passed on. Shortly thereafter, one Roy Albertson was driving an automobile from the town of Riverbank toward the city of Modesto, and, as he was approaching and not far from the point on the highway where the shooting took place, he saw the defendant in the center of the highway "waving his arms." Albertson, on reaching the spot where the defendant stood, stopped his car. Thereupon the defendant said to Albertson that he (defendant) "had shot a man" and requested Albertson to "go to the hospital and report it." Albertson thereupon drove to the hospital and told a nurse connected with the institution of the shooting, and, at her request, he conveyed her in his auto to the scene of the homicide. The dead body of Sullivan was lying partly on and partly off the paved portion of the road at a point something over 100 feet from where the defendant stood when he stopped Albertson, as explained. The defendant asked Albertson his name, and called his attention to an iron bar lying a few feet from the body of the deceased, saying: "I want you to notice the iron bar lying there. I want to get a square deal out of this." The fact of the killing was promptly communicated to the police office in Modesto and within a very short time thereafter Officer Dingley of the Modesto police force went to the scene of the shooting. The defendant was placed under arrest and his weapon taken from his possession by Dingley. Other parties, including another peace officer, soon followed Dingley to the place where the homicide occurred. The defendant was taken to the county jail and the body of the deceased removed to the morgue by the coroner.

The story of the tragedy as told by the defendant, omitting the details of the feud which had developed between him and the deceased, as briefly given above, and which culminated in the homicide, is: That, as was also his custom, he started to the highway to take a morning walk before breakfast; that, prior to entering the highway, he went to the cypress tree in which he had the night before secreted his revolver and got the weapon and placed the belt to which was attached the scabbard containing the pistol around his waist; that, with the revolver, loaded, thus upon his person, he entered the highway, and, feeling the effect upon the action of his heart of the walk from the hospital, he took a seat on a bench on the sidewalk bordering upon the highway in front of the hospital; that, while so resting, the deceased made his appearance around a curve in the highway on the side opposite to that upon which the defendant was sitting; that deceased, in an angry and sarcastic manner, said something to the defendant relative to a "still" which he (deceased) said was being maintained either upon the hospital grounds or on the outside thereof in near proximity thereto, and asked him why he did not investigate it, or words to that effect; that the deceased at the time had a good-sized rock in his left hand and, immediately after making the statement about the "still," removed the rock to his right hand and with the latter threw it at the defendant; that the defendant thereupon quickly arose from his position on the bench and took shelter behind a telephone pole near by; that deceased, all the time approaching the spot where the defendant stood, threw another rock at the latter, and finally drew from his person—apparently, defendant said, somewhere from his trousers—the iron bar already mentioned and continued to walk in the direction of defendant; that the latter drew his revolver and commanded the deceased to stop, otherwise, he told him, he would shoot and kill him; that the deceased, with the iron bar in his hand, threateningly continued approaching the defendant, when the latter fired two shots at the deceased, who, after the first and before the second shot, still moved toward the deceased, although, defendant admitted, there elapsed a very short interval of time between the two shots, not more than a second or two.

The foregoing statement embraces a recital, in substance, of the facts and circumstances immediately preceding and attending the act of killing as it was told by the defendant to the officers at the scene of the homicide and immediately after it occurred and as substantially they were testified to at the trial by him. This recital excludes, of course, those parts of the statements and the testimony of defendant to the effect that deceased not only started and kept up a systematic abuse of the defendant, but often threatened to inflict upon him bodily injury. At the trial, however, the people, after proving by evidence of circumstances and of the the admission of the defendant that the latter slew the deceased, introduced evidence of other extrajudicial statements by the deceased relative to the circumstances leading to and eventuating in the killing that tended strongly to support the theory of the people that the defendant's crime in taking the life of the accused was nothing short of murder of the first degree. In substantiation of this conclusion, reference may be made to the following significant considerations: That the deceased was a man past 70 years of age and so far crippled in the left arm as the result of chronic rheumatism as to make that member practically useless; that both feet, as far up as the instep of each, had been amputated, so that his power of locomotion and consequently his ability to move with alacrity were greatly impaired, if not actually destroyed, of which physical deficiency the defendant was fully cognizant; that the defendant was, according to his own admission, aware of the custom of the deceased, during the years he was a patient and an inmate of the hospital, to take early morning walks for short distances over and along the highway running immediately in front of the hospital grounds; that defendant knew of the bitter feeling of hostility cherished against him by the deceased; that he knew that the deceased was of an irascible, as well as of a pugnacious, nature, a fact which he (defendant) himself proved at the trial; that, knowing all these things, and further knowing that the deceased had gone to the highway on the morning of the homicide, he himself shortly thereafter not only went to the highway, but went there with a loaded revolver which he had never carried on his person while on the hospital premises. All these facts and circumstances stand in the record without contradiction. Indeed, the defense itself introduced evidence tending strongly to show, not only that the general reputation of the deceased for peace and quiet was bad, but also that he was very often seized with violent paroxysms of anger, and on certain occasions, while in such a mental state, had assaulted certain individuals. The other facts and circumstances to which we have referred were also brought into the record either through the defendant's extrajudicial declarations or his own testimony. But the defendant even went further in the way of incriminatory extrajudicial declarations than as already indicated. On the morning that he killed Sullivan, between a half an hour and an hour after his arrest and incarceration in the county jail, the defendant was interviewed, at said jail, by the deputy district attorney, Deputy Sheriff Wright, the chief of police of Modesto and the sheriff of Stanislaus county and questioned concerning the circumstances leading to and ending in the homicide. His statement at that time was written down in longhand by Wright, by the latter immediately thereafter put in typewriting, and the same read to defendant, who, upon such reading, stated that the writing embraced a correct statement of the facts and circumstances of which the killing was the outgrowth as he had given them to said officers. Wright testified that, upon his request, the defendant "talked slow" so that he was able to take in longhand the statement "word for word." The statement is as follows:

"I didn't tell any one that I had a gun. I kept it in my grip. I left the hospital a few days before Thanksgiving, 1924, to go to Fresno. I took the gun with me. I carried it on myself inside my shirt. I got back to the hospital about two days before Christmas. I had the gun with me. Sullivan came to the hospital some time in September, 1924. The nurse found my gun in my coat pocket, overcoat. About a month after I got back, at Christmas time, Mr. Trask took the gun and kept it. I got the gun back from him about the 1st of May, 1925. I took the gun at this time and hid it in the creek. I have had several quarrels with Sullivan. Sullivan always took a walk in the morning. I watched him from the hospital Monday the 27th, Tuesday the 28th, Wednesday the 29th, take a walk along the highway. On the 29th, I went to the creek and got my gun. I hid it along the cemetery fence. On Thursday, the 30th of July, 1925, I went out early in the morning and met Sullivan. Sullivan was on the south side of that road and I was on the north. Sullivan started to throw rocks at me. I got behind the telegraph pole. He started towards me with a piece of iron. I told him to stop or I would kill him. I didn't tell him I had a gun. He couldn't see it. I had it inside my shirt on my belt. He didn't stop so I shot him. He didn't stop then so I shot him again. I shot two shots just as fast as I could. He fell when I shot the second shot. He never got closer than 10 feet to me. It was about 20 minutes before a car came along. I couldn't get him to stop. I got the next car stopped about 10 minutes later. A boy was driving it. I told him to tell the superintendent of the hospital that I had killed this fellow. I wasn't surprised when I met Sullivan. I expected to meet him. I knew that Sullivan couldn't run. He had his toes froze off and had rheumatism. I could have got away from him, but I don't have to run from any man."

Gray B. Leet, connected with the Stanislaus county welfare board, testified that he saw and talked with defendant at some time during the day the killing took place. The witness had gone to the county jail to see another prisoner, and, as he (the witness) entered the jail, the defendant stepped out of a cell and opened a conversation with the witness. The latter said to the accused: "That is some jam that you have got into, killing this old fellow." Defendant replied that he did it to protect himself, and proceeded to describe how the deceased attacked him by throwing rocks at him and following the attack by approaching him in a threatening manner with an iron bar in his hands. Leet then said to the defendant: "I understand that this old fellow, Sullivan, has got both of his feet off. He couldn't show much speed in chasing you. You look pretty healthy—you ought to have been able to get out of the way." The accused answered by saying, "Well, I kicked him off." The witness thereupon said, "You must have been laying for Sullivan, to know just exactly when to get him," to which the defendant replied, "Oh, I've been over by the T. B. ward and for four mornings watching him to see which way he would go; I knew just the way he would go because he went that way every morning." Defendant further stated to Leet that Sullivan and others of the old inmates at the hospital had accused him of being a "stool pigeon"; that he was not a "stool pigeon," but a detective.

F. E. Lockridge, a deputy sheriff, testified that, while "taking him to court," he had a conversation with the defendant about the homicide, that he said to the accused, "You have got yourself in a h——ll of a jam," to which the accused replied, "Oh, it's not much trouble." The witness, proceeding said, "I wouldn't want to be in your place," to which the accused responded, "Well, one of us had to go in the basket; I thought it just as well be him. If you will turn me loose," continued the defendant, "two or three more of those old s——ns of b——hes out there I'll kill."

The record contains the testimony of other witnesses giving the details of statements made to or in their presence by the accused after his arrest and prior to his first trial, which involved like incriminatory admissions by the defendant. The testimony of Deputy Sheriff Wright, giving the defendant's statement at the county jail and hereinabove reproduced in full, as Wright committed it to writing, was corroborated to some extent by the sheriff, who was present a part of the time only when the statement was being made. In fact, the defendant, when on the stand, while stating that all that was said by him on the occasion that Wright wrote out his statement was not contained in said statement, admitted that Wright's written statement of what he (defendant) said on the occasion referred to was correct as far as it went. He admitted that Wright, after copying in typewriting his written memoranda of what he (defendant) then had to say about the homicide, read the statement to him, and that he pronounced it correct.

The superintendent of the county hospital and some other parties connected with that institution testified that the deceased, by reason of his physical afflictions already described, was not able to travel on his feet much faster than a "walking gait"; that there was no spring to his movement when walking, but, to the contrary, he always walked like one whose lower limbs were "in a stiffened condition."

The people also introduced testimony of other circumstances and also evidence of physical facts bearing upon the general situation at the scene of the shooting, which tended to strengthen the hypothesis maintained by the state at the trial that the homicide was the result of a deliberate purpose in the defendant to slay Sullivan without legal necessity, cause, or excuse.

[2] The defendant testified, and thus made a rather feeble attempt to present a case of self-defense. He also denied making certain inculpatory statements attributed to him by witnesses to whom or in whose presence he essayed an extrajudicial explanation of the circumstances eventuating in and immediately attending the act of killing. It was, of course, with the jury to consider and determine the probative force and the effect of his testimony upon the case made by the people. But it is perfectly clear, from the record, that there is no substantial ground for the claim made on this appeal that the verdict does not derive sufficient support from the evidence. The point especially emphasized here is, as above explained, that the question of guilt upon the evidence rests upon such a narrow margin as to intensify the damaging or baleful effect upon the rights of the defendant at the trial of certain alleged errors occurring during the trial, and which involve rulings upon the question of the legal propriety of certain evidence to the admission of which the defendant objected, the alleged misconduct of the district attorney in making statements in his argument to the jury not warranted by the evidence and the refusal by the court to instruct the jury to disregard such statements when requested to do so by counsel for the accused. As we have in effect stated, if the proofs advanced by the people in support of the claims of the indictment are to be accepted at the face value of the testimony by which such proofs were made, then, it is clear, the jury, in finding the accused guilty of manslaughter—the less grievous offense embraced within the crime charged—accorded to the defendant a degree of clemency far beyond what he was legally and justly entitled to. In considering the testimony upon which a finding is predicated, a reviewing court is required to appraise its probative force according to its face value, and, if it be not inherently improbable, so must be accepted as sufficient to support the fact found. This is true because it is to be presumed on appeal that the jury, who are essentially the weighers of the evidence, accepted such testimony as revealing the truth concerning the issue to which it was and is addressed. At any rate, it is perfectly clear from the record as thus far we have considered it, that the alleged errors of law forming the basis of the assignments here are to be reviewed, not upon the hypothesis that, under the evidence the question of the guilt of the accused is close, but in view of the impregnable proposition, presented by the record, that the verdict is strongly supported, evidentially. In that light the assignments will be considered.

[3, 4] The first of the assignments arises out of a futile offer by the defendant to prove that the accused was a man of quick and violent temper and of a pugnacious nature by the introduction of testimony showing that on different occasions he had struck and violently beaten other men; it being admitted that the defendant had not witnessed the assaults, and, prior to the date of the homicide, had not heard or known that they occurred. The theory upon which the proposed testimony was offered was that, particularly where no other living person but the accused was an eyewitness to the circumstances immediately leading to and characterizing the act of killing, it would tend to show and to support the defendant's claim and his testimony in support thereof that the deceased was the aggressor or the one who initiated the trouble culminating in the homicide and, consequently, tend to sustain the defendant's plea of self-defense. That such an inquiry is permissible to show that the deceased was a quarrelsome, high and quick tempered man and violently vindictive, the defendant contends is declared by Prof. Wigmore in his treatise on the Law of Evidence (volume 1 [2d Ed.] § 63), and the following cases: State v. McIver, 125 N. C. 645, 34 S. E. 439; State v. Rutledge, 135 Iowa, 581, 113 N. W. 461, 464; State v. Jones, 48 Mont. 505, 139 P. 441, 446, 447; People v. Thomson, 92 Cal. 506, 511, 28 P. 589. It is now a pretty generally accepted or approved rule that, in a case of homicide, where the defendant sets up the plea of self-defense, and the question as to which of the two combatants, the defendant or the deceased, was the aggressor, becomes a pertinent and an important issue in the case, it is competent for the defendant not only to show, as tending to prove that the deceased was the aggressor, that the general reputation of the deceased for the quality of peace and quiet was bad, but also that the deceased had made threats, whether communicated or not communicated to the defendant prior to the homicide, to commit physical violence upon the latter. The rule as thus stated is, in its entirety, perfectly sound, since, obviously, uncommunicated threats of the character mentioned would as effectually show the animus or hostile state of mind of the deceased towards the accused as would or could threats of which the latter had been informed prior to the fatal meeting, and testimony of such uncommunicated threats would therefore have as direct and forceful a bearing upon the question as to which of the two was the starter of or aggressor in the fatal combat as would or could threats by the deceased against the defendant which had been, prior to the homicide, communicated to him. And there might be some support in logic for the admissibility of proof that the deceased, in the presence of the defendant, had assaulted other persons without provocation sufficient to justify the assault, or any other fact, with which the defendant was himself personally familiar, which would tend to show that the deceased was by nature quarrelsome and belligerent. But even testimony of such specific acts of violence would inject issues of a collateral nature into the case which, if the rule sanctioning it were to be justly applied, would have to be tried out, for it would be manifestly unfair if the people were not permitted to show or make an effort to show that the acts of violence committed by the deceased in such instances were justifiable or excusable under the law. The result of the trial of such collateral matters would obviously have a tendency to cause confusion or the loss of sight of the main issue to a dangerous degree and also to prolong the trial of the principal issue to an unreasonable length. These observations apply even with greater force to the proposition that evidence of acts of violence by the deceased, not communicated to the defendant, or of which he had no knowledge prior to the date of the homicide, is permissible as in support of the claim of the accused that the deceased was the aggressor in the mortal affray. The courts of our own state have not as yet gone as far in applying the character rule in instances such as we have here as counsel for the defendant would have us go. The case of People v. Thomson, 92 Cal. 506, 511, 28 P. 589, 590, supra, is not an authority for the rule as it would be applied by the defendant here. After referring to the fact of the killing and the fact that the defendant therein set up the plea of self-defense, claiming that "the deceased made the first attack," the court said:

> "Under these circumstances, all the acts and conduct of the deceased, either in the nature of overt acts of hostility, or threats communicated or uncommunicated, were proper evidence to be considered by the jury as shedding light—to some extent, at least—upon the issue as to whether the deceased or the defendant was the aggressor in this fatal affray. These principles are elementary in criminal law, and a citation of authorities not demanded; but the general principles are found discussed in People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 479; People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 677; People v. Travis, 56 Cal. 252; People v. Tamkin, 62 Cal. 469."

By the words in the above excerpt, "overt acts of hostility," the court undoubtedly had in mind such "overt acts" committed by the deceased upon the defendant and not acts of personal violence committed by the deceased upon others and of which, prior to the homicide, the defendant had no knowledge. But the situation in the instant case does not require us to express an unqualified opinion herein as to the legal soundness or propriety of the character rule which would sanction proof in cases of this character of uncommunicated acts of personal violence inflicted by the deceased upon other parties as bearing, under a plea of self-defense, upon the question as to which of the two parties was the aggressor. It may be granted, as the defendant repeatedly charged, that the deceased was a man of bad reputation and character for peace and quiet and was often engaged in personal encounters with others. It may be granted that the deceased, as the defendant repeatedly declared was true and offered testimony to show, long cherished a profound dislike for the accused, and had frequently threatened to commit personal violence upon the latter, and that the accused consequently had reason to expect and did expect to be attacked by the deceased at any time. Yet, as above suggested, fully cognizant of this hostility and the threats thus manifested and made against him by the deceased, and fully familiar with the custom of the deceased to take early morning walks along the highway in front of the hospital, the defendant himself, first arming himself with a loaded revolver, which he admitted he had not been in the habit of carrying on his person, and, as he further admitted, having observed the deceased at an early hour of the morning of the tragedy—about the hour he usually took for his daily walks—going to the highway, also almost immediately went to the road and thereby placed himself in a position where he knew that he would in all likelihood meet the deceased, his enemy, the man who had threatened to injure or kill him. Thus, in proving the bad character of the deceased for peace and quiet and proving that the latter had often threatened to inflict injury upon him, the defendant himself disclosed knowledge of facts which, if he was not designedly looking for or seeking trouble with the deceased, should have operated as a sufficient incentive to keep him from the highway on that tragic morning. In other words, proof by the defendant that the deceased was of a quarrelsome, turbulent, and pugnacious disposition and a dangerous man for a person he hated, as the defendant knew that he hated him, to come in contact with, and that he had often threatened to injure or kill the latter, tended, as such should have been the tendency, under the circumstances of the case, to destroy rather than to sustain his plea of self-defense. Therefore, if it was legally improper to exclude testimony of instances in which the deceased had committed acts of physical violence upon persons other than defendant, and of which instances the latter had no knowledge prior to the date of the homicide, the rulings foreclosing the right in the accused to make such proof was entirely without prejudice. What we have said on the question in hand applies, of course, to all other objections to rulings disallowing testimony offered by the accused designed to show similar uncommunicated acts of violence by the deceased.

[5] The other assignments of error, to which counsel have directed our attention, involve alleged misconduct of the district attorney in his argument of the case to the jury on behalf of the people, and which it is here claimed seriously prejudiced the case of the accused, and the refusal of the court to instruct the jury, upon motion of counsel for the defense, to disregard the remarks of the district attorney which constitute the foundation for the misconduct charged against the officer. The following are the remarks of the prosecutor of which the defendant complains:

> "Mr. Brown (in argument to jury): It is not a question of manslaughter, but it is a question of this man coolly and calculatingly going out there and making his preparations and waiting until the unarmed man stubbed along there, then shot him down like a dog, and stood over his dead body and says to the witness, 'See what I have done? There is the deadly weapon,' and he placed it there himself, 'and I am going to make you a witness.' That is the testimony in this case, and it is clear and conclusive. * * *"

In using the foregoing language, the district attorney did not leave the realms of legitimate argument in this case. The language merely involved the prosecutor's interpretation of the effect of, and the expression of his conclusion from, certain testimony properly received into the case—an interpretation and conclusion which the jurors themselves could justly have made of and drawn from the testimony. It will be borne in mind that the witness Roy Albertson, who was driving an automobile over the highway in the direction of the spot where the shooting took place, within a few moments thereafter, and who, when near the spot, was hailed by the accused and thereupon stopped near where the body of the deceased lay in the road, testified that the defendant immediately called his (the witness') attention to the iron bar lying near the dead body of Sullivan, and, after declaring that the deceased. with the iron bar in his hands, menacingly approached and threatened to use the instrument upon him (defendant), and that he thereupon shot and killed Sullivan, in effect, asked the witness particularly to notice the bar and its position on the ground with reference to the body of the deceased, expressly adding, "I am going to get a square deal out of this," referring to the homicide. The theory of the people, in presenting the case to the jury, was that the deceased did not at any time have the iron bar in his possession, but that, having gone to the highway that morning with the intention of meeting Sullivan and assaulting and perhaps killing him, the defendant himself, after firing the fatal shot, placed the iron bar near the body of the deceased to be used by him as evidence tending to support a claim by him that, in slaying Sullivan, he acted in necessary self-defense. This theory was built up by the district attorney from the circumstances developed by the evidence which finally resulted in the homicide and of which a brief recital has hereinabove been given. Obviously, the circumstances, taken together, afford reasonable ground for the support of such a theory, and the district attorney was justified in advancing it. "The district attorney," says the court in People v. Rossi, 37 Cal. App. 778, 782, 174 P. 916, 918, "has the right in argument to build up a theory of his case as it is made by the evidence, and often in doing so he may give expression to thoughts which have been drawn from the realms of his imagination. If thus he keeps within the general character of the case as it is made by the proofs, then he remains within the sphere of legitimate argument. * * * As was said in People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 154, 160, 72 P. 965, in reply to an objection that the district attorney abused his rights in his argument to the jury, so it may with equal propriety be said here: 'A defendant on trial for murder is not entitled as of right to be spoken of as if he were an innocent man in an argument by the officer who is endeavoring to show his guilt.' Hence, it has been well said that, in his address to the jury, a prosecuting officer may descant upon the facts proved or admitted; arraign the conduct of the parties or the witnesses; 'impugn, excuse, fortify, or condemn motives, as far as they are developed in the evidence; assail the credibility of witnesses, when impeached by direct evidence, or by the inconsistency of incoherence of their testimony, * * * their appearance upon the stand, or by circumstances. His illustrations may be as varied as the resources of his genius; his argumentation as full and profound as his learning can make it; and he may, if he will, give play to his wit, or wings to his imagination.'" Tucker v. Henniker, 41 N. H. 323. See, also, People v. Molina, 126 Cal. 505, 59 P. 34; People v. McMahon, 124 Cal. 436, 57 P. 224; People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 12, 87 P. 1016; People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 86 P. 671; People v. Wheeler, 65 Cal. 77, 2 P. 892; People v. Ye Foo, 4 Cal. App. 730, 741, 742, 89 P. 450.

What is here said obviously disposes of the complaint that the court erred to the prejudice of the accused in declining to instruct the jury to disregard the criticised language of the prosecutor in his address to the jury. The court below held, as we hold, that the district attorney was well within his rights in expressing to the jury his views, founded upon all the circumstances, as to how the iron bar happened to be in the position, in point of proximity to the body of the deceased, in which the witness Albertson and other witnesses saw it shortly following the homicide.

The case was ably and carefully tried, the accused accorded a perfectly fair trial, and a reflective consideration of the evidence seems to indicate that, as before suggested, the jury were extremely merciful to the accused in reducing his offense to that of manslaughter.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

200 Cal. 39

LIPTAK v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 11633.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1926.)

1. Master and servant 🔑385(11¼)—Employee having but one eye, and losing it by injury, sustained permanent total disability within Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831, § 9, subd. [b], par. 2 [10], section 11, subd. [f], and section 69, subd. [a]).

Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, § 9, subd. (b), par. 2 (10), being susceptible of construction in light of section 69, subd. (a), that percentage of permanent disability caused by an injury shall be computed without reference to any injury previously suffered or any permanent disability caused thereby, held to authorize award under section 9 and section 11, subd. (f), of total permanent disability to employee having but one eye and losing it.

2. Master and servant 🔑348—Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 liberally construed (St. 1917, p. 831, § 69, subd. [a]).

Where a provision of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, is susceptible of an interpretation either beneficial or detrimental to an injured employee, court is required, under section 69, subd. (a), to adopt construction beneficial to such employee.

In Bank.

Petition by John Liptak for writ of review to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for injuries. Award annulled.

Robert M. Searls and Milton L. Schmitt, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Frank J. Creede and G. C. Faulkner, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

R. P. Wisecarver, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

PER CURIAM. A rehearing was granted herein, in order that the court might give further consideration to the matters presented by respective counsel upon application therefor. Upon resubmission of the cause the court is satisfied with the correctness of its opinion heretofore filed herein, and hereby adopts the same and reaffirms the order directed to be made therein. Said opinion reads as follows:

The petitioner seeks to review an award made by the respondent Industrial Accident Commission for the loss of petitioner's remaining eye. The only point involved in the proceeding is whether or not the respondent commission erred in not awarding petitioner more than 26¼ per cent. disability rating for the loss of his remaining eye on July 28, 1924, through an industrial accident. The other eye had been lost many years previously through a nonindustrial accident. It is contended by the petitioner that under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (Stats. 1917, c. 586, p. 831) he should have been given a total permanent disability rating.

We quote the pertinent provisions of the act:

Section 9 (b) (2):

"(9) The following permanent disabilities shall be conclusively presumed to be total in character: Loss of both eyes or the sight thereof; loss of both hands or the use thereof; an injury resulting in a practically total paralysis; an injury to the brain resulting in incurable imbecility or insanity. In all other cases, permanent total disability shall be determined in accordance with the fact.

"(10) The percentage of permanent disability caused by any injury shall be so computed as to cover the permanent disability caused by that particular injury without reference to any injury previously suffered or any permanent disability caused thereby."

Section 11, paragraph (f):

"The fact that an employee has suffered a previous disability, or receives compensation therefor, shall not preclude him from compensation for a later injury, or his dependents from compensation for death resulting therefrom, but in determining compensation for the later injury, or death resulting therefrom, his average annual earnings shall be fixed at such sum as will reasonably represent his annual capacity at the time of the later injury."

Section 69, paragraph (a):

> "Whenever this act, or any part or section thereof, is interpreted by a court, it shall be liberally construed by such court with the purpose of extending the benefits of the act for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment."

It is contended by petitioner that—

> "The provisions of section 9, above quoted, expressly fix the loss of the sight of both eyes as a permanent disability. If the sight of one eye has already been lost then an accident causing the loss of the remaining eye results in the loss of the sight of both eyes, that is, total blindness, the condition contemplated by subdivision 9 as requiring a permanent disability rating."

The respondent commission concedes that the above-quoted provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act "are possibly susceptible of different constructions." To justify the award, however, it sets forth a brief history of the legislation, stating, in effect, that two reasons prompted the enactment of subdivision 10 of section 9 (b) (2), above quoted, namely: (1) Public policy—it was thought that serious discrimination by employers against employees having but one eye might result if a heavy liability were imposed upon the employer in whose service the remaining eye was lost; and (2) the allaying of uncertainty as to whether or not the appellate courts of the state would uphold its awards under the law as it stood before the enactment of said subdivision 10 of section 9 (b) (2). It is then concluded by the respondent commission that—

> "In view of the probability that the California Workmen's Compensation Act as enacted in 1913 would have been interpreted to allow a 100 per cent. disability for loss of a second eye, it would seem that the adoption of subdivision 10 of section 9 (b) (2) can be explained only upon the theory that the Legislature desired to avoid this conclusion."

A brief was also filed by the State Compensation Insurance Fund, which states, in substance, that the only issue is the proper construction to be given to section 9 (b) (2) (10) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and that in construing this section due consideration should be accorded to the interpretation given it by the Industrial Accident Commission for the past 10 years, to the history of the amendment, its purposes, and to public policy.

In reply to these two briefs the petitioner asserts that—

> "The provisions of section 9 (b) (2) (10) admit of the construction for which the petitioner here contends; that it is the plain duty of the court under the further provisions of section 69 of the act to give petitioner the benefit of every doubt, if any exists in the mind of the court, in construing that section so as to make it effective for his benefit."

[1, 2] It is plain to us from the ambiguous and uncertain language of subdivision 10 of section 9 (b) (2) that it is, in a sense, susceptible of either of the constructions contended for, and that it might, were it not for paragraph (a) of section 69, support either interpretation. The language of the subdivision is such that it may properly and reasonably be said to support the construction urged by petitioner, namely, that the percentage of permanent disability caused by an injury shall be computed without reference to any injury previously suffered or any permanent disability caused thereby, which, in the case of an employee having but one eye and losing it, would be a total permanent disability. Where, as here, a provision of the act is susceptible of an interpretation either beneficial or detrimental to an injured employee, we are called upon, under the provisions of section 69, to adopt the construction beneficial to such employee.

That the loss of a remaining eye through an industrial accident results in permanent total disability would seem to be suggested by the declarations of appellate courts in other jurisdictions. In Branconnier v. Travelers' Insurance Co., 111 N. E. 792, 223 Mass. 273, the court declared:

> "The total capacity of this employee was not so great as it would have been if he had had two sound eyes. His total capacity was thus only a part of that of the normal man. But that capacity, which was all he had, has been transferred into a total incapacity by reason of the injury."

It is stated in Re J. & P. Coats, 103 A. 833, 41 R. I. 289, that—

> "The resulting total and permanent loss of vision must be productive of the same disability, whether the injured person before the accident had one or two eyes. In the case of the man with one eye the employer is not by this interpretation made to give him compensation for the earlier loss of the other eye, as seems to be suggested, inasmuch as the compensation to be paid is based upon the presumably fair wage paid the employee for his earning capacity at the time of the injury, which totally deprived him of that capacity."

We quote from Brooks v. Peerless Oil Co., 83 So. 663, 146 La. 383, the following:

> "The rationale of these Employers' Liability Acts is that the employment in which the workman has been disabled owes him a living, and it stands to reason that the workman is as totally disabled from work by the loss of one eye as by the loss of two, if he had but one, and by the impairment of the sight as much as by the loss of it, if the impairment be to such a degree as to disable entirely from work. In speaking of the workman being only partially disabled by the loss of one eye, one arm, or one foot, the Employers' Liability Act has reference, evidently to the normal man, having both eyes, arms, or feet."

We find no merit in the contention of respondent commission that the decisions of other jurisdictions are distinguishable and not controlling, for the reason that no provision similar to our subdivision 10 of section 9 (b) (2) was involved, for, as already indicated, this subdivision is ambiguous and open to possible conflicting interpretations and must, under section 69, be construed in favor of the injured employee.

In view of the foregoing, the award of the respondent commission is annulled, and the Industrial Accident Commission is hereby ordered and directed to make and enter an award of permanent total disability in favor of petitioner.

---

199 Cal. 750

In re FLEMING'S ESTATE.

FLEMING v. DOVER et al.

(L. A. 9209.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1926.)

1. Trial 🔑168—Court has power to direct verdict.

In proper case, court has full power to direct jury to render verdict.

2. Judgment 🔑199(3)—Denial of motion for directed verdict because grounds were not sufficiently stated does not prevent granting judgment, notwithstanding verdict (Code Civ. Proc. § 629).

That motion for directed verdict was properly denied because grounds thereof were not sufficiently stated, does not bar granting motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict; Code Civ. Proc. § 629, relating to granting of motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict in a case in which motion for directed verdict "should have been granted" on the evidence.

3. Trial 🔑143—Substantial conflict in evidence is necessary to deprive court of power to direct verdict.

It is not necessary that there should be absence of conflict in evidence to warrant direction of verdict, but court is deprived of such right only where there is substantial conflict.

4. Wills 🔑166(1)—Will held not procured by undue influence.

Evidence held not to show that will was procured by undue influence on testator.

5. Wills 🔑163(1)—Burden of proof respecting undue influence is on contestant.

Burden of proof on issue of undue influence in procuring will is on contestant, and not on beneficiary not in confidential relation to testator, nor participating in procuring will.

6. Wills 🔑324(3)—Proponent's motion for directed verdict on issue of undue influence should be granted, unless evidence supports finding thereof.

In will contest on ground of undue influence, proponent's motion for directed verdict should be granted, unless evidence is sufficient to legally support finding of undue influence.

7. Wills 🔑166(7)—Mere proof of opportunity, coupled with motive, does not sustain finding of undue influence.

Mere proof of opportunity to influence testator's mind, though coupled with interest or motive to do so, will not sustain finding of undue influence, in absence of testimony showing pressure operating directly on testamentary act and affecting terms of testament.

8. Wills 🔑159—General influence not operating on testamentary act is no ground for setting aside will of person of sound mind.

General influence not operating on testamentary act, however controlling, is not such undue influence as will afford ground for setting aside of will of person of sound mind.

9. Wills 🔑82—Unnaturalness of will is not alone sufficient to overturn it.

Objection that will of testator having testamentary capacity is unnatural is not alone sufficient to overturn will.

10. Wills 🔑82—Will excluding testator's mother held not unnatural.

Facts held to show that will leaving property to sister of testator's former wife, to exclusion of his aged mother, was not unnatural.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Proceeding by Ruth Dover and others to probate the will of Fred Fleming, otherwise known as Ferdinand Fleming, deceased, opposed by Henrietta Fleming. From a judgment admitting the will to probate, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Tobias R. Archer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles (H. F. Clary, of Pomona, of counsel), for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. A petition was presented in the court below for the probate of an instrument purporting to be the olographic will of the decedent, Fred Fleming, by the terms of which he bequeathed his entire estate to Ruth Dover. Henrietta Fleming, surviving mother of the deceased, filed a contest alleging that the decedent was of unsound mind, and had not testamentary capacity, and that the will was the result of the undue influence of Ruth Dover, J. C. Duncan, and Kathryn Duncan, who were named as respondents. The matter was heard before a jury, and at the close of the contestant's opening proof the respondents moved the court for a nonsuit as to each of the grounds of contest, but the motion was denied. When the evidence was all in, and before the cause was submitted to the jury, the respondents moved the court for a directed verdict on each and all of the grounds of contest. That motion was also denied. In answer to special interrogatories submitted to it, the jury found the deceased was competent, but that at the time of the execution of the will he was not free from undue influence exerted on him by the Duncans and Mrs. Dover. The respondents thereupon moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict of undue influence, and the motion was granted. The will was admitted to probate, and the respondent J. C. Duncan was appointed administrator. The contestant has appealed, claiming that the motion for a directed verdict was properly denied, and that the lower court therefore erred in subsequently granting the motion for a substituted judgment.

[1, 2] It is a settled rule of law regarding trials by jury that in a proper case the court has full power to direct the jury to render a verdict. Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 459, 177 P. 283. When a motion for a directed verdict, which should have been granted, has been denied, and a verdict rendered against the moving party, it is the duty of the court, at any time before the entry of judgment, either of its own motion or on motion of the aggrieved party, to render judgment in favor of the party aggrieved, notwithstanding the verdict. Code Civ. Proc. § 629. Appellant is here contending that the power of the trial court in these matters is limited, by the provision of the section, supra, to granting a motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict in those cases in which the antecedent motion for a directed verdict "should have been granted," and that, therefore, if for any reason the motion for a direction by the court was properly denied, the court is without power to grant the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Her first contention is that the motion for a directed verdict was properly denied, for the reason that the grounds on which it was based were not sufficiently stated, from which it follows, she argues, the court had no authority to grant the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Assuming, but not deciding, that the motion for a directed verdict was properly denied for the reason stated, it does not follow that such denial was a bar to the granting of the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Appellant was not injured. Had the motion for a directed verdict been granted on an assignment of grounds which was insufficient, and the contestant thereby deprived of the opportunity to meet objections, which should have been more precisely stated, by introducing other evidence, she would be in position to complain. But that did not happen. The motion was denied, and the case was submitted to the jury, carrying with it the benefit of the court's ruling in the contestant's favor. We are of the view that section 629 of the Code of Civil Procedure relates to the granting of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict in a case in which the motion for a directed verdict "should have been granted" on the evidence, and does not lend itself to the narrow construction appellant attempts to put upon it. Her first contention must therefore fail.

[3] Appellant's second contention is that the motion for a directed verdict in this case was properly denied, for the reason that the evidence was sufficient to take the case to the jury. The trial court had power to direct the jury to render a verdict in favor of the respondents, unless there was substantial evidence tending to prove all the controverted facts necessary to establish the contestant's case. It was not necessary that there should have been an utter absence of conflict in the evidence. To deprive the court of the right to exercise its power, if there was a conflict, it must have been a substantial one. Estate of Sharon, supra, 459 (177 P. 283); Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 123 P. 267. The question as to whether or not at the time of the execution of the will the decedent, Fleming, was of unsound mind and incompetent to make testamentary disposition of his estate is disposed of by the contrary verdict of the jury. The appellant is not here complaining of that finding. The only issue, therefore, remaining in the case is that of undue influence on the part of the respondents over the mind of the decedent at the time of the execution of the will. The contention in that regard presented by the pleadings is, briefly, that the decedent was, on January 1, 1923, and prior thereto, weak and debilitated in body and mind from the use of intoxicating liquor for many years, which, with consequent dependence on his part on the Duncans, and ten years' employment by Mr. Duncan, causing a confidential relation in which respondents assumed to act as Fleming's confidential advisers, enabled them to easily influence, dominate, control, and direct the decedent, and that they did unduly influence him to make the will in their favor.

[4-6] The evidence does not support the contention of the appellant. Ruth Dover, the beneficiary under the will, is a widow with five children. She is a cripple, without adequate resources, and partly dependent upon her sister and brother-in-law, the respondents Kathryn and J. C. Duncan. There is no evidence that she exercised any influence over Fleming. She sustained no confidential relation to the testator, so far as the record discloses, and did not participate in any way in procuring the execution of the will. No burden was, therefore, cast upon her to show that the will was not the result of undue influence. The burden of proof rested on the contestant. Therefore, unless the evidence was of such a nature that it was sufficient to legally support a finding of undue influence, the motion for a directed verdict should have been granted. See Estate of Baird, 176 Cal. 381, 384, 168 P. 561.

Appellant sought by her evidence to establish that the Duncans, and particularly

Kathryn Duncan, brought about the execution of the will. Briefly, the facts are that Fleming was addicted to the use of strong drink from boyhood. He married the respondent Kathryn Duncan, then Kathryn Root, in 1895, and they lived together for 15 years, when, because of Fleming's excessive use of liquor, they separated. Mrs. Fleming obtained a divorce, but there appears to have been an entire absence of bitterness between the two. During their separation, and after the granting of the divorce, they were on friendly terms, and subsequently lived together for about 3 years. Fleming continuing his drinking, Mrs. Fleming again left him, and he was for a time committed to the State Hospital for treatment for his intemperance. In 1917 Mrs. Fleming married the respondent J. C. Duncan, and the two are now husband and wife. The friendly relations between Fleming and his former wife continued after her marriage to Duncan, and Fleming was employed by Duncan, and apparently continued to work for him until the time of his death. He was a frequent and apparently a welcome visitor at the home of the Duncans. He was a competent and trustworthy workman, and Duncan gave him steady employment and paid him well. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan advised him, and apparently assisted him in saving and accumulating his wages. He frequently expressed his gratitude to them for the way in which they befriended him, and stated that he desired to make a will in favor of Mrs. Duncan. His offer was declined by both Mr. and Mrs. Duncan, who told him they did not need to be thus remembered, and that they did not want his money. In spite of frequent statements to that effect on the part of the Duncans, Fleming persisted in his desire to leave his estate to his former wife. Finally, both Mr. and Mrs. Duncan suggested that the decedent leave his property to Mrs. Dover, and the result was the making of the will here in question.

[7-9] There is no question but that the Duncans were so situated as to have had ample opportunity to dominate the mind of Fleming, if that were possible, and they had been so disposed; but mere proof of opportunity to influence a testator's mind, even when coupled with an interest or motive to do so, will not sustain a finding of undue influence, in the absence of testimony showing that there was pressure operating directly on the testamentary act, and to such an extent as to affect the terms of the testament. Estate of Kilborn, 162 Cal. 4. 11, 120 P. 762; Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 128 P. 932. In order to establish that a will has been executed under undue influence, it is necessary to show, not only that such influence has been exercised, but also that it has produced an effect upon the mind of the testator by which the will he executes is not the expression of his own desire. The presumption of undue influence is not raised by proof of interest and opportunity alone. Estate of Bryson, 91 Cal. 521, 541, 217 P. 525. The respondents Duncan have no interest in the will, and the record is silent as to the circumstances attending its actual execution. When or where it was executed, or who was present, does not appear, and it is not shown that any one knew the circumstances of its execution. As in Estate of Clark, 170 Cal. 418, 149 P. 828, it may be said that—

> "The evidence utterly fails to reach the dignity of proof of that sort of pressure which overpowered the mind and mastered the volition of the testator at the very moment of the testamentary act. Without such proof no will should be held invalid on the ground of undue influence."

It must be borne in mind that the jury has found that Fleming was competent to make a will. General influence, not brought to bear upon the testamentary act, however controlling, is not such undue influence as will afford ground for setting aside a will of a person of sound mind. Estate of Donovan, 140 Cal. 390, 394, 73 P. 1081.

Appellant has built her contention of undue influence exerted on the decedent in bringing about the execution of the will very largely on the theory that, because of Fleming's excessive use of intoxicating liquor, he was susceptible to the direction and dominance of the Duncans, for whom, as the evidence shows, he had an apparent affectionate regard. There is no doubt, from the evidence, that at times Fleming drank to excess, but he appears to have been a man of ordinary intelligence and capacity, and was a competent and trustworthy workman. It is possible for long-continued use of intoxicating liquor to so permanently impair the intellectual faculties of the person indulging in it as to render him or her incompetent to do any legal act. "But the question, in a case like the one at bar, always is, not what might have been the mental condition of the testator at the time of the execution of the will, but what was that condition." Estate of Wilson, 117 Cal. 262, 275, 49 P. 172, 176 and 711. On that question the record is silent. The evidence affords no pretense for contending that Fleming was intoxicated at the time of his testamentary act, nor does it support the theory of appellant that his mind was so impaired by the use of liquor as to render it susceptible to undue and improper influence in arranging his final affairs.

[10] Appellant insists that the will is unnatural, and that it is contrary to the expressed intention of the decedent, for which reasons, she asserts, undue influence in its procurement must be presumed. The contention rests upon the fact that she testified that her son had, upon occasions, indicated that he proposed to leave his money to her, and that prior to his death he had delivered to her the bank book covering the deposit of his savings, under a belief that he was thereby transferring the money to her. There is no merit in the contention. Estate of Donovan, supra. If the will here could be considered unnatural, the objection would not be sufficient to overturn it in the face of the established fact of testamentary capacity in Fleming at the time it was executed. Estate of Wilson, supra, 278 (49 P. 172). His will is not unnatural. He had no intimate friends other than the Duncans, and had no close relatives other than his mother. He apparently held her in affectionate regard, but rarely discussed his affairs with her. She was quite old, and there is evidence from which it may be gathered that she was sufficiently well cared for. These, and the other facts and circumstances surrounding the testator prior to and at the time of making his will, will constitute a reasonable explanation of his testamentary act, and a clear intent to do it with a full and present knowledge of conditions and consequences. See Estate of Wilson, supra. The fact that he said that his mother must not be informed of his making his will is of but little consequence, and falls readily within the explanation of his entire conduct just referred to.

There is much in the somewhat lengthy record which tends to shed light on the situation and relation of all the parties to this controversy and the cirucmstances under which Fleming's will was made. From our examination of the evidence, we are satisfied that the trial court was correct in its conclusion that Fleming's mind was not held under subjugation by the respondents, or either of them, and that the will was not brought about by the exercise of undue influence exerted upon him. The motion for a directed verdict should have been granted. Consequently the court had power, and it was its duty, to enter judgment in favor of the respondents below notwithstanding the verdict of the jury rendered on the issue of undue influence.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SEAWELL, J.; FINLAYSON, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; CURTIS, J.

80 Cal. App. 222

VIEUX et al. v. VIEUX. (Civ. 4657.) *

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 10, 1926.)

1. Husband and wife 🔑263—Circumstances of purchase of property should be considered in determining spouses' rights therein.

For purpose of determining respective property rights of husband and wife, circumstances surrounding purchase of property should be considered.

2. Husband and wife 🔑266—Status of property may be changed from separate to community, and vice versa, by agreement between spouses.

By agreement between husband and wife, status of property owned by them may be changed from separate to community, and vice versa.

3. Husband and wife 🔑254—Facts found held to warrant conclusion that property husband contracted to buy before marriage belonged to both spouses, at least so far as paid for from community funds.

Facts found held to warrant conclusion that property, which husband contracted to purchase before marriage, was property of both husband and wife, at least so far as community funds contributed to payment of purchase price.

4. Husband and wife 🔑254—Property husband contracted to purchase before marriage should be considered community, so far as community funds participated in its acquisition or protection (Civ. Code, §§ 163, 654).

Husband's ownership, to exclude wife's interest entirely, must be absolute under Civ. Code, § 163, declaring all property owned by husband before marriage his separate property, though section 654 and other statutes specify right of exclusive possession and use as indicia of ownership, and property which husband contracted to purchase on installments before marriage should be considered "community," so far as community funds participated in acquisition or protection of vested rights therein.

5. Husband and wife 🔑265—Wife cannot be excluded from home, though husband had right of possession under purchase contract made before marriage (Civ. Code, § 157).

Under Civ. Code, § 157, wife cannot be excluded from property used by her and husband as their home, though he had right of possession and use under contract, made before marriage, to purchase it on installments.

6. Husband and wife 🔑254—Property purchased before marriage is separate property, though not conveyed nor paid for until after marriage, except as paid by community.

Property purchased by one spouse before marriage is separate property, though deed is not executed and delivered, and part of purchase price is not paid, until after marriage, in absence of showing that any part of balance was paid with community funds, and is community, in any event, only to extent and in proportion that purchase price is contributed by community.

7. Husband and wife 🔑254—Community interest is entitled to share in title to property, which husband contracted to purchase before marriage, in proportion to amount paid by community.

Where required conditions of contract, made by husband before marriage, to purchase property on installments, were met with funds furnished by community after marriage and funds

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 7, 1927.

issuing directly from property itself, community interest was entitled to share in title in same proportion as amount contributed to purchase price by community bore to total amount paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Action by Hubert A. Vieux against Coralyn A. Vieux, who filed a cross-complaint against Aristide Vieux and wife. From part of the judgment rendered, defendant appeals. Reversed with direction.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles (F. C. Stevens, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Fogel & Beman and Niles C. Folsom, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a part of the judgment rendered in a suit for divorce.

The facts material to this inquiry are set forth in the findings by the trial court as follows:

> "That shortly prior to the marriage * * * plaintiff and defendant discussed and considered the purchase of lot 24, and together viewed said property, and it was agreed between them that said property would be a desirable purchase. That prior to said marriage the plaintiff entered into a contract for the purchase of said property * * * and the plaintiff did, at the time of entering into said contract, pay the sum of $280 on account of the purchase price thereof, and immediately took possession of said property. That thereafter plaintiff and defendant married, and after their marriage the plaintiff and defendant expended on said real estate from community funds, for payment on account of principal, interest, and taxes, the sum of $553.68. That subsequent to the marriage of plaintiff and defendant, to wit, on or about the 25th day of November, 1921, the plaintiff received the sum of $2,200 as payment for a bonus for the execution of an oil lease covering said property, and that said sum of $2,200 was paid by the plaintiff on account of the balance of the purchase price on said property. That subsequent to the payment of said sum of $2,200 the plaintiff executed and delivered a deed of conveyance to said property to his parents, Aristide Vieux and Stephanus Vieux. That the plaintiff received no consideration from his parents for the execution and delivery of said deed, but said conveyance was made by the plaintiff for the purpose of getting the property out of his name and avoiding any claim or right which the defendant might have in said property. * * * That, during the married life of the plaintiff and defendant, they accumulated community property to the amount and value of $713.60. That of said sum $553.68 was expended in and upon the hereinabove described real property."

From said findings it was adjudged and decreed that the defendant Coralyn A. Vieux had no right, title, or interest in and to the the real property to which reference was made in the findings, but that said defendant "have and recover from said plaintiff the sum of $713.60, the value of the community property in the possession of said plaintiff, the sum of $150 as attorney's fees, and for the sum of $50 per month from November 16, 1922, until the further order of court, as alimony."

It is appellant's contention that that part of the judgment to which reference has just been had, to wit, that the defendant Coralyn A. Vieux had no right, title, or interest in and to the property in question, is not supported by the findings, for the reason that the findings show that the said real property, or a portion thereof, was either the separate property of the defendant, or that it was community property of plaintiff and defendant, or at least that defendant has some right, title, or interest therein.

The ultimate question presented to this court for its determination is whether, in the circumstances as set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, the property therein referred to was the separate property of the husband. Although the findings do not specifically so state, it may be inferred therefrom that the total purchase price of the property was in the neighborhood of $3,000—the sum of $280 having been paid by the husband prior to the marriage, the sum of $553.68 thereafter having been paid out of the community funds, and the further sum of $2,200, derived from the bonus for an oil lease on the property, having been used to complete the purchase price. It is therefore apparent that, so far as outlay on the part of the husband from his separate property was concerned in acquiring the property in question, he actually expended the sum of $280, or somewhat less than one-tenth of the purchase price; while the sum of $553.68, or approximately one-fifth of the purchase price, was contributed from funds belonging to the community.

Section 163 of the Civil Code provides that:

> "All property owned by the husband before marriage, * * * with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is his separate property."

The only case arising in this state, having a direct bearing upon the facts herein, to which the attention of this court has been directed, is that of Martin v. Martin, 52 Cal. 235, wherein it was held that, if a husband purchased land on credit and afterward paid a portion of the price with his separate property, and he and his wife secured the remainder of the purchase price with their joint note and a mortgage on the same, and he then sold a part of the land at a profit, and with the profit and proceeds paid the note, and with the remainder, increased by some of his separate property, built a house on the land not sold, the land not sold, and the house thereon, were the separate property of the husband.

It will be noted that the facts in the Martin Case differ from the facts in the instant case, particularly in that in the Martin Case no community funds were used in payment of the property, while in the instant case a large portion of the purchase price was paid by the community. A reading of the opinion in that case discloses the fact that the Supreme Court limits the decision to the point that the circumstance that the wife executed a joint note and mortgage with her husband in payment of the balance of the purchase price of the property could not affect the property rights of the parties, and that the Supreme Court expressly declined to decide whether the profits derived from the sale of a portion of the property purchased by the husband were community property.

[1-3] For the purpose of determining the respective property rights of the husband and the wife, the circumstances surrounding the purchase of the property should receive consideration. While no transcript of the evidence received on the trial of the action has been presented to this court, sufficient facts are set forth in the findings to enable this court to perceive that, prior to the marriage, the parties together viewed the property and concluded that it was desirable for community purposes. The fact that thereafter they may have used it in that manner, and applied community funds in payment of the purchase price of the property, confirms the thought that, as between the husband and the wife, the property was considered as "community" rather than "separate." The authorities are in accord that by agreement between husband and wife the status of any property owned by them may be changed from separate to community, and vice versa. While no finding of the court recites the fact that the parties were "agreed," either at the time of the purchase or at any time thereafter, that the property in question was "community," their action in the premises at least encourages the belief that before the marriage each of them considered the property as being prospectively "community" and after marriage the property was to be improved, sustained, supported and finally completely and absolutely owned by them by reason of their common and joint efforts and savings. In the circumstances here present, it requires no wild stretch of the imagination to perceive a "meeting of the minds" without the form of express words, either spoken or written, to the effect that the property in question was not considered by the parties as exclusively in the husband, with the wife having absolutely no material right, title, or interest therein; but, to the contrary, that the property was "theirs," each of the parties enjoying therein equal rights and privileges, at least as far as the community funds contributed to the payment of the purchase price thereof. In effect, it was somewhat in the nature of a partnership relationship that existed between the parties—the husband on the one side, and the community consisting of the husband and the wife, on the other side.

[4] For purposes affecting strangers, the acquisition, through an installment contract, of the right to purchase real property, may be considered as ownership of such property, in that such holding may entitle the intending purchaser to the possession and the use of the property to the exclusion of others; but, as between husband and wife, where community funds are used to a considerable extent in the payment of the purchase price, the meaning of the statute relating to the definition of separate and community property of spouses cannot be so limited. The confidential relationship existing between husband and wife forbids such a strict construction to be placed upon the statute as will destroy the probable intent of the husband and wife with reference to the manner in which the ownership of the property is enjoyed. Any other construction in these days of liberal terms, with reference to installment purchase price contracts for the sale of real property, including the possible provision of "a dollar down and a dollar per week," would permit a husband or a prospective husband, to buy or to agree to buy any reasonable quantity of lots or lands on the payment by him from his separate funds of a comparatively insignificant sum and thereafter to pay practically the entire purchase price from the community funds, and yet successfully maintain that, because in its inception the naked right to purchase, carrying with it the right of use and possession, was his separate property, it so remained. It would seem improbable that, through general definitions of terms, the intention of the lawmakers was to bring about a result which, in many if not a majority of instances, would be of so disastrous and unjust a consequence. Rather should it be assumed that, when the Legislature undertook to define separate property as that owned by the husband before marriage, even though in other statutes the right of exclusive possession and use was specified as the indicia of ownership, the "ownership" in the husband through and by virtue of which the wife's interest would be entirely excluded, would necessarily be an absolute ownership, as distinguished from a limited ownership, and that, so far as community funds might participate in the acquisition or protection of vested rights, to that extent proportionally should the property be considered as "community."

[5] In general terms, as provided by section 654 of the Civil Code, "the ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of others." While under the qualified ownership of the husband of the property here in question it is probable that he had the right of possession and use of it, if it may be assumed that the husband and wife were using it as their home (which fact, however, does not appear by the findings), the wife could not be excluded therefrom. Civ. Code, § 157.

[6] In passing upon the meaning of the word "owner," as contained in a provision of a city charter, the Supreme Court of this state has ruled that "the term 'owner' includes any person having a claim or interest in real property, though less than an absolute fee." Higgins v. City of San Diego, 131 Cal. 294, 304, 63 P. 470, 476. That authority, however, can be regarded as nothing more than a generality, so far as the facts in the instant case are concerned. Cases from other jurisdictions, particularly Guye v. Guye, 63 Wash. 340, 115 P. 731, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186; Barrett v. Franke, 46 Nev. 170, 208 P. 435, and Heintz v. Brown, 46 Wash. 387, 90 P. 211, 123 Am. St. Rep. 937, in effect to hold that, in circumstances analogous to those indicated in the findings herein, to which reference has been had, a part of property involved may be regarded as community and a part as separate—depending upon conditions, not essentially on the manner in which the contract for the purchase of the property was entered into or ostensibly acquired, but rather upon the manner in which the payments were made; and, while the principle announced in such decisions has been subjected to some criticism, the administration of strict justice to the parties concerned, rather than the application to the facts of the hard rules of law, lends an appealing force to the conclusions reached in the cases to which reference has been had. The governing rule is indicated in 5 Ruling Case Law, p. 834, as follows:

> "Thus property purchased by one spouse before marriage is separate property, though the deed therefor is not executed and delivered until after marriage, and this is true though a part of the purchase price is not paid until after marriage, in the absence of a showing that any part of the balance was paid with community funds. In any event it would be community property only to the extent and in the proportion that the purchase price is contributed by the community."

[7] In the instant case, the husband having acquired an inchoate right, on compliance with certain conditions, to become an absolute owner of the property in question, and the facts showing that the required conditions were met with funds furnished by the community, aided by other funds issuing directly from the property agreed to be purchased, justice demands that the rights of the parties should be measured by the direct contributions made by the respective parties to the purchase price of the property. Accordingly, the judgment of the trial court herein should have indicated that the community interest was entitled to share in the title to the property in the same proportion as the amount contributed to the purchase price by the community, to wit, $553.68, bore to the sum of $833.86—the total amount paid by the respective parties therefor.

It is ordered that that part of the judgment from which the appeal herein is taken be and the same is reversed; and the trial court be and it is directed to enter a new judgment on its findings of fact in accordance with the law as indicated by the opinion herein.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 293

PEOPLE v. McGOWAN. (Cr. 1315.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 16, 1926.)

1. Witnesses 🔑277(2)—Defendant's testimony that he was not at scene of attempted robbery opened door for cross-examination as to where he was, and with whom.

Where defendant, charged with attempted robbery, had testified that he had not run away from garage attempted to be held up, as stated by prosecuting witness, between certain hours, his testimony opened door for cross-examination as to where he had been, and with whom he was, during hours mentioned.

2. Witnesses 🔑277(1)—Defendant offering himself as witness is subject to same rules of cross-examination as other witnesses (Pen. Code, § 1323).

Where defendant in criminal action waives privilege under Pen. Code, § 1323, and offers himself as witness in his own behalf, he is subject to same rules of cross-examination as any other witness.

3. Criminal law 🔑696(3)—Defendant's testimony that he was taking lady home at time of attempted robbery, was properly stricken, where he refused to disclose name of lady (Pen. Code, § 1323).

Where defendant, charged with attempted robbery, had testified that he was not at scene of attempted robbery, but was taking lady home at that time, his testimony was properly stricken, when he refused on cross-examination to disclose name of lady, in view of Pen. Code, § 1323.

4. Criminal law 🔑1122(4)—Instruction as to evidence of previous conviction held properly refused, where transcript showed no reference to prior conviction.

Refusal of instruction relating to presumption of defendant's innocence in spite of prior conviction, which was given in part, and of instruction relating to purpose of evidence of previous conviction, held proper, where transcript of evidence contained no reference to defendant's prior conviction.

5. Criminal law ⚷815(9)—Instruction confining jury's consideration to evidence offered by prosecution held properly refused.

Instruction that, if there was reasonable doubt whether prosecution had offered sufficient proof of attempted robbery, jury must find defendant not guilty, held properly refused, since jury were not entitled to consider proof merely offered, and were not confined to consideration of evidence produced by prosecution.

6. Criminal law ⚷814(2)—Instruction that jury could consider testimony of defendant which was properly stricken held properly refused.

Instruction that jury, being sole judges of facts, must consider testimony given under oath by defendant, regardless of court's order striking same out, held properly refused, where testimony had been properly stricken from record.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Martin McGowan was convicted of attempt to commit robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. Appellant was convicted of the crime of attempt to commit robbery, and from such judgment of conviction and an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial has appealed.

At about 1:40 or 1:50 o'clock on the morning of May 4, 1925, appellant was taken to the Mission Emergency Hospital in San Francisco suffering from a gunshot wound in the abdomen. He was in a serious condition, and an operation was deemed necessary. While the doctor was preparing appellant for the operating room, William Anderson, the complaining witness, was brought in, and identified appellant as the man who attempted to rob him. Respecting the attempted robbery, the complaining witness testified that on May 4, 1925, between midnight and 20 minutes past 12 o'clock he was "held up" at the Sansome Pacific Garage, located at 825 Sansome street, in San Francisco, by three men, one of whom was appellant, McGowan; that he was sitting at a desk in the garage, where he was employed as night man, looking out of the window, and saw three men run up the steps, McGowan being the leading man of the three, and, thinking they were customers wanting gasoline or some supplies, he got up and opened the door, and when he did so he was confronted by McGowan, who pointed a gun at him, and said: "Stick them up, fellow"; that he had his hand on his gun in his coat pocket, and pulled it out and shot; McGowan threw his hands up in the air, and broke the glass in the window; that he stepped in around the doorjamb so as to protect himself; hearing the whole three of them running, he ran out and down the steps, falling over a gun; that he picked up the gun, and ran after them; that the three men got into a car, and drove away; that he shot three shots out of his own gun in the garage, and one outside from his own gun, and one shot outside from the gun he picked up—these two latter shots being fired at the three men as they were driving away.

The defendant offered himself as a witness at the trial, and testified that on the night in question he was shot shortly before 1 o'clock by a man named William Friel, with whom he previously had had trouble; that the shooting occurred in the neighborhood of Tenth and Potrero streets; that, after being shot, he was picked up and conveyed to the hospital; that he did not run away from Mr. Anderson at the garage, as described by Mr. Anderson, on the night in question between 12 and 1 o'clock.

On cross-examination the defendant was asked where he had been before he arrived at Tenth and Potrero streets, and he replied that he had just taken a young lady home. The following questions were asked and answers given:

> "Q. What was the young lady's name? A. I wouldn't care to disclose it, Mr. Murphey.
>
> "Q. What is her address? A. Wouldn't care to disclose that either."

The prosecuting attorney asked the court to instruct the witness to answer the question, and the court so instructed him. At this stage of the proceedings defendant's counsel objected to the question on the ground that it was not cross-examination, and the objection was overruled. Upon defendant's persistent refusal to answer the court made its order striking all of the testimony of the defendant from the record.

[1] Appellant urges five points as error, four of which have to do with the refusal of the court to give certain instructions proposed by the defendant. The other point is that the trial court erred in ordering the testimony of the appellant stricken from the record. On appeal appellant does not urge error in overruling his objection that the questions asked, which he declined to answer, were not proper cross-examination. Indeed, the argument made by appellant assumes them to be such, and in fact they are. Appellant testified that he was not at the Sansome Pacific Garage, at 825 Sansome street, the scene of the attempted robbery, between 12 and 1 o'clock—that is, that he did not run away from the garage, as stated by the prosecuting witness, between 12 and 1 o'clock—and that he was shot by a man named Friel shortly before 1 o'clock in the neighborhood of Tenth and Potrero streets, a considerable distance away. This testimony opened the door for cross-examination as to where he had been and with whom he was during that hour and up to the time he claimed to be shot by Friel. People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 473, 35 P. 80; People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 386, 77 P. 169; People v. Bishop, 134 Cal. 687, 66 P. 976; People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 91, 20 P. 36; People v. Turco, 29 Cal. App. 608, 156 P. 1001; People v. Maughs, 8 Cal. App. 117, 96 P. 407; People v. Davis, 1 Cal. App. 8, 81 P. 716, 88 P. 1101.

The question presented that the trial court erred in striking out the testimony of the defendant because of his refusal to answer pertinent questions on cross-examination has not been passed upon in this state, nor in any other jurisdiction so far as we have been able to find. But two criminal cases are reported holding that the testimony of witnesses should be stricken out when cross-examination is denied. In People v. Cole, 43 N. Y. 508, the court held that—

> "it is error to suffer to go to the jury any evidence given by a witness on direct examination for the people, where by sudden illness or by death of such witness, or other cause without the fault of and beyond the control of the prisoner, he is deprived of his right of cross-examination."

In McElhannon v. State, 94 Va. 229, 26 S. E. 505, the Supreme Court of Georgia holds:

> "When, however, a witness offered for the purpose of proving that the accused had been guilty of gaming on cross-examination declined to answer certain pertinent questions, on the ground that so doing would tend to criminate himself, and it appeared that the design of these questions was to show the extent of the witness' knowledge upon the subject, and perhaps also to test the sincerity or accuracy of his testimony, it was the right of the accused to have all of the witness' testimony on this subject ruled out."

There seems to be no authority in this state on the question of the right of the court to strike out the testimony of a witness in a civil action given on his direct examination for refusing to answer proper questions on cross-examination, but in other jurisdictions, where the question has been passed upon, the courts all seem to be in accord with the rule that, where a party is deprived of the cross-examination of a witness by the act of the opposite party or by the refusal to testify or other misconduct of the witness or by any means other than the act of God, the act of the party himself, or some cause to which he assented, the testimony given on the examination in chief should be stricken out. Sturm v. Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co., 63 N. Y. 87; Smith v. Griffith, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 333, 38 Am. Dec. 639; Gallagher v. Gallagher, 92 App. Div. 138, 87 N. Y. S. 343; St. Charles Savings Bk. v. Denker, 275 Mo. 607, 205 S. W. 208; Sperry v. Estate of Moore, 42 Mich. 353, 4 N. W. 18; Howard v. Chamberlin, Boynton Co., 64 Ga. 697; Clements v. Benjamin and another, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 299; Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 471. "Where a witness refuses to answer pertinent questions on cross-examination, his testimony on his direct examination should be stricken out, especially where the witness is a party testifying in his own behalf." 40 Cyc. 2479.

"A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but if he offer himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. * * *" Pen. Code, § 1323.

[2] There is no difference under our law between a witness in a civil case and a witness in a criminal case. Both witnesses in civil and criminal cases are subject to the same rules of evidence and cross-examination, and there is likewise no difference between a defendant in a civil case and one in a criminal case, excepting that a defendant charged with crime cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself, and, when he offers himself as a witness, he can be cross-examined only respecting matters about which he has testified on his examination in chief, and the fact that he has offered himself as a witness for but a limited purpose cannot be considered by the jury against him, nor can the fact that he has failed to take the witness stand be considered by the jury as indicative of guilt. When the defendant waives these privileges and offers himself as a witness in his own behalf, he is subject to the same rules of cross-examination as any other witness. People v. Rozelle, supra.

[3] Counsel for appellant cites numerous authorities to support his contention that the court exceeded its authority in striking out the testimony of defendant as a punishment for contempt, and that before any punishment can be inflicted the offending party must be adjudged guilty of contempt. These authorities are not in point. The court did not strike out the testimony as a punishment for contempt, but for the reason that through no fault of the prosecution, but through the deliberate act of the defendant himself the prosecution was deprived of the opportunity of cross-examining the defendant. Such cross-examination was proper, as it would have given the prosecution the opportunity to subpœna the young lady the defendant testified he was with about the time the prosecuting witness testified defendant attempted to rob him, in order that he might be contradicted by her if his statement be untrue; that before his testimony be permitted to go to the jury its truth could be subjected to such tests as the experience of ages has shown are necessary to render reliance on it safe, and, where this has been prevented without the fault of the adverse party, the evidence should be excluded. People v. Cole, supra.

The record shows the language of the court in making the order to be:

"The order of the court could be that this defendant be committed to the custody of the sheriff and be held in contempt of court. That does not get us anywhere in determining this issue here, or as far as ending our trial is concerned. The court, however, could take this action. If the defendant refuses to answer, on proper cross-examination, the court will strike from the record all testimony given by this witness. Such is the order."

[4] Appellant complains of the trial court's refusal to give the two following instructions proposed by the defense:

"(a) This presumption of the defendant's innocence, this particular defendant is no less entitled to by reason of the fact that he may have been heretofore convicted of a felony. In other words, he is just as much to be presumed innocent of the commission of the offense here charged against him as would be a person who had never been before convicted of any crime. (b) The only purpose for which you can consider the previous conviction of this defendant is in relation to the defendant as a witness upon the witness stand. One of the methods prescribed for impeaching a witness is to show in a proper manner that he has been convicted of a felony."

After searching the reporter's transcript of the evidence, we are unable to find any reference therein to appellant's prior conviction. It therefore follows that the two foregoing instructions were properly refused. However, it should be observed that that portion of the instruction (a) which we have italicized was given by the trial court.

[5] Appellant also complains of the trial court's refusal to give the following proposed instruction:

"If you have a reasonable doubt as to whether or not the prosecution has offered sufficient proof of an attempt to commit robbery, even though you should believe that the defendant and others drew a pistol on said William Anderson, and therewith assaulted him, you must find the defendant not guilty."

That proposed instruction does not correctly state the law for several reasons, one of them being that the jury are not entitled to consider "proof" which is merely "offered"; they can consider only "evidence" which is "received." Another objection to the proposed instruction is that the jury are not confined to a consideration of the evidence produced by the prosecution; indeed, the jury has a right, and it is its duty, to consider all the evidence received, including that produced by the prosecution, that produced by the defense, and that obtained from the various witnesses upon cross-examination. The trial court, eliminating these objectionable features from the proposed instruction, correctly instructed the jury as follows:

"You are instructed that if, after hearing the evidence, you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that this defendant committed an assault upon the person of the complaining witness, and not in any attempt to commit robbery, and did not attempt to commit robbery, or you have a reasonable doubt upon such matter, you should give the defendant the benefit of that doubt and acquit him."

[6] The other proposed instruction, the refusal to give which is claimed as error, is as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that they, being the sole judges of the facts in the case, must, of course, consider and weigh the testimony here given under oath by the defendant, regardless of the order of the court striking the same out, and, if the evidence of the defendant raises in your minds a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, you must find him not guilty."

It is self-evident that, if the trial court properly ordered appellant's testimony stricken from the record, then the foregoing proposed instruction was properly refused.

In view of our disposition of the errors assigned, there is no merit in the appeal.

The judgment and order appealed from are hereby affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

---

79 Cal. App. 792

JOHNSON v. SEELYE et al. (Civ. 2819.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 22, 1920.)

1. Contracts 🔑28(3)—Evidence in substantial conflict held to sustain finding that there was no agreement to complete water pipe lines by specified date.

Finding that no agreement was made to complete water pipe lines by specified date held sustained by evidence; there being substantial conflict.

2. Appeal and error 🔑882(11)—Defendant, waiving evidence of amount claimed, is not in position to complain of its insufficiency.

Where defendant waived evidence of amounts claimed by plaintiff, he is not in position to complain of finding that such sum was due on ground of insufficiency of evidence.

3. Appeal and error 🔑882(17)—In action on agreed price, where defendants waived evidence of amount of claim, that court found amount claimed was reasonable value held not prejudicial error.

In action based on agreed price, that court found amount claimed was reasonable value of work held not prejudicial error, in view of defendant's waiver of evidence of amount claimed.

4. Contracts 🔑302—Where leaks were to be expected in concrete water pipe lines, and contractor was ready to repair, such leaks held not basis for complaint.

That leaks developed in concrete water pipe lines held not basis for complaint against contractor that work was improperly done, where leaks were to be expected in such kind of pipe lines, and contractor was ready and willing to repair them.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by O. Johnson against Orlando Seelye and another for work and materials. Defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. H. Jolliffe and Archie D. Mitchell, both of Ontario, for appellants.

J. E. Burnham, of Pomona, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action the complaint contains two counts. By the first cause of action plaintiff seeks to recover the sum of $863, alleged to be the reasonable value of a certain line of concrete pipe laid and constructed upon defendants' premises at their special instance and request; and by the second cause of action recovery is sought for the construction of another line of pipe for which defendants, as alleged, agreed to pay plaintiff $73.80. In addition to denying the allegations of the complaint, defendants filed a cross-complaint wherein they alleged the employing of plaintiff to lay both lines of pipe, which were by him to be completed by June 1, 1917; that he failed to comply with his contract in that behalf, as a result of which defendants were damaged in the sum of $2,000; all of which plaintiff, by his answer to the cross-complaint, denied.

The court made findings adverse to defendants, upon which judgment followed for plaintiff, and from which defendants appeal, basing their claim for a reversal upon the ground alone that none of the findings are supported by the evidence.

[1] The contention is without merit. That plaintiff performed the work and laid both lines of pipe appears without conflict of evidence, and the only reason assigned by defendants for not paying therefor, upon demand of plaintiff, was, according to the testimony of defendant Margaret C. Seelye, that they had not received returns from their dried fruit and did not know how much they were damaged by plaintiff's failure to construct the pipe line by June 1st. "That is why," said the defendant, "we did not pay the bill." Defendants did not question the fact that plaintiff had done the work alleged, nor the amount due therefor. Their sole contention was that the pipe lines were to be completed by June 1st. As to this, however, counsel concedes a substantial conflict of evidence thereon; hence it cannot be said the finding that no agreement was made to complete the line by such date is without support. Neither can it be said, upon this record, that defendants' fruit was damaged as the result of an unreasonable delay on the part of plaintiff in constructing the pipe lines.

[2] Objection is made that no evidence was offered in support of the finding as to the sum due from defendants to plaintiff for the work done and performed. While this is true, the production of evidence in support of the issues as to which such finding was adverse to defendants was, in open court, waived by counsel for defendants, who said, "We make no objection as to the amounts claimed," followed by this interrogatory from the court: "Either as to the first cause of action, or the second?" to which defendants' counsel replied: "No, your honor; there may be a small difference, but, as the witnesses say, it is not material." After making such statement, the effect of which was to concede the correctness of the amount claimed to be due in each count of the complaint, plaintiff was not called upon to make further proof of such allegation, and defendants are in no position to question the finding upon the score that the evidence is insufficient to justify the same.

[3] While the second count of the complaint was based upon an agreed price to be paid for the line of pipe described therein, the court in response thereto erroneously found that the amount claimed was the reasonable value of the work. In view of appellants' admissions, however, as to the amount due, no possible prejudice could result from such error.

[4] It appears that some leaks developed in the six-inch pipe line, which, upon notice, plaintiff repaired, and, when another leak developed, signified his willingness to repair the same, and went to defendants' property for such purpose, but found that defendants had disconnected the pipe line from the intake of water, rendering it impossible for him to make the repair. It further appears from the testimony that, in the construction of concrete pipe lines, leakage frequently follows the first use thereof, due to contraction, which has to be repaired, and hence the leaks in this pipe line were not unusual, but were to be expected. Since plaintiff signified his willingness and stood ready to repair the same, defendants, under the circumstances, are in no position to complain of the work being improperly done.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

80 Cal. App. 257

PEOPLE v. LYONS. (Cr. 1377.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 13, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑1163(1)—Continuance over defendant's objection after impaneling jury is within discretion of trial judge, and defendant has burden of showing prejudice (Pen. Code, § 1052).

Burden is on defendant to show prejudice by continuance over his objection after impaneling jury; such matter, under Pen. Code, § 1052, resting in sound discretion of judge.

2. Criminal law 🔑594(1)—Continuing trial for infamous crime against nature for five days after impaneling jury to secure prosecuting witness, who had left unexpectedly, held not prejudicial error (Pen. Code, § 1052; Code Civ. Proc. § 595).

Continuing case against defendant, charged with infamous crime against nature, for five days after impaneling jury, to secure attendance of prosecuting witness, a school boy, who attended preliminary examination and had unexpectedly left jurisdiction, held not prejudicial error under Pen. Code, § 1052, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 595.

3. Criminal law 🔑608—Statute does not require that motion for continuance in criminal cases be supported by affidavit (Pen. Code, § 1052; Code Civ. Proc. § 595).

Motion for continuance in criminal case need not be supported by affidavit or made in manner required by Code Civ. Proc. § 595, since Pen. Code, § 1052, does not so provide.

4. Criminal law 🔑608—Where information charging infamous crime against nature, and district attorney's statements indicated that absent witness was complainant, showing was sufficient for continuance after impaneling jury.

Showing held sufficient for continuing trial for infamous crime against nature after impaneling jury for absence of witness, where information and statements of district attorney indicated that witness was complainant by whom all allegations would be established.

5. Criminal law 🔑1034—Contention that showing was insufficient for continuance held without merit, where no objection was made on that ground.

Contention that showing was insufficient for continuance after impaneling jury held without merit, where record shows no objection on that ground.

6. Sodomy 🔑6—Conviction of infamous crime against nature held sustained by evidence (Pen. Code, § 286).

Evidence held to sustain conviction of the infamous crime against nature, denounced by Pen. Code, § 286.

7. Criminal law 🔑507(7)—Complaining witness is accomplice in prosecution for infamous crime against nature, and his testimony alone is insufficient.

In prosecution for infamous crime against nature, complaining witness is accomplice, and his testimony alone will not support conviction.

8. Criminal law 🔑531(3)—Foundation for admission of confession was sufficient, where there was testimony that it was voluntary.

Where there was testimony that no threats, duress, promise of immunity, or hope of reward were held out to obtain defendant's statements, and that they were voluntary, foundation for admitting confession held sufficient.

9. Criminal law 🔑511(4)—Evidence corroborating prosecuting witness in prosecution for infamous crime against nature held sufficient to sustain conviction.

In prosecution for infamous crime against nature, evidence held to sufficiently corroborate prosecuting witness to sustain conviction, since every intendment is in favor of verdict where evidence is conflicting.

10. Criminal law 🔑1144(13)—Appellate court must resolve every intendment in favor of judgment, where evidence is conflicting.

Where evidence is conflicting, every intendment must be resolved by appellate court in favor of verdict and judgment.

11. Criminal law 🔑829(1)—Refusing instructions covered by given instructions held not error.

Refusing instructions was not error, where given instructions covered issues and embraced rules properly the subject of requested instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

Joe Lyons was convicted of the infamous crime against nature as denounced by Pen. Code, § 286, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. Thomas Whelan, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Beale Browne, of San Francisco, for the People.

CRAIG, J. Appellant was charged by information with having, on or about the 15th day of June, 1925, committed the infamous crime against nature as denounced by section 286 of the Penal Code, upon one O'Neil Lee, a male person.

It is admitted that the case was set for trial on March 9, 1926, on which date a jury was impaneled and sworn, and the information was read, and the defendant's plea of not guilty stated. The usual midday recess was then taken, and at 2 o'clock p. m., upon reconvening, the trial court was informed by the district attorney that, although a deputy sheriff was provided during the preceding week with a subpœna for all witnesses, he had been unable to serve the prosecuting witness, but that he was advised at Lee's residence that the latter had gone to Los Angeles and would return to San Diego in time for trial; that during the said recess a telegram had been received which stated: "Do not expect us for some time. O'Neil is ill." The district attorney stated that a trial of the case would be impossible without this witness, and assured the court that, if a continuance be granted, an officer would at once proceed to Los Angeles and search for the boy. Counsel for the defendant objected to any extension of time, but, after argument of the matter, the trial was continued until Wednesday, March 10th, at 2 o'clock p. m., and the jury were admonished to refrain from discussing the case or forming an opinion in the matter. On the afternoon of March 10th a deputy sheriff was sworn, and, over the objection of the defendant, that diligent effort had not been made to subpœna the witness during the preceding week, testified that he had visited an address in Los Angeles, but that he had been unable to locate Lee. A motion for further continuance was resisted by the defendant, although it was admitted that his witnesses were not incarcerated, and were all within the jurisdiction of the court. The district attorney informed the court that Lee was the complaining witness, and further said:

> "Now that is the situation we are confronted with, your honor, and it is absolutely imperative that we have the benefit of this boy's testimony before we can proceed to trial. We are confronted with a situation that we did not expect. I thought that he would be here this morning. In fact, word was left for all these boys to be here this afternoon, but of course we cannot lay a sufficient foundation under the circumstances to make a motion that the testimony of this lad, taken at the preliminary examination before a magistrate, be read into the record to the jury. We cannot lay the foundation. So the only alternative we have, your honor, is to move that we be given a brief continuance, and I will undertake to send Mr. Buck up to Los Angeles and Glendale this afternoon and have this boy here tomorrow afternoon, or know the reason why. There are some matters in connection with this going away with this boy that I do not care to refer to at the present time."

[1, 2] The first point urged by the appellant is that the court had no authority to continue the case until five days after impaneling the jury, and that motions for dismissal were erroneously denied. Section 595 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and cases construing that section, are cited. But the continuance of criminal cases is provided for by section 1052 of the Penal Code in the following language:

> "When an action is called for trial, or at any time previous thereto, the court may, upon sufficient cause, direct the trial to be postponed to another day."

In People v. Dinsmore, 102 Cal. 381, 36 P. 661, also relied upon by appellant, it appeared that a witness became indisposed while testifying, and that a continuance of sixty-three days was ordered. It was there held that jurors "roaming at large throughout the county and state for a continuous period of sixty-three days, associating with their neighbors and friends and the world at large during all this time, and without the care and protection of the court for this long period, are not the jurors the law contemplates for the trial of a defendant charged with a serious offense," and that the course there adopted could not be allowed to pass into a precedent. In People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 226, 239, 10 P. 502, however, it was held that such matters are discretionary with the trial court, and that a continuance at the request of the people to procure the attendance of witnesses was not an abuse of such discretion. And, in People v. Elgar, 39 Cal. App. 78, 178 P. 168, wherein, after the jury had been impaneled, the information read, and the prosecuting witness had testified, a continuance was granted over the objection of the defendant for a period of three weeks, for the same purpose, it was held that such action by the trial court was not error.

In the instant case, as in the one last cited, it may appropriately be said:

> "The matter of ordering such continuance was within the discretion of the trial judge, and upon this appeal the burden rests with the defendant to show that he was prejudiced by the action taken. It nowhere appears in the record as to how or in what manner the action of the court did result to his detriment or tended to prevent him having a full and fair trial upon the issues. It is not claimed that, by reason of the continuance, the defendant was deprived of the presence of any witness, or that any condition supervened which operated to his prejudice."

The question of diligence also is a matter largely to be determined by the trial court from all of the facts and circumstances presented at the time. From the fact that the missing witness in question was a schoolboy in the city of San Diego and had attended the preliminary examination, it may well have appeared to the trial judge that, although no positive steps were taken until the preceding week to forestall the possibility of his leaving the jurisdiction, yet that flight did not sufficiently enter into the realm of probability to demand any preventive measures being taken in that behalf.

[3] Appellant cites People v. Bartley, 12 Cal. App. 773, 776, 108 P. 868, as authority for his argument that such motions for continuance must be supported by affidavit, and be made in the manner required by section 595 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But section 1052 of the Penal Code does not so require, nor does the case relied upon announce any rule in that respect. It is there merely remarked that the trial court did not deny the defendant permission to file an affidavit.

To hold that the granting of so short a delay was, for any of the reasons advanced by the appellant, prejudicial error, would, under the circumstances of this case, amount to a denial of the existence in the trial court of any discretion to grant a continuance in the trial of criminal cases at the request of the people. In the cases cited by appellant, continuances were denied to defendants, and the rulings in that regard were upheld. It cannot be said, however, that, had the trial court in any such instance granted a continuance, its action would have been held to be error.

[4, 5] To the contention that no sufficient showing was made upon which to base an order continuing the trial, it may be replied: First, that, from the reading of the information and statements of the district attorney that Lee was the complaining witness, by whom all of the allegations would be established, the trial judge was generally advised as to what his testimony would be, and the witness in fact did testify thereto. Secondly, we are unable to find in the record any objection to a continuance upon that ground.

[6] The prosecuting witness testified fully and positively to the acts with which the defendant was charged, and two other boys testified that appellant had admitted to them that he had committed the offense.

Much of appellant's brief is devoted to purported discrepancies and inconsistencies in the testimony of witnesses. He testified that he did not commit the crime charged against him. A teacher at the school testified that Lee was present at his classes in the forenoon of June 15th, and the defendant's superintendent testified that Lyons' record indicated that he had worked that day. Lee did not attempt to fix the exact date, however, and all of the evidence was before the jury, from which they were instructed to decide for themselves as to whether or not they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty. They having done this, the verdict constitutes a final determination of all such questions.

[7-10] Appellant apparently confuses in his argument the rules governing the admission in evidence of extrajudicial statements, and those applicable to the admission of confessions. It is correctly asserted that the complaining witness was an accomplice (People v. Casey [Cal. App.] 249 P. 525), and that his testimony alone would not be sufficient to support a conviction. But we think that neither the contention that a foundation requisite to the introduction of confessions was not properly laid, nor the claim that the principal corroborating witness is asserted to have been unreliable, can be maintained. The district attorney did elicit testimony that no threats, duress, promise of immunity, or hope of reward was held out to obtain statements by the defendant, and that they were voluntary. The witnesses stated that they had known the defendant for some time and had visited his apartment; that he had volunteered to one of them the statement that he visited the bath house with Lee, and told the other that he committed the acts constituting the offense as charged. Each witness testified that he was unable to fix the exact date of such conversation, and that no one else was present, but this testimony as to the fact sought to be proved was positive, and was not denied except by the defendant, and the jury were instructed upon the credibility of witnesses, and the weight to be given to their testimony. It is not within the province of an appellate court to hold that the jury erroneously decided as to which witnesses told the truth, and, where the evidence is conflicting, every intendment must be resolved in favor of the verdict of the jury, and of the judgment after review by the trial court upon motion for new trial.

[11] The trial court gave instructions which covered the issues of the case and embraced such rules as were properly the subject of requested instructions, which the court refused. There are other points of minor importance discussed in the briefs, but we do not consider them of sufficient magnitude to require further consideration.

No error appearing, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 66

In re RICCARDI. (Civ. 4911.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 29, 1926.)

1. Reference ⚷103(1)—Finding of referee may be attacked as not supported by evidence, only by motion for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 638–645).

Finding of court may not be attacked as not supported by evidence by exception to it, but only by motion for new trial, and, as same rule applies to referee, findings of referee in application for reinstatement to bar may be attacked as not supported by evidence only by motion for new trial, in view of St. 1851, pp. 79, 80, as codified in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 638–645.

2. Attorney and client ⚷61—In proceedings for reinstatement to bar, proposed finding not responsive to pleadings will be denied.

Proposed finding in proceedings for reinstatement to bar, which would not be in response to issues presented by pleadings, will be denied.

3. Attorney and client ⚷61—On application for reinstatement, court may consider events occurring before disbarment and not then called to its attention.

Events occurring before date of disbarment, which were not brought to attention of court in disbarment proceeding, may be considered on application for reinstatement.

Application of C. V. Riccardi for reinstatement as a member of the bar of the State of California, opposed by Bar Association of San Francisco. Petitioner moves to amend findings of referee, to add or substitute other findings, and to take further testimony, and respondent moves that findings of referee be accepted and judgment entered against petitioner. Motion of petitioner denied, and motion of respondent granted.

See, also, 64 Cal. App. 791, 222 P. 625.

Charles F. Hanlon, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. P. Black, F. Eldred Boland, and Reginald L. Vaughan, all of San Francisco, for respondent Bar Ass'n of San Francisco.

STURTEVANT, J. Heretofore the petitioner filed in this court his application to be restored to the rolls as an attorney and counselor. Later he filed an amended petition and an amendment to that petition. In his petition, the petitioner alleged:

> "That on January 22, 1912, he was by an order of the above-entitled court, duly given and made, admitted to the bar as an attorney and counselor, in all of the courts of this state of California, and on the same day subscribed the roll as such."

The petitioner also alleged that on May 1919, he was indicted for embezzling $1,000, the property of a client; that he was convicted on that charge; that he appealed, and December 16, 1920, the judgment was affirmed (People v. Riccardi, 50 Cal. App. 427, 195 P. 448); and that a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court February 14, 1921. He also alleged facts to the effect:

> That he was wholly innocent of the crime charged, and that on December 23, 1922, the then Governor of this state issued to him a complete pardon.
>
> "* * * That on March 7, 1921, in the Supreme Court of the state, In re Riccardi (this petitioner) Criminal No. 2302, an order was entered in the minutes of the said Supreme Court, reading as follows: 'The above-entitled matter coming on pursuant to the order to show cause heretofore made on February 15, 1921, and it appearing that the accused stands finally convicted of a felony involving moral turpitude, as stated in said order to show cause, it is ordered that the name of the accused be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors of this court, and that he be precluded from practicing as such attorney or counselor in all the courts of this State.'
>
> "Petitioner alleges that, since * * * March 7, 1921, when the Supreme Court made the foregoing order, * * * this petitioner did not practice, nor attempt to practice, law. * * *
>
> "* * * Petitioner further states that during the number of years that he has ceased to practice law on account of the aforesaid disbarment against him, his life has been above reproach and he has conducted himself as an honorable man, has been truthful in his statements and assertions with regarding business and capital, profits, etc., has given to every man all the money coming to him to the last dollar, has not taken advantage of any man, or his ignorance or infirmities in any way, and has obtained the respect and confidence of every man, high and low, rich and poor, with whom he has come in contact during said time. * * *
>
> "* * * Your petitioner further alleges that he is a man of good moral character, and possesses the necessary qualifications of learning and ability to act as an attorney and counselor in all the courts in this state, and is still a resident of said state and a citizen of the United States."

The Bar Association filed an answer, containing no denials, but alleging:

> "Alleges that on or about the 22d January, 1912, petitioner was, by order of this honorable court, admitted as an attorney and counselor at law in all the courts of this state. Said order was made upon the representation by petitioner that he was of good moral character. The Bar Association of San Francisco alleges that at said time petitioner was not and is not now of good moral character, and in this respect alleges, upon information and belief, as follows: (1) In the year 1921 the Bar Association of San Francisco brought proceedings in the Supreme Court of the state of California for the disbarment of John J. Sullivan, then judge of the police court of said city and county of San Francisco, state of California. In re Bar Association of San Francisco, 185 Cal. 621, 198 P. 7. In those proceedings petitioner either committed perjury in his testimony or, if his testimony were true, he was guilty of bribery of a public official. In either event, he demonstrates himself to be not of good moral character." (Then follow sixteen specifications of alleged wrongful acts occurring between 1912 and 1921, inclusive.)

In the pleading of the petitioner, numerous good acts, probative matter, are alleged in addition to the matter quoted above. In the pleading of the Bar Association, the allegation of the other sixteen alleged wrongful acts are not direct averments, but the allegations are that he was accused before a bar association, or before a committing magistrate, or by a grand jury, with having done so and so.

It thus appears that the petitioner alleges (1) he is of good moral character; he alleges (2) the probative factors thereof, to wit, that he is honorable, truthful, just, upright, and trustworthy; and then he alleges (3) many specific acts or instances claimed to support each factor mentioned in division 2. The ultimate fact was alleged as in division 1—all else was redundant matter.

Thereafter this court ordered a reference upon the agreement of the parties filed with the clerk, directing the referee, Hon. J. J. Trabucco, "to hear all the testimony and take the evidence in this proceeding, to make findings of fact therein, and to report the same to this court." A hearing was had before the referee and later he filed with the clerk of this court findings of fact and conclusions of law, and at the same time he filed a reporter's transcript consisting of 513 pages, and a month later he filed an additional volume of the transcript, making the entire transcript to consist of 626 pages.

On the 11th day of August, 1926, the petitioner served and filed in this court a notice of motion to have this court amend said findings, to add or substitute other findings, and to take such further testimony as may be proper to make such findings and change the conclusion of law in favor of petitioner and against the contentions of the Bar Association.

On the 26th day of August, 1926, being the return day stated in the notice of motion to amend the findings, etc., the petitioner did, in pursuance of said notice, make his motion as he had stated he would. On the same day, and as part of the same hearing, the Bar Association made a counter motion to the effect that the findings of the referee be accepted and that judgment be entered against the petitioner.

[1] Before proceeding to take up the merits of the motion, it is first necessary to note what papers and documents may be examined by this court for the purpose of determining the motion. In the case of Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 122, 130, the court said:

> "The parties agreed in writing to submit the matter in dispute between them to certain arbitrators, and this agreement was filed among the papers of the case in the court below. In addition, an order of court was granted, by the consent of the parties, referring the suit to the same persons selected by their agreement. Now, whether we view the case as an arbitration at common law, or a reference under the statute, in either case the decision must be the same; because we hold that the statute is in aid of the common-law remedy by arbitration, and in no respect alters its principles.
>
> "In the case of Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 74 [56 Am. Dec. 313], we held that, under our system of practice, the court might 'set aside awards for fraud, mistake, or accident; and it makes no difference whether the mistake be one of fact or law.' But we further decided, 'in the case of a general finding, it appears to be well settled that courts will not inquire into mistakes by evidence aliunde.' And from the whole tenor of the opinion in that case, it may be regarded as the settled rule, that the court will not disturb the award of an arbitrator, or report of a referee, unless the error which is complained of, whether it be of law or fact, appears on the face of the award. And, in the case of the report of a referee, our statute does not alter or interfere with this rule."

Then in the case of Headley v. Reed, 2 Cal. 322, at page 325, the court said:

> "We decided in Tyson v. Wells, and Skinner, ante 122, that the report of a referee under the statute, had the same legal effect as the award of an arbitrator. It therefore follows that the referee in this suit had no right to bring in and file an additional or amended report; and the case must be reviewed with reference to the original report alone. By that report, it does not appear that exceptions of any validity were taken before the referee, but the report was not made immediately after the close of the testimony, and consequently, by the 191st section of the Practice Act, it is deemed as excepted to. According to the rule settled in Muldrow v. Norris, ante 74, the decision of the referee can only be set aside on account of fraud or gross error of law or fact apparent upon its face. * * * Upon the report of a referee under the statute, if it contain sufficient on which to base a judgment, it is the duty of the court below to enter judgment in accordance with the report, as far as it concerns the matters referred, and it has no right to entertain any objections whatever. After the rendition of the judgment, the court may award a new trial, and set aside the report for any of the reasons which would impel a court of competent jurisdiction to set aside the award of an arbitrator, and for no other."

Later, in the case of Cappe v. Brizzolara, 19 Cal. 607, the court adverted to some of the other propositions discussed in Tyson v. Wells, and repudiated the doctrine. However, as to the passages quoted above, the same were approved by the court on page 608 in the following language:

> "This is an appeal from an order setting aside the report of a referee and granting a new trial. The order was based upon the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision; and, as there was some conflict of testimony, we do not see upon what principle we could properly interfere. There is no doubt that it was competent for the court to grant a new trial on that ground; and its legal discretion in that respect was not affected by the fact that the case was tried before a referee. The provisions of the Practice Act relating to new trials are general in their terms, and vest in the courts the same power, in cases tried by a referee, as in cases tried by the court itself, or by a jury. Every case is placed upon the same footing; and the grounds upon which a new trial may be granted are the same in all cases, irrespective of the manner in which the case was originally tried."

The foregoing cases were based on the provisions contained in the Practice Act. Stats. 1851, pp. 51, 79, 80. But the provisions contained in the Practice Act have been codified and are set forth in the Code of Civil Procedure, sections 638–645. No change in the wording, material to the questions before us, has been made. The statute authorizes a reference to try "any or all of the issues," and the expression "the whole issue" is used in the statute as synonymous with the expression "all of the issues." Section 644 provides:

> "The finding of the referee or commissioner upon the whole issue must stand as the finding of the court, and upon filing of the finding with the clerk of the court, judgment may be entered thereon in the same manner as if the action had been tried by the court."

Section 645 provides:

> "The findings of the referee or commissioner may be excepted to and reviewed in like manner as if made by the court. When the reference is to report the facts, the finding reported has the effect of a special verdict."

On first reading the language of the first sentence of that section is not altogether clear. However, its history throws full light on the meaning. Turning to page 843, Statutes of 1865–6, it will be found that the Legislature enacted several sections regulating the practice in civil cases. In section 180, as there enacted, it is provided that the findings of the court may be excepted to and reviewed. In section 187, as there enacted, it is provided that the findings of a referee or commissioner may be excepted to and reviewed "in like manner as if made by the court." In the case of Cowing v. Rogers, 34 Cal. 648, Mr. Justice Rhodes, speaking for the court, at page 652, said:

> "In his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff has not specified wherein the evidence was insufficient to justify or support the findings. After the findings were filed, he filed his objections thereto, in which he specified several of the findings as unsupported by the evidence. This is not the office of exceptions to the findings, under the act of 1861, or of the amendment of 1865–6 to section 180 of the Practice Act. A party, according to these provisions, may object for the want of findings, or on the ground that there is no finding as to a particular fact in issue, and, if the defect is not remedied, may take his exception. But when he thinks any finding is contrary to or unsupported by the evidence, he must make that a ground of his motion for a new trial. He cannot avail himself of the alleged error in any other manner. This has been so often repeated that a citation of authorities is useless." Hayne, New Trial and Appeal, § 247.

It is patent that a party may not attack a finding of the court merely by filing an exception to it when the attack is based on the ground that the finding is not supported by the evidence; but that the proper manner in which to make that attack is on a motion for a new trial. As the power to attack a finding made by a referee is as broad and no broader than the power to attack a finding made by the court, it is clear that the same rule obtains and that a party desiring to make the attack on the ground that the finding is not supported by the evidence may do so by a motion for a new trial and not otherwise.

Assuming, for the purposes of this opinion, that the phrasing of his motion is sufficient to bring him within the purview of the statute, we will now take up the attacks made by the petitioner.

Attacking findings III, IX, X (a), XI, XIII (d), XV (a), XV (b), the petitioner suggests new matter and asks that it be added to each of said findings. The vice of the attack rests in the improper form of all the pleadings. The petitioner and the respondent pleaded many probative facts. The referee was induced to make findings thereon. Each attack under this heading is a request for a finding on additional probative matters.

Attacking findings X (a), X(b), and XVI, the petitioner asks to strike out each of said findings on the ground that there was no evidence to support the finding. If there was no evidence to support any one of said findings, it is enough to state that such fact does not appear on the face of the findings and that the relief sought may be had only by a motion for a new trial.

As to several findings, the petitioner makes an attack claiming that the finding is supported by hearsay only. For the reason stated in the preceding paragraph, we may not sustain the attack on the record which is before us nor except as on a motion for a new trial.

[2] He attacks finding No. XVI in three ways. All are of the same import. He suggests that we add to that finding the following:

> "That since his disbarment said petitioner, C. V. Riccardi, has reformed and has shown a spirit of repentance and has conducted himself throughout in an honorable and upright manner."

That request may not be granted, for the reason that the proposed finding would not be in response to any issue presented by any pleading on file. The pleadings are absolutely silent on the subject.

[3] As to several findings, the petitioner asks that the same be stricken out. The findings so complained of recite certain events that occurred before the date when he was disbarred. The petitioner contends that, as such incidents were not brought to the attention of the court in the disbarment proceeding, they may not be considered at this time. The same contention was made to this court when the pleadings were being settled. At that time the court ruled against the petitioner. At this time, having heard further arguments of counsel on the subject, the court is not at all inclined to change its ruling.

As no legal objection appears in the face of the findings of the referee, the motion of the petitioner is denied, and the motion of the Bar Association is granted. It is further ordered that the Bar Association have judgment for its costs.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

80 Cal. App. 91

SUTTON-WATTS v. SARNOW. (Civ. 5293.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 1, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—Absence of direct finding on issue bearing on waiver held not prejudicial, where question of waiver was raised on appeal.

Absence of direct finding on plaintiff's alleged ratification of purchase of leasehold interest and furniture held not prejudicial to defendant, where it would only have furnished grounds for presentation of question of waiver, and this question was presented under appeal from judgment.

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑74—Payments of rent by purchaser after notice of rescission of sale of leasehold interest held not ratification of sale.

Where purchaser of leasehold interest and furniture in apartment house paid rent for two months after giving notice of rescission under fear that she would become more deeply involved, payments, standing alone, did not show ratification of sale.

3. Contracts 🔑99(3)—Evidence of confirmation after rescission should stand only on clearest evidence.

Evidence of confirmation after rescission should be watched with utmost strictness and should stand only on clearest evidence.

4. Landlord and tenant 🔑74—Vendee can remain in possession of leased premises after rescission and refusal to accept return of premises by vendor.

Where vendor of leasehold interest declined to take possession of leased premises after rescission by vendee, she was justified in continuing in occupation thereof to protect property for all parties.

5. Cancellation of instruments 🔑59—Judgment rescinding sale of leasehold and furniture, making no provisions for return of property, held erroneous.

In action to rescind sale of leasehold interest and furniture in apartment house, judgment of rescission, making no provisions for return of defendant's property, held erroneous.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1176(3)—Where judgment was erroneous but findings were supported by substantial evidence, judgment could be reversed, with directions to enter new judgment.

Where judgment for plaintiff was erroneous as not making provision for return of defendant's property, but findings were supported by substantial evidence and were sufficient to sustain judgment in favor of plaintiff, judgment could be reversed, with directions to enter new judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Action by C. A. Sutton-Watts against Barbara Sarnow. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Clark, Law & Clay, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harry Lyons, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. An action by plaintiff as vendee to obtain a decree rescinding a sale of the leasehold interest in an apartment house and of the furniture contained therein; also for the recovery of the initial payment made on the purchase price and the cancellation of a promissory note and chattel mortgage given in payment of the balance. Judgment was given in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appeals, urging as grounds for reversal that the trial court erred in failing to find on material issues raised by the answer, and that the judgment is erroneous in that it makes no provision for the return to defendant of the furniture, nor does it allow her certain credits to which she claims she is entitled.

The written consent to the assignment of the lease, which was necessary to be obtained before a valid transfer thereof could be made, was signed by Priscilla Brode as administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, Adolph Brode, who was the owner of the premises during his lifetime and by whom the lease had been executed, but it appears that up to the time she signed said written consent she had not been appointed administratrix. Respondent claimed, therefore, that the leasehold interest which appellant purported to sell was void, and it was upon that ground that respondent rescinded the sale and was given judgment.

The sale was consummated on August 22, 1921, for a consideration of $6,125, of which amount $2,325 was paid in cash and a promissory note for $3,800, payable in monthly installments of $100 each with accrued interest, secured by a chattel mortgage on the furniture, was given in payment of the balance. Respondent took immediate possession and thereafter paid the monthly installments on said note and mortgage for the months of September, October, and November, at which time she learned of the lack of legal authority on the part of Priscilla Brode to execute the written consent to said assignment, whereupon, and on December 3, 1921, after receiving legal advice, she caused to be served upon appellant a notice of rescission, wherein she demanded the return on the down cash payment made on August 22, 1921, and offered to restore to appellant "the possession of the furniture and furnishings and premises * * * and all personal property and everything of value received under said contract. * * *" Notwithstanding appellant's rejection of the offer, respondent paid to appellant the December, 1921, and the January, 1922, installments on said note and mortgage, because, as she says, she "was afraid she (appellant) would close in on me." In the interim, to wit, on December 31, 1921, respondent commenced this action. It would therefore appear that one installment on the purchase price was paid by respondent after she rescinded the sale and another one was paid after the action was filed.

The evidence further shows that said furniture completely furnished the apartment house, consisting of 21 rooms, and that in September, 1922, at which time this action was tried, respondent was still in possession thereof, having been operating the same continuously since taking possession on August 22, 1921. With reference to the rental value for the use of said furniture, the record discloses that it was stipulated at the trial "that Mr. Edson (the agent who negotiated the sale) shall take all the books and records of the apartment house (during the occupancy thereof by respondent, Mrs. Watts) and shall add up all the expenses and receipts, and deduct the expenses from the receipts, and then allow $100 a month and her room to Mrs. Watts, the balance of that money to go back to Mrs. Sarnow"; and it was further stipulated that Edson's report should be made to counsel, the court in the meantime withholding its decision. The record fails to show whether or not any such report was ever made, but in this connection appellant gave testimony to the effect that the net income from the business while she was operating it was $175 a month. It is also shown that a deposit of $125 made by appellant at the time she accepted the lease as a guarantee for the faithful performance of its conditions, and which was to be applied as the rental for the last month, was never repaid to her by respondent.

Respondent's complaint was in two counts. In the first count appellant was charged with actual fraud in selling a void lease, and in the second it was alleged that the sale was consummated upon the assumption of both parties thereto that said lease was valid and that therefore they were laboring under a mutual mistake. Appellant, in her answer, besides denying the alleged fraud, controverted the allegations as to the invalidity of the lease, and set forth as affirmative defenses that Priscilla Brode, after receiving the appointment as administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, ratified and confirmed said lease; also that respondent ratified and confirmed said sale by making payments to appellant on said note and chattel mortgage after the discovery of the alleged invalidity of the said lease and the service upon appellant of the notice of rescission; furthermore, that subsequent to the date of said sale respondent continued in possession of said apartment house and said furniture, and that the profits from said apartment house amounted to $250 a month, and that the rental value of the furniture was $200 a month.

The trial court found that said leasehold interest was void for the reasons alleged by respondent, but did not indicate whether the sale thereof by appellant was the result of a fraud or of a mutual mistake. It further found as to the dates and amounts of the payments made by respondent to appellant; also as to the service of the notice of rescission, the refusal of appellant to comply therewith, and that the furniture at the time of the sale was of the value of $2,000 and no more, but, it made no findings as to any of the affirmative defenses pleaded by appellant, nor did it make any general finding negativing the allegations of appellant's answer or any general finding that all of the allegations of respondent's complaint were true.

The judgment, which in terms followed the conclusions of law set forth in the trial court's decision, was as follows:

> "It is ordered and adjudged that the said contract entered into about the 22nd day of August, 1921, by and between the plaintiff and the defendant herein, be declared rescinded and void. (2) That the promissory note and chattel mortgage recorded in book No. 442, page No. 333, of official records of Los Angeles county, be delivered to plaintiff and canceled and discharged. (3) It is further ordered and adjudged that plaintiff have, recover of and from the defendant, Barbara Sarnow, judgment in the sum of two thousand six hundred and thirty ($2,630) dollars, and for costs of suit taxed at * * *."

[1] Conceding, as appellant contends, that she was entitled to a finding upon the affirmative defense of respondent's alleged ratification of the sale, we are of the opinion that the failure to find thereon has not been prejudicial. Such a finding, if made, would necessarily have been in the negative, for the reason that the judgment was in favor of respondent, which consistently carried with it the implied finding that respondent had not ratified the sale; and it is not to be presumed that the trial court would have stultified its judgment with the presence of an affirmative finding that respondent had ratified the sale. Assuming, therefore, that the finding on the issue mentioned, if made, would have been in the negative, it could have served appellant but one useful purpose, and that is, it would have furnished grounds for the presentation of the question of waiver, and this question appellant has already presented under the appeal from the judgment; consequently the absence of a direct, adverse finding on said issue has deprived appellant of no substantial right, nor, so far as can be seen, has it operated to her disadvantage.

[2-4] Treating the judgment as such adverse finding, we think it fairly supported by the evidence. Respondent's intention to rescind was clearly manifested by the prompt service of notice to that effect, which was followed and confirmed by the commencement of suit, and we think that the payments mentioned, standing alone, cannot be reasonably construed as a revocation of the legal course already adopted by her to rescind the sale, nor did the fact that they were made mislead appellant or operate to respondent's benefit, but, as remarked by the trial court, were doubtless made by respondent under the fear that if she defaulted in that respect she would become more deeply involved. Evidence of confirmation "ought to be watched with the utmost strictness, and to stand only upon the clearest evidence as an act done with all the deliberation that ought to attend a transaction the effect of which is to ratify that which in justice ought never to have taken place." Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 80 P. 234. All of the cases cited and relied upon by appellant were predicated upon some advantage accruing to the injured party as a result of the waiver. Here the payment of upwards of $240 in addition to the amounts already paid by respondent was of no benefit to her. Clearly, it did not help her to retain possession of the apartment house, because, aside from said payments, in view of appellant having declined to retake possession, she was justified in continuing in the occupation thereof for the purpose of protecting the property for all parties. Shermaster v. California Bldg., etc., Co., 40 Cal. App. 661, 181 P. 409.

[5] Regarding the amount of credits appellant was entitled to, we think it can be reasonably concluded from the amount for which the judgment was rendered, when considered in the light of the evidence, that all just credits were considered and allowed. The evidence shows that the total payment made by respondent to appellant, together with legal interest thereon, amounted to approximately $3,092, whereas the judgment directed the repayment to her of only $2,630, showing that credits were allowed appellant in approximately the sum of $462, which amount we may infer the trial court concluded was sufficient to cover the rental value of the furniture and other items justly due appellant.

The form of judgment rendered, however, was erroneous, in that it made no provisions for the return of appellant's property. In Conlin v. Studebaker Bros., 175 Cal. 395, 165 P. 1009, it is held that in decreeing the rescission of a contract of sale the judgment by its terms should place the parties in statu quo and require the plaintiff, as a condition to the relief awarded him, to restore to defendant everything of value which he has received under the contract. The subject of the sale there was an automobile which the court found had been misrepresented to plaintiff, and the court said:

> "But there is no provision in the judgment for the return to the defendants, or either of them, of the automobile itself. So far as the judgment goes, the plaintiff gets back the purchase price paid by him for the automobile and keeps the automobile too. Such a judgment cannot stand. In decreeing the rescission of a contract the court 'requires equity at the hands of the complaining party as well as from the defendant, and * * * will place the parties in statu quo by requiring the plaintiff to restore to the defendant everything of value which the plaintiff has received under the contract.' 18 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 858; Sanchez v. McMahon, 35 Cal. 218; Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 47 P. 369, 52 P. 797. It is no answer to this objection to say that the plaintiff, in his complaint and at the trial, asserted his willingness to make a return of the purchased property. It appeared from the evidence that it remained in his possession, and the defendants were entitled to some security for its return beyond the mere expression of plaintiff's willingness to restore it. The judgment should have made the return of the consideration conditional upon the placing of the automobile in the possession of the defendants."

The same situation exists here. So far as appears from the record, the furniture was still in the possession of respondent at the time of the rendition of the judgment, the incumbrance thereon in appellant's favor being by the terms of the judgment canceled, and therefore, as stated in the case last cited, appellant was entitled to some security for its return beyond the mere expression of respondent's willingness to return it.

[6] Inasmuch as the present findings are supported by substantial evidence and are legally sufficient in form and substance to sustain a judgment in favor of respondent, such as the trial court endeavored to render, we think it necessary only to reverse the judgment, with directions to enter a new judgment which shall include the provision mentioned in Conlin v. Studebaker Bros., supra. It is so ordered, appellant to recover costs of appeal.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 122

FIRPO v. PACIFIC MUT. LIFE INS. CO. (Civ. 5678.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 1, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑907(2)—Appellate court may assume that facts supporting verdict were proved by competent evidence, where party appealing on typewritten record prints no evidence in briefs (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

Where one appealing on typewritten record under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, prints none of evidence in opening brief and complaint only in appendix, appellate court may assume that facts cited by respondent in support of verdict were proved by competent evidence.

2. Money received 🔑17(3)—Common count puts in issue fraud or misrepresentation through which money was received, though fraud and resulting damage are not specially pleaded.

Common count for money had and received puts in issue fraud and misrepresentation through which money was received, though fraud and resulting damage are not specially pleaded; the action being one in assumpsit on implied contract to repay money received.

3. Action 🔑28—One may elect to sue for damages from fraud or waive tort and sue for money paid.

Party may elect to sue for damages resulting from fraud or to waive tort and sue for money paid.

4. Pleading 🔑18—Complaint in assumpsit for money had and received is not subject to general demurrer or special demurrer for uncertainty.

Complaints in assumpsit for money had and received are not subject to general demurrer or special demurrer for uncertainty, as common count pleads every material issue in general terms, and any uncertainty as to particular items may be remedied by demanding bill of particulars.

5. Money received 🔑1—Action for "money had and received" is equitable in nature and rests on obligation to pay money, which defendant in equity and good conscience should pay.

Action for "money had and received" is in nature of equitable one, resting on obligation created by law or legal fiction that defendant, having money which in equity and good conscience he should pay to plaintiff, is deemed to have promised to pay it.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Money had and received.]

6. Money received 🔑8—Common-law action lies to recover money obtained by fraud, misrepresentation, duress, undue influence, and mistake of fact; "money had and received."

Common-law action for "money had and received" will lie to recover money obtained by fraud, misrepresentation, duress, undue influence, and mistake of fact.

7. Appeal and error 🔑172(3)—Appellant, not asking relief from trial court, cannot urge surprise by charge of misrepresentation by its agent.

Defendant corporation, asking no relief from trial court, cannot argue, on appeal from judgment against it for money had and received, that it was taken by surprise when called on at trial to meet charge of misrepresentation by its agent.

8. Insurance 🔑198(4)—Premium is returnable when contract is voidable for insurer's fraud or misrepresentation (Civ. Code, § 2619).

Under Civ. Code, § 2619, insured is entitled to return of premium, when contract is voidable because of insurer's fraud or misrepresentation.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by E. Firpo against the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. Eldred Boland and Knight, Boland & Christin, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Raymond Perry, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for $943.76 on a common count for money had and received. The cause was tried before the court sitting with a jury and a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum prayed was returned. From the judgment following the verdict, the defendant has appealed on a typewritten record under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure.

Plaintiff based his action upon the claim that his assignors had paid the sum in suit to the defendant as premiums upon a policy of life insurance in the principal sum of $15,000; that his assignors were induced to make the payments through the misrepresentations of defendant's agent that the premiums were payable monthly instead of annually, as claimed by defendant; that the moneys were actually paid monthly for a period of more than one year into a savings bank, which transmitted them to the defendant; that no policy of insurance was delivered to the assignors until some fourteen months after the date of the transaction, when the defendant mailed to them a policy dated as of the date of the transaction, and notified the assignors of plaintiff that the policy was canceled because of their failure to pay the annual premium for the second year.

[1] The appellant apparently does not controvert any of these facts, as it has not printed any of the evidence in its opening brief and has printed the complaint and nothing more in the appendix. In view of the rule that, where an appeal is taken under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, the appellant must print the portion of the record upon which he relies, we may assume that the facts cited by the respondent in support of the verdict were proved by competent evidence.

[2, 3] So far as we are able to understand appellant's position from the briefs filed, it seems to be that the complaint, being in the form of a common count for money had and received, was insufficient in law to raise the issue of fraud or misrepresentation, and that the trial judge improperly instructed the jury on that issue. The position of the respondent is that no policy of insurance was ever delivered to his assignors, and that there was therefore no consideration for the monthly payments of premium, and that, because of the agent's misrepresentations as to the time of payment of the premiums, the minds of the parties did not meet, and that the moneys were therefore paid under a mistake of fact. In reply, the appellant insists that the policy was delivered to the bank for the benefit of the insured, but it does not controvert the evidence that the misrepresentations were made, as claimed, and does not claim that any knowledge or information was conveyed to the insured of the fact that the policy stated on its face that the premiums were payable annually.

Upon the record presented, there is but one question open to discussion—Does a common count for money had and received put in issue fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the defendant through which the money sued for was received by the defendant? The appellant insists that this cannot be, because, in an action for fraud, the fraud as well as the damage resulting therefrom must be specially pleaded. The obvious answer is that this is not an action for fraud or for damages, but is one in assumpsit upon an implied contract to repay the money received by the appellant. The rule is elementary that a party may elect to sue for damages resulting from the fraud, or to waive the tort and sue for the money paid.

[4] Whatever uncertainty may have arisen from the earlier decisions has been set at rest by the able opinion of Mr. Justice Sloss in Pike v. Zadig, 171 Cal. 273, 276, 152 P. 923, where it was held that these complaints in assumpsit were not subject to a general demurrer nor to a special demurrer for uncertainty. The reason for the rule is that the common count pleads every material issue in general terms, and that, if there is any uncertainty as to particular items, the defendant has his remedy by demanding a bill of particulars.

[5] "The basis of the action for money had and received is that the defendant has money which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay to the plaintiff." 17 Cal. Jur. p. 602. The action is in the nature of an equitable one (Fontaine v. Lacassie, 36 Cal. App. 175, 178, 171 P. 812), and rests upon the obligation created by law, or by legal fiction, that, where the defendant has money which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay to the plaintiff, he is deemed to have promised to pay it. Fitzhugh v. University Realty Co., 46 Cal. App. 198, 200, 188 P. 1023.

[6, 7] The rule has stood without contest that the common-law action for money had and received will lie to recover money obtained by fraud, misrepresentation, duress, undue influence, and mistake of fact. 17 Cal. Jur. pp. 616, 617. The appellant does not question the rule of these cases, but argues that it was taken by surprise when it was called on at the trial to meet the charge of misrepresentation by its agent. The procedure in the trial courts gives ample protection to a party under such circumstances, but it does not appear that the appellant asked for any relief from the trial court.

[8] The point is advanced without argument that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that an insured is entitled to a return of the premium when the contract is voidable on account of the fraud or misrepresentation of the insurer. No reason is given why the appellant claims that the instruction is error. It correctly states the law as announced in section 2619 of the Civil Code.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 98

ENLOW v. IRWIN et al. (Civ. 5296.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 1, 1926.)

1. Frauds, statute of ⚿113(2)—Memorandum of agreement for lease to satisfy statute must contain all essential and material facts of lease which is to be executed.

To satisfy statute, memorandum of agreement for lease must contain all essential and material facts of lease which is to be executed thereafter according to its terms, and particularly must contain a definite agreement as to extent and boundary of property leased, definite and agreed term, and definite and agreed price of rental and time and manner of its payment.

2. Frauds, statute of ⚿106(2)—Agreement for lease should define beginning of term of tenancy to satisfy statute.

Agreement for lease should define when term of tenancy shall begin in order to satisfy statute of frauds.

3. Frauds, statute of ⚿106(2)—Agreement for lease to satisfy statute must be certain as to kind and character of improvements to be made, or susceptible of being made so by oral evidence.

Where improvements are to be made or conditions relating to tenancy are to be inserted in lease, agreement for lease, to satisfy statute, must either in itself be certain as to kind and character thereof, or susceptible of being made certain by oral evidence showing a prior or contemporaneous understanding of facts in that regard.

4. Frauds, statute of 🔑56(6)—Agreement for leasing of room in hotel to be constructed for term of 10 years must be in writing to satisfy statute (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5).

Agreement for leasing of room in hotel to be constructed for a term of 10 years being leasing of real property, held required to be in writing, under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5.

5. Frauds, statute of 🔑106(2)—Agreement for leasing of room in hotel, indefinite as to beginning of term, extent of property, and conditions of leasing, held not to satisfy statute (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5).

Agreement for leasing of room in hotel to be constructed for term of 10 years, in which neither beginning of term, extent of property leased, or conditions of tenancy were ever definitely agreed upon, held not stated with sufficient certainty to satisfy requirements of Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Marie Louise Enlow against W. M. Irwin and another, doing business under the firm name of "Fullerton Realty Company," a copartnership, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Launer & Collins, of Fullerton, for appellants.

Roland Thompson and Charles D. Swanner, both of Santa Ana, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. The action herein was to recover the sum of $500 and interest paid by plaintiff pursuant to negotiations had with defendant R. E. Durbin for a lease of real property. The cause was submitted to the trial court on an agreed statement of facts, and judgment was given in plaintiff's favor. The defendants appeal.

The negotiations between plaintiff and Durbin were evidenced by an instrument in writing, signed by them, and reading as follows:

"Received this day from Marie Louise Enlow the sum five hundred and 00/100 dollars, being a deposit in escrow with Fullerton Realty Company of Fullerton, California, as part payment in the nature of advance rent on lease of the following described property: A room approximately 16x36 feet in the new proposed Fullerton Hotel to be built by the Community Hotel Company on the northwest corner of Wilshire and Spadra streets, said room to be described as follows: The first room on north wing next to hotel lobby, arrangements of interior to be decided on when lease is made. Said lease to be executed for a period of ten years at a monthly rental of one hundred and 00/100 dollars per month, payable in advance. The said five hundred and 00/100 dollars, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, is to remain in escrow until such time as lease, properly made out and signed, is turned over to the said Marie Louise Enlow, at which time the said five hundred 00/100 dollars will be turned over to R. E. Durbin to be held by him as security for the performance of all of the conditions of said lease, and to apply as the last five months' rental of said lease, it being understood that should the said Marie Louise Enlow fail to comply with all of the conditions of said lease, the said lease will be canceled by R. E. Durbin and the said five hundred 00/100 dollars remain in his possession as damages. This agreement executed this 19th day of October, 1921, is to bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, administrators and assigns. R. E. Durbin, lessor, Marie Louise Enlow, lessee. Interest to be paid lessee on deposit at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. R. E. Durbin."

On or about November 1, 1921, and on several occasions thereafter, respondent demanded the return of the money she had paid under said instrument, but her demands were refused, and on July 31, 1922, she commenced this action to recover the same. The construction of the hotel building mentioned in said instrument was begun about February, 1922, and finished and the building ready for occupancy on January 15, 1923. Ignoring respondent's demands for the return of said money, Durbin on July 14, 1922, wrote her to the effect that he was at that time prepared to "make" the ten-year lease mentioned in said instrument, and for her to let him know when it would be agreeable to her "to complete the lease," and in October, 1922, tendered respondent the accrued interest on the $500, also a form of lease for her to sign. She refused to accept the interest money or to execute the lease, and on January 19, 1923, Durbin tendered another form of lease for her to execute, but it was likewise rejected, and no lease was ever signed, nor did she ever take possession of the property.

The parties are agreed that the instrument signed by them and hereinabove quoted was not a lease, but was merely an agreement to enter into a lease, and the sole question presented for determination is whether, as such, it is legally enforceable.

[1-3] In Rohan v. Proctor, 61 Cal. App. 447, 214 P. 986, in dealing with the subject now under consideration, it is said that in order to satisfy the statute of frauds, a memorandum of agreement for a lease which is required to be in writing must contain all of the essential and material parts of the lease which is to be executed thereafter, according to its terms, and particularly must contain three essentials: First, there must be a definite agreement as to the extent and boundary of the property leased; second, a definite and agreed term; and, third, a definite and agreed price of rental and the time and manner of its payment. Jones on Landlord and Tenant, § 137a; Dodd v. Pasch, 5 Cal. App. 686, 91 P.

166; Levin v. Saroff, 54 Cal. App. 285, 201 P. 961. And as to the second of the above essentials, the agreement for lease should define when the term of the tenancy shall begin (Taylor on Landlord and Tenant [9th Ed.] § 70); furthermore, where improvements are to be made or conditions relating to the tenancy are to be inserted in the lease, the agreement for the lease must either in itself be certain as to the kind and character thereof or it must be susceptible of being made certain by oral evidence showing a prior or contemporaneous understanding of the parties in that regard, and if the parties have come to no such understanding at the time the agreement for the lease is made, the uncertainty of the agreement in that regard is fatal, since it is an uncertainty in a respect essential to its validity which no amount of oral evidence as to a later understanding can remove. The effect of such evidence under the circumstances stated, if received, would be merely to create an additional oral agreement, touching a vital and omitted essential of the writing, and thus render the entire contract between the parties oral, and hence of necessity in violation of the statute of frauds. See, also, Wineburgh v. Gay, 27 Cal. App. 603, 150 P. 1003.

[4, 5] The agreement in question here was one that the statute of frauds required to be in writing, the subject-matter thereof being for the leasing of real property for a term of ten years (subdivision 5, § 1624, Civ. Code), and, measured by the foregoing rules, it is at once apparent that said agreement is fatally defective in at least three particulars: First, the beginning of the term is not made certain. With respect thereto we are not unmindful of the fact that at the time the agreement was signed the building mentioned therein was not even in the course of construction, and that many authorities hold that a lease is not invalid by the circumstance that the term is to begin upon the completion of a building. Jones on Landlord and Tenant, § 113, and cases therein cited. The agreement here, however, nowhere provided that the term should begin upon the completion of the building or at any other time, and, consequently, the commencement of the tenancy might have been deferred indefinitely, by either of the parties, after the completion of the building. Secondly, the agreement provides that the room to be leased was to be "the first room on the north wing next to the hotel lobby, arrangements of the interior to be decided on when the lease is made." (Italics ours.) The italicized clause shows clearly that such arrangements had not been made at the time the agreement was signed, but were deferred for future consideration and agreement. Thirdly, said agreement shows that the lease to be thereafter executed was to contain certain conditions relating to the tenancy, for the faithful performance of which the lessor was to retain the said sum of $500 until nearly the end of the 10-year term; but there is nothing contained in said agreement indicating the nature, number, or extent of those conditions or that any of them were ever agreed upon or even discussed between the parties prior to or contemporaneously with the execution of said agreement; and the fact that forms of leases containing different conditions were afterwards submitted for execution and rejected, long after the agreement herein was executed, conclusively shows that the conditions of the tenancy were never agreed upon at any time. The forms of leases so tendered and rejected contained conditions covering 6 typewritten pages of the reporter's transcript and relating to more than 16 different subjects. Some of them, if agreed to, would have had the effect of restricting respondent's use of the premises and also her right to recover damages for defective wiring, plumbing, and building equipment; others would have established liability on her part for alterations, heat, and upkeep, and would have fixed the amount of the water and light bills she would be required to pay. Conditions were also inserted curtailing her right to assign, hypothecate, or transfer her leasehold interest, and in case of suit for forfeiture would have permitted the allowance of attorneys' fees; and, lastly, her tenancy was made subject to all the conditions of the lease to be executed between Durbin and the owners of the property.

In view of the foregoing, it is evident that neither at the time of the execution of the agreement in question nor at any other time was there a meeting of minds or mutual assent of the parties which is necessary to constitute a valid contract, and, furthermore, that the terms of the agreement were not stated in writing with sufficient certainty to satisfy the requirements of the statute of frauds. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 126

Ex parte O'CONNELL. (Cr. 1358.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 2, 1926.)

1. Divorce ⟹87—Court could not enjoin husband pendente lite from entering house and annoying wife, where order to show cause noticed application on wife's complaint for divorce only, which did not charge mistreatment (Code Civ. Proc. § 527).

Where order to show cause for not restraining husband from entering dwelling house and annoying wife noticed application on latter's complaint for divorce only, which mentioned no property and did not charge husband with any misuse of property involved or mistreatment of wife, court had no jurisdiction to issue injunction pendente lite, under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.

2. Divorce ⟹254—Interlocutory decree not appealed from, awarding property to husband, finally determined property rights.

Interlocutory divorce decree awarding property to husband became final and conclusive determination of parties' property rights, where not appealed from.

3. Divorce ⟹87—Denial of final decree for husband, after dismissing wife's complaint, held final determination, as respects injunction.

Denial of husband's motion for final divorce decree on his cross-complaint on ground that parties had become reconciled and were living together, after order, not appealed from, dismissing wife's complaint for want of prosecution, held final determination of divorce proceeding as respects parties' marital status, as respects right to injunction.

4. Divorce ⟹87—Court could not enjoin husband pendente lite from entering house and annoying wife, after finally dismissing her divorce suit, disposing of property, and denying final decree for husband (Code Civ. Proc. § 527).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527, court had no jurisdiction to grant injunction pendente lite, restraining husband from entering dwelling house and annoying wife, after final judgments dismissing wife's divorce suit, disposing of parties' property rights by interlocutory decree for husband, and denying final decree on husband's cross-complaint; no appeal having been taken from interlocutory decree.

Application by Daniel O'Connell for a writ of habeas corpus to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. Writ granted, and applicant discharged.

See, also, 242 P. 741.

Daniel O'Connell, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is a proceeding in habeas corpus. The petitioner was sentenced to a term in the county jail for contempt in failing to obey a temporary mandatory injunction ordering him to vacate his home which he had occupied with his wife for more than ten years past. The application is contested by petitioner's wife, at whose instance the contempt order was made, and on the hearing both parties put in evidence records of legal proceedings had between the parties extending over a long period of time. The facts herein stated are taken from this record and are not disputed.

The parties were married on February 20, 1912, and lived together as husband and wife in the home property here in controversy until September 7, 1920, when the petitioner was taken to the federal prison at McNeill's Island to serve a sentence under a judgment of the federal court. On the 9th of August, 1917, about the time this judgment was entered, the petitioner conveyed the property to his wife in trust, for the purpose of securing a bail bond for his release, pending appeal. On February 28, 1922, while the petitioner was still confined in the federal prison, his wife commenced an action for divorce upon the sole ground of his conviction, and made no mention in her complaint of the property, and did not ask for any relief so far as the property was concerned.

The petitioner answered this complaint and filed a cross-complaint, setting up all the facts relating to the transfer and ownership of the property and alleging cruelty on the part of the wife. He prayed for a divorce on that ground and for an award of the property. On his return from McNeill's Island in May, 1923, the petitioner and his wife continued to live in their home property, but whether they resumed the relation of husband and wife is a matter in dispute. On June 2, 1924, after due notice and hearing, the wife's complaint for a divorce was dismissed, and this petitioner was awarded an interlocutory decree of divorce on his cross-complaint. At that time the trial court found that the transfers of the property to petitioner's wife were without consideration and decreed that the entire estate therein should be granted to this petitioner. Notice of entry of this decree was duly served on June 5, 1924, and, no appeal or other proceeding to set it aside having been taken, it became a final and conclusive determination of the property rights of the parties. Abbott v. Superior Court, 69 Cal. App. 660, 664, 232 P. 154; Bacigalupi v. Bacigalupi, 72 Cal. App. 654, 658, 238 P. 93. On May 20, 1924, the wife of petitioner, without notice, procured an order of court setting aside this interlocutory decree, but on June 30 following this order was vacated on the ground that it had been in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. Upon the expiration of the period of one year after the entry of the interlocutory decree, the petitioner herein applied to the court for entry of a final decree of divorce, but this was denied on July 23, 1925, on the ground that the parties had cohabited as husband and wife since the entry of the interlocutory decree. From this order the petition on September 1, 1925, took an appeal which does not appear to have been determined. Before the appeal was taken, but after the entry of the order of July 23, 1925, an order to show cause was issued in the divorce proceeding, citing the defendant therein (the petitioner herein) to appear and show cause why a temporary injunction pendente lite should not be issued restraining said defendant from entering and living in the dwelling house "referred to in the complaint in this action," from making any repairs or improvements upon said dwelling house, and from annoying or harrassing the plaintiff in any way. The order to show cause was issued upon the complaint of the plaintiff on file in the divorce case and constituted the notice of motion for an injunction which was subsequently heard. On September 10, 1925, the order to show cause and application for an injunction was heard and a temporary injunction was ordered issued enjoining the defendant during the pendency of the action from doing any of the acts mentioned in the order to show cause. On September 14, 1925, a paper designated "temporary injunction" was filed, signed by the judge of the court. Appeals were taken from this order, from the temporary injunction, and from the order refusing to vacate this injunction.

Pending this appeal, the petitioner's wife procured an order citing the petitioner for contempt for failing to obey this injunction, and he was committed. From the commitment the petitioner sued out a writ of habeas corpus to the First division of this court, where the contempt proceedings were held void, and the petitioner was released from custody for the very obvious reason that the trial court was without jurisdiction to punish the petitioner for contempt of a mandatory injunction which was stayed by appeal. In re O'Connell (Cal. App.) 242 P. 741.

Thereafter the wife moved in the Supreme Court to dismiss the appeal from the injunction of September 14, 1925, and this motion was granted without opposition. The petitioner was then cited again for contempt and was committed on September 8, 1926, for violating the terms of the "injunction issued out of this court on the 10th day of September, 1925."

[1] At the hearing in the trial court, as well as in the presentation of this application for a writ of habeas corpus, the petitioner has urged that the entire contempt proceedings are void because the trial court had no jurisdiction to issue the injunction and that, in any event, the proceedings are stayed because there is still pending in the Supreme Court a perfected appeal from the order of September 10, 1925, granting the injunction, and from the order refusing to dissolve the injunction as issued. On the second point the argument is that the motion to dismiss the appeal designated the appeal from the injunction signed by the trial judge and filed September 14, 1925; that this was not an appealable order and appellant did not contest the motion for that reason; and that the two separate appeals from the order for an injunction dated September 10, and from the order refusing to dissolve the injunction, are still pending and stay all proceedings in contempt. It is not necessary to pass upon this question because we are satisfied that the trial court was wholly without jurisdiction to issue the injunction in the first instance, and that with the fall of that order the contempt proceedings must fall.

Section 527, Code of Civil Procedure, authorizes an injunction pendente lite "at any time before judgment upon a verified complaint, or upon affidavits if the complaint * * * or the affidavits" show sufficient ground therefor. The order to show cause for the injunction noticed the application upon the plaintiff's complaint for divorce only. This complaint did not specify or mention any property of any character and did not charge defendant (this petitioner) with any misuse of the property involved or with any mistreatment of the plaintiff. There was, therefore, no foundation for the application in the first instance, and the defendant's demurrer should have been sustained.

[2] Prior to the issuance of the order to show cause, an interlocutory judgment in divorce, which specifically awarded this property to this petitioner, was entered. This interlocutory judgment was not appealed from and became a final and conclusive adjudication of the property rights of the parties. Bacigalupi v. Bacigalupi, 72 Cal. App. 654, 658, 238 P. 93; Pereira v. Pereira, 156 Cal. 1, 9, 103 P. 488, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107; Estate of Bollinger, 170 Cal. 380, 383, 149 P. 995.

[3] More than one year prior to the issuance of the temporary injunction an order had been entered dismissing plaintiff's complaint for divorce for want of prosecution. No appeal was taken from that order. On July 23, 1925, petitioner's motion for a final decree of divorce on his cross-complaint was denied upon the grounds (as found by the trial court) that the parties had become reconciled and were living together as husband and wife. This was a final determination of the divorce proceeding in so far as the marital status of the parties was concerned.

[4] When, therefore, the court, on September 10 following, issued its temporary injunction "pendente lite" there was nothing pending in the action. This injunction was issued after final judgment dismissing plaintiff's action for divorce, after final judgment disposing of the property rights of the parties, and after final judgment denying a final decree of divorce of the marital status based upon petitioner's cross-complaint. The order for a temporary injunction was directly contrary to the express provisions of section 527, Code of Civil Procedure, and was beyond the court's jurisdiction. This is not a case where an injunction is necessary to preserve the status quo pending an appeal such as City of Pasadena v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 781, 788, 109 P. 620, 21 Ann. Cas. 1355, and Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 649, 242 P. 725. This is so because no appeal was taken from the interlocutory decree—the only judgment or order disposing of or affecting the property in suit. There was, therefore, no subject-matter involved in any litigation before either the trial or appellate court to which an injunction "pendente lite" might relate.

The writ is granted, and the prisoner is discharged.

I concur: STURTEVANT, J.

80 Cal. App. 104

BURCKARD v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 5325.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 1, 1926.)

1. Sales 🔑398—Court's findings held sufficient to entitle plaintiff to judgment for mistaken overpayment on purchase price of peas.

In action for overpayment on purchase price of peas, court's findings that defendant made no other sales of peas to buyer, did not believe that credit established covered additional sales, or credit full amount received to buyer's account, and did not disburse amount of overpayment before learning of mistake in amount of credit, or sue for amount due on account of additional sales, less amount of such overpayment, held sufficient to entitle plaintiff to judgment.

2. Payment 🔑85(1)—Payment under mistake of fact, however negligent, may be recovered, unless unjust because of change in payee's position.

Money paid under mistake of fact, however negligently made, may be recovered back unless payment caused such a change in position of other party that it would be unjust to require him to refund.

3. Sales 🔑397—Seller sued for overpayment had burden of proving that he sued buyer for amount due on other sales, less amount of overpayment as alleged.

In action for overpayment on purchase price of peas, sold by defendant to corporation in foreign country, burden was on defendant to prove that he filed action in such country, as alleged, to recover amount due on account of other sales of peas, less amount of such overpayment.

4. Sales 🔑397—Seller's testimony, in suit for overpayment, held mere conclusion, insufficient to negative finding that he brought no suit against buyer for amount due on other sales, less amount of overpayment.

In action for overpayment on purchase price of peas, sold to corporation in Spain, defendant's testimony that he commenced suit against corporation in that country for amount due on account of other sales of peas to it, less amount of such overpayment, and signed original of affidavit in Spanish, which he could not read, held mere conclusion, insufficient to negative court's finding that he filed no such action.

5. Sales 🔑397—Whether seller properly credited amount received held immaterial on issue whether he disbursed overpayment before learning of mistake.

Whether defendant, in suit for overpayment on purchase price of peas, gave proper credit on his books for amount received, held immaterial on issue whether he disbursed amount of overpayment before learning of mistake in amount of bank credit established.

6. Sales 🔑397—Finding that seller did not disburse amount of overpayment before learning of mistake held not erroneous.

In action for overpayment on price of peas, finding that defendant did not disburse amount of overpayment before learning of mistake in amount of bank credit established held not erroneous because of defendant's testimony that he credited amount on his books and disbursed it before receiving notice from bank to return it, where he merely gave his agent book credit for half of amount as commissions, and contract under which he claimed to have purchased other peas for buyer was repudiated by latter because of material alterations by defendant not appearing in copy first produced in court.

7. Sales 🔑397—Finding that amount of overpayment on purchase price was property of bank, as assignee of which plaintiff sued, held not erroneous.

In action for overpayment made on purchase price of peas, through mistake in amount of credit established with bank, as assignee of which plaintiff sued, finding that amount sued for was money and property of such bank and not of bank establishing credit, held not erroneous, where correspondence between banks warranted inference that mistake was fault of assignor, which assumed responsibility and adjusted accounts with other bank accordingly.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1071(1)—Finding that amount of overpayment on purchase price was property of bank, as assignee of which plaintiff sued, held not prejudicial to defendant.

In action for overpayment on purchase price by mistake in amount of credit established by foreign bank with domestic bank, as assignee of which plaintiff sued, finding that amount of overpayment was property of latter, not of foreign bank, held not prejudicial to defendant, who admitted overpayment and asserted, and had passed on, all defenses and counterclaims available against foreign bank, whose correspondence, wherein assignor was charged with mistake, showed impossibility of duplicating recovery against defendant.

9. Sales ⚷397—Letter from foreign bank to domestic bank, showing latter's mistake in amount of credit established, and its ownership of money sued for by its assignee as overpayment on purchase price, held admissible.

In action for overpayment on purchase price of peas, letter from foreign bank to domestic bank, as assignee of which plaintiff sued, showing mistake in amount of credit, which defendant admitted, and domestic bank's ownership of money sued for, which was material issue, held admissible.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by L. E. Burckard against G. A. Smith, doing business under the firm name and style of the Universal Sales Company, and G. A. Smith, individually. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Minor Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

H. J. Angell, and W. W. Wallace, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Plaintiff, as assignee of the Irving National Bank of New York, recovered a judgment against defendant for the payment of the sum of $2,000, alleged to be due on account of an overpayment made to defendant on the purchase price of merchandise sold by defendant to a corporation in Spain. The defendant appeals.

It appears that during the summer of 1919 appellant sold 500 sacks of chick peas (garbanzos) to El Triunfo, a corporation of Bilboa, Spain; payment therefor being made through credit established by a Madrid bank with the Irving National Bank of New York, the money being actually paid to appellant in Los Angeles by a bank in that city. A mistake was made in arranging the credit with the New York bank, and, instead of establishing the amount thereof in the sum of $11,500, as was intended, the New York bank gave credit for $13,500. As a result thereof, appellant was overpaid $2,000, for which amount he has been sued. As between said banks, the responsibility for the mistake appears to have been assumed by the one in New York; it being allowed a debit by the Madrid bank of only $11,500, and, so far as the evidence shows, their accounts with each other were adjusted accordingly.

Appellant concedes the fact that there was an overpayment to him of $2,000 on the sale of the 500 sacks of peas, but he endeavors to justify the retention of the overpayment mainly upon the ground that he was paid the full amount of said credit as the result of the negligent act of said banks and that he accepted the same, believing he was entitled thereto, and that, prior to the time he learned that a mistake had been made and he was called upon to rectify the same, he had in good faith disbursed said money, and that, under the circumstances, it would be unjust to require him to refund. In this respect it was alleged in the answer that during the summer of 1919 he made sales of peas to El Triunfo in addition to the 500 sacks mentioned, and that, when notified by the New York bank of the credit in his favor for $13,500, he did not know the amount of the purchase price for the 500 sacks, but, believing that the payment of the $13,500 was to apply on account of all peas sold, he collected the full amount thereof and gave credit on his books therefor; that later he was informed by his agent in Spain that the correct amount of the purchase price of the 500 sacks amounted to only $11,500, and he immediately instructed said agent to credit the additional sum of $2,000 received by him on such additional sales; that thereafter, and before he learned that a mistake had been made in arranging the amount of the credit, he disbursed the entire sum of said $2,000, one-half thereof being paid to his agent in Spain as commissions and the remainder used in purchasing additional peas under a subsequent contract with El Triunfo. It was further alleged that after instructing his said agent to allow El Triunfo a credit of $2,000 on the sale of peas other than those constituting the 500-sack shipment, and, before he was notified that a mistake had been made in arranging said credit with the New York bank, he instituted an action in the courts of Spain against El Triunfo for the sum of $4,000, which represented the amount due him on account of the sale of the additional peas, and that in such action he allowed credit for the $2,000 which was overpaid on said 500-sack consignment, and that now, if he is compelled to refund, he will, in addition to the loss already mentioned, be required to forfeit the sum of $2,000 thus pleaded as a credit in the action in the courts of Spain because the statute of limitations bars an amendment withdrawing such credit from the pleadings.

[1, 2] The trial court found, among other things, that appellant made no sales of peas to El Triunfo other than the 500 sacks mentioned, and that, although he was unaware at the time he received the sum of $13,500 of the amount of the purchase price for said 500 sacks, he did not believe that the credit thus established covered additional sales, nor did he credit the full amount received to the account of El Triunfo; furthermore, the court found that it was not true that appellant disbursed the amount of the overpayment before he learned of the mistake that had been made regarding the amount of the credit, nor was it true that he had instituted any proceedings in the courts of Spain. It is evident that the findings above noted, when considered in connection with the affirmative findings made as to the allegations of the complaint, were sufficient to entitle respondent to judgment.

"The rule governing such transactions received extended consideration in Crocker-Woolworth Bank v. Nevada Bank, 139 Cal. 564 [73 P. 456, 63 L. R. A. 245, 96 Am. St. Rep. 169]. There, amongst other quotations and citations of authority, the following language from the National Bank of Commerce v. National Mechanics' Association, 55 N. Y. 213 [14 Am. Rep. 232] is repeated: 'It is now settled, both in England and in this state, that money paid under a mistake of fact may be recovered back, however negligent the party paying may have been in making the mistake, unless the payment has caused such a change in the position of the other party that it would be unjust to require him to refund.' And the matter is summed up by this court in the following language: 'An examination of the cases will show that in all well considered adjudications recognition, tacit or express, is given to these principles. Their ultimate analysis amounts to this: That plaintiff, even if negligent, may recover if his act has not changed the position of an innocent defendant to his detriment.'" National Bank of California v. Miner, 167 Cal. 532, 140 P. 27.

[3, 4] Appellant contends, however, that the finding in negation of the allegations that he filed an action in the Spanish courts is contrary to the evidence. Bearing in mind that the burden was upon appellant to prove the fact mentioned, we think he utterly failed to do so. The testimony relating to this subject was given by appellant, and in its entirety it was as follows:

"I commenced a suit in the courts of Spain against El Triunfo. I signed the original of this affidavit, which is in Spanish and sent it to Spain."

The contents of the document referred to by the witness was not introduced in evidence; it was written in Spanish, and he did not know its contents, because he could not read the Spanish language; and, so far as the record discloses, the document may have related to a subject entirely foreign to the matter at issue. His bare statement that he had commenced suit in Spain was merely his conclusion; and, even if the testimony quoted was sufficient upon which to base an affirmative finding of fact, the evidence failed to show that the statute of limitations under the Spanish law barred an amendment to his pleadings, as he claimed.

[5, 6] Appellant further testified as follows:

"After I received the $13,500 from this draft, I gave credit to El Triunfo on my books for that amount. * * * Upon receipt of the $13,500, I disbursed it. I did not have any of it at the time I received notice from this bank that they wanted it returned to them. Besides paying a portion of it to Villanueva [appellant's agent in Spain] for his services, I paid other portions of it for the purchase of garbanzos" (meaning garbanzos for El Triunfo, under the later contract).

In view of this testimony, appellant claims that the negative findings upon the matters referred to therein are erroneous. The question of whether appellant gave proper credit on his books for the amount he received appears to be entirely immaterial. As to the matter of the disbursement of the $2,000, it does not appear that appellant remitted any part of the same to Villanueva. He merely gave him book credit for the sum of $1,000; and, in regard to the payment of other portions of the overpayment in making purchases of garbanzos, the evidence shows that the later contract, under which he claims to have made the purchases, was not binding upon El Triunfo and in fact had been repudiated by said company because, after receiving it from El Triunfo duly signed, and before attaching his signature thereto, appellant altered its contents in material respects; and, moreover, the manner in which a copy of said contract was first produced in court in which said alterations were not made to appear was sufficient to justify the trial court in receiving the entire testimony of appellant with distrust.

[7, 8] The trial court also found:

"That said sum of $2,000 (paid by the New York bank to appellant) was the money and property of said Irving National Bank of New York."

The sufficiency of the evidence to support this finding is also assailed, and, in connection therewith, appellant contends upon the assumption that said money was not the property of the New York bank, but belonged to the bank in Madrid, that the action herein, being based upon the assignment from the New York bank, has not been brought in the name of the real party in interest. We find no merit in either point. The fair inference from the correspondence between the two banks is that the fault for the mistake lay with the New York bank in not giving heed to the statements made in the later correspondence from the bank in Madrid, which clearly indicated that the limit of the credit was to be $11,500, and, as already stated, the New York bank appears to have assumed the responsibility for the mistake, and the accounts between the two banks have been adjusted accordingly. Moreover, we think the question of the determination of the title to the money is not one that is of vital importance to the appellant. He admits having been overpaid; in this action he has asserted and had passed upon all of the defenses and counterclaims which were available to him against the Madrid bank, and it is evident from the correspondence of the latter bank, wherein the New York bank was charged with the mistake, a duplicate recovery for the amount herein sued for could not be possibly maintained against appellant. It would therefore seem plain that his rights are not affected by the findings complained of.

[9] The letter from the bank in Madrid to the New York bank, dated February 28, 1920, was clearly admissible in evidence. Its contents show that a mistake had been made in the amount of the credit, a fact which appellant admits, and also that the money sued for herein was the property of respondent's assignor, which was a material issue in the case.

The remaining points urged by appellant are either already answered by what has been said or else they are entirely foreign to the facts involved herein and therefore need not be noticed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

---

80 Cal. App. 185

JAMES v. JAMES. (Civ. 3140.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 9, 1926.)

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑242—One claiming under deed subsequent to unrecorded deed must show valuable consideration and receipt of deed without knowledge of prior deed.

One basing claim to real estate on deed executed and recorded subsequent to execution and delivery of unrecorded deed has burden of showing deed was received without actual notice of prior unrecorded deed and that he has parted with valuable consideration as purchase price.

2. Evidence 🔑383(7)—Recitals in deed are insufficient to establish consideration as against grantee of prior unrecorded deed.

Recitals in deed as to consideration paid are but declarations of grantor, and are insufficient to establish consideration as against grantee of prior unrecorded deed.

3. Husband and wife 🔑47(3)—Husband's conveyance to wife is not defeated by wife's failure to make will in accordance with alleged oral agreement.

Husband's conveyance to wife will not be defeated on theory of failure of consideration because of wife's failure to execute will in accordance with alleged oral agreement at time of executing deed, in absence of showing of fraud on part of wife.

4. Deeds 🔑19—Law rescinding contract for failure of consideration held inapplicable to conveyance of land, where actual performance of future promise is waived (Civ. Code, § 1689).

Civ. Code, § 1689, providing for rescission of contracts on failure of consideration, does not apply to conveyance of land executed in reliance on future promise, where vendor waives actual performance as condition of vesting title.

5. Deeds 🔑19—Grantor's only remedy for breach of personal covenant is action for damages.

Grantor's only remedy for breach of personal covenant is action for damages, and grantee's failure to perform does not constitute defense to action to establish property rights conveyed by deed.

6. Deeds 🔑19—Grantee's failure to perform promise after execution of contract by vendor is not sufficient ground to set aside deed.

Where contract or agreement on part of vendor is fully executed, mere promise and failure to perform on part of grantee thereafter is not sufficient ground for setting aside deed.

7. Husband and wife 🔑47(3)—Wife's failure to execute will in accordance with oral promise after unconditional conveyance by husband held insufficient to rescind deed (Civ. Code, § 1056).

Under Civ. Code, § 1056, failure of wife after unconditional conveyance by husband to execute will in accordance with oral agreement held insufficient to furnish basis for rescission of deed.

8. Frauds, statute of 🔑131(1)—Instrument transferring real property may not be restricted or enlarged by oral stipulation.

Any attempt to restrict or enlarge scope or effect of instruments transferring real property by an oral stipulation is prohibited by statute.

9. Quieting title 🔑10(1)—Plaintiff in action to quiet title must recover on strength of own title.

Plaintiff in action to quiet title must recover on strength of own title and not on weakness of title claimed by adversary.

10. Evidence 🔑383(7)—Deed in possession of grantee is admissible in evidence as prima facie proof (Civ. Code, § 1055).

Under Civ. Code, § 1055, deed when duly executed and acknowledged, in possession of grantee and produced by him, is admissible in evidence as prima facie proof without anything further.

11. Evidence 🔑230(1)—Husband's statements at time of making deed to wife indicating divesting himself of title are admissible as against interest.

Testimony of husband's statements just before and after execution and delivery of deed to wife, indicating that he had divested himself of title, are admissible as against interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Alice T. James against Howard T. James and Hortense James, dismissed as to defendant last named upon her death. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Walter B. Kibbey, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles L. Evans and Whitney Smith, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action to quiet title to certain lots of land situate, lying and being in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California. The action was originally begun against Howard T. James and Hortense James, his wife. Hortense James having died, the action was dismissed as to her.

The complaint is in the usual form of a pleading in an action to quiet title; alleges that the plaintiff is and ever since the month of August, 1922, has been the owner of the lots of land described in the complaint; alleges that the defendant claims some interest therein, and that the interest of the defendant is without right, etc. Judgment was prayed that the plaintiff's title to said premises be quieted. The answer of the defendant denies the ownership of the plaintiff, and, by way of affirmative defense, alleges ownership of one-half interest in and to the described premises. This portion of the defendant's answer, after alleging that the plaintiff and Thomas F. James were, during all the times mentioned in the pleadings, husband and wife and owners, as joint tenants, of property described in plaintiff's complaint, is in the following language:

> "That on said 22d day of August, 1922, the said Thomas F. James made his certain deed of conveyance to the plaintiff herein for the undivided one-half interest of the said Thomas F. James in and to said real property; that said deed was placed in the hands of the said plaintiff with the understanding and agreement and upon the statement made by the said plaintiff that she would immediately make and execute her will wherein and whereby her said husband was to be the sole beneficiary, should he survive her, and in the event the said husband did not survive the said plaintiff, all of the property belonging to the plaintiff at the time of her death was to be willed, by the will hereinbefore alleged unto Arthur C. James, a two-fifths interest and Howard T. James (this defendant) a three-fifths interest; that by the said will the said plaintiff was to nominate and appoint the said Thomas F. James executor, should he be living, and in the event of his death before the death of the plaintiff the said Howard T. James, this defendant, was to be nominated and appointed executor.
>
> "This defendant alleges that the said plaintiff did not make and execute a will in accordance with the agreement between her and the said Thomas F. James at the time of the making of the deed hereinbefore mentioned; that she never made and executed such a will; that the consideration for the deed from the said Thomas F. James to the said Alice T. James has wholly failed; that there is no consideration for the said deed from the said Thomas F. James to the said Alice T. James, and that the deed from the said Thomas F. James to the said Alice T. James was never delivered to the said Alice T. James except upon the conditions and for the consideration in this special defense alleged, and that it was not the intention of the said Thomas F. James that the said deed should be delivered to the said Alice T. James, and that it was not intended by the said Thomas F. James that the title to and undivided one-half interest in said real property should pass to the said Alice T. James except upon the fulfillment by her of the conditions hereinbefore alleged."

The answer then further alleges that said deed of Thomas F. James to Alice T. James was not recorded until some months after said month of August, 1922; that in the meantime the said Thomas F. James learned that said Alice T. James had not made any will, and thereupon made, executed, and delivered a good and sufficient bargain and sale deed for all of his interest in said premises to the defendant, Howard T. James. This deed bears date of September 22, 1922, and was recorded on the same day.

At the conclusion of the trial the court made and filed its findings of facts, only one of which needs to be set forth herein:

> "IV. The court further finds that on or about the 22d day of August, 1922, the plaintiff and Thomas F. James, who at said time was the husband of the said Alice T. James, were the owners as joint tenants of that certain real property described in plaintiff's complaint; that on said 22d day of August, 1922, the said Thomas F. James made his certain deed of conveyance to the plaintiff herein for the undivided one-half interest of the said Thomas F. James in and to said real property; that said deed was placed in the hands of the said plaintiff with the understanding and agreement and upon the statement made by the said plaintiff that she would immediately make and execute her will wherein and whereby her said husband was to be the sole beneficiary, should he survive her, and in the event the said husband did not survive the said plaintiff, all of the property belonging to the plaintiff at the time of her death was to be willed, by the will hereinbefore alleged, unto Arthur C. James, a two-fifths interest, and Howard T. James (this defendant) a three-fifths interest; that by the said will the said plaintiff was to nominate and appoint the said Thomas F. James executor, should he be living, and in the event of his death before the death of the plaintiff the said Howard T. James, this defendant, was to be nominated and appointed executor; that the said plaintiff did not make and execute a will in accordance with the agreement between her and the said Thomas F. James at the time of the making of the deed hereinbefore mentioned; that she never made and executed such a will; that the consideration for the deed from the said Thomas F. James to the said Alice T. James has wholly failed; that there is no consideration for the said deed from the said Thomas F. James to the said Alice T. James, and that the deed from the said Thomas F. James to the said Alice T. James was never delivered to the said Alice T. James, and that it was not the intention of the said Thomas F. James that the said deed should be delivered to the said Alice T. James, and that it was not intended by the said Thomas F. James that the title to an undivided one-half interest in said real property should pass to the said Alice T. James except upon the fulfillment by her of the conditions hereinbefore found to have been imposed; that the said deed from the said Thomas F. James to the said Alice T. James was not recorded until some months after the said month of August, 1922, and that in the meantime, when the said Thomas F. James learned that the said Alice T. James had not made the will in accordance with her agreement made at the time of the making by the said Thomas F. James to the said Alice T. James of the deed bearing date of the 22d day of August, 1922, he made, executed, and delivered unto the defendant Howard T. James a good and sufficient grant, bargain, and sale deed for all of the interest that the said Thomas F. James owned or had or possessed in the real property described in this action; that the said deed from the said Thomas F. James to the defendant Howard T. James was duly recorded in the office of the county recorder (of the county of Los Angeles)? of the state of California immediately after its execution and delivery; and that the said deed from the said Thomas F. James to the said defendant was recorded prior to the recordation of the deed from the said Thomas F. James to the said Alice T. James; that at the time of delivery of the deed to defendant and the recordation thereof, defendant did not have any knowledge of the deed to plaintiff dated August 22, 1922."

Conclusions of law based upon this finding were drawn in favor of the defendant and judgment entered accordingly.

The testimony upon which finding No. 4 is based, as set forth in the transcript, shows the following facts: That prior to the 16th day of August, 1922, the plaintiff and Thomas F. James acquired the property described in plaintiff's complaint by a deed conveying the same to them as joint tenants; that on the 16th day of August, 1922, the plaintiff and said Thomas F. James went to the office of Charles L. Evans, an attorney at law, and then and there a deed was executed by the said Thomas F. James, purporting to convey all of his interest in the described premises to his wife, the plaintiff, Alice T. James. This deed contains, among other things, the following paragraph:

> "This conveyance is made, given and accepted by the parties hereto for the purpose of vesting the foregoing described real property in the grantee herein as her sole and separate property without any limits or restrictions whatsoever."

The testimony of the plaintiff to the transaction is as follows:

> "I received the deed on August 16th in the presence of Mr. Evans and my husband on the day the deed was handed to me. There was a conversation between Mr. Evans, my husband, and myself. Mr. Evans remarked that Mr. James had told him about things at the house and had this transfer made up, transferring his interest to me. After this Mr. Evans asked me what would be my disposition of the property in case of my death. I told him I did not know what to say and asked, 'What does Mr. James want?' And he remarked that he wanted it left to his boys, and I said, 'All right.' There was something said in this conversation about my making a will, but there was no date set. I was to make a will in favor of Howard and his brother. After the deed was handed to me, Mr. Evans told me not to record the deed until I was told to or that the property was in danger of being involved. It was not said that I should not record the deed until after the will was made. That was at the time the deed was executed on August 16th in the office of Mr. Evans. There was nothing said by any of us as to the drawing of a will. I took the deed away on the 16th of August and had it recorded on the 11th day of October, 1922. I don't remember having any conversation with my husband regarding the will between August 16th and October 11, 1922. Before I went to Mr. Evans' office I had a conversation with my husband, who came in—he had been sprinkling the lawn and came in from the garden and asked me if I could go over town with him, and he said before Mrs. Parks that he was going to—that he was sprinkling the lawn for the last time; when he came back it would be all mine and I would have to arrange for the sprinkling after that. That was on August 16, 1922. There was no mention of a will in that conversation. Mr. James came back with me from Mr. Evans' office. I heard him tell Mrs. Parks that he had deeded it to me and I was the sole owner of the property. Mr. James then went to the mine at Searchlight or Crescent as it was called after that. * * * On August 22d or August 21st, I received a letter from Mr. James: (We here quote the only part thereof material to this case.) 'You will now admit, won't you, Alice, that I have proven when it came to the hard test to be a true friend and that notwithstanding squabbles, I transferred to you all I had, including personal financial standing in Los Angeles,' " etc.

The testimony of Mr. Evans, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant, concerning the transaction, is in substance, as follows:

> "About the middle of August, 1922, Mr. and Mrs. James came to my office. On the day or two before the 16th day of August, 1922, Mr. James talked with me about the possibility of having some difficulty at his mine, or in the mine in which he was interested. On the 16th day of August, they both came to my office, and the deed which has been introduced in evidence was drawn or had been drawn. There was some conversation between Mrs. James, her husband, and myself as to this deed and the reason for it. Mr. James said there was likelihood of some difficulty at the mine. He wanted to protect his wife and his two boys. Before the deed was given to her, or all in the same conversation, he said: 'Now, you are to make a will to the two boys, Arthur and Howard,' and she said: 'Yes.' There was some discussion as to the division of the property. She said that she would not—that this deed would not be recorded until after the will was made. She gave me at that time data for the will to be drawn for her, and she said she would come down in a few days, and that the will should be drawn, and that she would execute it, leaving all the property of which she died possessed to Howard James three-fifths and to Arthur James two-fifths." (This witness then states that the deed which was given to her at that time was not to be recorded until after it had developed whether or not there would be any claims that the husband might be liable for.) "I asked her age at the time and her place of residence. If Mr. James, her husband, were living, he was to be the executor of the estate without bonds. She did not waive a bond in Howard's case. The deed was turned over, and the conversation was all one transaction. The deed was the only instrument executed at that time. The only thing said as to when the deed should be recorded was that it should not be recorded until after it was determined whether there were any claims. That was all that was said about it. I never made a will for Mrs. James. I took her telephone number and did not call her up. The deed was given to Mrs. James in my office."

Howard T. James, the defendant, testified as follows:

"I am one of the defendants in this action, and Thomas F. James is my father; I have seen the document handed me before, and that is my father's signature. My father gave it to me, and I took it up and had it recorded on the day it was given to me, on the 22d day of September, 1922. (Here was exhibited, identified, and admitted in evidence the deed to the defendant from Thomas F. James, purporting to convey to the defendant all the right, title and interest of the party of the first part in and to the premises described in plaintiff's complaint.) I knew nothing about the deed from my father to his wife at the time I took this deed."

Lillian Parks, a witness called on behalf of the plaintiff, was called to testify as to the conversation with Mr. James on the day of the execution of the deed by Mr. James to the plaintiff. After stating that she had had such conversation, the court sustained an objection thereto on the ground that it was not rebuttal, stating that it might have been admissible in chief as declarations against interest, but that as Mr. James did not testify, there was nothing in the testimony to be rebutted.

The finding of the trial court which we have set forth is to the effect that there was no delivery of the deed except as conditional upon the plaintiff executing a will devising and bequeathing the described property to Howard T. James and his brother, Arthur James, and, also, that there was a failure of consideration for the deed executed and delivered by Thomas F. James to Alice T. James. There is no testimony in the record nor finding by the court to the effect that Howard T. James ever paid any consideration, valuable or otherwise, for the execution and delivery to him of the instrument dated September 22, 1922, purporting to convey all the right, title, and interest of Thomas F. James to the defendant, Howard T James.

[1, 2] The defendant in this case, basing his claim upon a deed executed and recorded subsequent to the execution and delivery of an unrecorded deed, takes upon himself the burden of showing that the deed accepted by him was received without actual knowledge of the prior unrecorded deed, and, also, that he has, in fact, parted with a valuable consideration as the purchase price of the property. In Black Eagle Oil Co. v. Belcher, 22 Cal. App. 258, 133 P. 1153, the law in this particular is set forth in the opinion as follows:

"'To entitle a party to protection as such purchaser, he must prove the payment of the purchase money in good faith and without notice, actual or constructive, prior to and down to the time of its payment, for if he had notice at any moment of time before the payment of the money, he is not a bona fide purchaser.' Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 210, 9 L. Ed. 388; Scott v. Umbarger, 41 Cal. 419; Eversdon v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 163, 3 P. 641. Nor can the recitals contained in the deed as to the consideration paid be accepted as prima facie proof of such payment. 'Such recitals are but the declarations of the grantor.'"

The respondent relies upon and the court apparently accepted as sufficient the recital in the instrument executed and delivered by Thomas F. James to the defendant, Howard T. James, purporting to convey the property described in the complaint, wherein it is stated that the said Thomas F. James for a consideration of $10, "to him in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, does hereby grant to Howard T. James" all right, title, and interest of the grantor in and to the premises in controversy. The insufficiency of such testimony to establish consideration is explicitly held in the case of Long v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 218. There the court said, where reliance was had upon the recitals in a deed to establish consideration:

"The burden of proving this rested upon him [grantee], and the recitals in the deed are not, as he contends, prima facie proof of a valuable consideration. Such recitals are but the declarations of the grantor, and it has never been held that the declarations of a vendor or assignor, made after the sale or assignment, can be received to defeat the title of the vendee or assignee. A party seeking to bring himself within the statute cannot rely upon the recitals of his deed, but must prove the payment of the purchase money aliunde."

In 9 California Jurisprudence, § 45, p. 145, we find the following:

"Where the payment of a valuable consideration becomes a material question, the recital in a deed of a valuable consideration paid by the grantee is only evidence of such payment as against the grantor, or against those claiming under the grantor by a subsequent conveyance; but it is evidence of the payment of a valuable consideration only as against those claiming under the grantor by conveyance subsequent to the same. It is, therefore, not evidence as against strangers, nor as against the owner of a prior equity, nor as against one claiming under a prior deed from the same grantor. * * * One claiming as a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration under a second deed, but recorded first in point of time, must affirmatively prove the payment by other evidence than the deed itself."

In Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 45, 73 P. 803, the Supreme Court had before it the same question, and states the rule of law as follows:

> "In order to defeat the claim of plaintiff under the prior deed, it was incumbent upon the defendant to prove, that he was a bona fide purchaser of the premises in dispute; that he had paid a valuable consideration therefor, and without notice of plaintiff's claim. The burden in that respect was upon him. To entitle a party to protection as such a purchaser, he must aver and prove the possession of his grantor, the purchase of the premises, the payment of the purchase money in good faith, and without notice, actual or constructive, prior to and down to the time of its payment, for, if he had notice, actual or constructive, at any moment of time before the payment of the money, he is not a bona fide purchaser [citing cases]."

To the same effect is Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, 78 P. 957, 104 Am. St. Rep. 61. These cases establish beyond controversy that the defendant in this case has failed to establish his right to the premises in controversy as a bona fide purchaser, or to place himself in a position to question the consideration of the prior deed executed by the common grantor to the plaintiff, Alice T. James. It may also be here said that the transcript shows that the purported conveyance executed by Thomas F. James contains the following recital: "This deed is given and accepted without any taxable consideration."

[3-5] Though not exactly in chronological order, we will here consider the finding and alleged failure of consideration relative to the deed under which the plaintiff claims. Neither the allegations of the affirmative defense in the answer nor the findings of the court contain any mention of or intimation that the plaintiff, Alice T. James, was or had been guilty of any fraudulent representations or fraudulent act relative to the conveyance executed to her by her husband. The only fact appearing in the testimony in relation thereto is that no will has ever been executed by Alice T. James and that the plaintiff stated that she would execute such a will. It may also be mentioned herein that the testimony of the plaintiff is to the effect that she had not altered or changed her intentions in relation thereto up to the time of the attempted conveyance by Thomas F. James to the defendant herein. It seems clear that under such circumstances and the testimony contained in the transcript which we have set forth, that no case has been made out on the theory of a failure of consideration. In 9 California Jurisprudence, § 42, p. 141, it is said:

> "A deed without fraud in its inception conveys the title, and is not void on account of failure of consideration, either in whole or in part. And inasmuch as acts done subsequent to the execution of a deed cannot affect its integrity, a subsequent failure of consideration, or breach of a personal covenant not amounting to a condition, will not avoid the deed. Section 1689 of the Civil Code, providing for the rescission of contracts for a failure of consideration through the fault of the party as to whom rescission is made, does not apply to a conveyance of land executed in reliance upon a future promise, where the vendor waives actual performance as a condition of vesting the title. The grantor's only remedy for the breach of a personal covenant is an action for damages. And the failure of a grantee to perform such a covenant does not constitute a defense to an action in which the grantee is seeking to establish property rights conveyed by the deed."

It may be here stated that the defense of failure of consideration subsequent to the execution of a deed presupposes delivery. Otherwise, there would be no conveyance and nothing upon which to predicate a failure of consideration, prerequisite to judgment of rescission.

[6] In the case at bar there was nothing left to be done or performed with relation to the instrument of conveyance by the grantor. If anything was to be done or performed by the grantee it was to be done or performed subsequent to the time when the deed of conveyance was manually transmitted by the grantor to the possession of the grantee. No act was provided to be then and there performed. The allegation in the answer and the finding of the court are to the effect that the will was to be immediately executed, but the testimony and the actions of the parties do not support either the allegation or the findings in such particular. The deed of conveyance was delivered by the grantor to the grantee upon the simple oral promise, if promise it may be called, that she would execute the desired will, no time or date for the execution thereof being stated, which, of course, would mean within a reasonable time, provided such promise were of any force or effect whatever. Where the contract or agreement on the part of the vendor is wholly executed, the mere promise and failure to perform on the part of the grantee thereafter is not sufficient ground for setting aside a deed. In Lawrence v. Gayetty, 78 Cal. 126, 20 P. 382, 12 Am. St. Rep. 29, the Supreme Court thus disposes of such an alleged ground for rescission:

> "Counsel for respondent rely upon section 1689 of the Civil Code. In our judgment, the section referred to has no application to a case like this, where the vendor has waived actual performance on the part of the vendee, by relying upon his mere promise to perform, and, relying upon such promise to perform in the future, has executed the conveyance, thereby vesting the title to the property in his grantee. The contract on the part of the vendor is wholly executed. If the mere promise and the failure to perform is not sufficient to set aside a deed on the ground of fraud, as we have shown, the fact that the same acts are characterized in the pleading as a failure of consideration cannot give them additional force, and thereby bring about the same result. The case of Hartman v. Reed, 50 Cal. 485, is in point against the respondent."

In Schott v. Schott, 168 Cal. 342, 143 P. 595, the Supreme Court reaffirms the decision of Lawrence v. Gayetty, supra, cites other cases, and adds:

> "Under such circumstances, in the absence of fraud, actual or constructive, defendant would have no right to rescind, or to have the deed set aside."

To the same effect are the cases of White v. Hendley, 35 Cal. App. 267, 169 P. 710, and Duckworth v. Watsonville Water Co., 170 Cal. 425, 150 P. 58.

[7, 8] The cases referring to conditions which may furnish a basis for rescission are all based upon conditions set forth in the instrument of conveyance. In the case at bar, there was no condition expressed in the instrument, and, in law, it was not delivered conditionally. There was at best only an oral promise on the part of the grantee of something to be done by her at a subsequent time. Under such circumstances section 1056 of the Civil Code applies. The section reads:

> "A grant cannot be delivered to the grantee conditionally. Delivery to him, or to his agent as such, is necessarily absolute, and the instrument takes effect thereupon, discharged of any condition on which the delivery was made."

In 9 California Jurisprudence, § 60, p. 165, following a quotation of the section above set forth, we find the text reading thus:

> "This principle is well fortified by judicial decisions. Hence, if an instrument is delivered to the grantee as the present deed of the grantor it becomes freed from any condition not expressed in the deed itself, and operates by vesting title immediately without any reference to the performance of the conditions, although such result may be contrary to the express stipulation of the parties. Apart from the elementary rule interdicting the modification or varying of the vital terms of a writing by parol, any attempt to restrict or enlarge the scope or effect of an instrument transferring real property by an oral stipulation is prohibited by the statute of frauds. Hence, whether a deed, when delivered, shall take effect absolutely, or upon the performance of some condition not expressed therein, cannot be determined by parol evidence. Any condition qualifying the delivery must be inserted in the deed itself, or else the deed must not be delivered to the grantee."

In Lewis v. Brown, 22 Cal. App. 38, 133 P. 331, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Hart, thus sets forth the law:

> "'If,' as is well said, in Richmond v. Morford, 4 Wash. 337, 30 P. 241 (31 P. 513), 'the grantor does not intend that his deed shall not take effect until some (oral) condition is performed or the happening of some future event, he should either keep it himself, or leave it with some third person as an escrow, to be delivered at the proper time. If he deliver it as his deed to the grantee, it will operate immediately, without any reference to the performance of the condition, although such a result may be contrary to the express stipulation of the parties at the time of the delivery.'"

See, also, to the same effect, 18 California Jurisprudence, 211, § 116, where the law is fully set forth on this point and many authorities cited. It is apparent, therefore, that the delivery of the deed in the case at bar vested a present title in the grantee without any condition whatever affecting its integrity as an instrument of conveyance of real estate.

[9, 10] The respondent urges that the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of her own title and not upon the weakness of the title claimed by her adversary. This is true, and the cases set forth in respondent's brief clearly support the principle contended for, but they are not applicable here for the simple reason that what we have hereinbefore set forth, taken from the findings and the record in this case, clearly establishes that the findings and judgment of the trial court should have been in favor of the plaintiff. For this reason and because it is necessary to order a new trial herein, we will consider two errors of the trial court upon the admission of testimony. The plaintiff sought to establish a prima facie case by producing the deed executed to her by her husband, duly acknowledged, signed, etc. Upon objection of the defendant, admission of the deed was denied until testimony was given of the circumstances under which the deed was delivered and placed in possession of the appellant. Section 1055 of the Civil Code reads: "A grant duly executed is presumed to have been delivered at its date." A deed, when duly executed and acknowledged, in the possession of the grantee and produced by him, is admissible in evidence as prima facie proof without anything further. 9 Cal. Jur. 193, § 80; Towne v. Towne, 6 Cal. App. 697, 92 P. 1050. The error of the court, however, in this case was immaterial, as the deed in question was subsequently admitted in evidence.

[11] The next objection which seems necessary to consider is that in relation to excluding testimony as to statements made by the grantor of the plaintiff just before and after the execution and delivery of the conveyance by him to her. It is well settled that all such statements which would indicate that the grantor named in the instrument had divested himself of title are admissible as against interest, although partaking of the nature of hearsay testimony. Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703, and copious notes on pages 713 and 714 thereof. Other errors are assigned in the admission and exclusion of evidence, but are not of sufficient importance to require consideration herein. The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 138

PEOPLE v. BOCCHIO. (Cr. 949.) *

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 2, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑1167(4)—Correction of clerical errors in indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses held not prejudicial.

Where, in indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses, punctuation was changed, and word "defendants" was substituted for word "defendant," defendant suffered no prejudice; such amendments being mere corrections of clerical errors.

2. Criminal law 🔑1167(4)—Elimination of all reference to real property in indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses.

Where indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses was amended to exclude all reference to real property alleged to have been obtained, such amendment held not prejudicial.

3. Criminal law 🔑302(1)—Discharge of one of two defendants so that he might testify for state held not error (Pen. Code, § 1099).

Discharge of one of two defendants, indicted for obtaining money by false pretenses, so that he might be a witness for the state, held not error, in view of Pen. Code, § 1099.

4. Criminal law 🔑1167(3)—Denial of motion to strike averments of false representation concerning annual dividends and price increase of stock sold held not prejudicial.

Denial of defendant's motion to strike out averment of indictment for false pretenses in sale of stock, that defendant had falsely represented that stock would pay certain income in dividends annually, and that its price would advance in short time, held not prejudicial; proof of matters covered by such averment being admissible without specific pleading.

5. Criminal law 🔑112(5)—Defendant held properly tried for false pretenses in sale of stock in county where negotiations occurred, though stock was delivered in another county (Pen. Code, § 781).

Where defendant was indicted and tried for false pretenses in sale of stock in county where he had carried on negotiations of sale, court of such county had jurisdiction, though stock sold was delivered in another county; Pen. Code, § 781, giving jurisdiction to either county in which part of consummation of offense occurred, and section 777 not being conflicting.

6. False pretenses 🔑4—Mere obtaining property without false pretense is not a crime.

Mere obtaining of property does not constitute crime, but false pretense is necessary element thereof.

7. False pretenses 🔑43(1)—Prospectus containing false representations as to stock sold through false pretenses held admissible.

In prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses by sale of stock prospectus containing false representations as to stock value, held admissible to show representations made by defendant as to value of property.

8. Criminal law 🔑1169(11)—Admitting cumulative testimony as to defendant's acts in another stock transaction held not prejudicial.

In prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses by sale of stock, admitting testimony, as to defendant's acts in another stock transaction held not prejudicial, where such testimony was merely cumulative of that already in evidence.

9. Criminal law 🔑511(4)—Defendant's conviction for obtaining money by false pretenses held justified by evidence corroborating accomplice (Pen. Code, § 1110).

In prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses by sale of stock, evidence held to sustain conviction as against contention that corroboration of defendant's accomplice, testifying for state, was not had under Pen. Code, § 1110.

10. Criminal law 🔑763, 764(1)—Court's statement on question by juror that prospectus could be considered as representation held not to invade province of jury.

In prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses in sale of stock, court's statement that prospectus in evidence could be considered as representation held not erroneous as invading province of jury.

11. Criminal law 🔑736(1)—What evidence jury may consider is usually for court; weight and effect being for jury.

Question of what evidence jury may consider is question of law, usually decided by court in ruling on admissibility; weight and effect of evidence being for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Harry C. Bocchio was convicted of obtaining property by false pretenses, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Peter A. Breen, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant has appealed from the judgment herein and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The defendant and Eric Von Hoetzendorff were jointly charged by the indictment herein with the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses. Appellant contends that the court erred in permitting the district attorney to amend the indictment. The parts of the indictment material to the question thus raised are as follows:

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court January 31, 1927.

"The said defendants, and each of them on or about the 10th day of May, 1923, in the county of Mendocino, state of California, and before the filing of this indictment: That said defendants, and each of them, with intent to defraud Andrew Hoefer of his property hereinafter set forth [then follow allegations of certain false representations]; that said Andrew Hoefer * * * was by reason of such false pretenses and representations * * * induced to and he did convey and transfer to said Harry C. Bocchio, certain real property * * * and also assigned and delivered to said Harry C. Bocchio ten 7½ per cent. gold bonds of Central Creameries Company; * * * that said real property and said bonds were so secured and obtained by said defendant unlawfully, knowingly and designedly to defraud said Andrew Hoefer; that the market value of the capital stock of said Monta Vista Estates at the time said representations were so made by defendant * * * was not * * * in excess of $6 per share.

[1-3] The indictment was amended by striking out the words herein italicized and the colon preceding them and by substituting the word "defendants" for the word "defendant" in each of the last two places where the latter word appears in the parts quoted. In a subsequent part of the indictment it is alleged "that said defendants when they so made said representations," etc. It is clear that the amendments were of mere clerical errors, and that the defendant suffered no prejudice therefrom. The indictment was further amended by striking out all reference to the real property alleged to have been obtained by defendants and by reducing the alleged value of the property obtained by defendants from $22,000 to $10,000, the latter sum having been originally alleged to be the value of the bonds referred to in the indictment. Before the defendants had gone into their case, on motion of the district attorney, under the provisions of section 1099 of the Penal Code, the court discharged the defendant Hoetzendorff in order that he might be a witness for the people. No error appears in any of the foregoing proceedings.

[4] The false representations alleged in the indictment are:

"That the market value of the capital stock of said Monta Vista Estates * * * was then the sum of $40 dollars per share; and that the stock of said corporation had for a long time prior thereto been selling for the sum of $40 per share; and that the actual value thereof was far in excess of said sum; and that said stock would pay income of from 15 to 20 per cent. in dividends annually, and that by reason of that fact the price of said stock would advance in a short time thereafter, probably within 30 days."

The defendant moved the court to strike out the parts of such allegation which are herein italicized and the subsequent allegation of the falsity thereof. The motion was denied. It does not appear in what manner the appellant was injured by the ruling. Proof of the alleged expressions of opinion would have been admissible without pleading them, and such proof was made at the trial. In cases such as this, the evidence is not limited to the precise representations alleged, but other statements, made at the same time and tending to throw light upon those charged and upon the intention with which they were made, are admissible. People v. Donaldson, 36 Cal. App. 63, 66, 171 P. 442; People v. Rodgers, 35 Cal. App. 123, 126, 169 P. 399; People v. Brecker, 20 Cal. App. 205, 214, 127 P. 666. Since such expressions of opinion were properly before the jury as evidence, without reference to the averment thereof, it does not appear that the appellant's rights could have been prejudiced by the allegation thereof in the indictment. It is not to be presumed that the verdict was based upon such expression of opinion, because the court instructed the jury that:

"A fraudulent pretense is such a fraudulent representation of an existing or past fact by one who knows it not to be true (as) is adapted to induce a person to whom it is made to part with something of value."

The jury could not have believed that the alleged expression of opinion as to future profits was a "representation of an existing or past fact."

Monta Vista Estates is a corporation. At the time of the alleged commission of the crime charged, it was the owner of certain properties in Santa Clara county, incumbered with a bonded indebtedness of $200,000. At some time not stated the appellant purchased 1,666 shares of the capital stock for $10,000, or at the price of about $6 a share. Andrew Hoefer is a well-to-do farmer of German birth, residing in Mendocino county. Eric Von Hoetzendorff also is of German birth, a polished gentleman, who has traveled much, and who would be a baron "if the old order had continued" in Germany. Appellant employed Hoetzendorff to sell Monta Vista Estates stock, and it was understood between them that the latter was to endeavor to sell some of the stock to Hoefer at $40 a share. In the early part of May, 1923, Hoetzendorff succeeded in exchanging 300 shares of the stock for certain real property belonging to Hoefer. A few days thereafter appellant and Hoetzendorff visited Hoefer at the latter's home for the purpose of inducing him to purchase additional stock, and it was during that visit that the alleged false representations were made by appellant. Hoefer testified that appellant made the alleged representations. He also testified that, in connection therewith, appellant gave him a purported prospectus of the Monta Vista Estates and other papers, all of which were admitted in evidence. Among other statements contained in the prospectus is the following, relating to the corporation's bond issue of $200,000:

"These bonds have been certified by the state bank commissioner as legal investment for savings banks."

The other papers gave a detailed statement of the "approximate gross yearly revenue" of the corporation, based in part upon statements of fact and in part upon estimates, and a detailed statement of the "appraisal of the properties," stating:

> "These figures are based on the market value of the properties, and not at what they would bring at a forced sale. On the other hand, they are lower than the cost of duplicating them today."

Hoetzendorff testified:

> "I got the prospectus from Mr. Bocchio in his office. * * * Mr. Bocchio told me he prepared it."

He also testified that he told Hoefer that, "according to the booklet, the bonds of the Monta Vista were legal bank investments." The evidence shows that the bonds had not been certified as a legal investment for savings banks. There is also evidence to the effect that the properties of the corporation were of less value than was stated in the said appraisal. Emma C. Heckenleichtner testified that she purchased 250 shares of Monta Vista Estates stock from appellant in April, 1923, at $20 a share; that thereafter appellant gave her 40 additional shares of the stock in settlement for stock of another corporation which she had intrusted to him for sale and which he had sold without accounting to her for the proceeds, and that, prior to such settlement, in May, 1923, he wrote her that the Monta Vista Estates stock, "in the New York Exchange, was selling for $40 a share." May 19, 1923, appellant and Hoetzendorff executed a written agreement to the effect that the latter was to sell stock of the Monta Vista Estates and that the amounts received therefor above $9 a share were to be divided between them. March 29, 1923, appellant made a written proposition to J. F. Whitehorn to sell some of the former's Monta Vista Estates stock at $12 a share net. May 21, 1923, he directed Whitehorn to "sell for my account and risk, 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the Monta Vista Estates * * * at a net price of $10 per share." June 22, 1923, he wrote Whitehorn:

> "In regards to the Monta Vista Estates, Inc., I am still in a position to purchase such stock as I desire at the price of $6 per share, and I am willing to do this for you at any time that you send me the money."

Appellant was not an officer of the corporation or in any manner connected therewith, except as the owner of 1,666 shares of its stock. The corporation did not prepare or issue the prospectus, and "it was no literature connected" therewith. The defendant did not testify at the trial, and the evidence to the effect that he made the alleged representations stands uncontradicted. In exchange for 311 shares of stock of Monta Vista Estates, Hoefer assigned and delivered to defendant 10 gold bonds of Central Creameries Company, which the defendant thereafter sold for $10,050. Hoefer caused these bonds to be sent to a bank in San Francisco, which bank, under his directions, there delivered them to defendant and received the shares of stock from him for Hoefer.

[5, 6] Appellant contends that, since the bonds were delivered to defendant in San Francisco, the offense, if any, was committed in that place, and that therefore the superior court of Mendocino county "had no jurisdiction of the offense charged"; that "the false pretenses themselves are not unlawful and do not of themselves constitute a crime; * * * the crime is the taking of the money." It may be said as truly, however, that the mere obtaining of the property does not constitute a crime, but the false pretense is a necessary element thereof. While there is some conflict in the decisions, it has generally been held that, "where a false pretense is uttered in A, and the money obtained in B, the venue may be laid either in A or B." Wharton's Criminal Law (11th Ed.) § 1473. This rule follows logically from the fact that a complete crime, in such a case, has not been committed in either place, but partly in one and partly in the other. The rule is statutory in this state.

> "When a public offense is committed in part in one county and in part in another, or the acts or the effects thereof constituting or requisite to the consummation of the offense occur in two or more counties, the jurisdiction is in either county." Penal Code, § 781.

There is no conflict between this section and section 777, which provides that, "except as herein otherwise provided, the jurisdiction of every public offense is in the county wherein it is committed," and then states an exception to the rule. Section 777 doubtless relates to offenses committed wholly within a county, and, if the offense is committed partly in two or more counties, a reasonable construction of the section would be that jurisdiction is limited to such counties.

[7] It is contended that "the court erred in admitting the prospectus in evidence." The false representations were made for the purpose of convincing Hoefer that the stock of the corporation was valuable and a desirable investment. In view of the well-known restrictions upon investments by savings banks, the statement in the prospectus that the bonds of the corporation "have been certified by the state bank commissioner as legal investment for savings banks" would tend to create the belief that the property of the corporation by which the bonds were secured had a value greatly in excess of the amount of the bonds. Any representations by defendant as to the value of the property, tending to support his statement that the stock was worth $40 a share, were clearly admissible in evidence.

[8] John Heckenleichtner, the husband of the witness, Emma C. Heckenleichtner, testified without objection that the defendant admitted having sold certain bonds, hereinbefore mentioned, belonging to the Heckenleichtners, and had not accounted for the proceeds, but he reported "that the brokerage company went broke * * * and the stock got lost"; and that thereafter the defendant said to the witness:

> "I have sold that stock. * * * I know I done wrong by not telling you I have sold that stock and telling you it got lost."

The witness was then permitted to testify, over defendant's objection:

> "He did not give me back my money; he gave us 40 shares of the Monta Vista Estates for those stocks that were supposed to get lost."

Mrs. Heckenleichtner had previously testified, without objection, that the defendant had made a false report relative to the sale of the stock in question and had thereafter delivered 40 shares of Monta Vista Estates stock in place thereof. The evidence to which objection was made, therefore, related exclusively to matters already in evidence, and cannot be held to have prejudiced defendant's rights.

[9] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the conviction, and that there is no such corroboration of Hoefer's testimony as is required by section 1110 of the Penal Code. The defendant's letters, some of them written shortly before and others shortly after the sale of stock to Hoefer, amply show that the stock was worth greatly less than $40 a share. The statements contained in the prospectus and other papers delivered to Hoefer tend to corroborate his testimony that the false pretenses were made. The testimony of Mrs. Heckenleichtner that the defendant wrote her, about the time of the alleged false representations, that "the stock in the New York Exchange was selling for $40 a share" also corroborates the testimony of Hoefer. People v. Helmlinger, 69 Cal. App. 139, 230 P. 675; People v. Whiteside, 58 Cal. App. 33, 208 P. 132; People v. Wymer, 53 Cal. App. 204, 199 P. 815; People v. Mace, 71 Cal. App. 10, 234 P. 841. The corroboration was sufficient.

Appellant urges that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in his argument to the jury. It does not appear, however, that the bounds of legitimate argument were transcended.

[10, 11] In answer to a question by one of the jurors as to whether the prospectus could be considered "as a representation in this case, even though it is not signed," the court replied that it could be so considered. Appellant contends that this "was an instruction upon a question of fact, and also upon a question of fact not within the issues of the case." What evidence the jury may consider is a question of law, usually decided by the court in ruling upon its admissibility, but its weight and effect are for the jury's determination. The answer of the court here in question in no manner invaded the province of the jury. The false statement in the prospectus that the bonds of the corporation had been "certified by the state bank commissioner as legal investment for savings banks" and to which statement the question of the jurors referred, was proper to be considered by the jury in determining whether Hoefer's testimony was corroborated. An examination of the whole case leads to the conclusion that the defendant was fairly tried and justly convicted.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 200

PEOPLE v. McKEE. (Cr. 1355.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 9, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑200(1) — Automobilist, charged with manslaughter and failure to comply with statute after accident, held not placed in double jeopardy (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

One, charged with manslaughter and violation of Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562) § 141, by failure to stop and give required information and assistance after accident, held not twice placed in jeopardy for same offense; violation of such act not being included in, or related to, offense of manslaughter.

2. Automobiles 🔑346—Driver of automobile killing pedestrian held not relieved from duty to stop (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

That pedestrian struck by automobile was instantly killed held not to show that no assistance was possible, nor, if so, to relieve driver from duty, under Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562) § 141, to stop and stand ready to give required information and assistance.

3. Criminal law 🔑823(10)—Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if automobile was driven unlawfully, held not erroneous, in view of other instruction as to defendant being the driver.

Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if deceased was killed by automobile driven in unlawful manner, held not error, as not requiring finding that defendant was driver, in view of instruction, given at defendant's request, that prosecution must prove that "defendant, and no other person," committed crime.

4. Automobiles 🔑357—Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if automobile driver was "under influence of intoxicating liquor," held not error.

Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if deceased was killed by automobile driven in unlawful manner, to wit, while driver was "under the influence of intoxicating liquor," held not error; quoted words, as used in statute, meaning, as in common usage only that degree of influence which looses self-restraint and causes operation of car differently than ordinarily cautious and prudent person would.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Under the Influence of Liquor.]

5. Criminal law 🔑1144(16)—Instruction as to automobilist under "influence" of liquor killing person held not error; jury presumed to give proper meaning to "influence"; "under influence of intoxicating liquor."

Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if deceased was killed by automobile driven in unlawful manner, to wit, while driver was "under the influence of intoxicating liquor," held not prejudicial error; it being assumed, at least in absence of request for more specific instruction, that jury understood common usage of quoted words as meaning only such influence as looses self-restraint and causes operation of car differently than ordinarily cautious person would.

6. Criminal law 🔑823(10)—Instruction held not error, as permitting conviction of manslaughter, though automobilist's intoxication was not proximate cause of accident, in view of other instructions.

Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if deceased was killed by automobile driven in unlawful manner, to wit, while driver was "under the influence of intoxicating liquor," held not error as permitting conviction though intoxication was not proximate cause of accident in view of other instructions that gross or culpable negligence or operation of car with reckless disregard for others' safety must have been cause of death and that death must have proximately resulted from such operation.

7. Automobiles 🔑320—Contributory negligence is no defense to charge of manslaughter by automobile.

Contributory negligence of deceased is no defense to charge of manslaughter by automobile.

8. Automobiles 🔑344—Automobile must be operated at reasonable speed not endangering life irrespective of legal speed limit.

Vehicle must be operated at careful and prudent speed, no greater than reasonable and proper, having due regard to traffic, surface and width of highway, and not endangering life, limb, or property, though legal speed limit is greater.

9. Criminal law 🔑1172(1)—One driving automobile over 35 miles an hour while approaching street intersection to left of center held not prejudiced by instruction not defining unlawful rate of speed.

One driving automobile, which killed pedestrian, at over 35 miles an hour while approaching street intersection to left of center of road in attempt to pass other vehicles, held not prejudiced by failure of instruction in manslaughter trial to define "unlawful rate of speed."

10. Criminal law 🔑1172(1)—Instruction on not stopping after striking pedestrian, omitting automobilist's knowledge, was not prejudicial, where he must have known, if sober, held not prejudicial, where knowledge was obvious (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

In trial for violating Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562) § 141, by failure to stop and give required information and assistance after accident, instructions, defining offense without stating that defendant must have had knowledge of striking pedestrian, held not prejudicial to him.

11. Criminal law 🔑829(1)—Refusal of instructions covered by instructions given, at least sufficiently to avoid prejudice, is not prejudicial error.

Refusal of instructions covered by instructions given, at least to extent necessary to guard against prejudice, is not prejudicial error.

12. Criminal law 🔑1173(1)—Refusal to instruct that defendant was entitled to jurors' individual opinions held not prejudicial error.

Refusal to instruct that defendant was entitled to individual opinions of jurors held not prejudicial error, though such instruction should be given.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

William R. McKee was convicted of manslaughter, and of violation of Motor Vehicle Act, § 141, by failure to stop, give name and address, and render necessary assistance after accident, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Fred H. Thompson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

THOMPSON, J. This appeal is from a judgment of conviction of the defendant upon a charge of manslaughter and also a violation of section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1923, p. 517) requiring a person upon the happening of an accident to stop, give his name and address to the person struck, and render such assistance as is necessary.

The facts show that after an all-night affair at a bungalow near Seal Beach, where the defendant drank some liquor, he was driving home on Compton avenue at Forty-Seventh street in Los Angeles city at about the hour of 6:40 a. m. on November 4, 1925; that upon arriving at the intersection he was driving a little to the left of the center of the road in an effort to pass two other automobiles in front of which Mrs. Fleming had just passed, and in so doing struck and instantly killed her; the speed of the defendant's car was estimated by plaintiff's witnesses at somewhere between 40 and 50 miles an hour, by one of the defendant's witnesses as between 35 and 40, concerning which fact the defendant said, "I might have been going faster than 35;" a partly filled bottle of synthetic gin was found in the car; and later in the morning the defendant was unable to talk coherently. It was overwhelmingly established and not denied that the defendant did not stop after striking the woman; his defense in this particular being that he did not know he had hit the woman, although several of the witnesses testified that he did, and that immediately thereafter he swerved, started to slow down, and then proceeded to increase his speed.

[1] The first point urged by appellant is that the defendant was twice placed in jeopardy for the same offense, maintaining as the foundation for this argument that the transaction upon which the two offenses are based is but a single one. Violation of section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act is not included within or in fact related to the offense of manslaughter. There is a sort of illicit relationship between burglary and larceny, and yet they are not so wedded that a conviction cannot be had for both, although both of them grow out of the same continuous set of acts. People v. Devlin, 143 Cal. 128, 76 P. 900; People v. Snyder (Cal. App.) 239 P. 705; People v. Case et al. (Cal. App.) 246 P. 1083; and People v. Brain (Cal. App.) 241 P. 913. It cannot therefore be successfully argued that the defendant here was twice put in jeopardy. The acts constituting the second offense did not really commence until after the woman had been struck, at which time the first offense had been completed. This same circumstance is involved and considered in the connection between burglary and larceny, or robbery. People v. Brain, supra.

[2] The second contention advanced by the defendant is that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict on the second count—that of failing to stop and render all necessary aid to Mrs. Fleming after she was struck. The insufficiency, he says, consists of this: That the evidence establishes that she was instantly killed, and therefore no assistance was possible. The testimony does establish that Mrs. Fleming was dead at least by the time the bystanders reached her. We cannot admit, however, even for the purpose of argument, that there was no assistance to be rendered. Certainly decency and common respect dictate that mutilated humans should not be allowed to lie around in the street as mute evidence of the destruction wrought by speed. There was at least such assistance to be rendered as would comply with the respect due from one human to another who has passed beyond the veil of materiality. Let us, however, temporarily grant the argument; nevertheless, as was pointed out in People v. Huber, 64 Cal. App. 352, 221 P. 695, it was the defendant's duty under any view of the situation to stop his machine and stand ready to comply with the various provisions of the law, regardless of whether or not the person struck was sufficiently injured to require assistance or so seriously injured that assistance was no longer necessary to her material well-being. He made no attempt to comply and he certainly cannot be heard to say that he is guilty of no offense because the woman was killed instead of injured. Justice would indeed be "blind" and deaf and dumb to heed such specious arguments.

[3] Appellant next assigns as error the following instruction:

> "If you are satisfied to a moral certainty, and beyond a reasonable doubt, that the deceased came to her death by being struck by an automobile driven upon a public highway at the time charged in this information, and that said machine was being driven in an unlawful manner, to wit, while the driver was under the influence of intoxicating liquor, or while the machine was being operated at an unlawful rate of speed, or while said machine was being driven upon a public highway at such a rate of speed as to endanger life, limb, or property of any person, you should find the defendant guilty of manslaughter."

He says that it permitted the jury to convict "if Mrs. Fleming was killed by being struck by 'an automobile' driven in an unlawful manner without being required to find that defendant was the driver." A complete answer to this is that part of another instruction requested by the defendant and given by the court wherein the jury were told that it was necessary for the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt "that the defendant, and no other person, committed the crime charged."

[4, 5] He also assails this instruction for its use of the words "under the influence of intoxicating liquors." These are the words used in the act, and as so used we think they have a well-understood meaning. They are followed by the provision that "an habitual user of narcotic drugs shall not drive a motor vehicle." This provision indicates, it seems to us, that "under the influence of intoxicating liquors" means what common usage has ascribed to the word, to wit: Not that he should be intoxicated to the extent that his faculties are completely impaired, but only that degree of influence which looses the bonds of self-restraint and causes him to operate his car in a manner different from that in which it would be operated by an ordinarily cautious and prudent person. People v. Dingle, 56 Cal. App. 445, 205 P. 705. Be that as it may, however, it must be assumed, at least in the absence of a request by the defendant for a more specific instruction, that the jury understood this common usage. We cannot believe that any prejudicial error resulted from permitting the jury to accept the common understanding of the words. People v. Ekstromer, 71 Cal. App. 239, 235 P. 69.

[6, 7] Appellant's next assault upon this instruction is based upon his contention that the jury were permitted by it to find the defendant guilty, though the intoxication was

The other papers gave a detailed statement of the "approximate gross yearly revenue" of the corporation, based in part upon statements of fact and in part upon estimates, and a detailed statement of the "appraisal of the properties," stating:

> "These figures are based on the market value of the properties, and not at what they would bring at a forced sale. On the other hand, they are lower than the cost of duplicating them today."

Hoetzendorff testified:

> "I got the prospectus from Mr. Bocchio in his office. * * * Mr. Bocchio told me he prepared it."

He also testified that he told Hoefer that, "according to the booklet, the bonds of the Monta Vista were legal bank investments." The evidence shows that the bonds had not been certified as a legal investment for savings banks. There is also evidence to the effect that the properties of the corporation were of less value than was stated in the said appraisal. Emma C. Heckenleichtner testified that she purchased 250 shares of Monta Vista Estates stock from appellant in April, 1923, at $20 a share; that thereafter appellant gave her 40 additional shares of the stock in settlement for stock of another corporation which she had intrusted to him for sale and which he had sold without accounting to her for the proceeds, and that, prior to such settlement, in May, 1923, he wrote her that the Monta Vista Estates stock, "in the New York Exchange, was selling for $40 a share." May 19, 1923, appellant and Hoetzendorff executed a written agreement to the effect that the latter was to sell stock of the Monta Vista Estates and that the amounts received therefor above $9 a share were to be divided between them. March 29, 1923, appellant made a written proposition to J. F. Whitehorn to sell some of the former's Monta Vista Estates stock at $12 a share net. May 21, 1923, he directed Whitehorn to "sell for my account and risk, 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the Monta Vista Estates * * * at a net price of $10 per share." June 22, 1923, he wrote Whitehorn:

> "In regards to the Monta Vista Estates, Inc., I am still in a position to purchase such stock as I desire at the price of $6 per share, and I am willing to do this for you at any time that you send me the money."

Appellant was not an officer of the corporation or in any manner connected therewith, except as the owner of 1,666 shares of its stock. The corporation did not prepare or issue the prospectus, and "it was no literature connected" therewith. The defendant did not testify at the trial, and the evidence to the effect that he made the alleged representations stands uncontradicted. In exchange for 311 shares of stock of Monta Vista Estates, Hoefer assigned and delivered to defendant 10 gold bonds of Central Creameries Company, which the defendant thereafter sold for $10,050. Hoefer caused these bonds to be sent to a bank in San Francisco, which bank, under his directions, there delivered them to defendant and received the shares of stock from him for Hoefer.

[5, 6] Appellant contends that, since the bonds were delivered to defendant in San Francisco, the offense, if any, was committed in that place, and that therefore the superior court of Mendocino county "had no jurisdiction of the offense charged"; that "the false pretenses themselves are not unlawful and do not of themselves constitute a crime; * * * the crime is the taking of the money." It may be said as truly, however, that the mere obtaining of the property does not constitute a crime, but the false pretense is a necessary element thereof. While there is some conflict in the decisions, it has generally been held that, "where a false pretense is uttered in A, and the money obtained in B, the venue may be laid either in A or B." Wharton's Criminal Law (11th Ed.) § 1473. This rule follows logically from the fact that a complete crime, in such a case, has not been committed in either place, but partly in one and partly in the other. The rule is statutory in this state.

> "When a public offense is committed in part in one county and in part in another, or the acts or the effects thereof constituting or requisite to the consummation of the offense occur in two or more counties, the jurisdiction is in either county." Penal Code, § 781.

There is no conflict between this section and section 777, which provides that, "except as herein otherwise provided, the jurisdiction of every public offense is in the county wherein it is committed," and then states an exception to the rule. Section 777 doubtless relates to offenses committed wholly within a county, and, if the offense is committed partly in two or more counties, a reasonable construction of the section would be that jurisdiction is limited to such counties.

[7] It is contended that "the court erred in admitting the prospectus in evidence." The false representations were made for the purpose of convincing Hoefer that the stock of the corporation was valuable and a desirable investment. In view of the well-known restrictions upon investments by savings banks, the statement in the prospectus that the bonds of the corporation "have been certified by the state bank commissioner as legal investment for savings banks" would tend to create the belief that the property of the corporation by which the bonds were secured had a value greatly in excess of the amount of the bonds. Any representations by defendant as to the value of the property, tending to support his statement that the stock was worth $40 a share, were clearly admissible in evidence.

[8] John Heckenleichtner, the husband of the witness, Emma C. Heckenleichtner, testified without objection that the defendant admitted having sold certain bonds, hereinbefore mentioned, belonging to the Heckenleichtners, and had not accounted for the proceeds, but he reported "that the brokerage company went broke * * * and the stock got lost"; and that thereafter the defendant said to the witness:

> "I have sold that stock. * * * I know I done wrong by not telling you I have sold that stock and telling you it got lost."

The witness was then permitted to testify, over defendant's objection:

> "He did not give me back my money; he gave us 40 shares of the Monta Vista Estates for those stocks that were supposed to get lost."

Mrs. Heckenleichtner had previously testified, without objection, that the defendant had made a false report relative to the sale of the stock in question and had thereafter delivered 40 shares of Monta Vista Estates stock in place thereof. The evidence to which objection was made, therefore, related exclusively to matters already in evidence, and cannot be held to have prejudiced defendant's rights.

[9] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the conviction, and that there is no such corroboration of Hoefer's testimony as is required by section 1110 of the Penal Code. The defendant's letters, some of them written shortly before and others shortly after the sale of stock to Hoefer, amply show that the stock was worth greatly less than $40 a share. The statements contained in the prospectus and other papers delivered to Hoefer tend to corroborate his testimony that the false pretenses were made. The testimony of Mrs. Heckenleichtner that the defendant wrote her, about the time of the alleged false representations, that "the stock in the New York Exchange was selling for $40 a share" also corroborates the testimony of Hoefer. People v. Helmlinger, 69 Cal. App. 139, 230 P. 675; People v. Whiteside, 58 Cal. App. 33, 208 P. 132; People v. Wymer, 53 Cal. App. 204, 199 P. 815; People v. Mace, 71 Cal. App. 10, 234 P. 841. The corroboration was sufficient.

Appellant urges that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in his argument to the jury. It does not appear, however, that the bounds of legitimate argument were transcended.

[10, 11] In answer to a question by one of the jurors as to whether the prospectus could be considered "as a representation in this case, even though it is not signed," the court replied that it could be so considered. Appellant contends that this "was an instruction upon a question of fact, and also upon a question of fact not within the issues of the case." What evidence the jury may consider is a question of law, usually decided by the court in ruling upon its admissibility, but its weight and effect are for the jury's determination. The answer of the court here in question in no manner invaded the province of the jury. The false statement in the prospectus that the bonds of the corporation had been "certified by the state bank commissioner as legal investment for savings banks" and to which statement the question of the jurors referred, was proper to be considered by the jury in determining whether Hoefer's testimony was corroborated. An examination of the whole case leads to the conclusion that the defendant was fairly tried and justly convicted.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

80 Cal. App. 200

PEOPLE v. McKEE. (Cr. 1355.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 9, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑200(1) — Automobilist, charged with manslaughter and failure to comply with statute after accident, held not placed in double jeopardy (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

One, charged with manslaughter and violation of Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562) § 141, by failure to stop and give required information and assistance after accident, held not twice placed in jeopardy for same offense; violation of such act not being included in, or related to, offense of manslaughter.

2. Automobiles 🔑346—Driver of automobile killing pedestrian held not relieved from duty to stop (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

That pedestrian struck by automobile was instantly killed held not to show that no assistance was possible, nor, if so, to relieve driver from duty, under Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562) § 141, to stop and stand ready to give required information and assistance.

3. Criminal law 🔑823(10)—Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if automobile was driven unlawfully, held not erroneous, in view of other instruction as to defendant being the driver.

Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if deceased was killed by automobile driven in unlawful manner, held not error, as not requiring finding that defendant was driver, in view of instruction, given at defendant's request, that prosecution must prove that "defendant, and no other person," committed crime.

4. Automobiles 🔑357—Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if automobile driver was "under influence of intoxicating liquor," held not error.

Instruction to convict of manslaughter, if deceased was killed by automobile driven in union high school district is indebted to petitioner in the sum of $250 for services as a teacher therein during the months of September and October, 1926; that said district has not sufficient money to its credit in the county treasury to pay such indebtedness; that on the 10th of September, 1926, the county superintendent of schools gave respondent county treasurer "an estimate of the amount of the school money that would then next be paid into said county treasury, stating the amounts to be apportioned to each school district in the county, including said Orland joint union high school district, and that a copy of said estimate, so far as it relates to said Orland joint union high school district, is hereunto annexed and marked Exhibit 'A' and made a part hereof"; that there was then and is now standing to the credit, in the county treasury, of certain named school districts and certain designated school funds specified amounts aggregating $6,922.60, "not immediately needed to pay any claims against the same, respectively"; that the respondent refuses "to transfer to said Orland joint union high school district any of the funds referred to * * * or any part of such funds." The exhibit attached to the petition shows only such parts of the estimate of the county superintendent of schools as relate to the Orland joint union high school. The prayer is for a writ of mandate requiring the respondent "to transfer to said Orland joint union high school district from any of the funds referred to, * * * not immediately needed to pay the claims against them respectively, and not heretofore transferred to any other school fund, an amount sufficient to pay the claim and demand of petitioner, but so that said amount shall not exceed 90 per cent. of the amount estimated by the superintendent of schools that will next be paid into the treasury of said county to the credit of said Orland joint union high school district." The respondent demurred to the petition on general and special grounds and filed an answer thereto. From the evidence introduced at the hearing, it appears that the allegations of the petition are true. Neither the petition nor the evidence, however, shows the estimated amounts to be received by other school districts in the county or whether they also are without sufficient money to pay the demands against them. Section 1858 of the Political Code provides:

> "Whenever in any school year, prior to the receipt by the school districts of any county, or city and county of this state, of their state, county, or city and county, or special or high school fund, the school districts of that county, or city and county shall not have sufficient money to their credit to pay the lawful demands against them, the county or city and county superintendent shall give the treasurer of said county or city and county, an estimate of the amount of school money that will next be paid into the county or city and county treasury, stating the amount to be appropriated to each district. Upon the receipt of such estimate it shall be the duty of the treasurer of said county, or city and county, to transfer from any fund not immediately needed to pay the claims against it, to the proper school fund an amount [not to exceed ninety per cent. of the amount] estimated by the superintendent, and he shall immediately notify the superintendent of the amount so transferred. The funds so transferred to the school fund shall be retransferred by the treasurer to the fund from which they were taken, from the first money paid into the school fund after the transfer."

[1] Respondent contends that such provision for a transfer of funds is violative of the constitutional limitations hereinafter considered. It is clear that such a transfer is not the lending or giving of "the credit of the state, or of any county, * * * or other political corporation or subdivision of the state," within the meaning of those terms as used in article 4, § 31, of the Constitution. Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, 188 Cal. 607, 616, 206 P. 631.

[2-4] Neither is the section violative of article 4, § 25, forbidding the passage of local or special laws where a general law can be made applicable, nor of article 1, section 11, providing that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." Respondent contends that the section is special and discriminatory because no similar provision is made for levy districts, "cemetery districts, reclamation districts, and many others."

> "A law is general and uniform in its operation when it applies equally to all persons embraced within the class to which it is addressed, provided such class is made upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction between the persons composing it and others not embraced in it." Matter of Application of Miller, 162 Cal. 687, 698, 124 P. 427, 430.

[5-7] There are marked distinctions between school districts and other districts of the character of those named by respondent. The maintenance of public schools is a purely governmental function. The expenses thereof are usually quite evenly distributed over a period of from eight to ten months of the year, that for the first three or four months of each fiscal year becoming due before any moneys are available from taxes collected during that year. The amounts to be received from county taxes and from the state are certain and readily ascertainable, being fixed by article 9, section 6, of the Constitution. The other districts referred to by respondent, in their purposes and management, partake more or less of the nature of private enterprises, their expenditures are not usually so evenly distributed throughout the year as those of school districts, and the amounts to be received by them are much more uncertain.

"The legislative judgment as to what is a sufficient distinction cannot be overthrown by the courts, unless it is, beyond rational doubt, erroneous." Matter of Application of Stephan, 170 Cal. 48, 50, 148 P. 196, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 617.

Respondent contends that:

> "The section is repugnant to section 16, article 1, of the Constitution, in that it impairs the obligation of a continuing contract existing as a matter of law between the treasurer's office and all the various districts whose funds are deposited in the county treasury."

[8, 9] There is no contractual relation between the county treasurer and the school districts of the county, but he holds the school moneys in his custody in obedience to the mandate of the law.

> "The school moneys never lose their character of public moneys belonging to the state. * * * The fact that they have been apportioned to the several school districts does not give to those districts any proprietary right therein. * * * If any portion of the moneys thus apportioned is not used during the school year, it is made, by section 1621, the duty of the county superintendent to reapportion the balance as other moneys are apportioned." Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 429, 435, 32 P. 558, 560; Gridley School District v. Stout, 134 Cal. 592, 66 P. 785. "The management of the public schools is a state affair, and school districts at most are but a state agency for that purpose." Board of Education v. Davidson, 190 Cal. 162, 168, 210 P. 961. They "are essentially nothing but trustees of the state, holding the property and devoting it to the uses which the state itself directs." Pass School Dist. v. Hollywood Dist., 156 Cal. 416, 419, 105 P. 122, 124 (26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 485, 20 Ann. Cas. 87).

Subject only to constitutional limitations, "the power of the legislature over school districts is plenary." Worthington S. Dist. v. Eureka S. Dist., 173 Cal. 154, 156, 150 P. 437; Macmillan Co. v. Clarke, 184 Cal. 491, 498, 194 P. 1030, 17 A. L. R. 288.

Section 1543 (a) of the Political Code provides that, whenever there is presented to the county superintendent of schools any claim or demand against a school district which has not sufficient money to pay the same, he shall indorse thereon the words "Not approved for want of funds," and that such demand shall thereafter bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until there are sufficient funds to the credit of the district to pay the amount thereof. In connection with what has been previously stated, it thus appears that a school district must annually carry over a surplus equal to from 30 to 40 per cent. of the amount of its yearly expenditures or pay interest for several months on a like amount, unless the foregoing provisions of section 1858 can be upheld. Under like circumstances, no private business would carry over an idle surplus of such magnitude in one fund or pay interest on its indebtedness while it held an equal amount in other funds not immediately needed to pay demands against them. It would require cogent reasons to justify a court in holding that the Legislature is without power to provide that the business of the state shall be conducted upon businesslike principles.

[10] To make a temporary transfer of school moneys from one fund to another, or from one district to another, is not to divert such moneys from the purposes for which they were provided. As said by the Supreme Court of Washington, in discussing a similar question:

> "The word 'diverted' is used in the sense of turning permanently from its purpose, the equivalent of appropriation for some other use. A temporary transfer from the general fund to another fund with an assured income is not an appropriation or diversion. * * * The city controls both funds, and it is under the legal obligation to see that the general fund is seasonably reimbursed from the source of supply to the special one. Of course, the city authorities must exercise common business sense in making such transfer. * * * A city should not transfer its general fund moneys as temporary loans to other funds that have not assured and certain sources of income, the collection of which is under the control of the city itself." Griffin v. City of Tacoma, 49 Wash. 524, 95 P. 1107.

[11] The provisions of section 1858, quoted herein, leave much to be desired in the way of clearness and certainty. There may be some doubt as to whether it was intended that the treasurer should transfer to the general county school fund an amount not exceeding 90 per cent. of the total amount of the estimated receipts of all the schools of the county, such amount to be apportioned by the superintendent to the several districts, or make the transfer directly to the credit of the respective districts. Neither the petition nor the evidence shows the needs of districts other than Orland joint union high school district, or even of that district except as to the amount due petitioner, nor are the contents of the county superintendent's estimate shown, except as the same relate to the district named. It cannot be determined, therefore, what part of the alleged available moneys may be justly transferred to that district. No district has a preferential right to a transfer of money from the limited funds available as against other districts equally in need of money. If it was the respondent's duty, upon receipt of the superintendent's estimate, to make a transfer of moneys from the available funds to the account of one district, it was equally his duty to make a transfer to all that were in like need. Since the facts presented are insufficient to show the amount which it is the duty of respondent to transfer to the Orland joint union high school district, the relief prayed for by petitioner cannot be granted.

The petition is denied, and the writ is discharged.

80 Cal. App. 252

PEOPLE v. MITCHELL et al. (Cr. 1371.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 13, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑494—Expert testimony as to values of stolen wheels and battery held to sustain conviction of grand larceny without introducing stolen parts (Code Civ. Proc. § 1954).

Expert testimony as to value of stolen wheels and battery held sufficient proof of value to sustain conviction of grand larceny without their introduction in evidence, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1954.

2. Criminal law 🔑532(1)—Request to examine as to whether confessions were voluntary, after their admission without objection, held properly denied.

When no objection to testimony of confessions was interposed, subsequent request to examine witness as to whether statements of defendants were voluntary was too late, and properly denied.

3. Criminal law 🔑532(2)—Where state's witness had testified that confessions were voluntary, court had discretion to then exclude evidence to show involuntary character.

Refusing permission to then place defendants on witness stand to show involuntary character of confessions held not error, where state's witness had fully testified to voluntary character, since trial judge, who must determine sufficiency of foundation, had discretion as to order of proof.

4. Criminal law 🔑863(2)—Ruling that whether all stolen tires were in same condition as one in room, but not in evidence, could not be gone into, was proper.

Where jury inquired whether all stolen tires were in same condition as one in room, but not in evidence, ruling that matter could not be gone into was proper, since jury might not consider matters not in evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; E. J. Marks, Judge.

S. E. Mitchell and another were convicted of grand larceny, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Marshall A. Stutsman, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, and H. H. Linney, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellants were convicted of grand larceny upon an information which charged them with having, on or about December 28, 1925, stolen and carried away automobile wheels and other accessories of the value of $300, the personal property of one J. P. Furr.

It appeared that Furr left his automobile in a shed in Telegraph canyon at about 11 o'clock p. m. of the date mentioned; that there were then on the car four green disc wheels, with tires and tubes, and a Willard battery, besides a complete extra wheel on the rear of the car; that Furr returned to the shed on the following morning at about 8 o'clock, whereupon he discovered the machine resting upon ties. The four wheels on the axles, together with the tires and tubes, and the battery, were missing, but the spare wheel was in place. He testified that on December 29th he found at the city hall at La Habra four wheels and a battery which resembled those which he had lost. The wheels fitted his car, and matched the extra tire, but Furr would not swear positively that they were the identical wheels that were removed on the preceding night, though as near as he could tell they and the battery were the same.

Officers at La Habra testified that they arrested the defendants at that place on the morning of the 29th, at about 3 o'clock; that they then had the wheels and battery in another automobile; that one of them at first said that he had obtained them from his brother in the oil fields, but later, on different occasions and to various persons, the defendants stated that they had taken them from a Hupmobile; one officer asked them if they had stolen anything more than the wheels, to which Mitchell replied in the affirmative, and Nilson said, "No, we got a battery, too." It was further testified that when they were asked why they took them, they replied, "We don't know why. We had the opportunity and did do it." The officers located Furr's Hupmobile, and conveyed the defendants to the shed, where certain admissions were made. Some of these were excluded by the trial court.

[1] The defendants did not take the stand, but certain witnesses testified in their behalf as to their reputation for honesty and veracity and estimated that the stolen property was worth about $168. An insurance adjuster for the Automobile Club of Southern California testified at the instance of the people that, allowing for depreciation, the wheels, tires, tubes, and battery were of a value of $300 to $325.

It is first contended that the evidence was insufficient, that the property alleged to have been stolen was not offered in evidence, but that in its absence witnesses were erroneously permitted to testify to its value; and from this it is argued that the verdict and judgment are contrary to law. Expert testimony, given by the insurance adjuster, who qualified as to experience and ability to judge as to values of such property, was sufficient. It was not indispensable that the wheels and battery be introduced and their values left to the judgment, or perhaps the guesswork, of laymen jurors. The existence, situation, and character of such objects may be established by witnesses. Code Civ. Proc. § 1954.

[2,3] The people's witness Martin testified to conversations, practically amounting to confessions, of the defendants when taken to the shed heretofore mentioned. No objection to this testimony was interposed. Thereafter counsel for appellants asked permission to examine this witness on his voir dire as to whether or not such statements were voluntary. The trial court held that the request was too late, and properly denied it. It appears that the witness Ellis, who next testified, was present during these conversations, and he swore both on direct and voir dire examination that the statements in question were made freely and voluntarily, without threat, force, fear, inducement, or promise of reward being used toward the defendants. After Ellis had testified fully as to the vountary character of the statements, as above related, defendants' counsel insisted that he be permitted to place them on the stand before the witness should be allowed to testify to such statements, and offered to prove by rebuttal evidence that the same were not voluntary. This motion was denied, and the witness recited all that was said at the time. Since it is the duty of the trial judge to consider in passing upon the admissibility of an alleged confession whether or not for that purpose a sufficient foundation has been laid as to its free and voluntary character, the order of proof upon that question is within its discretion. A prima facie showing having been made that the statements were free and voluntary, testimony offered to the contrary would only have created a conflict in the evidence to be weighed later by the jury under proper instructions. The people having laid a foundation in the testimony of the witness showing affirmatively that the confession about to be proved was freely and voluntarily made, it was within the sound discretion of the court to say whether it would interrupt the regular course of the trial and hear the defendants' witnesses, or proceed as it did in this instance. People v. Haney, 46 Cal. App. 317, 189 P. 338. Of course the door was still wide open for the introduction as a part of the defendants' case of such proof as they might desire to offer in this behalf, but no attempt was thereafter made to show by any witness that their alleged statements were not voluntary, or that they were in fact not true. Appellants' contention in this respect that the evidence was incompetent and prejudicial is, therefore, untenable. People v. Connelly, 195 Cal. 584, 234 P. 374.

[4] During their deliberations the jury returned to the courtroom, and requested further information about the tires. A juror remarked that, since the statement had been made that a tire which was in the room (which was not offered in evidence) had been taken from the back of the machine, and that the four stolen tires were not in as good condition as that one, that they would like to know if they were all in the same condition. To this request the court replied, "That is something we cannot go into." We think the ruling was proper. The jury would not have been justified in considering matters not in evidence.

In appellants' briefs much space is devoted to an extended argument as to what the evidence tended to show, and it is repeatedly asserted that the facts created a doubt in the minds of the jurors which they failed to resolve in favor of the defendants. This whole matter is so clearly within the sole province of the jury as to preclude its further consideration upon appeal.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 263

TURLOCK MERCHANTS & GROWERS, Inc., v. SMITH. (Civ. 3171.) *

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 13, 1926.)

1. Sales ⚷87(1)—There is rebuttable presumption that perishable goods, sold for agreed price f. o. b. shipping point, are to be inspected there by buyer.

There is presumption that perishable goods, sold for agreed price f. o. b. shipping point, are to be inspected by buyer at such point, but such presumption may be rebutted by showing that inspection at destination was intended.

2. Sales ⚷168(2)—Buyer held entitled to reasonable time for inspection of goods after arrival at destination.

Where articles are to be delivered to common carrier by vendor, to be shipped to vendee at distant point, and no provision is made for inspection and acceptance before or at time of shipment, buyer is entitled to reasonable time after arrival at destination to inspect goods, and accept or reject them.

3. Customs and usages ⚷13 — Evidence of trade custom relative to place of inspection held admissible, in view of presumption of contract with reference thereto.

Where amount due seller of cantaloupes from selling agent was in dispute, buyers having rejected shipments after inspection at destination, exclusion of evidence of trade custom relative to place of inspection of perishable goods shipped f. o. b. point of shipment held error, since it is presumed that parties contracted with reference to it, if it existed.

4. Sales ⚷359(1)—Evidence held not to require finding that seller of cantaloupes and selling agent had agreed as to balance due between them.

Evidence held not to require finding that seller of cantaloupes and his selling agent had reached agreement as to balance due on account between them.

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 10, 1927.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action for goods sold by Turlock Merchants & Growers, Inc., against J. H. Smith, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. N. Graybiel, of Turlock, for appellant.

Samuel V. Cornell, of Turlock, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff "on an open book account for goods, wares, and merchandise, and money expended for said defendant of the reasonable value" of $637.17. The answer denies the alleged indebtedness. The defendant filed a cross-complaint, in which he alleges that the parties entered into an agreement whereby the defendant appointed the plaintiff "his sole and exclusive agent for selling and distributing all cantaloupes owned or controlled by said defendant * * * for the season of 1921," the defendant to pay the plaintiff for such services at the rate of "ten cents for each flat crate and fifteen cents for each standard crate of cantaloupes sold or distributed * * * in pursuance of said contract"; that the plaintiff, under the terms of the contract, sold cantaloupes belonging to defendant "for the total sum of $18,120.58," and has not paid defendant "any part thereof except the sum of $15,492.72," leaving a balance due defendant of $2,627.86. As a second cause of action it is alleged that the plaintiff is indebted to defendant on account of moneys had and received for the benefit of the plaintiff in the sum of $2,627.86. As a third cause of action it is alleged that, in violation of the terms of the contract, the plaintiff sold certain carloads of defendant's cantaloupes "to be delivered at points other than the said town of Denair, * * * and has deducted from moneys coming to its hands for the use and benefit of the defendant * * * as the proceeds from the sales of said cantaloupes the total sum of * * * $2,627.86 which said plaintiff * * * claims to have thus * * * expended for transportation charges" on the cantaloupes sold for delivery at points other than Denair. It is apparent that the three counts are but statements in different forms of a single cause of action.

The plaintiff demurred to the cross-complaint on general and special grounds, and, upon the overruling of the demurrer, filed its answer to the cross-complaint, denying the allegations of the first and second alleged causes of action. The answer to defendant's third cause of action "denies that plaintiff sold for defendant certain carloads of cantaloupes otherwise than f. o. b. Denair, except as requested, and directed so to do by said defendant," and denies all other allegations of such third cause of action.

The court found that the parties entered into a contract as alleged, and the same is set forth at length in the findings. The contract is substantially in the usual form of agreements between co-operative marketing associations and their members, except as to the following terms, which were inserted at the special request of defendant:

> "It is further agreed that where grower can load straight cars within hours of one working day he may use Peacock label and all such cars will be sold f. o. b. Denair at grower's request, seller agreeing to sell to best advantage and look after collection from buyer."

The court found that the foregoing part of the contract "was intended by the parties to mean, and it was their agreement and understanding, that all such cars should be sold and delivered to the purchaser at Denair, Cal., and that none of such cars should be sold for delivery at any other point or place"; that the defendant delivered to the plaintiff certain carloads of cantaloupes to be sold in pursuance of the terms stated; that on the 15th of November, 1921, the plaintiff delivered to the defendant "an itemized statement covering the business relations" between the parties from the time of the execution of the contract to the delivery of the statement. Then follows an analysis of the itemized statement, the court charging the plaintiff with the difference between the market value of the cantaloupes delivered to the plaintiff and the amount credited to defendant in the statement. The court found that, after receiving such statement, the defendant "for the first time learned that the foregoing cars had been sold and delivered at a point other than Denair, Cal., and that the losses under the market value of said cars, as stated upon the sales slip theretofore delivered to him, were occasioned by transportation charges for delivering said cars to the point or place of delivery." The court did not find the amount for which plaintiff actually sold the cantaloupes in question or the amount expended as transportation charges.

The evidence sufficiently shows the market value of the cantaloupes at Denair to be as follows: Car No. 14618, $404.10; 2369, $384.60; 11075, $459.85; 6021, $618.90. At the times the cantaloupes were shipped, the plaintiff reported to defendant that they had been sold for the foregoing respective amounts. In the itemized statement of November 15, 1921, the plaintiff charged the defendant with net losses on the first three cars as follows: No. 14618, $74.01; 2369, $633.99; 11075, $74.95, and credited him with only $347.54 on car No. 6021. The court struck out all charges for losses and expenses, and charged plaintiff with the full market value of such cantaloupes, and found that plaintiff was indebted to defendant, at the time the statement was rendered, in the sum of $2,436.36 more than the statement indicated.

[1] The evidence shows that the plaintiff charged the defendant with a total of $1,198.15 on account of freight paid by plaintiff, but no other evidence has been discovered which supports the finding that "the losses under the market value of said cars * * * were occasioned by transportation charges." The plaintiff sold the cantaloupes to buyers in distant cities; car 6021 going to Portland, Or.; 14618 to Des Moines, Iowa; 2369 to Salt Lake City, Utah; and 11075 to Chicago, Ill. The general manager of the plaintiff testified that the cantaloupes were "sold f. o. b. Denair. * * * The sales are made by a medium of telegraphic communications. * * * Then we ship to ourselves, at this buyer's destination, invoicing the buyer and drawing on him for the amount agreed upon and send out the papers through the bank for him to receive and take delivery of the goods. * * * If you sell a car of produce f. o. b. origin, that means that the buyer assumes the freight. * * * I did the very best I could to sell his fruit at Denair. Market conditions and other factors made late sales a hard proposition. A lot of people that made purchases went back on their word later on. Cars were there, and it was a perishable product. They were there, refused, and we had to do the best we could with them." What became of the four carloads of cantaloupes after they were shipped from Denair does not appear, except that they were rejected by the purchasers. Plaintiff attempted to prove the grounds upon which they were rejected, but the court sustained defendant's objection to such proof; the objection being that "it is irrelevant and not pertinent to any issue in this case, unless they tell it here that that car was rejected at Denair." The only theory upon which the ruling can be upheld is that the contract required unconditional acceptance by the purchaser at Denair and that it was a violation of the contract to sell the cantaloupes f. o. b. Denair, subject to inspection at destination. The special terms in the contract were inserted because the defendant objected to the shipment of his cantaloupes on consignment, the plaintiff's usual method of disposing of produce under its control. When produce is shipped on consignment, the owner thereof may sustain a heavy loss because of a falling market, however high the quality of his produce. Whenever it is sold for an agreed price f. o. b. a given place, the rise or fall of the market is of no concern to the seller, but, upon inspection of the produce prior to the acceptance thereof, the purchaser may reject the same and refuse to pay therefor, if not of the character or quality agreed upon. M. A. Newmark & Co. v. Smith, 26 Cal. App. 339, 146 P. 1064. In the absence of anything to show a contrary intention, it may be presumed that in such a case inspection is to be made at the point of shipment, but the presumption is not conclusive, and it may appear from all the circumstances surrounding the transaction that the parties contemplated an inspection at the point of destination. Whitaker v. Dunlap-Morgan Co., 44 Cal. App. 140, 186 P. 181; Gianelli v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., 48 Cal. App. 103, 110, 191 P. 720; Puritas Coffee, etc., Co. v. De Martini, 56 Cal. App. 628, 636, 200 P. 96. It appears from the evidence that the defendant has had several years' experience in raising and shipping cantaloupes, and he is doubtless familiar with the customary methods of selling and shipping them. At the time the contract was executed, he probably knew that the local market for cantaloupes was limited, and that, in order to make advantageous sales, it would be necessary to ship the most of them to buyers at distant points, who probably would not have representatives at the small town of Denair to inspect the shipments.

[2] In Eaton v. Blackburn, 52 Or. 300, 96 P. 870, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 53, 132 Am. St. Rep. 705, 16 Ann. Cas. 1198, the plaintiff sold the defendant a quantity of hay to be delivered f. o. b. at point of shipment. The court said:

> "Where articles are to be delivered to a common carrier by the vendor, to be forwarded to the vendee at a distant point, and no provision is made for inspection and acceptance before or at the time of shipment, the vendee is entitled, under the law, to a reasonable time, after the goods arrive at their destination, in which to exercise the right of inspection, and to accept or reject them, if they do not comply with the contract."

In Deveso v. Chandler, 210 App Div. 684, 206 N. Y. S. 604, after stating the rule as above, the court said:

> "But in any event there was here evidence of a usage known to both parties, whereby, under the facts involved, payment was to be made after inspection on board cars on their arrival in Buffalo. * * * We think such evidence was admissible."

[3] The plaintiff herein attempted to prove a trade custom relative to the place of inspection in the sale and shipment of perishable products, such as cantaloupes, sold f. o. b. point of shipment, but the court sustained the defendant's objections thereto. If there was a custom, known to both parties, giving purchasers the right, under the circumstances stated, to inspect shipments at the point of destination, then it must be presumed, in the absence of covenant or evidence to the contrary, that the parties contracted with reference to that custom, and that such custom became a part of the contract. Gianelli v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., supra; Deveso v. Chandler, supra. The court permitted a witness to give his interpretation of the special terms of the contract, correctly stating, however, that the interpretation thereof was for the court, but refused to permit any evidence tending to prove the custom which plaintiff sought to show. The evidence should have been admitted.

[4] The evidence is not such as to require a finding that the parties had reached an agreement as to the balance due on the account between them.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 248

PEOPLE v. OWEN. (Cr. 1407.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 13, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑355—Evidence showing that conduct, apparently caused by intoxication, occurred on other occasions from different causes, held competent to disprove intoxication.

Where intoxication is claimed to have been cause of certain conduct, it is competent to show like occurrences on other occasions which indicate that cause for such conduct was other than intoxication, as insanity or habitual eccentricity.

2. Automobiles 🔑354—Automobile driver, accused of intoxication, may show habitual eccentricity caused his actions.

In prosecution for driving automobile while intoxicated, where state's evidence was wholly circumstantial, defendant could show that ordinary conduct was habitually eccentric or verged on insanity, in order to prove actions testified to were not caused by intoxication.

3. Criminal law 🔑1170(1)—Excluding evidence of eccentric character of defendant, charged with driving car while intoxicated, held ground for reversal.

In prosecution for driving while intoxicated, refusal of trial court to permit introduction of evidence showing defendant's ordinary sober conduct was habitually eccentric, in order to prove actions testified to were not caused by intoxication, held reversible, as depriving defendant of substantial right.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Bert Owen, true name Bertram E. Owens, was convicted of driving an automobile while intoxicated, and he appeals. Reversed.

B. W. Gearhart and Lindsay & Gearhart, all of Fresno, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant was convicted of the offense of driving an automobile upon a public highway at a time when he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On the trial of the action, no one testified to having seen defendant take a drink of intoxicating liquor or to have observed the smell of such liquor on his breath at or near the time when the alleged offense was committed; but the evidence upon which the prosecution relied for a conviction consisted of testimony relating to the peculiar conduct of, and statements made by, defendant at or near the time in question.

Evidence offered on behalf of defendant in explanation of such conduct and statements was denied admission by the trial court, and prejudicial error is predicated thereon.

From the record it appears that at the outset of the defense the rejected evidence was offered for the purpose, not of proving the insanity of defendant from the standpoint of his not knowing or appreciating right from wrong, but solely with the view of presenting to the jury evidence of the customary habits and eccentricities of the defendant at a time or times when he was not under the influence of intoxicating liquor, to the end that the jury might determine the fact whether the conduct of defendant and the statements made by him at the time in question arose from what as to defendant was a usual state of mind, or whether such actions on the part of defendant were attributable to the fact that he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor. At a later period in the course of the trial, certain other questions were propounded to witnesses on behalf of defendant for the avowed purpose of showing his insanity, not to the extent of presenting a legal excuse for the commission of the offense (which in fact was denied), but for the purpose of showing the ordinary abnormalities of defendant, both in his speech and in his general conduct, at times when he was in a sober condition as distinguished from an intoxicated condition.

In announcing the general rule applicable to situations analogous to the facts here presented, Mr. Wigmore, in section 228, vol. 1, of his work on Evidence, makes the statement that:

> "On the general principle of relevancy (ante, § 34), any piece of conduct offered as indicating insanity may be explained away as equally or more consistent with some other hypothesis. That which appears to be an irrational act or utterance may, in the light of certain facts, be rational, or may be the result of some other abnormal mental condition than insanity (such as fever or intoxication). These explanatory facts are thus always admissible, providing only that they have in some degree an explanatory significance."

The same thought is perhaps expressed in section 862 of volume 22 of Corpus Juris, where it is said:

> "It has been considered that, where a certain cause is claimed to have produced a particular result, it is competent to show other occurrences on other occasions which indicate that there was another cause for the result. * * *"

In the case of People v. Miles, 143 N. Y. 383, 38 N. E. 456, the defendant was charged with murder. One of his defenses was that he was insane when the crime was committed. Touching the reverse of the situation here presented, the prosecution introduced evidence tending to show that certain acts of the defendant, which were claimed as indicating insanity on his part, were in fact due to his intoxicated condition. On appeal, error was predicated upon the action of the trial court in admitting such evidence. The New York Court of Appeals, in considering the question, said:

> "One of the defenses interposed on the trial was that of insanity. To sustain it, proof was given of the conduct of the defendant at Evans Mills on an occasion when he was trying to settle his business difficulties with Mrs. Ward, and it was claimed on his behalf that his words and actions on that occasion were so strange and inexplicable as to indicate insanity. To rebut that inference and answer the manifest tendency and purpose of the proof, the prosecution were allowed to show that on that day and that occasion the defendant was intoxicated, and that his excited and ugly conduct was explainable by that fact. The evidence was clearly admissible."

[1] Reasoning from the principle announced by Mr. Wigmore, to the effect that any act or utterance which may appear to indicate irrationality may in fact be shown to be the result of intoxication, it should follow that, where it is contended that a given act is the product of intoxication, proffered evidence to the effect that such act or conduct may be attributed either to insanity or to an eccentricity should be admitted. Paraphrasing the citation from Corpus Juris, supra, where intoxication is claimed to have been the cause of certain conduct, it is competent to show other occurrences on other occasions which indicate that there was a different cause for such conduct. The rule as illustrated in the case of People v. Miles, 143 N. Y. 383, 38 N. E. 456, which permits one side to show that the given act claimed to be the offspring of insanity was in fact superinduced by intoxication, ought to admit of the reverse of the proposition and permit the introduction of evidence to show that, where certain conduct is claimed as indicating intoxication, evidence may be induced for the purpose of showing that such conduct was attributable either to a natural, normal, and customary eccentricity or trait of character, or that it was due to insanity.

[2] The primary purpose sought in the trial of an action is the ascertainment of the truth. Any fact which will materially tend to enable a jury to determine the ultimate truth should ordinarily be submitted to the jury for its consideration. It appears to be conceded that defendant's conduct and speech at the time in question were not the product of a normal mind. The only real question in the case was whether defendant was intoxicated. The evidence adduced by the prosecution showed that he had said and done things which would indicate that he was drunk. Necessarily his defense, if any, must have rested either upon a denial of the facts testified to by witnesses introduced by the prosecution, or upon some explanation of his peculiar conduct and statements. If defendant had been insane, or if perchance, immediately preceding the time at which defendant was charged with the commission of the offense, he had suffered a severe physical injury and shock to his brain and general nervous system which rendered him irresponsible for his actions, or if an anæsthetic induced by a surgical operation had been administered to defendant immediately before the time in question, and from which anæsthetic defendant had not completely recovered, or if defendant had been "doped" by persons seeking to do him harm—it scarcely could be doubted that evidence thus tending to account for the strangeness of the conduct of and statements made by defendant would be admissible. The principle rests upon defendant's right to make a proper explanation of his conduct. Assuming that at the time charged in the information defendant's conduct was peculiar, it would seem clear that, without endeavoring to show the direct cause thereof, he had the right to establish the fact that his ordinary sober conduct was habitually eccentric, and thus disprove the possible conclusion that his questioned conduct was the result of an intoxicated condition.

[3] It is apparent that the refusal of the trial court to permit the introduction of the evidence relating to the alleged cause of defendant's peculiar conduct at the time charged in the information resulted in the deprivation of a substantial right to defendant.

It becomes unnecessary to notice other alleged errors occurring at the trial, as specified by appellant.

The judgment and the order denying the defendant a new trial are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

80 Cal. App. 81

PEOPLE v. McNETT et al. (Cr. 869.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 30, 1926.)

1. Criminal law ⚷1165(1)—Corroborative evidence in prosecution for attempted robbery held not so clear and convincing as to render serious errors occurring at trial harmless (Pen. Code, § 1111).

Corroborative evidence of accomplice in prosecution for attempt to commit robbery held not so clear and convincing as to render serious errors occurring at trial harmless, in view of Pen. Code, § 1111.

2. Criminal law ⚷1169(11)—Admission of evidence of other crimes by defendant held prejudicial error.

In prosecution for attempt to commit robbery, evidence of statement of defendant, wherein appeared in detail what occurred in court in another county, and in which reference was made to other crimes by defendant, held prejudicial error.

3. Criminal law ⚷369(2)—Admissions of other crimes by defendant to prove attempted robbery held error.

Admissions of other crimes, in prosecution for attempt to commit robbery, held error, since defendant could not be convicted of one crime on proof of other independent crimes.

4. Criminal law ⚷655(2)—Statement of court with reference to stool pigeons, where defendant claimed to have been assisting sheriff, held prejudicial.

Where defendant, in prosecution for attempt to commit robbery, claimed that he had been instructed by sheriff to give information to frustrate crimes, and had done so in this case, court's statement with reference to stool pigeons held prejudicial to defendant, since jury might have drawn inference that defendant's conduct was necessarily criminal.

5. Criminal law ⚷1184—Erroneous sentence can be corrected and is not ground for reversal.

Pronouncement of erroneous sentence for definite term of years instead of for indeterminate period is not sufficient ground for reversal, but is an informality which can be corrected by having sentence again pronounced.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Clyde McNett and another were convicted of an attempt to commit robbery, and named defendant appeals. Reversed.

Clifford A. Russell, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NEEDHAM, Justice pro tem. The appellant, Clyde McNett, was jointly charged with one Adna J. Davis by an information with the crime of attempt to commit robbery, and was convicted by a jury, and was by the court sentenced to serve a term of 20 years in the state prison at Folsom. The codefendant, Davis, had, previous to the trial of McNett, pleaded guilty.

McNett has appealed from the order denying his motion for a new trial and from the judgment and sentence of imprisonment.

In a general way, the facts as shown by the evidence disclosed that on the night of September 15, 1924, an attempt was made to hold up a roadhouse in Sacramento county, known as the Plantation Inn. Information that the holdup would be attempted had been received by the sheriff's office, and five deputies from that office were sent to the scene and were there at the time the attempted robbery took place. Two of the deputy sheriffs, Brady and Murphy, were stationed inside of the building with P. W. Pedelty, manager of the inn; the other three deputies, Robbins, Bryant, and Garibaldi, being at the time in the oil station near the Plantation Inn. At about the hour of midnight, according to the testimony, an automobile drove up to the place and two armed men, Hart and Schierhoff, ran to the inn, where an exchange of shots took place, which resulted in the death of both of these invaders. The defendant Davis admitted that he drove the car and that he escaped in his car after being fired upon by the officers at the oil station. Up to this point there is no conflict in the testimony. The defendant Davis, who gave testimony for the people after his plea of guilty, and thus acknowledged himself to be an accomplice, testified that the appellant, McNett, was in the automobile at the time it was driven to the inn, and that McNett left the car at the same time as Hart and Schierhoff. Davis also testified that Hart, Schierhoff, and McNett met at the home of McNett on that evening, where McNett secured a gun which he gave to Schierhoff, and that McNett accompanied Davis and the two other bandits to a point beyond the Plantation Inn, where the appellant, McNett, planned the details of the holdup and with the others journeyed to the Plantation Inn for the purpose of robbing the inn.

Thereafter the district attorney introduced a statement made by McNett, appellant, shortly after the attempted robbery, in the office of the district attorney, which was taken down in shorthand and transcribed. This statement was voluntarily made and was very lengthy, containing some 77 pages of typewriting. In this statement McNett denied that he was present at the holdup at the Plantation Inn, but he admitted that he had discussed the question of holding up the inn with Hart and Schierhoff on the day of the attempted holdup, and on that same night that he had met Davis at the home of Schierhoff and accompanied Hart, Davis, and Schierhoff and two other men to his own home, where he stated he got out and bade them good night, whereupon he telephoned to the sheriff's office, "Tell Robbins, the boys are on their way out." The statement of the appellant was to the effect that he had agreed with Deputy Sheriff Robbins that he would pretend that he would act in conjunction with Hart and Schierhoff and other criminals, who were under suspicion of having been implicated in several robberies and holdups that had occurred in Sacramento county, and would give such information as he obtained to Officer Robbins, so that such crimes might be frustrated. It appears that the appellant had been twice convicted of a felony before, and that at the time of the attempted robbery of the Plantation Inn, on September 15, 1924, the appellant was under probation for a crime committed in Contra Costa county. The voluntary statement made by the appellant, and which, as stated, was exceedingly long, and which was read to the jury, contained a statement of the appellant to the effect that, when granted probation, it was understood that he was to co-operate with the officers in uncovering crime by pretending to be still a criminal and thus gain the confidence of the criminal element, and inform the officers of any contemplated crimes. The appellant admitted, however, that he had been contradicted in this particular by the officials who had granted him probation, and appellant, McNett, was put through a long and thorough questioning by the district attorney and all his statements and actions and all surrounding circumstances were thus put before the jury in the reading of this statement. The jury thus had before them, in contrast with the testimony of Davis, the story of McNett as given in the voluntary statement to the district attorney.

In support of the appeal of appellant, it is contended: (1) That the evidence does not support the verdict. (2) That the court erred in denying his motion for an instructed verdict after the completion of the people's case. (3) That the court erred in its instructions to the jury. (4) That the court erred in its rulings on admissibility of evidence. (5) That the court had no power to impose a definite term of years.

We will first consider the ground that the evidence does not support the verdict. The testimony of Davis, the accomplice, in most particulars seems clear enough. However, he was sharply contradicted in very important particulars by the three deputy sheriffs Robbins, Bryant, and Garibaldi, who were stationed at the oil station near the Plantation Inn, the scene of the attempted robbery. Davis testified that the appellant, McNett, was in the automobile at the time the machine drew up to a place near the oil station, and that he got out of the machine at the same time Hart and Schierhoff did; the three officers just named testifying positively that only two men got out of the machine. Davis, the accomplice, also testified that he got out of the automobile after the firing commenced, but it was not a natural thing for Davis to get out of the automobile after being fired upon, and he was contradicted in this by the three officers named. We thus find that the testimony of an accomplice is contradicted in very vital matters by three officers of the law, who were stationed at the place at the time for the purpose of apprehending those whom they had received advance information were to commit the crime. It would seem that there could be no possible motive for these officers to misrepresent the facts; on the contrary, there is every reason for the belief that the officers stated the truth, and were in a position to observe and to tell accurately just what in fact did happen and who were present. It is true that the witness Mrs. Hartley and her son, Ivan Hartley, testified that Robbins had told them that there was a fourth man in the machine, but Robbins denied making this statement. Conceding that the statements of Robbins were inconsistent, it can hardly be considered in any sense as evidence against the appellant, McNett, and could be considered only as tending to discredit the testimony of Robbins, and it would seem that its greatest effect would be to eliminate the testimony of Robbins. If we consider the testimony of Robbins as eliminated, we have a verdict supported only by the testimony of an accomplice, corroborated, if at all, by such unfavorable inferences as can be drawn, but which do not necessarily arise from the statement of McNett. It seems that the accomplice Davis was not apprehended after the commission of the crime, but that subsequently he voluntarily gave himself up and entered a plea of guilty. The inference is plain that Davis undoubtedly was assisting the prosecution in the hope of being given a lighter sentence, and it also appears in the record that at the time he gave his testimony he had pending an application for probation. For these reasons it would seem that the testimony of the accomplice Davis cannot be considered as very strong or convincing.

We have heretofore referred to the statement made by the appellant, McNett, to the district attorney shortly after the commission of the crime. It is too long to be quoted herein, consisting, as we have stated, of some 77 pages of typewriting.

McNett's statement that he was a feigned accomplice, acting in co-operation with Deputy Sheriff Robbins, is not without corroboration. It appeared irresistibly from the evidence that the sheriff's office had advance information of the intended robbery; otherwise there would have been no occasion to station five officers, two in the Plantation Inn and three at the oil station. McNett stated: That he "was working for the sheriff's office to apprehend." That he called Robbins up about 2 p. m. of the day of the crime and told him "that these men were planning on robbing the Plantation Inn that night." That he first told the officers of such plan two or three days before that. That Robbins instructed him what to do in apparent co-operation with these men. That about 10 p. m. of the day of the crime he called up Ellis Jones, the sheriff, and said to him: "'Tell Robbins the boys are on their way out;' and he says, 'Who is this'? I says, 'A friend of Robbins, * * * Jack,' that is the name that Robbins had me call him up under for * * * several months; * * * and he says, 'All right, thanks;' and I says, 'Good night,' * * * and we hung up." That, while he was operating for the sheriff's office, Robbins gave him a "25 Colt's automatic." That later he returned the "25" to Robbins, who then gave him "a 45 Colt's." None of the foregoing statements were contradicted by any witness. It is a reasonable inference that at least the sheriff would have been placed upon the witness stand to contradict the statement that McNett informed him of the intended crime if the statement is not true. If McNett was a real accomplice, it was a very unnatural thing for him to keep the officers informed of the contemplated crime and to again inform the sheriff thereof immediately prior thereto.

[1] While, of course, it is axiomatic that corroborative evidence of that given by an accomplice need not be direct and positive, and while circumstantial evidence, which tends to connect the defendant with the commission if the crime charged, is sufficient to fulfill the requirements of the law, and while the corroborative evidence required by the provisions of section 1111 of the Penal Code need not be strong and is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, though if it stood alone it would be entitled to but little weight (People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480, 24 P. 32; People v. Barker, 114 Cal. 617, 46 P. 601), and while such testimony need not extend to every fact in detail covered by the statement of the accomplice (People v. Cloonan, 50 Cal. 449; People v. Kunz, 73 Cal. 315, 14 P. 836), and while it has been held that sometimes a fact or circumstance which seems to be very slight carries the quality of sufficient corroborative proof, and while it may be claimed that the corroborative evidence in the instant case is sufficient under section 1111 of the Penal Code, yet we are constrained to hold to the opinion that such corroborative evidence in the instant case is not so clear and convincing as to render serious errors occurring at the trial harmless.

[2, 3] We will next consider the fourth point, to wit, that the court erred in its rulings on the admissibility of evidence. The trial court admitted and there was read to the jury that portion of the statement of the appellant, McNett, wherein appeared in detail what occurred in the court of Judge McKenzie in Contra Costa county, including a statement made by the district attorney of that county, and which we think was purely hearsay, and its admission was immaterial and highly prejudicial to the rights of the defendant, especially that portion which related to the commission of other crimes by the appellant. The reference in the statement of the district attorney of Contra Costa county to crimes committed by the appellant in other counties doubtless had a decided influence on the jury, especially the reference to a gas station holdup in Butte county; it being a crime apparently similar to the one committed in the instant case. We quote from the record a portion of the statements admitted:

> "* * * Q. (interposing). Well, then, Mr. Tinning said (reads quotation): 'Well, if the court please, I want to say right here, that there was no knowledge'— The court interrupted and said: 'I mean he was sent off to go and help these officers. Mr. Tinning: No, sir; he was not. I positively wanted to make that clear. Before this man was released, there was a long discussion as to whether he should be given parole or not—probation. It was necessary to ask—we weren't going to release him in this county on probation, if he was going to be arrested for some transaction that had occurred prior to his arrest in this county, and it was for that purpose, and that purpose alone, that inquiry was made in the different counties where he had committed offenses, and in each of those counties the sheriff, or some other officer had been here and had gone over all those facts, and, after that was done, and that testimony was written up and in the hands of the district attorneys of the various counties, we inquired of them whether or not they desired to prosecute, and the only place where there was any difficulty about it was in Butte county, where that gas station holdup occurred, and there was some question there, and there was a delay of a couple of weeks before they determined what position they would take. * * * When McNett received his order of probation, he was advised by me, and his wife was advised by me, that he was not to associate with criminals, and was to have nothing to do with them, and that, if he did, I went so far as this, to ask his wife if he did commence to associate with them, to advise our office so that we could take steps to return him here. * * * I never encouraged him or any man—I say this, because I want it clear as to what his instructions were—to in any way act as a stool pigeon, or to go out and inform himself as to what other criminals were doing, and it was a surprise to me to find when this matter came up that he had been actively engaged or participated as a passive or active member of the group that were committing crime. I had understood and knew from what he had done here, that he knew enough of these men to be able to tell from newspaper articles who committed crimes and that sort of thing, and I never felt that there was anything improper in that, but I certainly would feel, and I think any officer would feel, it was improper for a man that was sent away to rehabilitate, to again mix up with me violating the law, both because it put a premium on granting probation to stool pigeons, and, most important of all, it would not allow the man to rehabilitate himself, and I want my statement to be perfectly clear, because it was made clear to both McNett and his wife, that they weren't to associate with criminal associations. Isn't that true, Mr. McNett? Mr. McNett: A. Yes, sir. * * * Mr. Tinning: I made it very clear? Mr. McNett: A. Yes, sir. Mr. Tinning: I went so far as to tell your wife just what I have said, if you did start in missing, I wanted to know it. Mr. McNett: Yes; you told her that. You made the same remark to me, but I was given to understand through Mr. Harrison and the sheriff's office here, and what the other sheriffs had told me, that I was to clear up what crimes that had already taken place that I knew of. Mr. Tinning: It was never made a condition, either understood or expressed or inexpressed, that you were to go out and ferret out crime and act as a stool pigeon to the sheriff's office of Sacramento county or any other county? Mr. McNett: Not through you; no, sir.'"

The court first sustained objections made by the appellant to the foregoing testimony, but subsequently changed his ruling and permitted this evidence to stand. It would seem even if in his statement to the district attorney McNett had admitted these other crimes, such admissions could not properly have been introduced in evidence, because it is not possible to convict a defendant of one crime on proof of other independent crimes. People v. Adams (Cal. App.) 244 P. 106.

During the argument of counsel for the defendant, he stated:

"Because he (referring to McNett) has acted in the capacity of what we term a stool pigeon in this case for the sheriff's office, his conduct is being criticized by the men who inaugurated a system of stool pigeon in this county."

He was then interrupted by the district attorney, who used the following language:

"Mr. Henderson: Now, we object to that, if your honor please. I have never used a stool pigeon in any of my work. Mr. Russell is going out of his way to state a malignant falsehood to this jury. The men that I have employed in the district attorney's office have been detectives, investigators. A stool pigeon is a criminal who does just what McNett did. My men went out, just the same as traffic officers went out, to see the violations of the law that were performed, and we have yet to hear Mr. Russell or the Sacramento Bee or anybody else call the traffic officers stool pigeons."

Thereupon the court voluntarily used the following language:

"The Court: I think Mr. Russell knows himself that he was saying what was untrue when he made that statement. Mr. Russell knows that there hasn't been, in this court, a stool pigeon used on behalf of the people, and there hasn't been a stool pigeon used by either the district attorney's office, or in this court, and when you made that statement, Mr. Russell, I think you deliberately made a statement that you knew was untrue, and the court will state that to you, or anybody else present.

"Mr. Russell: May I be permitted to reply, your honor?

"The Court: You may proceed with your argument.

"Mr. Russell: I desire, at this time, to note an exception to your honor's remarks in reference to your statement about my statement."

[4] We think the language, especially of the court toward the defendant's counsel, must necessarily have had a tendency to prejudice the jury against the defendant's case. The jury may well have drawn the inference from such statements that the court believed that the conduct of the defendant was necessarily criminal.

The next point we will consider is that the court erred in instructions to the jury. We think it is sufficient, however, to say that there was no error in giving or refusing instructions.

[5] The last point raised for reversal is that the court had no power to impose a definite term of years, but should have pronounced a judgment for an indeterminate period. As the law now stands, it would seem that the opinion in the case of People v. Lee, 36 Cal. App. 323, 172 P. 158, applies. However, the pronouncement of an erroneous sentence would not be sufficient grounds for a reversal, but would be an informality which could be corrected by having the sentence again pronounced, and, in view of the fact that we feel compelled to reverse this case, we see no occasion for dealing with this point in greater detail.

For the reasons given, we are led to the conclusion that the defendant was not fairly tried nor justly convicted, and it therefore follows that the order denying his motion for a new trial and from the judgment and sentence of imprisonment must be reversed. It is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

80 Cal. App. 182

PEOPLE v. FERRARI. (Cr. 1340.) *

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 9, 1926.)

1. Infants 🔑20—Defendant might be convicted of lewd acts with child not "constituting other crime," since prosecutrix testified that one crime followed other and jury might believe testimony as to one only (Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a).

Defendant might be convicted under Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting lewd acts with child other than acts constituting other crimes despite evidence of commission of offense under section 288a, since (1) prosecutrix testified that one crime followed other, and (2) jury might believe testimony of prosecutrix as to one crime only.

2. Infants 🔑20—Statements held admissible to show outcry in prosecution for lewd acts with child (Pen. Code, § 288).

Testimony of statements by prosecutrix to other children held admissible to show immediate outcry in prosecution under Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting lewd and lascivious acts with child under 14 years of age.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Percy S. King, Judge.

Ceasar Ferrari was convicted of violating Pen. Code, § 88, condemning certain lewd and lascivious acts with a child under age of 14 years, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Elmer E. Robinson and Frank T. McGrath, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel B. Browne, of San Francisco, for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was charged in the information with the commission of the offense denounced by section 288 of the Penal Code. The jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged, and from the judgment following the verdict and from the order denying his motion for a new trial the defendant has appealed on a typewritten record.

Testimony was offered to show that the defendant took the prosecutrix, a girl of seven years, into his bedroom, placed her upon the bed, removed some of her underclothing, and then committed the criminal act covered by section 288a of the Penal Code. The testimony of the prosecutrix was sufficient to show the commission of both offenses covered by these two sections of the Code, and other evidence was received, both direct and circumstantial, tending to corroborate her as to the first offense, and also showing similar acts by this defendant on other occasions. All this evidence was denied by the defendant when called as a witness in his own behalf.

[1] On this appeal the defendant concedes that the evidence was sufficient to constitute the crime as defined by the latter section, and, for this reason, argues that he could not have been guilty of any crime under section 288. The point is that because section 288 covers lewd and lascivious acts upon a child under 14 years of age "other than the acts constituting other crimes" provided for in the Code, and because testimony was given tending to show the commission of the crime covered by section 288a, the former section is not applicable to the facts proved. The answer is that the testimony of the prosecutrix tended to show that two separate offenses were committed, one directly following the other, and that it was the province of the jury to determine whether it should believe all the testimony of the prosecutrix or whether it should accept her testimony in so far as it related to the charge of lascivious conduct alone. In support of the verdict, we must presume that the jury was satisfied with the testimony covering the acts covered by section 288, and this appears reasonable in view of the fact that there was some corroboration of this testimony as well as evidence of similar acts on other occasions.

[2] Objection is made to the rulings of the trial judge in admitting testimony of statements made by the prosecutrix to other children of the neighborhood. The testimony was offered to show outcry on the part of the prosecutrix immediately following the commission of the offense and was admissible for that purpose. People v. Mayes, 66 Cal. 597, 599, 6 P. 691, 56 Am. Rep. 126; People v. Porter, 48 Cal. App. 237, 241, 191 P. 951.

We find no error in the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice, pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 230

LONGMIRE v. KRUGER. (Civ. 3167.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 10, 1926.)

1. Deeds 🔑196(2)—Deed from parent to child is presumed valid, but burden is on child, exercising authority over dependent parent, to show that gift conveyance was fair and free from fraud.

In equity, deed from parent to child is presumed valid, but where parent is aged, infirm, or otherwise in condition of dependency on child, who exercises authority over him, presumption arises which places burden on beneficiary of gift conveyance to show that transaction was fair and free from fraud.

2. Deeds 🔑211(4)—Deed from aged, infirm parent to child exercising authority over him will be set aside for undue influence on slight evidence.

Equity will scrutinize with great care transaction in which aged, infirm, or otherwise dependent parent makes gift conveyance to child exercising authority over him, and slight evidence is sufficient to warrant setting aside deed for undue influence.

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 7, 1927.

3. Deeds 🔑211(4)—Sufficiency of proof of undue influence depends on circumstances.

What constitutes sufficient proof of undue influence, for which deed will be set aside, depends on facts and circumstances of each particular case.

4. Deeds 🔑196(3)—Gifts 🔑47(3)—Slight evidence that gift or conveyance inter vivos by aged, infirm person was coerced shifts burden to beneficiary to show freedom from undue influence.

With respect to gifts or conveyances inter vivos, as distinguished from wills, grantor's extreme age and infirmity, with slight evidence of circumstances from which it may be inferred that instrument was product of coercion, will suffice to shift burden to beneficiary to show affirmatively that transaction was fair and free from undue influence.

5. Deeds 🔑211(4)—Judgment that deed was result of grantee's undue influence on aged, infirm grandmother held supported by evidence.

Evidence held sufficient to support judgment that deed sought to be set aside was result of grantee's undue influence on his aged, infirm, and partially blind grandmother.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by S. Longmire, as administrator of the estate of Madura Coyle, deceased, against Hartley Kruger. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for appellant.

Edward Bickmore, of Merced, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment canceling a deed of conveyance upon the ground of undue influence. The complaint also charged that the deed was the product of an unsound mind and that it was procured by fraud. Upon both of these last-mentioned issues the trial court found for the defendant. The only question involved in this appeal is whether the findings and judgment are supported by the evidence.

For many years prior to the execution of the deed in question Madura Coyle, an old, partially blind, and feeble widow, resided with her grandson, Hartley Kruger, at her home in Gustine, where he had lived since his childhood days. She had been twice married, and both of her husbands were dead. Her relatives consisted of a son, S. Longmire, and his family, who lived at Turlock, and one other grandson, Roy Kruger, the brother of defendant. The grantor owned the premises where they resided, which was valued at $3,000. She also had about $1,000 cash in bank. For many years both Hartley and Roy Kruger lived with their grandmother, who treated them as a mother would deal toward her own natural children. Some ten years prior to the making of the deed in question Roy married and established a home of his own, while Hartley continued to live with his grandmother, looking after her personal needs and household affairs, but living largely upon her money. She held a deep regard for Hartley and reposed great confidence in him, authorizing him to draw checks upon her bank account. She declared her preference for him because he had always remained with her and she felt that she could rely upon him. She was accustomed to make frequent visits to her son's home at Turlock, where she remained for weeks at a time. She appeared to be upon excellent terms with all of her relatives.

There is some conflict as to her physical condition, but it satisfactorily appears that she was 86 years of age, nearly blind, feeble and helpless, wandering about her home with a cane, and sometimes becoming lost in going from room to room. She was frequently ill and her memory was poor. Her attending physician testified that she was afflicted with a complication of ailments, including high blood pressure, indigestion, together with liver and kidney complaints; she fell in occasional spasms and lay unconscious for many hours. These spells occurred almost daily toward the latter portion of her life. Several witnesses referred to her as feeble-minded, old, or stupid. She was often forgetful, confused, and erratic. Evidently she was greatly impaired, mentally and physically, from both age and disease.

The defendant testified that in April, 1921, his grandmother told him she wanted to fix her property so there would be no dispute over it after she was gone, and for that purpose she sent him to summon a lawyer, together with her son, S. Longmire, who subsequently met at her home, where her will was prepared and executed. Her son testified that he never spoke to her about disposing of her property by will or otherwise, and, upon the contrary, that he considered her incompetent to make a will, yet he did not interfere with her purpose nor attempt to suggest how she should divide her property.

Mabel Burg, a daughter of plaintiff, testified that at the time of the making of the will in April, 1921, her grandmother had said that she wanted to give one-half of her property to her son and one-fourth to each of her grandsons, but that the defendant said to her, "No, you make it one-third; You make it one-third." And the witness concluded by saying, "And so she made it one-third to each." The son, Mr. Longmire, took no part in arranging for or making the will. The defendant testified that after the will was executed the attorney took it away with him, although he contradicted this statement and said that he rarely ever took charge of a will and he did not remember taking this one with him. At least the will was never again seen, and its disappearance is not accounted for.

Immediately after making her will Mrs. Coyle went to live with her son at Turlock. During the 20 months in which she lived with her son she made occasional brief visits to her home at Gustine. The defendant usually took her back and forth in his machine. At the time of the execution of the deed in question the defendant went to Turlock and took his grandmother to her home, where she remained for one week. No one except the grantor and the defendant occupied the home during this period of time. During this visit, and on September 10, 1921, the defendant procured Mr. Perrier, an attorney residing at Gustine, to prepare a gift deed from Mrs. Coyle to the defendant and bring it to the home to be executed. The defendant furnished all the information, including the description of the property, from which the deed was prepared. Mr. Perrier was the same attorney whom the defendant had procured to prepare the will some six months previous. Mrs. Coyle had never met this attorney except upon these two occasions, and had not counseled with him about either transaction. Having prepared the deed, the attorney brought it to the house, where he found the grantor in the presence of defendant and his friend, Mr. Davenport. The conversation regarding the execution of the deed was testified to by Mr. Perrier, and was not only exceedingly brief, but indicated prearrangement and a thorough understanding between himself and the defendant. The old lady had no opportunity for consultation or independent advice. Her replies to his inquiries throw very little light upon her understanding. He said:

> "I went to Mrs. Coyle's house. * * * I would not really state who asked me to go. I went down that morning with the deed, and Mrs. Coyle was in the room, and I said to her, 'Do you wish me to make you a deed of this property to Hartley Kruger?' And she said, 'I do,' or words to that effect. I said, 'You understand that in deeding this over you are giving the property to him?' And she said to me, 'I do.' I said, 'You are ready, then, to sign this deed?' And she said, 'I am.' And I said, 'All right; if you'll just come over here and sign it. * * *' She was unable to write, so she made a mark, and I wrote her name. * * * We signed, myself, as far as I can remember, and Mr. Davenport. * * * That was about all that was said in my presence about the deed."

As to her competency, he said:

> "Q. In your opinion, at the time of the execution of this instrument, was she mentally competent to make a deed? A. I would have no reason to say she was not. I would not be in a position to say, one way or another; it's a hard question to answer; by taking the time—the short time I was there—it was just perfect."

The attorney testified that he had met the grantor before, but never had any conversation with her. The only evidence of any previous meeting between them was at the time of the execution of the will. After the execution of the deed it was handed to the defendant, who said nothing about it to the Longmire family, and who failed to record it for some six months, and until he heard that plaintiff was searching the record to discover it, having learned of its existence from other sources. Immediately upon procuring this deed the defendant took his grandmother back to the home of her son at Turlock, saying that she required personal attention and he had no means of taking care of her.

Several months later, during the following spring, the defendant and his brother Roy met their grandmother at the Longmire home in Turlock. The defendant testified that on this occasion his brother Roy asked Mrs. Coyle why she had made this deed. And the defendant then said:

> "I told her she didn't need to answer the question if she didn't want to, but she said it was her own property and she thought she had a right to do what she pleased with it."

One Wassum, a neighbor, who was present at this conversation, said she asked the defendant why he had not been satisfied with a child's share of the property and that he replied:

> "I have got that deed, and I'm going to keep it. I have got Roy where I want him now, and I'll make a good dog out of him; they'll have to come to me from now on."

This witness then asked Mrs. Coyle if she had really deeded the property away, and she replied:

> "Not that I know of, but they say I have."

This last statement of the grantor was corroborated by other witnesses. Referring to the making of the will, Roy asked his grandmother if she wanted to divide her property one-third each, and she said: "No, she wanted to give her son one-half, and one quarter each to her grandsons, but that he (the defendant) made her draw it up one-third each."

Mr. Longmire, the plaintiff, testified that long prior to his mother's death she urged him to have the deed set aside, and that she always told him she did not remember making the deed. Subsequently, upon proceedings duly had, he was appointed and qualified as her guardian, and immediately commenced an action to set aside the deed. Pending this suit she died; he was appointed administrator of her estate, and as such was substituted as plaintiff and continued the proceeding.

Upon this evidence the trial court found the issues of unsound mind and fraud to be untrue, but upon the second cause of action found in favor of plaintiff, as follows:

> "That Madura Coyle was of weak and vacillating mind, by reason of extreme old age, illness, physical weakness, and a feeling of dependency, and by reason of said mental weakness was easily susceptible to the influence of others. * * * That by reason thereof, on September 10, 1921, the defendant * * * acquired a dominating and controlling influence over the mind and actions of the said Madura Coyle, which * * * overpowered the mind and will, and * * * did cause (her) * * * to execute the alleged deed. That said instrument was not the deed of Madura Coyle, and was not executed by her of her own free will and accord, but that the same was executed under the undue influence of defendant. * * *"

Following these findings a judgment was rendered and entered setting aside the deed as void.

The appellant asserts that there is no substantial evidence in this record to support the contention that undue influence was actually exerted upon the grantor to procure the deed in question; that mere opportunity to employ such influence, or mere inference that it may have been used, is insufficient to warrant the cancellation of a deed. In support of his contention the appellant cites Broaddus v. James, 13 Cal. App. at page 472, 110 P. 161, which was an appeal from a judgment upholding a deed of gift from a mother to her daughter, in which the court said:

> "The mere relation of parent and child is not sufficient to invalidate a deed from the former to the latter. It is a circumstance, of course, inviting careful consideration to the transaction, but before it can justify the inference of undue influence there must be added, imposition, fraud, importunity or something of that kind. It is so expressed in 2 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, 962, and Mackall v. Mackall, 135 U. S. 167, 10 S. Ct. 705, 34 L. Ed. 84.

[1] In the text of Pomeroy's Equity, above referred to, after discussing the subject of conveyances from a child to a parent, the author says:

> "Where the positions of the two parties are reversed, where the parent is aged, infirm, or otherwise in a condition of dependence upon his own child, and the child occupies a corresponding relation of authority, conveyances conferring benefits upon the child, will be set aside. Cases of this kind plainly turn upon the exercise of actual undue influence, and not upon any presumption of invalidity; a gift from parent to child is certainly not presumed to be invalid."

[2] Unquestionably this is the rule of equity, and a deed of conveyance from a parent to a child is not presumed to be invalid. Indeed, without further facts, just the contrary is true, and such a deed is presumed to be valid. 3 Thompson on Real Property, 1052, § 2886; 2 Pomeroy's Equity Jur. (4th Ed.) 2076, § 962. But where the parent is aged, infirm, or otherwise in a condition of dependency upon the child, who exercises authority over him, a presumption arises which places the burden upon the beneficiary of the gift-conveyance, to show the transaction was fair and free from fraud. Equity will scrutinize such a transaction with great care, and, under such circumstances, slight evidence will suffice upon which to base a finding of undue influence and set aside the deed. 18 C. J. 445, § 552; 3 Thompson on Real Property, 1040, §§ 2877 2879; Soberanes v. Soberanes, 97 Cal. 140, 31 P. 910; Richards v. Donner, 72 Cal. 207, 13 P. 584; Carleton v. Bonham, 60 Cal. App. 725, 739, 214 P. 503; Nobles v. Hutton, 7 Cal. App. 14, 93 P. 289; Becker v. Schwerdtle, 6 Cal. App. 462, 92 P. 398.

In the case of Campbell v. Genshlea, 180 Cal. 213, 224, 180 P. 336, 341, it is said:

> "It is to be remembered that in a case involving a purported gift inter vivos, based upon an alleged consideration of love and affection, where the donee is a daughter having the control and direction of the aged donor, a strong presumption of confidential relation arises which would place upon the beneficiary in the transaction the burden of showing fairness in dealing and full understanding on the part of the person parting with the property. Nobles v. Hutton, 7 Cal. App. 14, 93 P. 289. In the absence of such showing, the conveyance is presumed to have been obtained by undue influence and to be void. Piercy v. Piercy, 18 Cal. App. 751, 124 P. 561; Odell v. Moss, 130 Cal. 352, 62 P. 555; Ross v. Conway, 92 Cal. 632, 28 P. 785."

And in section 2877 of Thompson on Real Property, Id., it is said:

> "Weakness of mind furnishes ground of suspicion of improper influence, and therefore, if an unfair advantage over the grantor can be shown or inferred from the circumstances of the transaction, a court of equity will afford relief against it."

Harding v. Handy, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 103, 6 L. Ed. 429, is authority for the statement that:

> "Extreme weakness will raise an almost necessary presumption of imposition, even when it stops short of legal incapacity; and though the contract in the ordinary course of things, reasonably made with such a person, might be admitted to stand, yet, if it should appear to be of such nature as that such a person could not be capable of measuring its extent or importance, its reasonableness or its value, fully and fairly, it cannot be that the law is so much at variance with common sense as to uphold it."

With respect to the character of evidence which is necessary to adduce under circumstances similar to those presented in the case at bar, Mr. Tiffany, the author of that excellent authority on Real Property, in volume 2 (2d Ed.) p. 1640, § 439, says:

> "A conveyance may also be set aside on account of undue influence exerted upon the grantor. Any influence brought to bear upon a person entering into an agreement, or consenting to a disposal of property, which having regard to the age and capacity of the party, the nature of the transaction, and all the circumstances of the case, appears to have been such as to preclude the exercise of free and deliberate judgment, is considered by courts of equity to be undue influence, and is a ground for setting aside the act procured by its employment. The fact that the parties stand in such a position toward one another, either by reason of relationship, professional employment, or otherwise, that the grantor is peculiarly susceptible to the exertion of influence by the grantee, is a consideration of primary importance in this connection, in cases where the transaction is in itself improvident or disadvantageous to the grantor. And the fact that the grantor is lacking in such mental vigor as to enable him to protect himself against imposition is a reason for the interposition of equity to protect him, although the mental weakness is not such as to justify him in being regarded as totally incapacitated."

The Civil Code, § 1575, defines undue influence, and subdivision 2 of that section reads:

> "Undue influence consists: In taking an unfair advantage of another's weakness of mind."

[3] The question of what constitutes sufficient proof of undue influence depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case. 3 Thompson on Real Property, § 2876; Shipman v. Furniss, 69 Ala. 555, 565, 44 Am. Rep. 528, 533. Quoting from the last-mentioned citation, this language is used:

> "What constitutes undue influence is a question depending upon the circumstances of each particular case. It is a species of constructive fraud which the courts will not undertake to define by any fixed principles, lest the very definition itself furnish a finger-board pointing out the path by which it may be evaded." Bigelow on Frauds, 283; 1 Redfield on Wills, 530.

[4] The Estate of Donovan, 140 Cal. 390, 73 P. 1081, is relied upon by appellant as authority for his contention that the bare fact that the grantor and grantee occupied the relationship of loco parentis, and that the grantee had the opportunity to exert undue influence, and received the benefit of the conveyance, is insufficient upon which to set aside a deed, but that there must have been a showing of actual pressure which overpowered the mind and mastered the volition of the grantor, by such proof as is inconsistent with absence of undue influence, or the deed will be held to be valid. Estate of Kendrick, 130 Cal. 360, 368, 62 P. 605; Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 34, 30 P. 101; Estate of Carithers, 156 Cal. 428, 105 P. 127; Estate of Baird, 176 Cal. 381, 168 P. 561; Estate of Anderson, 185 Cal. 700, 198 P. 407. But the law makes a clear distinction between the proof of the existence of undue influence necessary to set aside a will, and that which is required to cancel a deed of gift or conveyance inter vivos. No presumptions of undue influence are indulged in upon the contest of a will, unless confidential relations are first established; but with respect to gifts or conveyances inter vivos, the extreme age and infirmity of the grantor, together with slight evidence of circumstances from which it may be inferred that the instrument was the product of coercion, will suffice to shift the burden and require the beneficiary to show affirmatively that the transaction was fair and free from influence.

In the case of Parfitt v. Lawless, 27 English Law Reports (N. S.) 215, Lord Penzance, in a most interesting opinion on this subject, says:

> "In equity, persons standing in certain relations to one another, such as parent and child, man and wife, doctor and patient, attorney and client, confessor and penitent, guardian and ward, are subject to certain presumptions when transactions between them are brought in question; and if a gift or contract made in favor of him who holds the position of influence is impeached by him who is subject to that influence, the courts of equity cast upon the former the burden of proving that transaction was fairly conducted as though between strangers; that the weaker was not unduly impressed by the natural influence of the stronger, or the inexperienced over-reached by him of more mature intelligence. * * *
>
> "The influence which is undue in the case of gifts inter vivos, is very different from that which is required to set aside a will. In the case of gifts inter vivos, it is considered by the courts of equity that the natural influence which such relations as those in question involve, exerted by those who possess it to obtain a benefit for themselves, is an undue influence. Gifts or contracts brought about by it are therefore set aside, unless the party benefited can show affirmatively that the other party to the transaction was placed in such a position as would enable him to form an absolutely free and unfettered judgment. The law regarding wills is very different."

[5] The fact that the defendant did not record his deed for a considerable period of time, and that he then recorded it only when the plaintiff had discovered its existence and was searching for it in the records of the county, is a suspicious circumstance which tends to indicate guilty conscience of unfair means resorted to in procuring the instrument. Piercy v. Piercy, 18 Cal. App. 751, 124 P. 561.

So, also, the radical change from the terms of the will, to an absolute conveyance of the bulk of her property, during the short period of six months, without any added knowledge on the part of the grantor, or any change in the relationship of the parties, to lead her to believe that her son was likely to oust defendant from his home, is also a circumstance indicating the result of undue influence upon her mind. In the case of Teter v. Teter, 59 W. Va. 449, 53 S. E. 779, the court says:

> "That a disposition previously intended is wholly changed and altered amounts to a circumstance, a fact, having direct and important bearing on the question of undue influence, where there is other evidence having a like tendency, is plain; but if there is a reason for it, or if there are facts and circumstances which the court can see may have been deemed by the grantor * * * a sufficient ground for the change, the force and effect of the circumstances are, in reason, seriously broken and impaired, if not wholly overthrown."

In this case the grantor and grantee occupied a relationship equivalent to that of loco parentis; they had lived together in the same household for years; the grantor had implicit confidence in the grantee, even to the extent of permitting him to draw checks upon her bank account. She was 86 years of age, infirm, partially blind, mentally and physically impaired by age and sickness; the grantee was 39 years of age and in the prime of health and vigor; the grantor previously made a will, the terms of which were radically changed by the deed in question, within the period of six months, without satisfactory explanation; the defendant obtained the bulk of the estate for the avowed consideration of love and affection; the deed was not recorded until the son of the grantor discovered its existence; the will disappeared, and the deed was kept a secret for a period of time; the grantee brought the grantor from her home where she then resided with her son and kept her in his home for a week, during which time no one else occupied the home; the grantee personally procured the attorney, giving him the information and description from which he drew the deed; the grantor never consulted with the attorney regarding the transaction; her son was kept in ignorance of the purpose of executing the deed; when the attorney brought the deed to the home, already prepared, the entire material part of his conversation regarding the deed consists of the following: "Do you wish me to make you a deed of this property to Hartley Kruger?" Answer: "I do." "You understand that in deeding this over, you are giving the property to him?" Answer: "I do." "You are ready to sign this deed?" Answer: "I am." And then he said: "If you'll just come here and sign it." Which she did by mark, being unable to write because of infirmity and blindness. Immediately after securing the deed, the grantee returned his grandmother to her son's home, saying he had no means of taking care of her.

These circumstances furnish ample evidence to support a judgment to the effect that the deed was the result of undue influence. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 271

ROBBINS v. HERCULES GASOLINE CO.[*]

(Civ. 5579.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 14, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑657(1)—Circumstances of second hearing in personal injury case being shown only by affidavit, record might be returned for certification (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

Where, by affidavit, plaintiff, appealing under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, showed that hearing on motion for nonsuit had been continued, that he had been granted leave to reopen case, that, after such reopening, ordinance offered in evidence had been excluded because not included in his complaint, reasons for affidavit being given that no reporter was present at second hearing, that defendant's counsel refused to stipulate facts stated and that trial judge was absent on vacation, record could be sent back for proper certification.

2. Master and servant 🔑322—Abutting owner causing excavations in street cannot pass duty of maintaining warning signals to contractor.

Though doctrine of respondeat superior generally does not apply where injury results from negligent acts of independent contractor, such rule has application where property owner knowingly causes excavations to be made in or obstructions to be erected on public streets or sidewalks fronting his property, owner then owing duty to public to maintain sufficient warning signals thereon.

3. Master and servant 🔑317—Abutting owner excavating in street with or without permit is liable for injuries from contractor's failure to maintain warning signals.

Where by statute or ordinance owner is prohibited from excavating or obstructing public street without permit, he is liable for injuries resulting from failure of contractor to maintain proper warning signals, whether work was done with or without permit.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑692—Anything unlawfully obstructing use of street is nuisance (Civ. Code, § 3479).

Anything unlawfully obstructing free passage for use of any public street is nuisance, in view of Civ. Code, § 3479.

5. Trial 🔑165—Noncompliance of excavation with permit held admitted by motion for nonsuit in personal injury action (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 1, 20, 33).

Though defendant to suit for injuries resulting from fall into excavation dug at his orders would be presumed to have obtained permit required, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 1, 20, 33, there was reasonable inference from plaintiff's oral testimony as to lack of barriers and signal lights on night when accident occurred that work was not done in manner designated in permit, which testimony, and inferences and presumptions therefrom, was admitted by motion for nonsuit.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[*] Rehearing denied January 10, 1927. Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 10, 1927.

6. Municipal corporations ⚷816(8)—Ordinance regulating construction of excavations in sidewalks is admissible on issue of negligence though not pleaded.

If ordinance regulating making of excavations in public streets and sidewalks should be again offered in evidence in new trial of action for personal injuries received from falling into unprotected excavation, such ordinance should be admitted notwithstanding plaintiff's failure to plead it, cause of action not being for violation of ordinance but for negligence in maintaining excavation without protections, and ordinance being evidence of such negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Vernon W. Robbins against the Hercules Gasoline Company for personal injuries. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Charles G. Young and C. P. Johnson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

McComb & Hall, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for damages caused by having fallen into an excavation in a sidewalk in a public street of the city of Los Angeles. He was nonsuited upon the ground that it appeared that the excavation had been made by an independent contractor acting under contract with the defendant. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment of nonsuit under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. The notice to the clerk given under that section called for a transcript of all evidence offered or received, acts or statements of the court, and all minutes of the court. In an affidavit filed by plaintiff's counsel and certified by the clerk it appears that the hearing on the motion for nonsuit was continued from June 9, 1924, to June 23, 1924, and this is confirmed by the judgment. It also appears that on June 23 plaintiff requested and was granted leave to reopen his case; that he thereupon offered in evidence an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles relating to and regulating the making of excavations in public streets and sidewalks, and that said offer was rejected on the ground that the ordinance had not been pleaded in the complaint.

[1] The reasons for making the affidavit are stated to be that no reporter was present at the second hearing of the cause, that counsel for defendant refuses to stipulate as to the facts stated, and that the trial judge was absent on his vacation and could not be found. The respondent at this time objects to a consideration of the facts stated in the affidavit because it has not been certified by the trial judge. Under section 953, Code of Civil Procedure, we might return the record for proper certification, but this is not necessary because the judgment must be reversed irrespective of what appears in the affidavit.

The defendant had let a contract for the construction of a gas filling station on its property, and the contractor had made an excavation of about 20 feet in length across the sidewalk for the purpose of constructing a driveway over the sidewalk into the lot upon which the station was to be operated. This excavation was left wholly unprotected by barrier or warning light, and the plaintiff, on a dark and stormy night, while walking along the sidewalk, fell into the excavation and was injured. The only question presented on this record is whether the doctrine of respondeat superior applies.

[2, 3] Generally speaking, the rule does not apply where injury results from the negligent acts of an independent contractor, but it is a well-known exception to this rule that where the owner of property knowingly causes excavations to be made in or obstructions to be erected on the public street or sidewalk fronting his property, he owes a duty to the public to maintain sufficient warning signals thereon and cannot pass this duty on to another. Thus, where by statute or ordinance an owner is prohibited from excavating or obstructing a public street without permit, he is liable for injuries resulting from the failure of his contractor to maintain proper warning signals whether the work was done with or without permit—in the first instance, on the theory that through the permit he has assumed the duty of the municipality to maintain the street in a safe condition, and in the second instance, on the theory that, having acted in violation of law, he has created a nuisance per se. Colgrove v. Smith, 102 Cal. 220, 224, 36 P. 411, 27 L. R. A. 590; Luce v. Holloway, 156 Cal. 162, 165, 166, 103 P. 886.

[4, 5] When the plaintiff rested it appeared from the evidence that at the point where the alleged accident occurred a sidewalk had theretofore been constructed. It further appeared that the sidewalk had been torn up. It further appeared that the particular locality was within the city of Los Angeles. In connection with these facts it is apparent that anything which unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use of any public street is a nuisance (Civ. Code, § 3479), and that any one who negligently removes any public highway is guilty of a misdemeanor. To avoid the provisions of the statutes just quoted it is ordinarily provided by ordinance how, when, and in what manner excavations can be made without danger to the traveling public. It will be presumed that the ordinary course of business has been followed, that the law has been obeyed, and that a person is innocent of crime. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 1, 20, and 33. At the time the motion for a nonsuit was made the motion admitted the evidence that had been introduced by the plaintiff and the inferences and presumptions in his favor. Goldstone v. Merchants', etc., Co., 123 Cal. 625, 627, 56 P. 776; Hoff v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 158 Cal. 596, 599, 112 P. 53. In accordance with one of the presumptions above stated it will be assumed that the excavation was not made without first obtaining a permit, because it will not be assumed that the defendant was guilty of a crime. However, in the case of the oral testimony that the accident occurred at night, that it was very dark at the place of the accident, that no barriers were installed, that no signal lights were in place, and that no guard was on duty, it may be reasonably inferred that the work was not done in the manner designated in the permit.

[6] As the cause must go back for a new trial, it is proper to say that if the municipal ordinance is again offered in evidence it should be admitted, notwithstanding the failure to plead it in the complaint. The cause is not one for a violation of the ordinance, but is for negligence in maintaining the excavation without proper barriers or lights, and the ordinance is evidence of such negligence. Martin v. Shea, 182 Cal. 130, 137, 187 P. 23; Szopieray v. West Berkeley Express, etc., Co., 194 Cal. 106, 113, 227 P. 720.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 243

PEOPLE v. RUSSELL. (Cr. 1343.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 13, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑829(16)—Refusal to instruct that mere declaration of witness was not binding held not prejudicial, in view of other instructions.

Refusing to instruct that jury was not bound by mere declaration of witness held not prejudicial, being abstract, embodied in other instructions, and in view of instruction that presumed truth of testimony might be repelled by its character.

2. Criminal law 🔑829(1)—Instructions covered by given instructions were properly refused.

Instructions covered by full, correct, and more direct and certain instructions given by court, were properly refused.

3. Criminal law 🔑829(14)—Refusing further instructions, where testimony stricken out, held not error.

Refusing instruction based on noncompletion of cross-examination of state's witness held not error, where testimony was stricken, and court instructed at the time and in the charge to disregard testimony.

4. Witnesses 🔑344(2)—In prosecution for lewd acts with child, evidence of similar charges by prosecutrix and her conviction held inadmissible for impeachment (Pen. Code, § 288).

Cross-examination as to whether prosecutrix had made similar charges of improper conduct against other men and been found guilty of immoral behavior held inadmissible for impeachment, in prosecution for lewd and lascivious acts with child under 14 years of age in violation of Pen. Code, § 288.

5. Infants 🔑20—Consent is not involved in prosecution for lewd acts with child, and testimony is inadmissible to show it (Pen. Code, § 288).

Crime, under Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting certain lewd and lascivious acts with child under 14 years, does not require consent, and hence cross-examination of prosecutrix as to similar charges against other men and her conviction of immoral behavior is inadmissible to show consent.

6. Witnesses 🔑379(1)—In prosecution for lewd acts with child, testimony as to similar charges by prosecutrix and her conviction of immoral behavior held inadmissible as inconsistent statements (Code Civ. Proc. § 2049).

In prosecution for lewd acts with child, certain cross-examination of prosecutrix as to similar charges against other men and conviction of immoral behavior held inadmissible, as inconsistent statements, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2049, where prosecutrix had not stated that any other than defendant had committed crime.

7. Infants 🔑20—Evidence held to sustain conviction of lewd acts with child, where part only of testimony of prosecutrix as to acts and positions was inherently improbable (Pen. Code, § 288).

Where certain of prosecutrix's testimony as to acts and positions of prosecutrix and defendant at same time was inherently improbable, but certain of it was not, conviction, under Pen. Code, § 288, of lewd and lascivious acts with child under 14 years of age, held sustained by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Jess Russell was convicted under Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting certain lewd and lascivious acts with a child under the age of 14 years, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Philip M. Carey and Marvin B. Sherwin, both of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, of San Francisco, for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. The district attorney filed an information against the defendant, charging him with having violated the provisions of section 288 of the Penal Code. The defendant entered a plea of not guilty and a trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, but his motion was denied. A judgment based on the verdict was entered and the defendant has appealed from the judgment and order.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 10, 1927.

The offense, it is claimed, was committed at a small house or shack at Seventy-Seventh avenue and East Fourteenth street in Oakland at about 4 p. m. in January, 1926, upon the body of Orpha Miller, a girl of 12 years of age. In presenting its case the prosecution called as a witness Orpha Miller, who testified to the acts done by the defendant at said time and place. The appellant claims that the judgment should be reversed because of the inherent improbability of the testimony given by the prosecutrix. She was on the stand as a witness a long time. Her testimony covers about 200 folios. As to the acts and positions of the prosecutrix and the acts and positions of the defendant at the same instant, the witness testified to many combinations. As to some of those combinations, the defendant is clearly right when he states that that particular testimony is inherently improbable, but as to other combinations, the attack is without merit. When the record stands thus it is within the province of the jury, being guided by proper instructions, to weigh the evidence and determine whether a part of the testimony is true, and, if so, to render a verdict accordingly. In such a case the court has no right to substitute its conclusion for the conclusion of the jury.

[1] The defendant asked the trial court to give an instruction which defendant numbered 21. The trial court did not do so. Its ruling is assigned as error. The instruction was framed by the defendant by quoting the language used by the writer of the opinion in Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513. The language quoted was taken from the sentence at the bottom of page 241 and the top of page 242 (116 P. 515). It has often been decided by the Supreme Court that the language used by the court in writing an opinion should not be used as an instruction. Assuming, without deciding, that the proposed instruction was a correct statement of the law, it is patent that it was but a mere abstract principle of law which is embodied in and forms a part of the basis for the broader instructions which were given by the court. The jury was instructed that it was the judge of the weight and effect of the evidence and of the credibility of the witnesses. It was also instructed that a witness is presumed to speak the truth, but that this presumption may be repelled by the character of his testimony. We may assume that defendant's counsel duly argued the abstract principle for which he now contends to the jury. In the face of the record which we have quoted we cannot see how he could have been prejudiced by the refusal of the trial court to read to the jury the abstract principle embodied in the requested instruction. People v. Delucchi, 17 Cal. App. 96, 110, 118 P. 935.

[2] The appellant complains because his requested instructions 14 and 19 were not given. His complaint is without support. The subject-matter of each of those instructions was covered by instructions which the court gave which were full and correct and which were more direct and certain in their meaning than the instructions requested.

[3] The plaintiff called and examined Mrs. Victoria Richards as one of its witnesses, and she testified to certain acts of the defendant which she claimed she saw looking through a window. The plaintiff then passed the witness to the defense. Mr. Carey, as attorney for the defendant, had propounded to the witness a few questions on cross-examination, when the witness began to weep. The court took a recess. After the recess, by consent, other witnesses were called. Later it was represented to the trial court that Mrs. Richards was suffering from a breakdown and that it would be six weeks before her health would permit her to subject herself to further cross-examination. Later Mr. Carey made a motion to strike out all of the testimony given by Mrs. Richards, and also that the court admonish the jury to disregard entirely the testimony of Mrs. Richards. The court granted the motion and admonished the jury in language that was most emphatic, clear and complete. No objection was intimated at that time by either party. Later, after the arguments had been made and as a part of its charge, the trial court again instructed the jury "not to consider any testimony or evidence which has by order of the court been stricken out. Such testimony or evidence should be treated by you as though you had never heard or seen it." In his requested instruction numbered 22 the defendant treated the same subject-matter. The appellant makes the point that the trial court committed error because it refused to give that requested instruction. The point is based on the claim that the trial court's instructions had not met the dilemma confronting court and counsel. We find no error in the court's refusal to give the requested instruction.

[4-6] While the prosecutrix was being cross-examined she was asked if she had not made similar charges against other men and that she had been found guilty of immoral behavior. It is settled law that such evidence was not admissible as going to the credibility of the witness. People v. Murphy, 53 Cal. App. 474, 481, 200 P. 484. The issue of consent or nonconsent was not involved in the instant case and the facts sought to be proved were not admissible for that purpose. Appellant says the testimony sought was admissible as inconsistent statements. Code Civ. Proc. § 2049. But it was not claimed the witness ever asserted that the particular attack alleged in the information was committed by any man other than the defendant.

[7] Returning to the first point discussed, we do not understand the appellant to claim that in the sense in which the expression is ordinarily used that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. The respondent takes a different view of the appellant's contention. It is proper to state, therefore, that we have also considered the case from that angle. So viewed, the record discloses: That the information was filed March 25, 1926; a few weeks before that, the date not being exactly fixed, according to the testimony of Orpha Miller, Gustave Gorsky, and Laura Gorsky, the prosecutrix came out of the shack crying; according to the testimony of the prosecutrix and of her mother the child was then 12 years old; the shack was a one-room structure about 7 feet by 11 feet; according to the testimony of Orpha Miller, Gustave Gorsky, and Laura Gorsky, when the prosecutrix came out, she was followed almost immediately by the defendant, who came out, got in his car and attempted to drive off; that no one else was in the shack to come out or did come out; according to the testimony of the prosecutrix she screamed several times before coming out of the shack, and, according to Carrie J. Beal and Laura Gorsky, the screams of a child were heard coming from within the shack just before the prosecutrix came out, and, when the defendant came out he attempted to get in his car and drive off, but was stopped from driving off and held by Gorsky until the police came. It is therefore clear that no part of the case of the prosecution was left to be proved by the prosecutrix except the act, or acts, alleged to have been committed by the defendant inside of the shack. Those acts only rested for proof on the testimony of the prosecutrix and she testified fully as to those matters. We have held that we cannot say all of her testimony regarding those acts was inherently improbable, and we are constrained to hold that the appellant's claim that the evidence is insufficient may not be sustained.

We find no error in the record. The order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; NOURSE, J.

199 Cal. 759

In re SEXTON'S ESTATE.

SEXTON v. DALY et al.

(L. A. 9147.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑979(2)—New trial 🔑70—Granting new trial for insufficiency of evidence is discretionary and will not be disturbed in absence of abuse of discretion.

Motion for new trial for insufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict is addressed to sound legal discretion of trial court, and its action in granting motion will not be disturbed on appeal unless clear abuse of discretion is shown.

2. Wills 🔑337—If evidence of testamentary incapacity would not support verdict for contestant, granting new trial on contestant's motion is abuse of discretion.

If evidence on issue of testator's mental incompetency would not support verdict for contestant, granting new trial on contestant's motion, based on insufficiency of evidence to support verdict, is abuse of discretion.

3. Wills 🔑50—Testator, understanding and remembering nature and extent of his property and his relations to natural objects of his bounty, has testamentary capacity.

Testator has testamentary capacity if, at time of making will, he has sufficient mental capacity to remember and understand nature of act, locality, nature, and situation of his property, and his relations to persons having claims on his bounty.

4. Wills 🔑53(2)—Actual mental condition of testatrix at time of execution of will is condition to be determined, in will contest.

To contest will on ground that deceased was of unsound mind, actual mental condition of testatrix at execution thereof is question to be determined, and her mental condition before or after execution is important only as tending to show mental condition at time of execution.

5. Wills 🔑55(1)—Weight to be given evidence of mental capacity before or after execution of will is for jury.

Evidence of testatrix' mental condition before or after execution of will, if it has any evidentiary force on issue of mental capacity at time of execution of will, is to be given such weight as jury thinks it deserves.

6. Wills 🔑34—To invalidate will, testatrix must be generally incompetent or subject to delusions influencing testamentary act.

Mental derangement sufficient to invalidate will must be insanity of such broad character as to establish mental incompetency generally, or some specific and narrower form of insanity under which testatrix has hallucinations or delusions directly influencing testamentary act, and mere insanity, in medical sense of any mental unsoundness, is insufficient.

7. Wills 🔑52(1)—Testamentary capacity is presumed, and burden is on contestant to show testator was of unsound mind, when will was executed.

Testamentary capacity is presumed to exist until contrary is established, and burden is on contestant to show affirmatively and by preponderance of evidence that testator was of unsound mind when will was executed.

8. Wills 🔑55(1)—Testamentary incapacity held not shown.

Evidence held insufficient to show testamentary incapacity of testatrix when will was executed.

9. Wills 🔑50—Ability to transact important or ordinary business is not standard of testamentary capacity.

Ability to transact important, or even ordinary business, is not legal standard of testamentary capacity.

10. Evidence 🔑506—Physician's opinion as to testamentary capacity of testatrix held to invade province of jury.

In will contest on ground of lack of testamentary capacity, opinion of physician that testatrix was not capable of making will held of no probative value, but was mere opinion on question of mixed law and fact to be decided by jury.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Proceeding by Alva Daly and others for the probate of the will of Mary Sexton, deceased, opposed by Henry Sexton. From an order granting a new trial, after verdict upholding the will, proponents appeal. Reversed.

Joseph Scott and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Verge, Cooney, Davin & Kearney, Arthur C. Verge and A. H. De Tremaudan, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON J. This is an appeal from an order granting a new trial, in a will contest, after the jury had returned a verdict upholding the will.

The document offered for probate was executed by Mary Sexton at San Francisco, on July 12, 1921. She died about three years later. Alva Daly, a daughter of the decedent, named in the proffered will as executrix, offered the instrument for probate. In due time Henry Sexton, the surviving husband of the testatrix, appeared and filed a contest. An answer to the contest was filed by all but one of those who were named in the will as legatees and devisees. Those thus answering will hereafter be referred to as the "proponents." The husband contested the will upon the grounds of insufficiency of execution, undue influence, and mental incompetency. A nonsuit was granted as to the first two grounds. The issue as to mental competency was submitted to the jury, resulting in a verdict for the proponents. Thereupon the contestant moved for a new trial upon a number of statutory grounds, one of which was that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. The trial court granted the motion, and in so doing specifically stated in the order that the motion was granted solely upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. It is from that order that the proponents have appealed.

Though something is said in the briefs about the sufficiency of the evidence upon the issue as to undue influence, we do not understand counsel on either side seriously to contend for a review of the trial court's disposition of that issue. On the contrary, it seems to be assumed in the briefs on both sides that the sole question to be considered here is this: Was the trial court warranted in granting a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the jury's finding of mental competency? For the purpose of this decision, we shall adopt counsel's assumption and shall confine our attention to that one question.

[1, 2] A motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and its action in granting the motion will not be disturbed on appeal unless it appear that there was a clear abuse of such discretion. Warner v. Thomas, etc., Works, 105 Cal. 409, 38 P. 960; Estate of Motz, 136 Cal. 558, 69 P. 294; Estate of Everts, 163 Cal. 449, 125 P. 1058; Estate of Wall, 183 Cal. 431, 191 P. 687; De Vall v. Perrin, 34 Cal. App. 676, 168 P. 584. The precise test whereby to determine when a trial court abuses its discretion in granting a new trial after the verdict of a jury upholding a will appears not to have been determined by any previous decision of this court. This much, however, seems certain. If the entire evidence upon the issue of mental competency is of such a character that it would not have supported a verdict for the contestant had the jury brought in such a verdict, then it should be held that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the new trial. Indeed, this seems to be the view taken by counsel on both sides of this appeal. The question then is this: If the jury had found for contestant, would its verdict have totally lacked the support of substantial evidence? If it would, then the order granting the new trial must be reversed.

Mary Sexton died at Santa Monica Canyon, in Los Angeles county, on September 25, 1924, at the age of 64 years. She left surviving her the contestant, a second husband to whom she was married in 1899, one child by that husband, and five children by her first husband. The proponents of the will are the five children by the first husband. By the terms of the will she left all of her property to her six children, share and share alike. She suffered a slight stroke of apoplexy in 1913—11 years before her death. During the ensuing years of her life she suffered a few other slight strokes, and finally, a few days before her death, she was the victim of a very severe stroke, from the effects of which she died. The stroke which she suffered in 1913 left her face twisted and her right side paralyzed, so that she walked with a limp. For a long time prior to the execution of the will on July 12, 1921, her organs of speech were so affected by the preceding apoplectic stroke or strokes that her ability to speak was considerably affected. As some of the witnesses put it, she had "some throat affection" and "could not talk above a whisper." For many years prior to her death she and contestant resided together at Santa Monica Canyon. From the latter part of May to about the middle of July, in 1921, Mrs. Sexton was the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Daly, and of a son, both of whom lived in the central part of the state—the daughter in San Francisco and the son at Lodi. The first two weeks of the visit were spent by Mrs. Sexton with her daughter, at the latter's apartment in San Francisco. Then she visited her son and his family at Lodi, remaining with them until the early part of July, when she returned to Mrs. Daly's home in San Francisco where she remained until she returned to her own home in Santa Monica Canyon about the middle of July. On her trip from Santa Monica Canyon to San Francisco, as well as on her trip from the latter city to Lodi, Mrs. Sexton was accompanied by Mrs. Daly. But it seems that on the return trip from her son's home at Lodi to her daughter's apartment in San Francisco, she traveled alone and unassisted.

According to the testimony of Mrs. Daly, her mother, almost from the time of her arrival in San Francisco in the latter part of May, repeatedly said that she wanted to make her will. Accordingly, Mrs. Daly, shortly after her mother's return from Lodi, requested Mr. Daly, her husband, to ask some lawyer to come to their apartment for the purpose of drafting a will in accordance with her mother's wishes. On the evening of July 11th there arrived at the apartment an attorney, who practiced his profession in San Francisco and who had been requested by Mr. Daly to call. Present upon that occasion were the lawyer, the testatrix, a son by the first husband, the daughter, Mrs. Daly, and the latter's husband. The lawyer talked with Mrs. Sexton about the nature of the will which she wished to make, received instructions from her, and made such notes as were necessary to enable him to prepare the document. After about an hour's stay he took his departure. The next day Mrs. Sexton, her son, and Mrs. Daly went to the lawyer's office. Meanwhile the lawyer had drafted the document in accordance with the instructions given him by Mrs. Sexton, and it was ready for execution by her when she called at his office. The lawyer, accompanied only by Mrs. Sexton, stepped across a hall from his office into an office occupied by two other lawyers, both of whom witnessed the execution of the will. The lawyer by whom the document was drawn read it to Mrs. Sexton before she signed it. After it was duly subscribed and properly witnessed, it was delivered by the attorney to Mrs. Sexton, who thereafter handed it to her daughter, presumably for safe-keeping.

It is apparent from what has been said that this is not a case of delusion taking hold of a vigorous mind, but of a loss of mental power; that it is not the case of an irregular working of the mental faculties, but of a ceasing to work with normal strength. It was contestant's theory at the trial, not that Mrs. Sexton was an irrational lunatic, an idiot or a congenital imbecile, or that she was the victim of insane delusions, but that her mental processes were so benumbed by the paralytic strokes that her mind was not strong and clear enough to be able to make a valid disposition of her property by will. Without doubt she was a woman of weakened mentality at the time when she executed her will. Her intellectual faculties were considerably enfeebled. But the question is, Was there any substantial evidence to show that her mental weakness was of such a degree that it incapacitated her from making a valid will? Was she, in short, a woman of sound and disposing mind and memory? Before proceeding to a more detailed consideration of the evidence, it may aid us to a correct solution of this question if we briefly advert to a few rules of law applicable to cases of this character.

[3-5] A testator is of sound and disposing mind and memory if, at the time of making his will, he has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the act he is doing, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property, and to remember and understand his relations to the persons who have claims upon his bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument. Estate of Motz, supra; Estate of Dole, 147 Cal. 188, 81 P. 534; Estate of Huston, 163 Cal. 166, 124 P. 852; Estate of De Laveaga, 165 Cal. 607, 133 P. 307; Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 192 P. 1085. The actual mental condition of the testator at the time of the execution of the will is the question to be determined. Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; 26 Cal. Jur. 635. Evidence as to mental condition before and after the execution of the will may be relevant and admissible, but it is important only in so far as it tends to show mental condition at the time of executing the testamentary document. That is to say, facts as to mental condition, whether anterior or subsequent to the date of the execution, depend for their probative force upon the clearness and certainty with which they tend to demonstrate the condition of mind and memory at the moment the will is executed. Estate of Perkins, supra. Evidence of mental condition before or after the execution of the will, if it have evidentiary force; i. e., if there exist a reasonable and logical relation between it and the issue as to mental competency at the moment of execution, is to be given such weight as the jury thinks it deserves. Estate of O'Connor, 51 Cal. App. 339, 196 P. 792; Estate of Barr, 69 Cal. App. 16, 34, 230 P. 181.

[6] "Insanity" is a broad, comprehensive, and generic term of ambiguous import. In a medical sense, it is used to denote any unsound and deranged conditions of the mind, and every degree of mental unsoundness, whatever may be its source or cause. 32 C. J. 594. But mere proof of mental derangement, or of insanity in a medical sense, is not sufficient to invalidate a will. Not every degree of mental unsoundness or mental weakness will suffice to destroy testamentary capacity. The contestant is required to go further than that. He must either show such a complete mental derangement as denotes utter incapacity to know and to understand those things which a testator must be able to know and to understand in order to possess testamentary capacity, or he must show the existence of a specific insane delusion which affected the making of the will in question. Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 237 P. 1079. In other words, mental derangement sufficient to invalidate a will must be an unsoundness of mind in one of two forms: (1) Mental unsoundness of such broad character as to establish incompetency generally; or (2) some specific and narrower form of insanity under which the testator is the victim of some hallucination or delusion. And, even in the latter class of cases, it is not sufficient merely to establish that the testator was the victim of some hallucination or delusion; it must be shown that the will was the offspring of the hallucination or delusion. Estate of Perkins, supra.

[7] Testamentary capacity is always presumed to exist until the contrary is established. That is to say, the presumption is always that a person is sane, and the burden is always upon the contestant to show affirmatively and by a preponderance of evidence that the testator, at the time of executing the will, was of unsound mind. In re Wilson, 117 Cal. 262, 49 P. 172, 711; Estate of Perkins, supra; 26 Cal. Jur. 756.

[8] If these principles of law be applied to the facts of this case, the conclusion is irresistible that the evidence, considered in its entirety, falls short of establishing lack of testamentary capacity at the time of executing the will. The only direct evidence of facts existing when the instrument was executed is that which was given by witnesses for the proponents, who testified substantially as follows: Mr. Morris, the attorney who drew the will, testified that in the course of his conversation with the testatrix on the evening preceding the execution of the document she gave him a list of the persons to whom she wished to leave her property; that she expressed concern about the welfare of her children; that she answered all questions asked her; that she appeared to understand the questions; that, in his opinion, she acted rationally; that she was a sweet, elderly lady; that he gained the impression that her mind was perhaps not as brilliant as it had been in bygone years, but that he attributed that condition more to advancing years than to anything else; that, on the day the will was executed, he read it to her before she signed it, and that she then said, "That is just the way I want it"; that there was nothing in her conversation or actions which appeared to him to be peculiar or out of the ordinary.

Mr. Duane, one of the witnesses to the will, testified that he did not observe anything unusual or out of the ordinary in the appearance or actions of the testatrix during the ten minutes or so that the parties were occupied with the formalities of the execution—that she did not make any more impression upon him than any other individual would. Judge Jacks, the other attesting witness, gave testimony of like import.

The testimony of these three gentlemen—lawyers trained in their profession and who had an abundance of opportunity to observe the testatrix at the very moment of the execution of the will—discloses to us an elderly woman, spent with years, whose mental faculties were somewhat dimmed, but who, nevertheless, was clearly able to comprehend the business in which she was engaged and to know and to understand those other things which the law requires a testatrix to be able to know and to understand in order to have capacity to make a valid testamentary disposition of her property.

Proponents produced a number of other witnesses, relatives and intimate acquaintances of the deceased, who testified to the mental soundness of the testatrix at about the time of, as well as before and after, the date of the execution of the will. Each of these witnesses, besides stating that in his or her opinion testatrix was mentally sound, related conversations and described acts of the decedent at about the time of, or shortly before or after, the execution of the testamentary document. These conversations and acts picture to us a woman possessed of a mind sufficiently clear and strong to make a valid will, albeit she was worn with age and her intellectual faculties were somewhat enfeebled by the paralytic strokes from which she had suffered.

A clear case of testamentary capacity of the decedent, at the very time of the execution of the will, having been made by the evidence of the proponents, the question is, Did the contestant introduce evidence so inconsistent with and contradictory of that adduced by the proponents that it would have been sufficient to support a verdict for contestant under the "conflicting evidence" doctrine, if the jury had seen fit to bring in such a verdict? We think not.

The evidence is so voluminous that it would be impracticable to give even a synopsis of the testimony of every one of contestant's many witnesses. It will suffice, however, if we give a brief statement of the testimony of one or two of his principal witnesses, setting forth those parts of their testimony upon which he especially relies, with comments thereon as we proceed, and point out the reasons why we think such selected portions insufficient to support any other verdict than the one which was actually returned by the jury.

Dr. Mortensen, a physician who became acquainted with Mrs. Sexton in 1906, and who at times attended her professionally, testified that she suffered from the effects of chronic high blood pressure or arterial sclerosis; that prior to the execution of the will she had suffered from several slight paralytic strokes from which she only partially recovered; that from 1917 she gradually grew worse; that in 1921 her appearance was that of an old lady, one whose life had been partly spent and whose mental activities were extremely weak; that he would not say she was irrational, but that he would say she was feeble-minded from 1917; that she would not frequently initiate conversations; that he believed she understood, at all times in 1921, her relationship to contestant, and that she was able to and did recognize her relatives; that, in his opinion, she would not, in the month of July, 1921, "be able to transact any important business such as the making of a last will and testament."

Counsel for contestant lay much stress upon Dr. Mortensen's opinion that the testatrix, in July, 1921, would not be able to transact any important business, such as the making of a last will. In stressing this testimony, counsel have adopted a false standard of testamentary capacity and have overlooked the fact that no witness, lay or expert, may usurp the province of the jury to determine the ultimate question of decedent's capacity to make a will. The first part of the doctor's opinion, that wherein he assumes to say that the testatrix was not able to transact any important business, is entirely consistent with ability to make a valid will.

[9] Ability to transact important business, or even ordinary business, is not the legal standard of testamentary capacity, though it seems to be quite generally but mistakenly supposed, outside the ranks of the legal profession, that a capacity to transact important business is the criterion of fitness to make a valid will. Says the Iowa Supreme Court:

> "While, as every lawyer knows, a man may be capable of making a good will after he is so far gone into imbecility and mental darkness as to be no longer capable of making a valid deed or of transacting business generally, the very opposite conclusion seems to pervade the lay mind, and the making of a will is, to its apprehension, the one item of business which requires the presence of all one's faculties in their normal strength." Perkins v. Perkins, 116 Iowa, 253, 90 N. W. 55.

A person who has mental power to understand and to transact the ordinary business affairs of life, doubtless, has capacity to make a valid will. But the converse is not necessarily true. Mental perception and power to think and reason of a lesser degree than that which is required in the understanding and transaction of ordinary business may be all that is requisite to the full understanding of everything involved in the execution of a will. Rowcliffe v. Belson, 261 Ill. 566, 104 N. E. 268, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 359; Ravenscroft v. Stull, 280 Ill. 406, 117 N. E. 602, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1130; Ring v. Lawless, 190 Ill. 520, 60 N. E. 881; Craig v. Southard, 148 Ill. 37, 35 N. E. 361; Stubbs v. Houston, 33 Ala. 555; Whitney v. Twombly, 136 Mass. 145; Thompson v. Kyner, 65 Pa. 369; McDonald's Estate v. McDonald (Tex. Civ. App.) 150 S. W. 593; Estate of Halloway, 195 Cal. 711, 733, 235 P. 1012. It was said in Guarantee Trust & S. D. Co. v. Waller, 240 Pa. 575, 88 A. 13, that an instruction that "less capacity is needed to make a valid will than is sufficient in most cases to transact ordinary business" is a correct statement of the law.

[10] The second part of Dr. Mortensen's opinion, that wherein he says that he does not believe testatrix was capable of making a will, has no probative value whatever, in the absence of a showing that this learned disciple of Æsculapius was acquainted with the law's criteria of testamentary capacity. Indeed, when he says that, in his opinion, the testatrix was not able to transact any important business, such as the making of a will, he unmistakably betrays the erroneous notion that the ability to transact important business is an essential prerequisite to the possession of testamentary capacity. If, as in the Estate of Russell, 189 Cal. 759, 210 P. 249, the doctor had given an opinion respecting the testatrix's ability to understand those concrete facts, the understanding of which the law makes requisite to a capacity to make a valid will, the situation then would have been altogether different. But here the doctor, in undertaking to say that the testatrix lacked the capacity to make a will, presumes to give an opinion upon a question which is one of mixed law and fact, to be decided by the jury under proper instructions from the court as to what is the legal test of testamentary capacity. Estate of Perkins, supra, page 710, 235 P. 45. See, also, Estate of Taylor, 92 Cal. 564, 28 P. 603; Conner v. Stanley, 67 Cal. 315, 7 P. 723; and McCracken v. McCracken, 109 Or. 83, 219 P. 196. It is a question, the correct determination of which presupposes a knowledge of the law as to the requisites of testamentary capacity. There is not a scintilla of evidence to indicate that Dr. Mortensen had the faintest idea of what is the standard prescribed by law for the determination of that question. It is not at all improbable that, as a physician, he erroneously measured testamentary capacity by a more exacting standard of mental soundness than is required by the law. As has already been stated, in a medical sense, insanity or unsoundness of mind is anything short of a mind wholly normal and free from a defective power of co-ordination, whereas, the law does not demand such perfection to render one competent to manage his own affairs and to make a valid disposition of his property. Estate of Collins, 174 Cal. 663, 670, 164 P. 1110.

Another witness upon whose testimony contestant places much reliance is Philip Hooper, a nurse. While this witness was engaged in caring for patients whom he accompanied on their walks into the Santa Monica Canyon, he frequently saw and talked to Mrs. Sexton. He testified that he saw the testatrix about once every two weeks over a period of four months in 1914; that he saw her again at least twice a week from June to November in 1920; that when he saw her in 1920 he observed a decided change in her physical and mental condition; that at that time her mind appeared to be blank; that what he means by saying that her mind appeared to be blank is that, when he would talk to her, she apparently would not understand what he was saying or could not converse with him; that she would talk very little; that she was very reticent about answering questions and would shake her head and smile when questioned; that her physical condition was feeble; that he saw her in September of 1921; that at that time her condition seemed to be much worse, in that she made no response at all when questioned; that it was very difficult to converse with her; that she was easily influenced to answer a question "Yes" or "No," as the questioner wished, depending upon how the question was put. The witness also stated that, in his opinion, the testatrix was irrational in 1921.

Hooper's testimony is not necessarily irreconcilable with that testamentary capacity which the law presumes to exist until the contrary is established. The opinions of lay witnesses have no greater probative force than the facts given by them as the bases for their conclusions. The facts from which the opinions are deduced are more decisive than the opinions. Now it seems that the decedent's vocal organs were so affected by the paralytic strokes that she could speak only with difficulty, and then not above a whisper. Who can say, then, that her reticence was not due to this physical condition, rather than to any serious mental malady? By reason of the condition of her organs of speech and the physical difficulty which she experienced when she tried to talk, it was but natural that she should simply shake her head and smile when spoken to and be more than sparing of her words. And yet it was this very reticence, quite natural under the circumstances, which seems to have led this witness to the conclusion that her mind appeared to be a blank and that she was irrational. Without doubt, Mrs. Sexton's mind was weakened by the strokes, and she doubtless was easily influenced to give to a question the answer desired by the interrogator. But this, while betokening an easy susceptibility to undue influence on the part of others, does not necessarily indicate that complete mental derangement which involves an utter incompetency to know and to understand those things which a testator must be able to know and to understand in order to possess testamentary capacity.

Contestant, surely, could not have believed that his wife's mind was so utterly feeble and unsound that she was incapable of understanding the nature of her testamentary act and appreciating its consequences; for, upon a number of occasions intermediate the execution of the will and his wife's demise, he procured her to join with him in the execution of deeds which conveyed valuable parcels of community real property to third parties.

A further review of the testimony would only unduly prolong this opinion. Let it suffice to say that a careful consideration of the testimony of contestant's witnesses leaves in the mind the composite mental picture of a woman 61 years of age at the date of the execution of the will, grown old before her time, feeble in body, mentally weak, and given to an habitual quiescence and a torpor peculiar to those who have suffered from cerebral hemorrhage. While a survey of all the facts may warrant a diversity of opinion as to the exact state of her mind and the precise degree of mental capacity retained by her, it is evident that there was not such a complete prostration or alienation of intellect as to incapacitate her from making a testamentary disposition of her property. The Kentucky Court of Appeals, speaking of a paralytic's will and addressing itself to a case similar to this in its main aspects, says:

> "It may be true that some of those who saw him [the testator] could not understand what he attempted to utter; and, nevertheless, he may not have been insane, unless the mind can never conceive what the tongue will not utter; and so every other fact stated for the defendants [contestants] may be reconciled with a disposing mind. * * * How much soever, the muscular and nervous system may have been affected, it is hardly possible that the mind could have been paralyzed in an equal degree; for if it had been, it was scarcely possible, as it seems to us, that he could have lived four years. * * * We cannot admit that a paralysis, however universally it may pervade the system, affects the mind equally with the body. It could not do so unless the mind were material. The mind derives its ailment from the body, through the senses; whilst any one sense remains, the mind can act rationally. * * * The nature of mind, and its mysterious connection with matter, are equally incomprehensible. * * * The soundness and energy of the body are not always sure criteria of the sanity and force of the mind; and * * * many whose bodies have been prostrated by the most invincible lingering paralysis, have still, in their physical desolation, enjoyed the light of reason. * * * As long as the body retains sensibility, the mind which animates it may remain sound. A paralysis does not destroy sensation. It impairs muscular power, and prevents the organs of the body from obeying, implicitly, the will of the mind. It affects the mind in some degree, of course; but its ravages do not prostrate the action of mind and body in the same degree. The faculties of each do not sink 'in pari passu.' That which is immaterial and self-evident, and which reasons, and thinks, and lives forever, does not always slumber, when the body is powerless. It may be sane, though occasionally lethargic. It may be sound and active, when the tongue, and the hand, and the eye are incapable of motion, and may conceive and will, what they refuse to execute." McDaniel's Will, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 331.

See, also, Rollins v. Smith, 72 Cal. App. 773, 238 P. 171.

If Mrs. Sexton's last will and testament be considered in the light of the fact that contestant is a man of affluence, it will be found to be just and equitable in all its provisions. According to the testimony of the proponents' witnesses, uncontradicted by any direct evidence to the contrary, the plan of the will was the product of decedent's own mind, uninfluenced by the advice or dictation of any other. The mind that so planned must have had testamentary capacity.

The order is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; CURTIS, J.

200 Cal. 1

BANK OF ITALY v. JOHNSON, Superintendent State Banking Department.

(S. F. 11654.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1926, as Modified Jan. 13, 1927.)

1. Banks and banking 🔑3—Constitutional law 🔑296(1)—Banking is subject to regulation under state's police power without limitation, except that of reasonableness (Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Banking business affects so intimately commercial welfare of people as to be proper subject of regulation by state under police power without limitation, under Const. U. S. Amend. 14, except that regulation must be reasonable.

2. Banks and banking 🔑33—State may make any regulations respecting branch banks which are reasonable and uniform.

Since state may prohibit branch banks entirely, it may make and enforce any regulations short of prohibition which are reasonable and uniform.

3. Banks and banking 🔑33—Branch banking is prohibited without written approval of superintendent of banks (Bank Act, § 9).

Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), prohibits all branch banking except on written approval of superintendent of banks, which he may grant or deny in his discretion, and he is enjoined from granting permission until he has ascertained that public convenience and advantage will be promoted thereby.

4. Banks and banking 🔑4—Constitutional law 🔑62—Discretion granted superintendent of banks to grant or deny permission to operate branch banks held lawful delegation of authority (Bank Act, § 9).

Discretion granted superintendent of banks, under Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), to grant or deny permission to open branch banks is lawful delegation of authority, such discretion being limited by requirement that it be exercised impartially and without infringement on applicant's constitutional rights.

5. Banks and banking 🔑33—Superintendent of banks may not by rule curtail exercise of his discretion to approve opening of branch banks (Bank Act, § 9).

Superintendent of banks may not by adoption of rule, policy, or procedure so curtail exercise of his discretion to grant or deny approval to operate branch banks, under Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), as to prevent free exercise thereof in every case.

6. Banks and banking 🔑33—Superintendent of banks may not refuse to exercise discretion to approve or deny opening of branch banks (Bank Act, § 9).

Superintendent of banks may not refuse to exercise discretion to approve or deny opening of branch banks, under Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), when called on to do so by application duly presented to him, but must act on application within reasonable time.

7. Constitutional law 🔑80(1)—Superintendent of banks, in determining whether to approve branch bank, performs administrative and not judicial function (Bank Act, § 9).

Under Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), it is duty of superintendent of banks, in passing on application for permission to open branch bank, to determine whether such bank will promote "public convenience and advantage," and in doing so, he performs administrative and not judicial function.

8. Banks and banking 🔑33—Superintendent of banks, in passing on application to open branch bank, is not limited by purely local considerations (Bank Act, § 9).

Under Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), superintendent of banks, in granting or denying application to open branch bank, is not limited to purely local considerations, but may consider questions of state-wide policy.

9. Banks and banking 🔑17—Administrative board or officer, such as banking superintendent, has implied authority to adopt reasonable rules to carry out express powers.

Administrative board or officer, such as superintendent of banks, has implied authority to adopt reasonable rules and regulations necessary to exercise powers expressly granted.

10. Constitutional law 🔑77—Administrative officer may not, by rule, change or extend his statutory powers.

Administrative officer or board may not, in promulgation of rules, change, alter, amend, or extend his or its statutory powers.

11. Banks and banking 🔑33—Rule promulgated by bank superintendent restricting opening of branch banks beyond locality of parent bank held valid (Bank Act, § 9).

Rule promulgated by superintendent of banks that no branch bank shall be created in any locality other than that of parent bank, except by purchase or consolidation, unless public convenience and advantage requires, construed as merely casting on applicant burden of proving that opening of branch bank would promote public convenience, within Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), held valid.

12. Mandamus 🔑154(2)—Petition for mandamus to compel bank superintendent to permit branch banks, held insufficient on general demurrer (Bank Act [St. 1909, p. 88] § 9; St. 1917, p. 601, § 3).

Petition for mandamus to compel superintendent of banks to issue permits for establishment of branch banks, which fails to allege that petitioner's capital and surplus complies with Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), or that superintendent knew such facts, that petitioner paid or tendered fees, as required by the 1917 amendment (St. 1917, p. 601, § 3), or presented all essential facts to superintendent, or that superintendent knew such facts, is insufficient as against general demurrer, but omissions may be supplied by amendment.

13. Pleading 🔑253—Allegations of amendments to mandamus petition are deemed denied, where respondent denies allegations of original petition.

Where respondent denies material allegations of petition for mandamus, allegations of amendments to petition to conform to proof are deemed denied.

14. Mandamus 🔑87—Bank superintendent's refusal to exercise discretion to grant or deny permit to open branch bank warrants issuance of peremptory writ (Bank Act, § 9).

Superintendent of banks' refusal to exercise his discretion to grant or deny permit to open branch bank in another city, as required by Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), because of rule promulgated by him, warrants issuance of peremptory writ of mandamus to compel him to exercise his discretion.

15. Mandamus 🔑87—Bank superintendent's refusal of permit to open branch bank on untenable ground held not to preclude setting up legal grounds (Bank Act, § 9).

Superintendent of banks' refusal to grant permit to open branch bank on untenable ground, under Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), held not to preclude him setting up legal grounds for refusal on petition for mandamus to compel approval.

16. Mandamus 🔑72—Mandamus may not issue to compel officer having discretionary power to act in particular way.

Writ of mandamus may not be employed to compel public officer having discretionary power to act in particular way, but court in such proceeding may only compel him to act.

17. Mandamus 🔑168(4)—Mandamus will be denied, if there is any substantial evidence supporting administrative officer's refusal to act.

If there is any substantial evidence supporting administrative officer's refusal to act, mandamus will be denied, preponderance of evidence rule governing jury trials in civil cases not being applicable.

18. Mandamus 🔑168(4)—Bank superintendent's denial of permit to open branch banks held justified by evidence (Bank Act, § 9).

Superintendent of banks' refusal of permit to open branch banks in city other than that of parent bank's location, under Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), held authorized by evidence, and mandamus to compel issuance of permit denied.

19. Banks and banking 🔑33—Validity of rule promulgated by bank superintendent respecting branch banks held not affected by his reasons for rule (Bank Act, § 9).

Validity of rule respecting opening of branch banks, under Bank Act, § 9 (St. 1909, p. 88), promulgated by superintendent of banks, held not affected by questions of legislative or administrative policy contributing to superintendent's decision to adhere to rule.

20. Banks and banking 🔑33—Superintendent of banks, in determining whether to grant permit for branch bank, should act independently of Federal Reserve Board.

Statutory powers and duties of superintendent of banks, in determining whether to approve or deny permits for branch banks, should be exercised independently of any action taken by Federal Reserve Board in denying petition to open such banks.

Original proceeding in mandamus by the Bank of Italy against John Franklin Johnson, as Superintendent of State Banking Department, to compel the Superintendent to issue permits for the establishment of two branch banks in the city of Los Angeles. Writ denied, and proceeding dismissed.

Cullinan & Hickey and Garret W. McEnerney, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

James M. Oliver and Elbert W. Davis, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

Thelen & Marrin, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

SHENK, J. This is an original proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondent superintendent of banks to issue to the petitioner two permits for the establishment and maintenance of branch banks in the city of Los Angeles, one for a branch at North Spring street and Sunset boulevard, and the other for a branch in the building of the Women's Athletic Club at No. 833 South Flower street.

The petition was filed on June 18, 1925, and an alternative writ was issued, returnable on September 15th. On the return day the respondent filed a demurrer on the ground that the petition did not state sufficient facts to entitle the petitioner to the relief sought and at the same time filed an answer which, in the opinion of counsel for petitioner, presented issues of fact requiring the taking of testimony. By stipulation, concurred in by the court, Mr. B. Grant Taylor, clerk of this court, was appointed commissioner with the understanding that he should not submit findings on the evidence taken before him, but that the court should make its own findings and draw its own conclusions from the record. It was also agreed that, after the evidence was taken and filed, the matter should be set down for oral argument. The evidence was taken from time to time before the commissioner, both in San Francisco and in Los Angeles. The hearings were protracted, the last occurring in San Francisco on March 22, 1926. The commissioner thereupon filed a transcript of the evidence which comprises 1,925 pages of oral testimony and 227 exhibits. The matter was set down for oral argument and was argued on April 9 and 10, 1926. On the request of counsel for both sides, permission was granted to file briefs, the last one being filed by the petitioner on September 1, 1926. Thereafter, on application of petitioner, but over the objection of respondent, the court, on October 4th, granted leave to file amendments to its petition, which were intended in the main to conform to the proof as counsel for petitioner construed the proof to be, but such leave was granted of course without prejudice to the rights of the respondent in the premises. The matter was thereupon ordered submitted for decision.

The insistence of counsel for respondent that his general demurrer is well taken renders it necessary to determine, first, the sufficiency of the facts as alleged by the petitioner. In the first cause of action in its original petition, it was alleged, among other things, that the petitioner is a banking corporation incorporated in August, 1904, under the laws of this state, with its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco; that it is authorized by its articles of incorporation to establish and maintain branch offices in the city and county of San Francisco and elsewhere throughout the state; that on February 1, 1923, the respondent was appointed, and became, and ever since has been the duly qualified and acting superintendent of banks of the state banking department of the state of California, as provided for in an act entitled "An act to define and regulate the business of banking," and known as the Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 87), and amendments thereto; that there are and for some years last past have been two general systems or methods of branch banking sanctioned by law in California, one known as state-wide branch banking, by which a bank maintains its principal office in one city and branches in other cities or towns within the state, and the other known as city-wide branch banking, by which a bank maintains branches in the city in which its principal place of business is located; that banks which do not maintain branches are known as unit banks; that certain banks in San Francisco and Los Angeles, including the petitioner, have adopted a branch banking system for areas beyond the territorial limits of the city in which the principal place of business is located, and that the petitioner first entered upon that field and thus far has embarked upon a more extensive area than any other of such banks doing the same branch banking business; that, with the exception of petitioner, no bank with branches, the principal place of business whereof is north of 37 degrees north latitude (which runs through the extreme southern portion of Gilroy) has established or applied for permission to establish any branch south of said line of latitude, and no bank with branches, the principal place of business whereof is south of said line of latitude, has established or applied for permission to establish a branch north of said line of latitude; that both state-wide and city-wide branch banking are authorized by said bank act and have received the approval of the superintendent of banks.

The petition then set forth generally the reasons, from the viewpoint of petitioner, why, as a matter of economic policy, state-wide branch banking should be favored and the status of petitioner as a sound financial institution which conducts a well managed and highly profitable banking business; that with the written approval of respondent or his predecessors in office the petitioner has heretofore opened 78 branch banks in 62 cities and towns in the state other than the city and county of San Francisco, many of which are north and many south of the latitude aforesaid; that it maintains 6 branches in various parts of the city of Los Angeles; that 5 of said branches were authorized by the respondent's predecessor in office, and the sixth required the written approval of the respondent; that of the branch banks opened and maintained by petitioner all were acquired by the purchase of existing banks with the exception of 20, which were newly established; that is to say, were established where no bank had theretofore been conducted, and were and are banking offices commonly known as de novo branches. The petitioner then set forth tabulations showing the names of eight of the leading metropolitan banks in San Francisco, Oakland, and Los Angeles, and the number of branches maintained by them by purchase and de novo. By comparison, it is seen that the petitioner maintains 10 more branches than the highest in that group of 8 and has established a greater proportion of branches by purchase or merger than any bank in the group.

It was next alleged that the petitioner now maintains a branch office on the southwest corner of Temple and Spring streets, in the city of Los Angeles, known as its international branch. This bank was acquired in September, 1917, and before that time was an established and widely patronized independent bank at the same location; that the city of Los Angeles has instituted proceedings to condemn the property on which that branch bank is located, and that by reason thereof said branch must be moved to another location; that with said necessity in view the petitioner applied for and was, by respondent, granted permission to remove said branch bank from its present location to No. 214 North Main street, which is across the street on Main street from the present location. In its application for said removal, the petitioner also applied for an additional branch at North Spring street and Sunset boulevard, a distance of about four blocks northerly from the location of the present international branch office. This application was denied by the respondent, and the petitioner now seeks by this proceeding to compel the respondent to grant said application and in that behalf alleges that public convenience and advantage require and would be promoted by the opening of a branch bank at the corner of North Spring street and Sunset boulevard, and that, unless said permission be granted, much business conducted at its present location will be diverted to other banks, and public convenience and advantage will be retarded and averted: that there is and has been no evidence of any substantial character justifying the conclusion that the public convenience and advantage would not require or be promoted by the opening of said branch bank, and that the action of the respondent in denying permission to open a branch bank at said new location "was arbitrary and capricious and without support whatever in reason"; that the respondent, "ever since his incumbency began on February 1, 1923, has administered his office upon the theory that his decisions were and are to be controlled, and the exercise of his discretion confided to him by section 9 of the Bank Act is limited by and subordinate to and controlled by a rule of his office commonly called and sometimes herein spoken of as the de novo rule": that Mr. Jonathan S. Dodge, the respondent's immediate predecessor in office, promulgated said rule and throughout his term declared the same to be a valid rule of and within the state banking department; that continuously and ever since the respondent's induction into office he has announced his adherence to said rule, and he has promulgated and maintains the same as a valid rule of the state banking department; that in denying the application for said branch the respondent was controlled wholly and solely by said self-imposed de novo rule; that it is the claim of the petitioner that there is no statute which gives authority for the promulgation of said rule, and that, if authority to make and enforce a rule of that character has been given by the Legislature, such legislation would have been unconstitutional as involving unlawful delegation of legislative power; that in denying said application the respondent did not question the fact that public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the granting thereof and did not find that the public convenience or advantage would not be promoted thereby; that the respondent interprets the said de novo rule to mean that occasions might and could arise wherein the public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the granting of a permit, but that under the rule the public convenience and advantage must require the granting of such permit; that if the word "require" be interpreted to mean anything essentially different from the words "will be promoted" in section 9 of the Bank Act, the said rule would be invalid for this additional reason: that, at the time of the making of said application and ever since, the public convenience and advantage did require and they do now require the granting thereof; that since November 1, 1921, 103 permits for the establishment of branches de novo within the city of Los Angeles to 5 of the principal banks of said city have been granted; that during that period no permit for the establishment of a branch de novo has been granted to the petitioner within that city except the San Pedro branch, and during said period the petitioner made no other applications to the respondent for permission to establish de novo branches within the city of Los Angeles except the application for the branches involved in this proceeding; that the granting of said 103 permits to the said 5 banks, which are all competitors of petitioner in the city of Los Angeles, has enabled said competitors to secure great advantages over the petitioner in obtaining new business and in the accommodation to customers of the banks of the city of Los Angeles; that public convenience and advantage would have been promoted and the business of petitioner would have been benefited by the establishment of de novo branches in the city of Los Angeles since November 1, 1921, but the petitioner refrained from making application for permits with the exception of the application for the branch at San Pedro and the branches involved in this proceeding, because the petitioner believed that such applications would be denied by the incumbent superintendent of banks for the reasons involved in the de novo rule, for he, in terms, has held that the public convenience and advantage would not be promoted by the establishment of such branches, thereby putting upon the petitioner the burden of attacking the determination of the incumbent superintendent of banks as involving abuse of discretion and arbitrary exercise of power, an issue in which the petitioner was disinclined to become embroiled, but that longer forbearance has become intolerable.

As and for a second cause of action the petitioner alleged that on February 28, 1925, it made application, in writing, to respondent for his written approval to establish a de novo branch in the building occupied by the Women's Athletic Club, situated at No. 833 South Flower street; that on March 17, 1925, the respondent, in writing, denied said application; that the same was denied "solely upon the ground that the location of the proposed branch office is outside the limits of the city in which is located the principal place of business of the applying bank," meaning thereby that under the de novo rule the petitioner could not obtain permission to establish branch offices in the city of Los Angeles. The allegations in the first cause of action with reference to public convenience and advantage, evidence concerning the same, the action of respondent, and the de novo rule were incorporated in the second cause of action by reference.

[1, 2] In order to determine the sufficiency of the facts so stated by the petitioner, it is necessary to examine the law applicable to the establishment and regulation of branch banks in the state of California and to the powers and duties of the superintendent of banks in the premises. In the progress made in the industrial and economic world within comparatively recent years, the business of banking has ceased to be, if indeed it ever was, a purely private enterprise. Such business affects so intimately the commercial welfare and business interests of the people as to render it a proper subject of regulation by the state in the exercise of the police power. People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 154 Cal. 194, 97 P. 306. The public patronage which the banker invites and receives is of such a character that he becomes, in a just sense, the trustee of the fiscal affairs of the people of the state. State Savings & Commercial Bank v. Anderson, 165 Cal. 437, 132 P. 755, L. R. A. 1915E, 675. The power of the state to regulate banking business is supreme, subject to no limitation so far as the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is concerned, except that such regulation must be reasonable. State Savings & Commercial Bank v. Anderson, supra, affirmed in 238 U. S. 611, 35 S. Ct. 792, 59 L. Ed. 1488. See 4 Cal. Jur. p. 106 et seq. Since the state may prohibit branch banks entirely, it may make and enforce any regulations short of prohibition, provided the same be reasonable and uniform. It is appropriate to note that, under sections 7 and 90 of the Bank Act, foreign corporations entitled by law to act as trustees in this state are absolutely prohibited from establishing or maintaining, "directly or indirectly, any branch office or agency in this state." Stats. 1917, p. 601, 615.

Prior to 1909, the state of California had no thoroughgoing law regulating state banking business. Following the general financial depression of 1907, the preparation and adoption of a comprehensive banking law seemed imperative. With the co-operation of the legislative committee of the California Bankers' Association a bill was drafted and passed by the Legislature (Stats. 1909, p. 87). That act has been amended at numerous sessions of the Legislature since its original adoption, but without any fundamental change in its purport. The act embraces within its regulatory provisions two main subjects of the banking business, departmental banking and branch banking. Within the former field of activity is included the savings, commercial, and trust departments of state banks, but with regulations in that field we are not here concerned. The issues involved in this proceeding directly concern the regulatory provisions of the act relating to branch banking, and particularly the following portion of section 9 thereof:

> "No bank in this state, or any officer or director thereof, shall hereafter open or keep an office other than its principal place of business, without first having obtained the written approval of the superintendent of banks to the opening of such branch office, which written approval may be given or withheld in his discretion, and shall not be given by him unless he has ascertained to his satisfaction that the public convenience and advantage will be promoted by the opening of such branch office." Stats. 1909, p. 88.

The foregoing provision was incorporated in the original act and has remained unchanged. It is at once observed that there is no uncertainty or ambiguity in the language of the portion of section 9 above quoted. It contains a prohibition of the establishment or maintenance of a branch office, either in the city of the head office or elsewhere in the state, except upon the written approval of the superintendent of banks which (a) may be given or withheld in his discretion, and (b) shall not be given by him until he has ascertained to his satisfaction that the public convenience and advantage will be promoted by the opening of the branch office. It is undeniable that the question of permitting branch banks at all is one of legislative policy on the part of the state. In 17 states all branch banking is prohibited by law, although in some of said 17 states the prohibition does not apply to branches established prior to the passage of the prohibitory legislation. Typical legislation prohibiting all branch banking is the statute of Illinois, which was passed by both houses of the Legislature, signed by the Governor, and later submitted to and approved by a vote of the electors of the state under referendum law on November 4, 1924. This prohibitory statute is found in Smith-Hurd Illinois Revised Statutes, 1925, c. 16½, § 9, at page 177, and is as follows:

> "No bank shall establish or maintain more than one banking house, or receive deposits, or pay checks at any other place than such house; and no bank shall establish or maintain any branch bank, branch office or additional office or agency for the purpose of conducting any of its business."

In six states the law is silent on the subject, but branch banking is prohibited under rulings of the Attorney General or the banking commissioner. In five states the law is silent; there is no ruling by the Attorney General or banking department, but no branches are in operation in those states. In nine states branch banking is authorized, but is confined to the city of the bank's head office. In two states county-wide branch banking is authorized, and in nine states state-wide branch banking is permitted. The foregoing data is obtained from Exhibit 217, which is a transcript of the hearings before the committee on banking and currency in the House of Representatives of the Sixty-Eighth Congress, first session, on H. R. 6855, of which committee the Hon. Louis T. Mc-

Fadden of Pennsylvania is chairman. This measure involves, among other things, the scope of proposed federal permission and regulation of branch banking by national banks. An examination of the record of such hearings discloses that the subject of branch banking is fraught with great public interest, is highly controversial, and is wise or unwise, dependent upon the particular viewpoint of those affected, or to be affected by such regulations, existing or proposed.

[3] California is one of the nine states in which state-wide branch banking is permitted. To say that the Bank Act of this state "gives the right to establish a branch at any point in the state," as contended for by the petitioner, does not correctly reflect the meaning of our statute. Rather, it should be said that all branch banking is prohibited in this state with the proviso that a branch bank may be opened at any point in the state upon the written approval of the superintendent of banks, which he may grant or deny in his discretion, and he is specifically enjoined from granting his permission unless and until he has ascertained that the public convenience and advantage will be promoted thereby.

[4] We do not understand the petitioner seriously to claim that the discretion vested in the superintendent of banks by said section 9 is an unlawful delegation of authority to that official. Indeed, the exercise of a similar discretion by state officials having authority over banks has been upheld in other jurisdictions. People v. Brady, 268 Ill. 192, 108 N. E. 1009; Schaake v. Dolley, 85 Kan. 598, 118 P. 80, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 877, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 254; State v. State Securities Commission, 145 Minn. 221, 176 N. W. 759; State v. State Securities Commission, 149 Minn. 102, 182 N. W. 910; In re Commercial State Bank, 105 Neb. 248, 179 N. W. 1021; Matter of Lunghino & Sons, 176 App. Div. 285, 163 N. Y. S. 9; Mulkey v. Bennett, 95 Or. 70, 186 P. 1115; Commonwealth v. Puder, 261 Pa. 129, 104 A. 505; Mee v. Hirning, 45 S. D. 582, 189 N. W. 675; State v. Hill, 84 W. Va. 468, 100 S. E. 286. See, also, Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128, 31 S. Ct. 190, 55 L. Ed. 128. The petitioner has cited no authority holding that such discretion may not lawfully be vested in an executive or administrative officer of the state banking department.

[5] We therefore conclude that the discretion so lodged in the superintendent of banks in this state is a lawful delegation of authority to him. But such authority is not without its limitations in law, independent of the statute, and in the statute itself. Included in the limitations in law, independent of the statute, is that the discretion thus conferred shall be exercised impartially and in such manner as not to infringe upon any constitutional right of an applicant. It is also clear that the superintendent of banks may not by the adoption of any rule of policy or procedure so circumscribe or curtail the exercise of his discretion under the statute as to prevent the free and untrammeled exercise thereof in every case, for an attempt to do so would be for him to arrogate to himself a legislative function.

[6] Another limitation in law is that the superintendent of banks may not refuse to exercise the discretion thus conferred when called upon to do so by an application duly presented to him, but must act upon such application within a reasonable time. The statutory limitation on his authority to act is that he is prohibited from granting his written approval unless and until he has ascertained that the public convenience and advantage will be promoted by the opening of the branch bank permission to establish which is sought.

[7] The Legislature has not attempted to define the phrase "public convenience and advantage." Nor has it attempted to declare where or how or under what circumstances the public convenience and advantage would or would not be promoted by the opening of a branch bank in any particular case. The obvious reason for the omission to define the phrase is because it would seem to be impossible to define it so that the definition would comprehend every variety and set of circumstances surrounding each particular application, for the facts and circumstances in each case would necessarily be different, at least, so far as local conditions were concerned. So, too, it is impossible for the court to lay down any hard and fast rule that would be applicable to every case, and the ingenuity and resourcefulness of counsel have not suggested how or in what manner a general rule could be devised. The phrase would seem to be as difficult of definition as "police power," "public convenience and necessity," "due diligence," or "probable cause," as those expressions are used in our law. But the impossibilities of definition do not detract in the least from the necessity of undertaking the task and of ascertaining the facts in each case, and it is for the superintendent of banks to so proceed and to ascertain them in the exercise of his power. In that exercise he performs an executive or administrative function, and not a judicial one, for it is beyond the power of the state to confer upon him, as a state-wide officer not in the judicial branch, the power to exercise a judicial function. Department of Public Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 239 P. 1076.

[8] Furthermore, the Legislature has not attempted to indicate whether, in the use of the world "public" in the phrase "public convenience and advantage," reference was thereby made to the people of the state at large, or to the people of the particular portion of the public affected or to be served by the particular branch bank sought to be established. We incline to the view that the interest of the public immediately contiguous to the proposed branch bank, or of the public reasonably subject to service by the proposed branch, should first be considered by the superintendent of banks, but we are not prepared to hold that the superintendent of banks may not, in the administration of the duties imposed upon him, take into consideration the question whether the convenience and advantage of the people of the entire state would be promoted or retarded by the unlimited establishment of state-wide branch banks. He is a state-wide officer and, as such, is not limited by the statute to purely local considerations in passing upon any application for his written authority. Such being the fact, we do not feel justified in laying down a rule that would remove from his consideration all questions of state-wide policy in the administration of his office.

With the foregoing observations as to the scope and effect of section 9 of the Bank Act, and of the powers of the superintendent of banks thereunder, we pass to a consideration of the history, authority, and construction of the de novo rule promulgated by the respondent's predecessor in office and thereafter adhered to.

Since the adoption of the Bank Act in 1909, it has been the general policy of the successive superintendents of banks not to permit the establishment of branch banks outside the city of the head office except by purchase of or merger with an existing bank in such outside city or town. As this policy was adhered to and enforced, it was realized that the restriction should not be deemed inflexible or absolute, but that exceptions should be made in proper cases when, in the discretion of the superintendent of banks, such exceptions should be made. The respondent's immediate predecessor in office, Mr. Jonathan S. Dodge, appears to have been the first to formulate the policy into a written rule of the state banking department. On his own initiative, Mr. Dodge called a conference of the legislative committee of the California Bankers' Association and, after discussing with them the necessities of the banking situation in California, explained the rules which he proposed to set in motion. Thereafter he carried his plan into execution. On November 22, 1921, he addressed a letter to Mr. Leo V. Belden, vice president of petitioner, at San Francisco, wherein he stated in part:

> "In the conference with the legislative committee, the matter of the allocation of branch banks in California was discussed very fully by all present. After hearing all sides of the matter, I have decided that the policy of my department will be as follows: First. Any bank whose main office is located within the limits of a city will be permitted to extend into other parts of that city with branches, on application to the superintendent of banks, and without acquiring another bank. Second. Any bank located within a city, desiring to extend a branch into another city of the state where competition now exists, will be required to acquire an existing bank before the request will be granted. This rule will be subject to exceptions such as I made in your behalf at Sacramento, and I hope the exceptions will be few. * * * Fourth. All banks that may be members of the Federal Reserve Bank will be required to secure the consent of that institution before any franchises are authorized. * * * I think I said to you that the calling of this conference was occasioned by conditions in southern California, and in no wise related to the activities of your bank."

Mr. Dodge appeared as a witness in this proceeding and was interrogated by counsel for petitioner as to the history and origin of the de novo rule. He was asked to explain the circumstances and conditions which caused him to promulgate it, and he answered:

> "As superintendent of banks, it was a very live question at that time about the establishment of branches, particularly of branches in small cities; and the bankers, the independent bankers in the small cities, were very much exercised for fear that their territory would be invaded by branches of big banks, and that their business would be sacrificed thereby. The first big contest, I guess, came on probably at Santa Maria and the second was at Sacramento, and, after we had hearings on these two, other requests came in for branches, particularly one at San Pedro. I saw that some plan, method, or rule should be laid down that would govern the establishment of banks in other cities and in other localities than the main office, and I had prepared what I thought was a good rule to follow, and which is practically stated in that letter [referring to letter of November 22, 1921, above referred to], and I called together the legislative committee of the Bankers' Association of the state of California in meeting, and presented it to them, and discussed with them the advisability of making it one of the rules for the governing policy of the state banking department of California. And that was held in the latter part of November, about the time this letter was written, probably a few days prior to it."

He was then asked why he formulated that rule and he answered:

> "Well, it was pretty nearly necessary in order to have any sort of comfort in the office of the superintendent of banks. It was necessary. It had to come. I won't say that I was the first man who ever thought of the de novo rule. I guess that my predecessors in office had thought of it and would have established it. I can't say. Perhaps I was the first man that wrote it out and put it in words. Probably that is the truth of the matter."

He was asked:

> "Well, now, was this rule adopted as the result of an agreement, or was it a dictated rule —dictated by you as superintendent of banks?"

And he answered:

> "It was dictated by me; yes, sir. This is the rule of the banking department."

This general policy was adhered to by Mr. Dodge during the remainder of his administration. When the respondent came into office on February 1, 1923, he continued in adherence to the same policy. The Legislature was then in session, and certain amendments to the Bank Act had been proposed by the California League of Independent Bankers, the purpose of which, among other things, was to provide by law that "no branch banking system shall maintain more than one office in any municipality other than that wherein is located the parent office." At the request of the California League of Independent Bankers these proposals were transmitted to the members of the executive committee of the California Bankers' Association, which was composed of 11 officers and representatives of leading banks in the state, including Mr. W. R. Williams, cashier of the petitioner. Thereafter a conference was held between the respondent and said executive committee, at which it was agreed that it would be advisable to leave the statutory provision as incorporated in section 9 of the Bank Act unchanged, but that the state banking department should continue to adhere to the policy announced in the de novo rule. This plan was agreeable to all of the representatives of the California League of Independent Bankers and to the members of the executive committee of the California Bankers' Association, with the exception of the representative of the petitioner. Thereafter the respondent announced the continuance of the policy of his department with reference to branch banking, as set forth in the rules promulgated by his predecessors in office and first reduced to writing by Mr. Dodge. The rule, as announced by the respondent, was in more condensed form, and was and is as follows:

> "No branch of any bank shall be created in any locality other than the city or locality in which is located the principal place of business of such bank, except by purchase of or consolidation or merger with an existing bank in such city or locality in which it is desired to create or establish such branch bank, unless the superintendent of banks, in his discretion, shall find that the public convenience and advantage require it."

[9] It is the contention of petitioner that the adoption of and adherence to the said de novo rule is an unlawful assumption of legislative power. The authority of an administrative board or officer, such as the respondent, to adopt reasonable rules and regulations, which are deemed necessary to the due and efficient exercise of the powers expressly granted, cannot be questioned. This authority is implied from the power granted. The petition concedes and states the rule to be that, if the power "had not been expressly, but merely implied, the result would be the same for whatever is necessarily or plainly implied in a statute is as much a part of it as that which is expressed." Johnston v. Baker, 167 Cal. 260, 139 P. 86. In St. Charles State Bank v. Wingfield, 36 S. D. 493, 155 N. W. 776, cited and relied upon by petitioner, the court held invalid a certain rule adopted by the superintendent of banks in South Dakota, but guarded its ruling by the following language:

> "In holding this particular rule promulgated by the public examiner to be void, we are not to be understood as denying the public examiner full authority to adopt and promulgate any rule or regulation necessary or proper in the discharge of particular administrative duties imposed by the statute. In all such matters he may properly exercise reasonable discretion in the adoption of administrative rules within the purview of the particular provision of the statute which imposes the duty. By way of illustration, the statute imposes upon the public examiner the duty and authority to approve banks as reserve depositaries. In the discharge of this duty he may adopt any reasonable rule as to the method of procedure, or the showing required, upon which such approval will be given."

Under the authority of the National Bank Act (U. S. Comp. St. § 9657 et seq.), the Controller of the Currency, as shown by Exhibit 216 herein, has adopted rules and regulations relating to the establishment of offices by national banks. It is interesting to note that among those rules is one that a "national bank will be permitted to establish such an office only within the limits of the city, town, or village named in its organization certificate as the place where its operation of discount and deposits are to be carried on," and also upon a showing to the Controller that the facts and conditions make it necessary to establish such office. Likewise, the Federal Reserve Board has adopted a rule governing its member banks and known as the "continguous territory rule," which provides:

> "The Federal Reserve Board will, as a general principle, restrict the establishment of branches, agencies, or additional offices by such banks or trust companies to the city of location of the parent bank and the territorial area within the state contiguous thereto, as said territory has been defined in the board's resolution of November 7, 1923, excepting in instances where the state banking authorities have certified and the board finds that public necessity and advantage render a departure from the principle necessary or desirable."

The resolution defining the term "contiguous territory" defines the same as "the territory of a city or town whose corporate limits at some points coincide with the corporate limits of the city or town in which the parent bank is located." The petitioner is a member of the Federal Reserve System and it does not appear that such a rule is not a proper administrative regulation.

[10, 11] It is contended by petitioner and is well established that an executive or administrative officer or board may not, in the promulgation of rules, change, alter, amend, or extend his or its statutory powers. But petitioner contends that the de novo rule assumes to lay down a general rule legislative in character, limiting the exercise of the discretion reposed in the respondent by section 9 of the Bank Act. In consonance with the foregoing concededly correct rule, it is obvious that if the word "require," as contained in the rule, be deemed to have a meaning materially different from the statutory word "promoted," and as such would have the effect of restricting the statutory powers of the superintendent of banks, such rule would be invalid. The word "require" is defined to mean "to demand; to claim by right and authority; to exact; to demand as appropriate; to need, or call for." To "need" is given as a synonym. The word "promote" is defined to mean "to contribute to the growth, enlargement, or prosperity of; to forward; encourage; advance." One of its synonyms is to "help." Webster's New International Dictionary, latest edition, Merriam Service, p. 1812. Roget in his International Thesaurus of Words and Phrases, at pages 258 and 300, gives one use of the word "require" as in the sense of "need, want, or have occasion for," and the word "promote" in the sense of "aid, assistance, help, or advancement." With these different shades of meaning applied to those words, it is at once difficult, if not impossible, for this court to determine, as a matter of law, on the face of the de novo rule that any alleged difference in their meaning could have any practical effect in the administration thereof. It would seem to be true that if the public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the establishment of a de novo branch, such public convenience and advantage would require its establishment. Conversely, if the public convenience and advantage would require the establishment of a de novo branch, its establishment would promote the public convenience and advantage. Whether the respondent in the application of the de novo rule has overstepped his statutory duty or authority will be referred to later in the consideration of the evidence.

When the rule on the face thereof is thus construed as in harmony with section 9 of the Bank Act, it is but a declaration of policy on the part of the superintendent of banks. It is set up for the guidance of his own department in the orderly and efficient discharge of the duties of his office and is also a notification to banking corporations under his jurisdiction to the effect that, if and when they desire a branch bank outside of the city of the head office, a prima facie showing of the promotion of public convenience and advantage will be deemed to have been made when it appears that by purchase, consolidation, or merger the applying bank has acquired the control of an existing bank at the location of the proposed branch in such outside city, and that, when the applying bank proposes to establish a de novo branch in such outside city, the fact that it is to be a de novo branch will in itself constitute some showing that public convenience and advantage will not be promoted by the establishment of the new branch and will cast upon the applicant the burden of showing that an exception to the general rule should be made —the final ruling of the superintendent of banks to be subject at all times and in every case to the statutory power and duty of the superintendent of banks to deny the application, unless he shall first ascertain that the public convenience and advantage will be promoted by the opening of the new branch. Such an announced policy we consider within the power of the superintendent of banks as a rule or guiding consideration of his department, and as a notice to applicants as to the showing necessary to be made, and, as such, is a valid regulation of the state banking department.

[12] Having in mind the foregoing determinations as to the powers and duties of the superintendent of banks and as to the proper construction of the de novo rule, and assuming that the original petition otherwise stated a cause of action to compel the respondent to act or to act in a particular manner, we are confronted with certain deficiencies in the said petition which render it vulnerable as against the general demurrer. For instance, it is not alleged therein that the capital and surplus of the petitioner were at the time of making said applications equal to or in excess of the amount required by section 9 of the Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 88) for the opening of said branches or that such facts were known to the respondent. It was not alleged that the petitioner had paid or tendered for payment the fees required by said section 9 (Stats. 1917, p. 602). It was not alleged that the petitioner had presented all of the essential facts to the respondent upon which he might properly exercise his discretion. Sleeper v. Board of Supervisors, 60 Cal. App. 744, 214 P. 292. It was not alleged that the respondent was in possession of the facts of his own knowledge from which the only reasonable conclusion could be drawn that the public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the granting of said applications. These omitted allegations, or the substance thereof, were essential to state a cause of action against the respondent. In advance of a ruling on the demurrer, the commissioner was appointed and the parties proceeded to produce evidence before him. The petitioner appears to have introduced its evidence on the theory that all matters essential to state a cause of action were in issue, and the respondent introduced evidence to meet the petitioner's showing thereon. The petitioner, in the amendments to the petition which this court permitted to be filed, supplied the omitted allegations essential to state a cause of action. The court was prompted to grant leave to file said amendments, not on the theory that the subject-matter thereof had been proved in its entirety, for the evidence had not then been examined at length, but rather that the case might be determined on its merits. Under the peculiar circumstances here presented, the respondent is nevertheless entitled to have a ruling on his demurrer. In the exercise of our discretion, we will consider the demurrer as interposed to the petition as amended. With the amendments the petition states a cause of action and the demurrer is overruled.

[13] In his answer the respondent denied the material allegations of the petition which are in controversy, and under the practice the allegations of the amendments filed to conform to the proof are deemed denied. McDougald v. Argonaut Land Co., 117 Cal. 87, 48 P. 1021; Glougie v. Glougie, 174 Cal. 126, 162 P. 118. He then affirmatively alleged that, since the adoption of the Bank Act in 1909, 109 permits for branch banks have been issued to the petitioner by the state banking department. From the tabulation presented it appears that of this number 34 have been issued since January 1, 1923. He set forth at length the situation as to the business conditions and banking facilities existing at the time the applications here in suit were made and in the localities where it was sought to establish said de novo branches; that he had made a personal examination of the situation on the ground before he denied said applications, and that, as a result of said examination and investigation and from his personal knowledge of the existing conditions, he had determined that public convenience and advantage would not be promoted by the opening of said branches, and that he denied said applications for that reason; that the conditions, as they existed at the time of the exercise by him of his discretion in so ascertaining, and at all times since said action was taken, would not warrant the opening of said branches; that he has adhered to the de novo rule only in the sense that he had made use of the same as a guide or policy and not as a controlling factor in the exercise of his discretion, and that he has never permitted it to limit, modify, or interfere with the exercise by him of his statutory discretion; that in the exercise of said power and in the discharge of his duties, under the Bank Act and under the de novo rule, he has considered each application for permission to open a branch bank on its own merits and has treated applications from all banks seeking such permits with like consideration; that the reason why the petitioner has not applied for more permits for de novo branches outside the city of its head office, and particularly in Los Angeles, is not as alleged in the petition, but that the true reason is that the Federal Reserve Board has refused its permission to open such de novo branches, and if it were not for that fact the petitioner would have applied to him for numerous other branches de novo in Los Angeles and elsewhere, and in this connection alleges that on December 13, 1922, a permit was issued by his predecessor in office to the petitioner to open a de novo branch office at Yuba City, but that such branch has never been opened for the reason that the Federal Reserve Board denied petitioner's application therefor; that on July 13, 1923, the respondent issued to petitioner his written authority to open a de novo branch at Santa Maria, and that said branch has never been opened because the Federal Reserve Board denied its permission; that on March 2, 1923, he granted petitioner his permission to open a de novo branch at Sacramento, and that the Federal Reserve Board likewise denied its permission for that branch; that he granted permission to open a branch bank by purchase or merger with a local bank at Kingsburg, but that the Federal Reserve Board denied its permission to open said branch.

The respondent then set forth at length the history of the de novo rule and its general approval by the California League of Independent Bankers and by the unanimous action of the California Bankers' Association in convention assembled; also the reason, from the viewpoint of the respondent, for the existence of the de novo rule, and the reasons why the said rule should be deemed a wise and salutary policy as affecting business and economic conditions in the state at large, and why the continued adherence to the same should not be disturbed.

With the issues thus framed and presented we are brought to a consideration of the evidence. It is unnecessary, and indeed it would be futile, to attempt to state the same in detail within the confines of this opinion. With the latitude accorded the parties before the commissioner, any and all evidence having any real or probable pertinency to the issues involved seems to have been elicited. We will therefore, of necessity, set forth only portions of the evidence, and be content with a reference to the remainder, and then announce our findings and conclusions on the material portions thereof.

[14] In proof of the allegation that the respondent had denied the applications here in suit solely because of the existence of the de novo rule, the petitioner introduced in evidence a letter from respondent, dated March 10, 1925, which was in response to the petitioner's application for the opening of the branch on South Flower street. In this letter the respondent stated in part:

"I regret very much the necessity of denying this application. This denial is based solely upon the ground that the location of the proposed branch office is outside of the limits of the city in which is located the principal place of business of the applying bank. As perhaps you may know, I have announced and agreed to certain rules regarding the granting of branch offices, one of which is that no de novo permissions for branch offices shall be granted for a location outside of the city in which the principal place of business of the applying bank is located. There is no application which has come to me to which I would rather give my sympathetic and affirmative consideration than this one of yours, but unfortunately I consider that I am bound in the exercise of my discretion by the rule above referred to."

This letter was addressed to the petitioner and was signed by the respondent in his official capacity. The respondent testified that said letter did not set forth the true reason for the denial of the application; that said application was denied after his personal survey and inspection of the local conditions and an ascertainment by him that the public convenience and advantage would not be promoted by the granting thereof; that said letter was drafted by a subordinate in his office after a conference with him as to what action should be taken on the application, and that he did not instruct his subordinate how to word the letter; that said letter was signed by him as a matter of office routine; and that he did not recall that the letter he signed was so worded. But it does not appear that he was laboring under any disability, and the responsibility was his. The considerations urged by him in disparagement of the import of the language of the letter are not appealing. He must be held to have meant what the letter stated, as those dealing with him, as a public officer, had a right to assume that the language was authoritative.

In his letter to the petitioner of date March 20, 1925, which was in response to petitioner's application to remove its international branch from its then location to No. 214 North Main street and to establish the new and additional branch at North Spring street and Sunset boulevard, the respondent stated in part:

"We note your application for permission to move your international branch in the city of Los Angeles to the premises commonly known as No. 214 North Main street. Permission is hereby given to make this transfer, and our license for the new address will be issued as soon as the date of opening at the new location has been fixed. We also note your application for permission to establish a branch 'de novo' to be located at the northwest corner of North Spring street and Sunset boulevard in the city of Los Angeles. * * * I regret that it is not possible for me to grant this application under the conditions which govern the exercise of my discretion in the matter of establishing branch offices. You are familiar with the ruling of this department issued March 8, 1923, affecting the granting of permission for the establishment of branch offices in localities outside the city wherein is located the head office of the applying bank. While I appreciate the needs of your business as you see them, there are other banks in Los Angeles situated about as you are in this civic center removal. I am unable to believe that the public convenience and advantage 'requires' at least three new branch offices in the city of Los Angeles because of the changes incident to the creation of this new civic center. * * * While I appreciate your own point of view in this matter, I cannot believe that you are suffering any injustice in not receiving permission to establish de novo an additional branch office in the city of Los Angeles in consideration of being obliged to move your present international branch."

This letter was likewise signed by the respondent in his official capacity. He testified that it was also drafted by a subordinate in his office and was signed under like circumstances as the letter of March 10th, and after an ascertainment by him that the public convenience and advantage would not be promoted by the granting of the application. Our conclusion with respect to the authenticity of this letter is the same as announced concerning the other. In each case the reason assigned for the denial was unauthorized. The respondent misconceived the effect of the de novo rule as preventing favorable consideration of said applications. His discretion, under the statute, could not thus be circumscribed. Under the law, he had the power to grant the applications, notwithstanding the de novo rule. Even under the language of the rule itself he could have granted them, provided he ascertained that the public convenience and advantage would be promoted thereby.

The position taken by the respondent, as evidenced by those letters, amounted to a failure or refusal to act and exercise his discretion, as the law required. Said letters, when considered alone and without reference to any other evidence, would justify the issuance of the peremptory writ to compel the respondent to act in accordance with his statutory powers; but the petitioner is not seeking the issuance of the writ to compel the respondent to act, but seeks the issuance thereof to compel him to grant said applications.

[15] We are not at liberty to accord to the language of said letters of denial the determinative importance contended for by petitioner. The reasons assigned for the denial of said applications did not preclude the respondent from setting up in this proceeding and relying upon any and all legal reasons for denying the same. The leading case in this state on this subject is Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 405. In that case the mother of a negro girl sought, in a mandamus proceeding, to compel the principal of the Broadway Grammar School in San Francisco to receive the girl as a pupil in said school. The petitioner alleged that the principal had refused to admit the girl to the school, "assigning as the only reason for such action and refusal, the fact that she was a colored person." In his answer the principal set up another defense; namely, that the lowest grade in his school was the sixth grade, and that the girl had not received sufficient instruction to enable her to enter that grade. The petitioner made a motion for the issuance of the peremptory writ, notwithstanding the matters alleged in the answer. The writ was denied, and, as to the right of a public officer to set up in such a proceeding any lawful reason in opposition to the issuance of the writ, the court said:

> "There is no doubt that if a party, upon tender or demand made, or other proceeding en pais, had put his refusal upon some particular omission or defect in the proceedings of his adversary, he will not afterwards be permitted, in support of such refusal, to allege a new or additional defect or insufficiency in those proceedings, especially if such defect or insufficiency be of such a character as that it might have been cured if it had been pointed out or relied upon at the time. This is the ordinary and general rule, and it proceeds upon the idea that, having specially designated one or more supposed insufficiencies, the party thereby waives and abandons all others. But it is obvious that this rule can have no just application to the case now under consideration. If the law, under the circumstances actually appearing in the record before us, forbade the respondent, as the principal of the school, to admit the petitioner as a pupil therein, the circumstance that the respondent put his refusal on an untenable ground ought not, in this proceeding, to preclude an examination into the very right of the case. The claim of the petitioner to be admitted, and the corresponding duty of the defendant to admit her as a pupil, are governed by law; and if it appear, as it does unquestionably appear, upon the record before us, that she did not possess the requirements, in point of learning, sufficient to entitle her, whatever her color, to be admitted to any class in the school, even the lowest, then the respondent must be considered to have correctly refused to entertain her application for admission, and the legal sufficiency of the particular reasons assigned by him for such refusal becomes wholly immaterial."

See, also, Berger v. Justice, 4 Cal. App. 532, 88 P. 591. The petitioner seeks to avoid the applicability of the case of Ward v. Flood, supra, on the ground that the allegations of the answer therein were admitted. We are unable to discover any difference in principle between that case and the case at bar. The respondent herein alleged in his answer that his denial of said applications was based also on the ground that he had ascertained that the public convenience and advantage would not be promoted by the granting thereof. In his testimony he stated and reiterated that such was the fact and gave his reasons therefor, and in the many days of his examination at the hands of counsel for petitioner his testimony was not seriously discredited. In one of the amendments to the petition, it is alleged that the respondent, in denying said applications, "found and determined that public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the opening of said branches." There is no evidence in the record to support said allegation, and the same is found to be untrue. The contrary under the evidence is found to be true; namely, that the respondent has never at any time found that public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the opening of said branches. For the foregoing reasons the claim of petitioner that, because respondent's letters predicated his denial upon the existence of the de novo rule, all other questions must be deemed resolved in its favor cannot be sustained.

There is another reason why said letters of the respondent should not be held determinative of the rights of the parties herein. It is this. That the petitioner by its pleading and proof has thrown the case wide open on the question of whether, as a matter of law, on the face of the record and regardless of the de novo rule, the respondent was compelled to find that the public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the opening of said branches; or, to put it another way, whether the showing is sufficient to authorize the court to find and conclude, as matter of law, that the respondent could have drawn but one conclusion from the facts before him; namely, the conclusion that the public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the granting of said applications. The law bearing on the solution of the problem thus presented is well settled.

[16] It is the general rule that the writ of mandamus may not be employed to compel a public officer possessing discretionary power to act in a particular way. The court in such a proceeding may compel him to act, but it may not substitute its discretion for the discretion vested in such officer. This general rule is well stated with supporting authority in 16 Cal. Jur. at page 809, as follows:

> "It is a familiar rule governing the issuance of the writ of mandate that an officer in whom public duties are confided by law is not subject to the control of the courts in the exercise of the judgment and discretion which the law reposes in him as a part of his official functions. Mandamus may not compel the exercise of such discretion in any particular manner; it may only direct that the officer act, and must leave the matter as to what action he will take to his determination."

See, also, 38 C. J. 594.

An important exception to the foregoing general rule is that if the facts as admitted or proved be susceptible of but one construction or conclusion, the right to the writ becomes a matter of law, and the officer may be compelled to act in accordance with the facts as admitted or established. Dufton v. Daniels, 190 Cal. 577, and cases cited on page 581, 213 P. 949. Cases further illustrating the exception to the general rule are Inglin v. Hoppin, 156 Cal. 483, 105 P. 582; Hammel v. Neylan, 31 Cal. App. 21, 159 P. 618; and Walker v. Kingsbury, 36 Cal. App. 617, 173 P. 95. That the exception to the general rule is well established can admit of no doubt, but where the facts are not admitted and are controverted and are susceptible of more than one construction or conclusion and are susceptible to the conclusion adverse to the claimed right, the writ should be denied.

[17] We are brought, then, to this question: Are the facts contained in the record before us susceptible of but one reasonable construction or conclusion; namely, that the public interest and advantage would be promoted by the opening of said branch banks? In answering this question, we may not permit ourselves to be governed by the preponderance of evidence rule such as governs a trial court or jury in an ordinary civil action. If that rule were to be applied, we would be called upon to find and decide whether the petitioner had proved by a preponderance of evidence that public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the opening of said branches. This we may not do. When the court is called upon, as in this case, to determine the character and sufficiency of the evidence to justify the writ as against the respondent, we are governed by the rule that, if there be any substantial evidence in the record which would have supported a conclusion on the part of the respondent that public convenience and advantage would not be promoted by the opening of such branches, the writ must be denied. The rule which applies here is analogous to the rule that, if there be any substantial evidence to support the finding of a trial court on an issue of fact, such finding may not be disturbed, even though the court on appeal might consider that the evidence preponderated the other way. Applying, then, the rule which must govern in this case, we find evidence at great length on both sides of that question. On the one hand, the petitioner has presented volumes of evidence by witnesses examined orally, and by maps, plats, surveys, records, and charts to prove that public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the opening of said branches. On the other hand, the respondent has presented evidence to prove that public convenience and advantage would not be promoted thereby.

From an examination of the record and giving due credit to the material evidence therein presented, it must be said that there is evidence of a very substantial character to support the conclusion that the public convenience and advantage would not be promoted by the opening of said branches. It may also be said that there is very substantial evidence to support the contrary conclusion. But when once we determine from the evidence presented that the conclusion could have been either for or against the petitioner's applications, the inquiry is at an end. To hold otherwise would be to substitute the discretion of the court for the discretion of the superintendent of banks, under the statute, and to transfer from the duly constituted officer of the state to the court the power and the resultant duty of supervising to that extent the state banking department. It is conceivable that, in connection with every application, facts of a substantial character might appear in support of one conclusion or the other. The court might thus be called upon to ascertain the facts and to draw its own conclusions therefrom in the case of every application to the superintendent of banks and his action thereon. It would be manifestly improper for the court, under the law, to undertake that task.

The many cases cited and relied on by petitioner, among which are Riley v, Chambers, 181 Cal. 589, 185 P. 855, 8 A. L. R. 418, Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Com., 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874, Tarpey v. McClure, 190 Cal. 593, 213 P. 983, are cases wherein a public officer or board was compelled to act in a particular way by reason of the fact that he or it had no discretion in the premises, or had improperly assumed discretion, or having discretion the facts entitling the aggrieved party to the relief sought either as admitted or proved were solely susceptible of the construction or conclusion that, as matter of law, the relief sought should be granted. This is not such a case, and the authorities relied upon are inapplicable.

The petitioner concedes that the de novo rule, which the respondent in a sense inherited from his predecessor and thereafter adhered to, was not designed to discriminate against it, but claims that the respondent acted arbitrarily in connection with said applications and in the enforcement of said rule which by its terms is alleged to be discriminatory. As to the disability or restriction which the respondent assumed himself to be laboring under by reason of the existence of the de novo rule, as expressed in his written denials, the petitioner's charge is sustained, but, as the rule is a valid rule, the action of the respondent thereunder becomes immaterial if it now appear that there were valid reasons for his denial of said applications.

[18] Notwithstanding the fact that we hold the reasons assigned for the denial of said applications in the respondent's letters of denial to be untenable, still we are met by the determinative consideration that by pleading and proof, regardless of the de novo rule and regardless of the said denials, the record in this proceeding presents substantial evidence sufficient to have supported the denial of said applications on legal grounds.

In the recent case of Doble Steam Motors Corp. v. Daugherty, 195 Cal, 158, 232 P. 140, this court approved another guiding principle to be applied to a case where it is sought, in a court proceeding, to interfere with discretionary power of a public board or officer. That was an application for a writ of mandate to compel the commissioner of corporations of this state, another state-wide officer possessing broad powers and duties of a discretionary nature, to issue his permit to the petitioner therein authorizing the latter to issue and deliver certain shares of its capital stock to certain individuals. It was decided that the facts presented were sufficient to support a denial of the application. In the course of the opinion the court said:

> "In the case of Union Transp. Co. v. Bassett, 118 Cal. 604 [50 P. 754] which was a proceeding in equity brought to enjoin the board of harbor commissioners from putting into effect an order of said board with respect to certain docking facilities, this court held that, when subordinate boards or commissioners were by statute invested with discretion with respect to the exercise of their powers, courts would not interfere with such discretion, in the absence of grave reasons tending to show that fraud, corruption, improper motives or influences, plain disregard of duty, gross abuse of power, or violation of law had entered into or characterized the determination of such body; and that, in the absence of such showing of an abuse of discretion, the determination of such board or commission would not be interfered with or overthrown."

There is no showing herein, either by pleading or proof, of fraud, corruption, improper motives, or influences on the part of the respondent. If it be assumed that, in assigning untenable reasons for the denial of said applications, the respondent was guilty of "plain disregard of duty" and consequent violation of the statute by refusing to exercise his discretion as required, we are brought back to the proposition that what the petitioner desires herein is not the issuance of a writ to compel the respondent to act, but to compel him to act favorably on said applications. Here, again, it must be said that the untenable reasons assigned for denial became and are immaterial in the state of the record.

On October 8, 1923, the Federal Reserve Board received a communication from some of the banks of this state concerning the action of the respondent in passing upon certain applications for branch banks, in which communication the respondent was requested to set forth his position with reference to the matters contained in said communication. In reply the respondent, over his signature, in his official capacity, and of date October 30, 1923, submitted a communication to the Federal Reserve Board, in which he stated that, in his opinion, branch banking in California had been such as to justify its continuance in this state, and that whatever might be said as to branch banking generally it is and has been a success in California. He then referred to the fact that conferences had been held with reference to proposed legislation designed to curtail, if not to prohibit, further branch banking in this state, and his determination to adhere to the de novo rule as a guiding consideration in his department within his statutory powers and duties. Continuing, he said, in part:

> "So far as I am aware, and judging from the reports of the Washington hearing that have come to me, the only instance where the propriety of a branch charter granted by me has been seriously questioned is that granted to the Bank of Italy for a branch de novo at Santa Maria. The Santa Maria situation had been an acute one for a considerable time, far antedating my incumbency as superintendent of banks. No profit can come from my entering into a discussion here of the merits of the Santa Maria situation. I accept the responsibility for the decision and wish to say that it was my own independent decision; that I knew at the time a former superintendent of banks had refused permission, and I was well aware of the fact that there would be considerable criticism and a great deal of misunderstanding of my motives in the event that I did grant permission to the Bank of Italy to enter Santa Maria de novo. * * * The decision was made solely on the grounds of public convenience and necessity, and I wish to say here that nothing has since been presented to cause me to change the opinion that I then formed that the people of Santa Maria were entitled to additional banking facilities. I do not intend to enter into a defense of my position in this matter any further than this, and to state that, so far as the conference agreement with reference to branch banking is concerned, the decision in the Santa Maria Case was made with that agreement entirely before my mind and that the decision was made, not in violation of that agreement, but rather as coming within the exception laid down in that agreement which had been very carefully placed therein at the suggestion of my attorney at the time the agreement was entered into. He pointed out the fact that to permit the agreement to be made hard and fast, so that no banks de novo should be granted to branch banks, would be to abdicate the authority granted me in the Bank Act and would be in violation of my oath to accept the duties and responsibilities of that act; i. e., to refuse to determine for myself in obedience to the mandate of that act in each and every instance where application is made, whether 'the public convenience and advantage would be promoted' by the granting of the charter to the applicant. More than that, it was then pointed out and the logic apparently appealed to all the conferees that discretion should reside in the superintendent to deal with those instances, where, through failure to keep pace with the demands of the community, the local banks had failed to meet the requirements of local service. Instead of incorporating the language of the statute into the exception, the language was changed from the 'public convenience and advantage be promoted thereby' to 'public convenience and advantage require it'; in other words, the shade of difference runs from the rather mild word 'promoted' to the somewhat positive word 'require,' and in my finding after a personal investigation of conditions at Santa Maria I so found and have advised the Bank of Italy that I would give them permission to enter the town of Santa Maria upon the ground that I found the conditions to come within the exception laid down in this limitation, to wit, that the public convenience and advantage of Santa Maria require further banking facilities."

The foregoing communication to the Federal Reserve Board, its authenticity, and the foundation for its introduction in evidence formed the subject of much controversy between counsel. It is sufficient to say that it is deemed properly in evidence.

Respondent testified that his attorney drafted the said communication, that it was so prepared in the nature of a brief, and that, although the attorney seemed to have attempted therein to draw some "fine-haired" distinction between the meaning of the words "require" and "promote," he was unable to draw the same or any differentiation in their meaning, and that in the practical application of the rule there was, to his mind, no distinction between the two words. Here, again, the respondent must be held to have meant what he said, regardless of who drafted the letter. Counsel for petitioner stresses at length the alleged significance to be attached to the phraseology employed by the respondent in said communication seeking thereby to demonstrate that, in the practical application of the rule, the respondent has given the word "require" a more restrictive meaning than the word "promote." There is merit in the petitioner's criticism of the attempt thus, in the face of the statute, to draw any distinction between the meaning of the words. But when the words are properly given no difference in meaning the said communication indicates clearly that in the application of the de novo rule the respondent was duly cognizant of his statutory powers and duties under his oath of office.

[19] The petitioner charges that the California League of Independent Bankers, the members of which were apprehensive of their security and of further invasion of their territory by branches of metropolitan banks, forced the respondent to adhere to the de novo rule, and that it was only after the respondent's agreement to continue to adhere to it that the advocacy and support of legislation, pending in the Legislature of 1923 and designed practically to prohibit all branch banking, was withdrawn by the independent bankers. The record supports the conclusion that the insistence of the independent bankers for legislation on the subject and the withdrawal of their support of pending measures were considerations in the mind of respondent in his decision to continue the rule. But we discover nothing that took place reflecting in any derogatory sense upon the action of the respondent or of the independent bankers in the premises, nor do we perceive how the validity of the rule could be affected by these questions of legislative and administrative policy which contributed to the decision to adhere to it.

[20] It is insisted by the respondent that to issue the writ as sought would in any event be a vain and useless thing for the reason that the Federal Reserve Board has not granted its permission to the petitioner to open branch banks at the locations in question. We think the contention without merit for two reasons. First, the Federal Reserve Board is an official body entirely independent of any state authority, and the respondent is not responsible to that board in the exercise of his statutory powers, although he might properly feel called upon to act in co-operation with that board consistently with his duties under state law; and, secondly, the Federal Reserve Board might adopt and enforce a rule to the effect that it would not grant branch bank permits until the state superintendent of banks had first granted his permission. Each application might thus be brought to a standstill at the outset. Without question, the statutory powers and duties of the respondent should be exercised and discharged independently of any authority having no lawful jurisdiction over him.

Many additional points are discussed in the briefs, but we deem it unnecessary specifically to refer to them, in view of what has been decided.

We therefore find and conclude, in accordance with the foregoing: (1) That section 9 of the Bank Act constitutes a lawful regulation governing the establishment and maintenance of branch banks in this state. (2) That the discretion vested in the superintendent of banks by said section is a lawful delegation of authority to him, to be exercised within the limitations expressed in the section itself and as otherwise provided by law, as above indicated. (3) That the de novo rule on the face thereof is a lawful exercise of the powers of the superintendent of banks as a policy to be followed by him, and as an indication to applicants for branch bank permits of the showing necessary to be made to entitle them to obtain affirmative action on their applications, but in no sense as restricting, modifying, or controlling his statutory discretion. (4) That the reasons assigned by the respondent for his denial of said applications in his communications of March 10 and 20, 1923, were insufficient, but that such untenable reasons did not preclude him from setting up herein additional and valid reasons for such denial. (5) That substantial evidence to support the conclusion that public convenience and advantage would not be promoted by the opening of said branch banks appears in the record; assuming that said evidence be sufficient to support a conclusion the other way on that issue, nevertheless this court should not substitute its discretion for the discretion vested in the superintendent of banks. (6) That the respondent has at no time ascertained that the public convenience and advantage would be promoted by the opening of said branch banks, and that the contention of the petitioner that the respondent was bound to ascertain such fact, as matter of law, on the face of the record, is not sustained. (7) That, taken as a whole, the record does not present facts justifying the issuance of the writ as sought.

The peremptory writ is therefore denied, and the proceeding is dismissed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; FINLAYSON, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; SEAWELL, J.

199 Cal. 724

In re RIDER'S ESTATE (two cases).
(Sac. 3872, 3873.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 6, 1927.)

1. Perpetuities 🔑6(15)—Beneficiaries, in will directing payment of bequests after paying debts of life tenant, take subject to payment of debts (Civ. Code, §§ 715, 716).

Provision of will, directing payment of bequests after payment of funeral expenses and debts of life tenant, held not in violation of Civ. Code, §§ 715, 716, and beneficiaries take bequests subject to payment of debts.

2. Wills 🔑634(15)—Beneficiaries of bequests, subject to payment of debts of life tenant, have vested interest on death of life tenant.

Under will directing payment of bequests, after paying debts of life tenant, beneficiaries to whom property is given on death of life tenant have vested interest in respective bequests upon such death.

3. Wills 🔑629—Interest in estate will be presumed to be vested, unless contrary intention is shown (Civ. Code, § 1341).

The law favors vesting of estates, and, under Civ. Code, § 1341, every interest will be presumed to be vested, unless contrary intention is shown.

4. Wills 🔑634(15)—Testator held to have intended bequests on death of life tenant, subject only to payment of life tenant's debts.

Terms of will, directing payment of bequests after payment of debts and funeral expenses of wife who was given life estate therein, held to show intention that beneficiaries should, on death of wife, become entitled to respective bequests, subject only to payment of debts.

5. Wills 🔑473 — Provision for payment of wife's debts after death, if creating invalid trust, held severable and not to impair validity of other provisions.

Provisions in will for payment of wife's debts after her death held severable from other provisions making bequests subject to life estate in wife, so that, even though creating invalid trust, invalidity would not impair other portions of will.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Petition for distribution by the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., executor of the estate of George K. Rider, deceased. From a decree in favor of Edward Rider, contestant, and others, the executor and Mary C. Crosby and others, legatees and devisees, appeal, and Annie Rider, surviving wife, separately appeals, for whom Joseph H. Crosby, executor of her estate, was substituted after her death. Decree reversed in part, with directions.

See, also, 251 P. 805, 807.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, A. I. Diepenbrock, and Arthur E. Miller, all of Sacramento, for National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. and others.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for Joseph H. Crosby.

Thomas B. Leeper, and O. G. Hopkins, both of Sacramento, and Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, for Edward Rider and others.

CURTIS, J. The deceased, George K. Rider, died in the city of Sacramento on the 6th day of July, 1921. He left a last will and testament dated November 14, 1919, which was on the 21st day of July, 1921, duly admitted to probate in the superior court of the county of Sacramento. Said will is as follows:

"In the name of God, Amen.

"I, George K. Rider, of the county of Sacramento, state of California, being of sound and disposing mind and memory, and not acting under duress, menace, fraud or undue influence of any person or persons whatsoever, do hereby make, publish and declare this to be my last will and testament.

"First: I hereby revoke any and all wills by me at any time heretofore made.

"Second: I hereby nominate, constitute and appoint National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., a banking corporation, as the executor of this my last will and testament, and also as trustee of the trusts hereinafter created, and I hereby direct that no bond or undertaking of any kind be required of my said executor, either as such executor or as such trustee, or in the performance of any power or duty imposed upon it in connection with my estate, or the probate of this my last will and testament, and the said trusts, either hereunder or by statute.

"I hereby authorize, empower, direct and instruct my said executor to sell, dispose of and convert into cash, at the earliest practical moment consistent with good business judgment, all of the property and effects of my said estate, both real and personal (excepting, however, any bonds then held by me and excepting also such personal property as is herein specifically devised), in order that the bequests herein made may be promptly paid and the purposes of this my will performed with reasonable expediency and dispatch.

"I hereby authorize, and empower my said executor to sell at public or private sale, and without obtaining any previous order of court therefor, any property, real, personal or mixed, which may belong to me at my death, excepting however, bonds and such personal property as is herein specifically devised or bequeathed, which said property is not to be sold, but to be distributed as hereinafter provided.

"I further authorize and empower my said executor, in its discretion, pending the administration of my estate, and pending such time as a sale of the property thereof may be made, to continue to carry on any and all business ventures in which I may be interested or engaged at the time of my death, either singly or in a copartnership or association with others, in order that, and until such time as, the same may be sold to the best business advantage as the judgment of my executor, or its officers and directors, shall direct.

"I authorize, empower and direct my said executor in the discretion of its executive officers or board of directors to settle and compromise, upon such terms as to them shall seem proper, any litigation or dispute in which my estate or any part thereof shall be involved.

"Third: I give, devise and bequeath to my said trustee above named all of the property and effects left by me at the time of my death or in which I then have any interest and wheresoever the same may be situate, subject at all times to the power of my executor and the authority hereby vested in such executor to convert the same into cash, in trust nevertheless, and for the uses and purposes as follows, to wit:

"To invest and reinvest the same in safe interest-bearing securities, and to lend the same upon promissory notes, secured by first mortgages upon real property or upon ample and safe collateral security, and to pay over the net income derived therefrom monthly, to my wife, Annie Rider, if she survives me, so long as she shall live. And thereafter, in the event of her death, to pay all her just debts and liabilities, funeral expenses and expenses of last illness, and thereupon the remainder of said trust fund then in the hands of my said trustee, shall be vested in and shall go to the several parties who are hereinafter named as beneficiaries in the succeeding paragraphs of this my last will and testament and in the amounts and proportions as in such succeeding paragraphs provided.

"Fourth: If my said wife, Annie Rider, should not survive me, then and in such event (and also in the event of her death after mine, but then subject to the trusts hereinabove created), I make the following bequests and devises, hereby disposing of all of the corpus of my said estate in manner following, to wit:

"(a) I will, devise and bequeath to the Right Reverand Bishop of the diocese of Sacramento, the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000.00), to be used and expended by him for general repairs of the Catholic Cathedral, situate at the northeast corner of Eleventh and K Streets, in the city of Sacramento."

Then follow subsections (b) to (n), inclusive, whereby said testator provides for 13 separate bequests to individuals and institutions which he desires to favor.

"(o) I will, devise and bequeath to Mrs. Mary C. Crosby, now residing at 3116 Telegraph avenue, Oakland, California, the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000.00), provided she be then living at the time of the death of both my wife and myself. Otherwise this bequest shall be void.

"(p) I will, devise and bequeath to Joseph H. Crosby, now residing at 3116 Telegraph avenue, Oakland, California, the sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000.00).

"(q) I will, devise and bequeath to Margaret Faber, now residing at 3116 Telegraph avenue, Oakland, California, the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500.00).

"(r) I will, devise and bequeath to Hazel Lamphrey of Sacramento, California, the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00).

"(s) I will, devise and bequeath to Hattie Kunz the sum of two hundred fifty dollars ($250.00), and to Emma Kunz the sum of two hundred fifty dollars ($250.00), both of said persons now residing at 2131 10th Street, Sacramento, California. In the event of the death of either of said last-named persons before the death of both my wife and myself then the bequest hereby made to such person shall go to the survivor. In the event of the death of both of said persons before the death of both my said wife and myself then these bequests shall be void.

"(t) I will, devise and bequeath to my said trustee above named, the sum of five hundred dollars ($500.00), in trust nevertheless, for the following uses and purposes, to wit:

"To invest and reinvest the same in safe interest-bearing securities or to lend the same on promissory notes secured by first mortgage upon real property or upon ample and safe collateral security and to pay the annual issues and profits thereof for the care and preservation of and to keep in good condition the lot or plot in the city cemetery, known as the Rider plot, wherein are buried my father, John Rider, and my mother, Nancy A. Rider.

"(u) I will, devise and bequeath my library, books, bookcases and desk to Evelyn M. Crosby and William J. Crosby, share and share alike.

"(v) All of the rest, residue and remainder of my said estate I will, devise and bequeath to my said trustee above named, in trust nevertheless, for the following uses and purposes, to wit:

"To invest and reinvest the same in safe interest-bearing securities or to lend the same upon promissory notes secured by first mortgages upon real property or upon ample and safe collateral security during the lifetime of Evelyn M. Crosby and William J. Crosby and out of the income thereof to pay to Margaret Faber, now residing at 3116 Telegraph avenue, Oakland, California, during her lifetime the sum of one hundred fifty dollars ($150.00) per month; to pay to William Egan, now residing at 3116 Telegraph avenue, Oakland, California, during his lifetime, the sum of fifty dollars ($50.00) per month; the remainder of such income shall be paid share and share alike to Evelyn M. Crosby and William J. Crosby, or the survivor of them during the continuance of this trust, provided however, that in the event of the arrival of both Evelyn M. Crosby and William J. Crosby or the survivor of them at the age of 21 years, then this trust shall cease and determine and the corpus of said trust fund shall then go and belong to the said Evelyn M. Crosby and William J. Crosby in equal portions, share and share alike, or to the survivor of them, then living. Provided, however, that the bequest of the residue hereinabove made which shall become the absolute property of the said Evelyn M. Crosby and William J. Crosby upon the arrival of both of them or the survivor of them, at the age of 21 years, if then living, is conditional upon and impressed with the burden of the payment of the following sums for the following periods of time, to wit:

"That there shall be paid out of the corpus of said residue or the income therefrom, if such income be sufficient, to Margaret Faber, the sum of one hundred fifty dollars ($150.00) per month during the term of her natural life and to William Egan, the sum of fifty dollars ($50.00) per month during the term of his natural life.

"(w) I direct that during the probate of this my last will and testament and during the administration of my said estate, that there be paid out of the funds in the hands of my executor, dating from the day of my death and ending on the date of the distribution of my said estate, to Evelyn M. Crosby and William J. Crosby, each the sum of seventy-five dollars ($75.00) per month, such payment, however, to cease as to either or both of said last-named parties upon the death of either or both of them prior to distribution.

"(x) I have intentionally omitted to provide herein for or to make any bequest to any of my brothers or any other of my heirs-at-law, or to any other person except those herein specifically mentioned, I have living at the date of the execution of this my will, two brothers, William Rider and Edward Rider. Both of my said brothers are amply able to provide for themselves, and I have omitted them from the terms of this my last will and testament after full consideration and due deliberation and with full intention.

"(y) In the probate of this my last will and testament, and in all matters concerning or affecting my said estate, I request my said executor to employ as its attorney and counsel, J. W. S. Butler, and so far as I may do so under the law, I hereby appoint him as attorney and counsel for said executor. I make this statement for the reason that the said J. W. S. Butler, for a long period of time, has acted as my counsel and legal adviser and he has a more thorough knowledge of my business and affairs than any other person.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 14th day of November, 1919.

"George K. Rider [Seal]."

The said deceased left an estate consisting of real and personal property, which was later appraised at an amount in excess of $200,000. The National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., named in said will as the executor thereof, was appointed as such executor by the probate court and thereafter qualified and entered upon the discharge of its duties.

Upon the hearing of the petition for distribution, one of the respondents, Edward Rider, appeared and contested the right of the appellants to share in the distribution of said estate and claimed that he, as an heir at law of said deceased, was entitled to have an undivided one-half of the said estate distributed to him, subject only to a life interest in the trust fund created by said will in favor of the widow of said deceased, the said Annie Rider. This claim on the part of said respondent was based upon the contention that all that portion of the trust provision of said will, except that in favor of the wife of deceased to receive during her lifetime the income from said trust fund, was void for the reason that it was in conflict with sections 715 and 716 of the Civil Code of this state. Said respondent further contended that the said Annie Rider, the wife of said deceased, had waived all her right as surviving wife and heir at law of said decedent to receive any of the property of said estate, except a life interest in said trust fund, by her written waiver signed by her and annexed to said will. Said written waiver is as follows:

"I, the undersigned, Annie Rider, the wife of George K. Rider, do hereby certify and declare that I have read the above and foregoing which is the last will and testament of George K. Rider; that I am familiar with all of the terms of said last will and testament; that the same is made with my full knowledge and consent; that I hereby accept the terms of said last will and testament and specifically waive any and all rights which I may have under the law or otherwise as heir at law or surviving wife or otherwise, in and to any of the property and effects of said George K. Rider, except such bequests as are specifically made to me and in my favor in said last will and testament; and I hereby accept the bequests contained in said last will and testament in full of all property rights or other rights of any kind and character to which I may be entitled under the laws of the state of California as surviving wife of the said George K. Rider.

"Witness my hand this 14th day of November, 1919. Annie Rider."

The probate court sustained the claim of said respondent, and by the decree of distribution distributed the entire estate of said deceased to the said National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., in trust for the use and benefit of decedent's widow, Annie Rider, for the term of her natural life and all the rest and residue thereof to respondents herein, except that there was ordered paid by said decree upon the death of the said Annie Rider all the bequests made by said deceased in paragraph 4 of his will except those mentioned and provided for in subsections (o), (p), (q), (u), (v), and (w) of said fourth paragraph. The bequests which were ordered paid by said decree, however, were directed to be paid, so it is recited therein, "as per agreement, wishes and assignments of respondents." None of the bequests, however, in favor of any of the appellants herein were by said decree directed to be paid. This provision of the decree distributing these bequests is not material to any of the issues raised on either of the appeals taken in this matter, and it will probably not be necessary to again refer to it.

Two appeals were taken from said decree of distribution, and they are before us upon separate records. One of said appeals is by the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., the trustee named in said will, and the following named persons, all of whom were named as legatees in said fourth paragraph of said will: Mary C. Crosby, Joseph H. Crosby, Evelyn M. Anderson, formerly Evelyn M. Crosby, William J. Crosby, and Margaret Faber, all of whom were excluded by said decree of distribution from participating in the distribution of said estate. The said William J. Crosby, being a minor, appears by his guardian ad litem, Joseph H. Crosby. The second of said appeals was taken by the said Annie Rider, the widow of decedent. As the validity of the trust provision of said will, except that portion thereof in favor of the said Annie Rider, is one of the main questions presented on each appeal, the two appeals will be considered together. Should said trust provision be found to be invalid, there will then remain the further question presented by the appeal of Annie Rider as to the effect of the written waiver of said widow attached to the will of said deceased, and the validity of that portion of the decree of distribution based upon the construction given said written waiver by the probate court, which resulted in the distribution of the whole of said estate, except a life interest in the trust fund provided in said will in favor of the widow, to the respondents herein to the entire exclusion of any right therein of the said Annie Rider, either as the surviving wife or heir at law of said decedent. The respondents herein are the said Edward Rider, a brother of said deceased, and Hazel Lamphrey and Genevieve Wallace, daughters of a deceased brother of the testator, whose death took place prior to that of the testator. Since the perfecting of her appeal Annie Rider has died, and Joseph H. Crosby, the executor of her last will and testament, has been substituted in her place as a party hereto.

The position of the widow of said decedent, Annie Rider, relative to the validity of those portions of said will in question was that it was her desire that they be enforced according to their terms. She did not question their validity and made no contention that they were illegal in any particular. She therefore joined with the other appellants herein in asking to have the will of decedent, in its entirety, declared legal and all the terms given the effect intended for them by the testator. She did contend, however, that in case portions of the will which the probate court declared void were finally determined to be contrary to the law of this state and therefore void, that she was entitled to share in the distribution of his estate as the surviving wife and heir at law of her deceased husband.

The validity of the trust, created by said will, other than that portion thereof in favor of the widow, it is conceded by all the parties hereto, depends upon the effect to be given the following provisions found in the third paragraph of said will:

"And thereafter in the event of her death to pay all her just debts and liabilities, funeral expenses, and expenses of last illness, and thereupon the remainder of said trust fund then in the hands of my said trustee shall be vested in and shall go to the several parties hereinafter named as beneficiaries."

The probate court construed this provision of the will as creating a trust in favor of the creditors of Annie Rider, the widow of said deceased, and that its effect was to suspend the power of alienation for an indefinite period beyond the life of said Annie Rider, and possibly beyond the lives of the persons in being at the time of the creation of said trust. Accordingly, the court held that this provision of the will was in violation of sections 715 and 716 of the Civil Code and was for that reason void. Not only did the probate court hold that this provision of the will was void, but it further held that all of the provisions of the fourth paragraph of said will were also void and declared that the bequests, which the testator attempted by the terms of said paragraph to make in favor of the individuals and institutions therein enumerated, were invalid and void by reason that none of said bequests were to take effect within the period of time limited by said sections 715 and 716 of the Civil Code.

[1] Appellants, in attacking this conclusion of the probate court, contend that the provision directing the trustee to pay the debts, liabilities, funeral expenses, and expenses of last illness of the wife is a mere charge upon the property of the estate in the hands of the trustee; that it does not create any trust whatever; but that upon the death of the said Annie Rider, the beneficiaries in paragraph 4 of said will take the entire estate, subject only to said charge for the payment of the debts and expenses of the deceased widow. We find but few adjudicated cases where any provision, even similar to that now under consideration, has been construed by the court. In the case of Scofield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 362, 11 N. E. 351, the testator by his will left all his estate to trustees, with directions for them to hold the same and to pay the income therefrom to his wife during her lifetime or so long as she remained unmarried. Upon the marriage or death of his wife, the trustees were directed to convert into money sufficient of his estate to pay certain legacies. Said legacies were to be paid within three months after the death or marriage of the wife, and the trustees were then directed to pay the rest and residue of the estate to the son of said testator as soon as said legacies shall have been paid. It was contended that the son did not take under the will for the reason that his estate in remainder did not take effect until three months after the wife's death, and until the legacies had been fully paid. The Supreme Court of Illinois refused to follow this reasoning, and in ruling adversely to this contention did so in the following language (page 355 [120 Ill. 375]):

"It is said that in this case the interest in question was not a vested one at the death of the testator, for the alleged reason that the estate in remainder was not to take effect at the expiration of the life estate, but after the lapse of three months thereafter, during which time property was to be sold, and out of the proceeds of such sales legacies to the amount of $15,000 were to be paid. This position, however, is not sound. A devise to a person after the payment of debts and legacies is not contingent until such debts and legacies are paid. Such a devise confers an immediately vested interest. The words of apparent postponement are considered only as creating a charge."

In McGraw v. McGraw (C. C. A.) 176 F. 312, the testator also conveyed his property to trustees. One of the conditions of the trust was that the trustees were to pay certain of the income from the property of the estate to the decedent's wife and daughter. The will further provided:

> "Upon the death of my said wife said trustees out of the gross income of said estate shall pay the expenses of her funeral and burial in proper and fitting manner and of the inscription of her name upon the monument above provided for. * * *
>
> "Upon the death of both my said wife and my said daughter, and after the payment of all my said debts, my remaining estate, real and personal, shall be distributed by my said trustees as follows:"

The decision in this case was rendered by Mr. Justice Harlan, later of the Supreme Court of the United States, and in part was as follows:

> "The general contention of the plaintiff is that the provisions of the will amount to a prohibition, expressed or implied, of the 'alienation' of the McGraw building during a period of time not based on lives in being at the date of the creation of the estate. And that contention rests principally on those clauses directing that the estate shall not be finally distributed except upon the death of both the wife and daughter, and after the payment of the testator's debts. Items 9 and 10. Thus, it is argued, the alienation of that estate is suspended not only during the lives of the wife and daughter, but must await the payment of debts which might not occur until long after the death of the wife and daughter. We cannot accept that view. If the testator had given no specific direction for the payment of debts, his estate would still have been charged with such debts. * * * The direction, therefore, in the will, not to finally 'distribute' the estate until the debts were paid, should be interpreted to mean nothing more than what the law required as to payment of debts. We cannot agree that the will created a separate, specific, independent trust for the payment of debts to continue, if necessary, beyond the lives of the wife and daughter. If the will were so construed, there would be some ground to contend, as to the McGraw building and lots, that the power of 'alienation' had been suspended beyond the term of two lives in being at the date of the creation of the estate. State v. Holmes, 115 Mich. 456, 73 N. W. 548; Casgrain v. Hammond, 134 Mich. 419, 96 N. W. 510, 104 Am. St. Rep. 610. But we do not so construe the will. In effect, it provided that the estate created was to be enjoyed after the death of the wife and daughter, subject to the payment of any debts legally chargeable upon it. That is, the words 'after the payment of all my said debts' should be held to mean nothing more than if the testator had said, in terms, that the property devised could be enjoyed by the beneficiary after the death of the wife and daughter, 'subject to the payment of all my said debts.' We accept that view. Sound reason, we think, supports this view, and it is sustained by many authorities."

It is a significant circumstance to be observed, that, while said opinion discusses and decided that the "clauses directing that the estate shall not be finally distributed except upon the death of both the wife and daughter, and after the payment of the testator's debts," did not render the bequests following this clause void on account of the direction therein for the payment of the testator's debts, yet no question appears to have been raised as to the validity of said bequest on account of the direction to the trustees to pay the expenses of the funeral and burial of the testator's wife. Evidently, they did not consider that this provision of the will directing the payment of these expenses after the wife's death constituted any serious defect in the will, or one which would render the bequests in question of doubtful validity. The decision, however, is authority, supporting appellants' contention that, under the provisions in a will directing the payment of a bequest after the payment of debts, the beneficiaries take the bequest subject to the payment of the debts.

[2, 3] The case of Shipman v. Rollins, 98 N. Y. 311, was brought by the surviving executor to secure a judicial construction of a will involving certain bequests made to take effect after the death of the wife by the testator. This will contained a provision similar to that in the Rider will, directing the payment of Mrs. Rider's debts after her death, and read as follows:

> "After the death of my wife, what may be left of the real and personal estate hereinbefore devised to her, or the proceeds thereof, I authorize my executors to sell, and add the proceeds of said sales to the amount which is to produce her annuity; and from this fund (if she leaves no cash or property of her own) I direct them to pay her funeral expenses, and such debts as she may have contracted."

The bequests therein were held valid, but, again, neither the court nor counsel seemed to have raised any question as to their invalidity by reason of the provision of the will directing the executor to pay the wife's debts and funeral expenses after her death. These authorities, although they cannot be regarded as absolutely decisive of the questions involved, indicate that the trend of judicial decisions is not to construe a provision of a will similar to that in the Rider will, directing the trustees to pay the debts of the wife after her death, as creating a separate trust in the trustees in favor of the creditors of the wife, but rather to regard such a provision simply as a charge upon the estate then in the hands of the trustees, and that the beneficiaries to whom said estate has been bequeathed or devised by the will succeed to the same subject to such charge. There are no authorities to the contrary, to our knowledge. Under such a construction, there being no intervening trust, the beneficiaries to whom the property is given upon the death of the wife have a vested interest in their respective bequests upon such death. This is in accord with the well-established doctrine that the law favors the vesting of estates, and every interest will be presumed to be vested unless a contrary intention is shown. 10 Cal. Jur. 603; Civ. Code, § 1341; Williams v. Williams, 73 Cal. 99, 14 P. 394. On page 102 (14 P. 396) of the Williams Case, the court states the law in the following language:

> "The law favors the vesting of interests, and every interest will be presumed to be vested, unless a contrary intention is clearly manifest."

[4] It was also the evident intention of the testator that the beneficiaries named in paragraph 4 of his will should, upon the death of his wife, become entitled to their respective bequests, subject only to the payment of the debts of the wife and her funeral expenses and expenses of last illness. This is evident from the terms of the will, notwithstanding the use of the words "thereafter" and "thereupon" in the provisions of the will under discussion. These words must be construed in connection with the words used by the testator in paragraph 4, where the several bequests are provided for. Invariably, the testator, in making these bequests, uses the expression "I will, bequeath and devise." These latter words unquestionably express an intent on the part of the testator to give to the beneficiaries therein named a vested interest in the respective bequests upon the wife's death. Estate of Ritzman, 186 Cal. 567, 569, 199 P. 783; Estate of De Vries, 17 Cal. App. 184, 190, 192, 119 P. 109. In Estate of Ritzman, supra, the court quotes the language of Chief Justice Marshall, found in Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. 68, 8 L. Ed. 322, as follows:

> "The first and great rule in the exposition of wills, to which all other rules must bend, is that the intention of the testator, expressed in his will, shall prevail, provided it be consistent with the rules of law."

With this rule as our guide, there could be no question as to the ultimate construction to be placed upon the will of George K. Rider, deceased. His intention is clear and perfectly apparent. His first wish was to provide his wife with the entire income of his estate so long as she should live, and that all her debts, liabilities, and funeral expenses should be paid. Upon her death, the residue remaining in the hands of the trustees was, by the testator, in plain and unequivocal language, given to the beneficiaries named in the fourth paragraph of his will. In unmistakable language he further indicated that it was his intention that the respondents should not receive any part of his estate, except the bequest of $1,000 to Hazel Lamphrey. The only claim that testator's will is inconsistent with the rules of law is based upon the provision requiring the payment of the wife's debts. We have already shown that a reasonable interpretation of the meaning of this provision does not render it inconsistent with the provisions of any of the rules of law of this state. The will therefore, as a whole, expresses the intention of the testator as to the disposition of his estate and should be upheld as his final testamentary act.

Numerous authorities have been cited by respondent in support of his contention that, if the provisions of the will in question created a trust, it suspended the power of alienation beyond the lives of those in being, or that it possibly did so; that, accordingly, the interest of the beneficiaries under paragraph 4 of the will does not become vested upon Annie Rider's death, but only at the termination of the trust to pay her debts, and, therefore, there are no persons in being during the period of the execution of this trust by whom an absolute interest in possession could be conveyed. We are satisfied that the exposition of the law, as set forth in these authorities, is a correct statement of the legal principles presented therein, but these authorities are, in our opinion, inapplicable to the facts in the present proceeding, inasmuch as the facts herein fail to show that any trust to pay the wife's debts was created by said will.

[5] For another reason we think the bequests in paragraph 4 of the will should be held to be valid. The provision for the payment by the trustee of the wife's debts and liabilities, funeral, and expenses of last illness is, in our opinion, severable from the other provisions set forth in the will, and cannot be considered as a necessary and integral part of the testator's scheme of disposing of his property by last will and testament. This scheme of the testator contemplated that his wife should enjoy the entire income of his estate so long as she might require said income, or, in other words, during her lifetime. When her wants were all met and she had no further need of said property and it could be of no further use to her, the scheme of said testator contemplated that the property of his said estate should then go to the beneficiaries; in the amounts and in the manner provided in paragraph 4 of said will. It is true that it was a part of this scheme that the wife's debts and liabilities, funeral, and expenses of last illness should be paid after her death by said trustee, but the payment of these obligations of his wife was a trivial and inconsequential part of the whole scheme of the testator. This part can be eliminated from the whole scheme without any serious impairment of the scheme as a whole. With this part of the scheme eliminated, the material and essential features of the testator's plan for the disposition of his estate by last will and testament remain intact, and every person and institution, which said testator desired to share in his bounty, receive the amount in the precise manner and at the exact time designated by said testator in his said last will and testament. Therefore, conceding that the provisions of the will in reference to the payment of the wife's debts after her death created an invalid trust, yet its invalidity will not impair the validity of the portions of the will which are legal. Estate of Phelps, 182 Cal. 752, 190 P. 17; Estate of Whitney, 176 Cal. 19, 167 P. 399; Estate of Pichoir, 139 Cal. 685, 73 P. 606; Estate of Fair, 136 Cal. 79, 68 P. 306.

In Estate of Phelps, the rule is prescribed as follows:

> "Where there are 'several independent trusts, some of which are legal, while others are in contravention of the statute regulating uses and trusts or the statutes against perpetuities, the estate of the trustee will be upheld to the extent necessary to enable him to execute the valid trusts, and will only be void as to the illegal or invalid trusts.' It is an application of rule stated in section 1317 of the Civil Code that, where the intention of the testator cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible. The rule is also stated as follows: 'Where there are valid and invalid clauses in a will, the question whether the valid clauses can stand depends upon whether or not the invalid ones are so interwoven with them that they cannot be eliminated without interfering with and changing the main scheme of the testator.' * * * A perusal of the trust clause shows that the preliminary portion providing for the annuities to the brothers and sisters temporarily, until the accumulation of the fund, was but a minor part of the main scheme of the testatrix. It is temporary in character, in the nature of a family allowance. It was intended merely to provide an income for them during the period of the settlement of the trust. The principal parts of the plan were to provide the fund of $240,000, to divide the income thereof among the brothers and sisters during their respective lives and give the remainder to their children or heirs, as specified; to pay the specific legacies mentioned in the succeeding clause and to the residuary legatees the ultimate residue. The preliminary scheme is not essential to the main plan, nor so interwoven with it that the two must stand or fall together."

We conclude, therefore, that the bequests provided for in paragraph 4 of said will are valid, even though the provision in the will for the payment of the wife's debts after her death might be invalid, as this latter provision is but a minor part of the general scheme of the testator and can be severed therefrom without materially affecting said general scheme. But, as we have before indicated, the provision providing the trustee to pay these debts of the wife after her death, is, in our opinion not objectionable to the terms of sections 715 and 716 of the Civil Code or any other law of the state. It is, accordingly, a valid and legal part of the will of the testator and should be given effect with the other provisions of said will.

This conclusion that the will, as a whole, is valid renders it unnecessary for us to consider any of the points raised by the appeal of the surviving wife, Annie Rider. Her concern, as we have already pointed out, was as to a legal distribution of any property of said estate as to which it might be held that said deceased died intestate. The will, as we construe it, disposes of the whole estate of said decedent, and, therefore, the questions presented by her appeal are no longer of any concern to her or any one else.

The decree of distribution, except as to that portion thereof providing for a trust in favor of Annie Rider during her lifetime, is reversed, and the probate court is directed to enter a decree distributing the property of said estate in accordance with the terms of the last will and testament of said deceased.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; FINLAYSON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SULLIVAN, J.;

199 Cal. 742

In re RIDER'S ESTATE. (Sac. 3874.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1926.)

1. Executors and administrators ⟹513(12)—Orders approving executor's accounts, including payments made to surviving wife under will, held conclusive (Code Civ. Proc. § 1637).

Payments made by executor to surviving wife, under will directing payment of all income to her, held properly included in executor's accounts so that, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1637, order of probate court settling accounts was conclusive and binding on parties interested in estate.

2. Executors and administrators ⟹513(3)—Orders of probate court approving executor's account will be presumed to have been made on proper proof.

It must be presumed that orders of probate court, approving executor's account, were made on proper and legal proof, and that all legal requirements have been complied with.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Proceeding for distribution by the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., as the executor of the estate of George K. Rider, deceased.

Decree of distribution in favor of Edward Rider, contestant, and others, and from that part of the decree charging the executor with certain moneys as cash on hand the executor appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 251 P. 799.

Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond and Arthur E. Miller, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Thomas B. Leeper and O. G. Hopkins, both of Sacramento, and Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. This appeal is from the same decree of distribution in the Estate of George Rider, Deceased, from which two other appeals were taken and which have been decided this day. (Sac. Nos. 3872, 3873), 251 P. 799. The appeal herein is from that portion of said decree charging the appellant, the executor of the will of the deceased, with $56,206.32, as representing the total balance in cash on hand in said estate. Appellant contends that it was erroneously charged with $28,051.49, which it had paid to Annie Rider, the surviving wife of said deceased, and that an error in the figures, amounting to $322.76, had been made in computing said balance.

The item of $28,051.49 was paid by said executor to Annie Rider, the widow of said deceased, under what said executor conceived to be the intent and purpose of the last will and testament of said deceased, a copy of which may be found in the decision of this court above referred to. By the terms of this will, the whole estate of the testator was devised and bequeathed to the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., as trustee, to pay the entire income therefrom to the widow of said deceased during her lifetime. The National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. was also appointed the executor of said will, and during the administration of said estate, and, acting under the terms of said will as it construed them, said executor paid to Annie Rider the income from the estate as it received the same from time to time. $11,851.49 was in this way paid to Annie Rider during what was practically the first year after decedent's death. This item was included in the executor's first annual account. During the next period of time, practically 18 months, covered by the second annual account, the executor in the same manner paid Annie Rider $16,200, and this amount was included in its second annual account. These accounts each came on regularly for hearing, after due notice given, and were approved and allowed by the probate court. Thereafter, however, and at the hearing of the petition for distribution the probate court, notwithstanding these previous orders approving the first and second annual accounts, directed said executor to account for all sums of money paid Annie Rider during the period of time covered by said accounts and charged said amounts against said executor in fixing the balance of money in its hands for distribution. Appellant contends that this action of the probate court was erroneous and that the court had no power, after settling the two accounts of the executor, to thereafter charge it with the items which had been included in said accounts, and allowed, and approved by the court. As supporting this contention appellant relies upon section 1637 of the Code of Civil Procedure and Estate of Grant, 131 Cal. 426, 63 P. 731.

The court in Estate of Grant, supra, goes into the matter quite thoroughly and concludes that the order settling accounts, whether it be an annual or a final account, "is conclusive as to all 'items contained therein' except as to persons under legal disability." On the other hand, respondents contend that an order approving an account is binding and conclusive only as to the items that are properly included in such an account; that advances made to beneficiaries are not proper items, either in an annual or a final account; and that an order of court approving such an account is not conclusive or binding as to such items improperly included therein. It was held in Estate of Willey, 140 Cal. 238, 241, 73 P. 998, 999, that:

> "The duties of the executors are to preserve the estate, pay the indebtedness of the deceased, the charges of administration, and put the estate in such condition that distribution may be had to those entitled to it under the will. In the matter at bar, however, the executors did something more. They assumed, in advance of the decree of distribution, to construe the terms of the will, the validity of particular bequests, who were the beneficiaries thereunder, and to make payments of the funds of the estate upon their own judgment as to these matters. This was clearly outside of their duties, was an attempt to intrench on the exclusive jurisdiction of the court to determine these matters on distribution, and an infringement upon the rights of all persons interested in the estate to have these matters disposed of solely on distribution —partial or final."

This case arose, however, on an appeal from an order striking out from an account certain payments made to beneficiaries under the will of the deceased on the ground that they were not proper items for settlement or approval in an executor's account. The question as to the conclusive and binding effect of an order settling an executor's account, including such items, did not arise in this case. Neither was it one of the questions decided in Estate of Ross, 179 Cal. 358, 182 P. 303, cited by respondents.

[1] We think, however, that the payments made by the executor to Annie Rider were more than mere advances to a beneficiary under the will of the deceased. By the terms of the will of George K. Rider, deceased, his wife, Annie Rider, was to receive all the income from the property of said estate. Included in the decedent's estate was not only his separate property, if he had any, and his interest in the community property, but also the interest of his wife, Annie Rider, in the community property. In consideration of the provisions in the will giving to her the income during her lifetime, she surrendered her right in the community property and waived all her right to any of the property of her deceased husband as his surviving wife and heir at law. There is no evidence that she was possessed of any other property than that which she received under the will of her husband. The testator in turn evidently attempted to provide for her every need, even making provision therein for the payment of her debts and liabilities after her death and her funeral and expenses of last illness. It is inconceivable that he could have been so solicitous for her welfare, as manifested by his scrupulously making provision for her care, support, and maintenance after the property of the estate should come into the hands of the trustee, not forgetting to provide for her last illness and final interment, and then refusing or intentionally neglecting to provide for her immediate needs following his death and during the administration of his estate. To attribute to deceased any such intention would be to place an unreasonable and unnatural, and we believe unwarranted, construction upon the terms of his will and the conduct and actions of the testator surrounding its execution. Undoubtedly he intended the provisions that he had made in his will for the care and support of his wife should be for her maintenance, until such a time as the property of the estate should be distributed to the trustee, when she would continue to receive the entire income therefrom. Such a provision in the will, under such circumstances, is sometimes referred to as a bequest for maintenance, and it has been held that such a bequest dates from the death of the testator and that the beneficiary therein is entitled to receive the income from the property of the estate immediately upon the decedent's death. Estate of Dare, 196 Cal. 29, 235 P. 725.

[2] The proceedings at the hearing of the first and second annual accounts, in which the items in dispute were contained, are not before us. It must be presumed that the orders of the court approving these accounts were made upon proper and legal proof and that all legal requirements had been complied with. It appears that these items were paid by the executor under the claim that the will required their payment as maintenance for the widow during the administration of the estate, and they were, accordingly, included in its accounts. As such, they were proper items to be included in the executor's accounts and the orders thereafter approving said accounts were conclusive and binding upon the parties interested in the estate. It was error, therefore, on the part of the probate court to charge said executor with the items which had previously been allowed and approved by the court in the order settling the first and second annual accounts. These orders were conclusive against all parties in any way interested in the estate, saving, of course, persons laboring under any legal disability. Code Civ. Proc., § 1637.

As to the item of $322.76, claimed to be an error against appellant, made in computing the amount of cash in the hands of the executor, it is evident that a new decree of distribution will have to be made in the matter of this estate. In preparing such decree, any error in computation made in the previous decree, if any such error was made, can be readily corrected in such new decree.

That part of the decree of distribution appealed from on this appeal is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; FINLAYSON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SULLIVAN, J.

---

199 Cal. 747

In re RIDER'S ESTATE. (Sac. 3800.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1926.)

Appeal and error ⟹781(4)—Question of wife's right to family allowance, pending administration of husband's estate, becomes moot on her death.

On death of surviving wife, questions involved on appeal from order of probate court, refusing her family allowance, pending administration of husband's estate, become moot.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Proceedings by Annie Rider, as surviving wife, for order of family allowance for her support during administration of the estate of George K. Rider, deceased. From an order refusing the allowance, petitioner appeals, Joseph H. Crosby, as executor of her estate, being substituted after her death. Appeal dismissed.

See, also, 251 P. 799, 805.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Thomas B. Leeper and O. G. Hopkins, both of Sacramento, and Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, for respondent Edward Rider.

CURTIS, J. This appeal was originally taken by Annie Rider, the surviving wife of George K. Rider, deceased, from an order of the probate court refusing to make a family allowance for her support during the administration of the estate of said deceased. Since the perfecting of said appeal, Annie Rider has died and Joseph H. Crosby, as the executor of her last will and testament, has been substituted in her place and stead as appellant herein.

Upon the death of said Annie Rider, the questions involved herein have become moot. It would accomplish no purpose to permit the executor to prosecute this appeal, for even if he should succeed in securing a reversal of the order appealed from, the probate court could not, after the death of said Annie Rider, act upon her petition for a family allowance, except to dismiss the same on account of her death.

This appeal is therefore dismissed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; FINLAYSON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SULLIVAN, J.

200 Cal. 44

CALIFORNIA HIGHWAY COMMISSION, DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING, v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 12069.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1926.)

1. Master and servant 🔑361—Under statutes requiring convicts to work for state without compensation, master and servant relation not created where convict's civil rights are suspended (Pen. Code, §§ 673, 1586, 1588).

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1586, 1588, providing for employment of convicts by state and requiring convicts to work, relationship of master and servant does not arise by implication, where work is compulsory and no compensation allowed, in view of section 673 suspending civil rights of prisoners.

2. Master and servant 🔑361—Statute, providing for employment of convicts on highways for compensation held to make convicts "employees" (Convicts Road Camp Bill; Workmen's Compensation Act).

Convicts Road Camp Bill (St. 1923, p. 667), providing for employment of convicts on highways and allowing compensation, termed "earnings," held to create relation of master and servant between convict so employed and state highway commission, and make convict "employee" under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employee.]

3. Pardon 🔑1—Legislature may restore civil rights of prisoners which it has suspended.

Power of Legislature to deprive prisoner of civil rights includes corresponding power to restore such rights.

4. Master and servant 🔑361—"Employ," as used in statute providing for employment of convicts, should be construed according to ordinary usage (Convicts Road Camp Bill; Civ. Code, § 13).

Word "employ," as used in Convicts Road Camp Bill (St. 1923, p. 667), providing for employment of convicts on state roads, should be construed according to context and approved usage of language, under Civ. Code, § 13, unless different sense is obviously intended.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employ.]

5. Convicts 🔑8—Statute providing for employment of convicts on state highways should be liberally construed (Convicts Road Camp Bill).

Convicts Road Camp Bill (St. 1923, p. 667), providing for employment of convicts on state highways at compensation, should be liberally construed to carry out beneficent purpose of statute.

6. States 🔑119—Sums paid convicts working on state roads held not gift (Convicts Road Camp Bill; Const. art. 4, § 31).

Sums paid convicts under Convicts Road Camp Bill (St. 1923, p. 667), held not a gift, under Const. art. 4, § 31, inasmuch as Legislature had power to restore suspended civil rights of convicts and to compensate them for their labor.

7. Master and servant 🔑361—Convict injured while exercising option to work on roads held entitled to compensation as employee (Pen. Code, § 673; Convicts Road Camp Bill; Workmen's Compensation Act).

Convict injured while engaged in working on highways where such work was optional, though not paroled, under Pen. Code, § 673, held entitled to compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended), as Convicts Road Camp Bill (St. 1923, p. 667), made such convict employee and restored civil rights.

In Bank.

Application by the California Highway Commission, Department of Engineering, for certiorari, to be directed to the Industrial Accident Commission and another, to review an order of the Commission awarding compensation for injuries to a convict engaged in highway work. Award affirmed.

Frank J. Creede and John J. Taheny, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Commission.

Milton L. Schmitt, of San Francisco, for respondent Smith.

PER CURIAM. The following opinion prepared by Mr. Presiding Justice John F. Tyler of the District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, while sitting as a justice pro tempore of this court, is adopted as the opinion of the court:

"Certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission. The facts are simple and without dispute. Robert Smith was convicted of the crime of burglary in the first degree. On March 10, 1922, he was sentenced to state prison for a term of from one to 15 years. After serving the minimum sentence of one year the board of prison directors fixed his full sentence at five years. Shortly thereafter

Smith made application and was granted permission to perform work on the public highways of the state under the direction of the state highway commission, he being eligible for this privilege. One of the benefits enjoyed by prisoners assigned to this character of work is a credit on the sentence to be served of two days for every one day of service at highway work. Shortly after his assignment to a prison camp, chapter 316 of the Laws of 1923 became effective. This act provides, among other things, for the payment of compensation to a convict for work so performed by him, and Smith received the benefits conferred by the act. On March 17, 1924, while performing his duties as a road laborer he was struck by flying fragments from an accidental explosion of a blast, causing him various and serious bodily injuries, including injuries to both of his eyes. Smith was thereupon returned to the hospital at San Quentin for treatment. Upon his discharge from the hospital he remained within the prison until he was finally paroled on account of the severe injuries he had received. His credits materially reduced the term of his sentence, which was completed on June 25, 1925, at which time he was finally discharged from custody. On August 25th, following, he filed an application with the Industrial Accident Commission for disability benefits by reason of his injuries. The state insurance fund was the insurance carrier, and it was joined as a defendant in the proceeding. The commission made an award in favor of Smith. It provided for the payment to him forthwith of the sum of $791.52 as compensation for permanent disability, and, beginning with March 10, 1926, the further weekly sum of $7.76 for a period of 138 weeks, and after the expiration of that time, the weekly sum of $4.79 for the remainder of his life. The award was made upon the theory that the relation of master and servant existed between California highway commission and the applicant by reason of the provisions of the act of 1923, providing for the payment by the commission to convicts for services performed by them on the state highways. The sole question, therefore, that is here presented is whether or not a convict engaged in the performance of labor on a state highway under the provisions of chapter 316 of the Laws of 1923 is an employee within the meaning of the Constitution and the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended).

[1] "There is no provision either in the organic law or the statutes which directly includes or excludes them as such. The question, therefore, concerning what relationship exists between the state and an incarcerated convict so employed, involves the proper construction to be given to the various laws relating to the subject. Section 673 of the Penal Code declares that a sentence of imprisonment in a state prison for a term less than life suspends all the civil rights of the prisoner so sentenced during his term of imprisonment. Section 1586 of the same Code provides, in substance, that all convicts may be employed by authority of the prison directors under the charge of the wardens in performance of work for the state. Section 1588 charges the directors with the duty of requiring every able-bodied convict confined in a state prison to perform as many hours of faithful labor every day during the term of his imprisonment as shall be prescribed by the rules and regulations of the prison. Under this section, and before the passage of the indeterminate sentence law, which went into effect July 27, 1917, a convict who performed in a faithful manner the duties assigned to him was entitled as of right to a fixed credit for good conduct. That plan was done away with by the Legislature in adopting the plan of indeterminate sentence. In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 695, 171 P. 958. The board of prison directors thereafter, and solely as a prison regulation, adopted a plan by which, in the discretion of the board, deserving convicts were awarded credits. See In re Mann, 192 Cal. 165, 219 P. 71. It is manifest that under these sections the relationship of master and servant growing out of employment does not exist by implication for the reason that a convict confined within the prison walls is deprived of civil rights which his sentence suspends. Work performed by him is compulsory on his part and for it he receives no compensation. The incapacity thus imposed upon felons resembles in some respects the ancient ban of civiliter mortuus. Lewis v. State, 96 N. Y. 71, 48 Am. Rep. 607; Thompson v. Bronk, 126 Mich. 455, 85 N. W. 1084. Under the provisions of the Act of June 16, 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 1048), a comprehensive parole system has been adopted under which a prisoner undergoing a first term of imprisonment other than for life is entitled, as a matter of right, upon the expiration of one year of his sentence, to make application for parole. If parole be granted, a prisoner so paroled may contract for his employment, for by section 673 of the Penal Code, the board of prison directors may restore to such prisoner certain civil rights. The scope and extent of the civil rights so restored are to be determined by the board at the time the parole is granted. The question of what contractual rights a paroled prisoner may acquire under this act, however, is a purely academic one so far as this case is concerned, for the applicant had not been granted a parole thereunder at the time of his injury. A discussion of the status of a paroled prisoner may be found in California Law Review, vol. 2, p. 401, and also in volume 5 of the same periodical at page 81. We are not here directly concerned with this question.

[2] "In the year 1923 the Legislature enacted what is generally known as the Convicts Road Camp Bill (Stats. 1923, c. 316, p. 667). This act, among other things, provides that the state highway commission may employ or cause to be employed on the highways of the state certain convicts confined in the state prisons, and that when so employed such convicts shall receive a specified compensation not exceeding 75 cents net per day for their labor. Provision is also made for authority of the prison directors to send the number of convicts to a prison camp as may be requisitioned by the commission. Under these conditions it is respondents' claim in support of the award that this act entirely changes the status of convicts who may be assigned to work on the highways and creates a new class of paroled prisoners between whom and the state a relationship is created, one of the incidents of which is a liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act for injuries. Respondents seem to concede that while engaged in work within the prison walls, this claimed relationship does not and cannot arise, but they insist that there is logically and necessarily a real, definite, and distinct difference between the status of a convict within and one without the prison walls performing work upon the highways under the provisions of the act in question; that as to the latter it was the intention of the Legislature as evidenced by the use in the act of the words 'employ' and 'employment' to authorize the state highway commission to enter into a contract of employment with convicts released for such work. We are of a like opinion. It may be conceded that one serving a sentence of imprisonment in a state prison is, in contemplation of law, a prisoner therein, as well when at work outside, under surveillance of the prison guards, as when confined within its walls. Bradford v. Glenn, 188 Cal. 350, 205 P. 449. The power, however, to deprive a prisoner of his civil rights is one that resides in the Legislature.

[3-6] "The power to thus deprive a prisoner of such rights must include the corresponding power to restore them. This we think was the manifest intention and purpose of the Convicts Road Camp Bill. The legislation is in keeping with the modern idea that it is for the benefit of society to rehabilitate those possessing criminal instincts, and one of the means employed is to partially restore to them their civil rights to contract for their labor as an encouragement to that end. The act so expressly indicates, for it provides by the very first section thereof that the 'state highway commission may employ or cause to be employed, convicts confined in the state prisons,' etc. In the same section it is provided that all convicts so employed shall receive the compensation provided for, and such compensation is referred to as earnings. The word 'employ' has a definite legal meaning, and legal terms when used in a statute are to be construed according to the context and the approved usage of language unless a different sense is obviously intended. Civ. Code, § 13; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 191 Cal. 404, 216 P. 578, 43 A. L. R. 1304. There is nothing contained in the statute which indicates that a different meaning was intended. On the contrary, its manifest object was to authorize those who were afforded the privilege to enter into a contract of employment with the state highway commission to have restored to them the limited civil right which the reformative measure provides for. The statute as a whole should be liberally construed to carry out its beneficent purposes. Western Ind. Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 159 P. 721. It was in evidence and it is not disputed that it was optional with prisoners as to whether they would accept this labor or not. They were at liberty to refuse it, and in some instances it had been refused. Having accepted it, however, the applicant was entitled to all the rights under the act, one of which must be held to be the benefits enjoyed by employees under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The Legislature having the power to restore the suspended civil rights of a convict and having the further power to compensate them for the character of the work in question, it follows that the sums provided for do not constitute a gift under section 31 of article 4 of the Constitution, as suggested by petitioners.

[7] "We conclude, therefore, that under the terms of the Convicts Road Camp Bill the Legislature intended to restore to a convict assigned to work upon the public highways such limited civil rights as are necessary to create the relation of master and servant between him and the state highway commission, and, this being so, he must be held to be an employee within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act. It follows that the applicant is entitled to all the benefits of this act, and the Industrial Accident Commission was correct in so concluding."

For the reasons given, the award is affirmed.

---

80 Cal. App. 284

HULL v. RAY. (Civ. 3182.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 15, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1071(1)—Judgment must be reversed, where findings are irreconcilably in conflict.

Where findings are irreconcilably in conflict, judgment must be reversed, because it is impossible, under such circumstances, to determine which findings controlled court in rendering its judgment.

2. Trial 🔑404(1) — Liberal construction should be given findings to support judgment, if possible.

Findings should be liberally construed so as to support judgment, if possible.

3. Sales 🔑135—In action to rescind contract to purchase cattle, defendant held not to have breached contract by failure to procure transfer of cattle's registration.

In action to rescind contract to purchase cattle, defendant held not to have breached contract by failure to procure transfer of cattle's registration, not being required to procure actual transfer of record of ownership of blooded cattle on books of certain cattle club, such club not having been mentioned in sales contract and having no claim to title in stock in question, and there being sufficient compliance by defendant's tendering of certificate entitling plaintiff to procure such transfer upon application.

4. Sales 🔑143—Bill of sale is not required to be in particular form, so long as it contains language sufficiently describing property and importing actual transfer of title.

A bill of sale is not required to be under seal or couched in any particular form, so long as it sufficiently describes property sold and contains language importing actual transfer of title.

5. Sales 🔑141—"Bill of sale" is written agreement by which person transfers his title to goods or chattels to another person.

A "bill of sale" is a written agreement by which one person transfers his title to goods or chattels to another person.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Bill of Sale.]

6. Sales 🔑135—In action to rescind contract to purchase cattle, defendant, agreeing to furnish good and sufficient bill of sale, held required to give clear title to unincumbered stock.

Where defendant to action to rescind contract to purchase cattle agreed to furnish plaintiff with good and sufficient bill of sale, he was required by implication to furnish title that was clear to unincumbered stock.

7. Sales 🔑135—In action to rescind contract to purchase cattle, defendant held to have failed to furnish required clear, unincumbered title (Civ. Code, § 1765).

In action to rescind contract to purchase cattle, defendant held to have failed to deliver clear, unincumbered title to stock, as required by contract, even though receipt and transfer of documents might be said to constitute bill of sale to registered cattle, under Civ. Code, § 1765, there being absolutely no document purporting to represent bill of sale to four unregistered cattle.

8. Sales 🔑199—Passage of title to personalty, being dependent upon intention of parties, must be determined from surrounding circumstances, mere delivery not being conclusive.

Mere delivery of personal property is not conclusive as to passing of title thereto, question as to title's passage being dependent upon intention of parties, which must be determined from facts and circumstances of case, delivery being only one circumstance.

9. Sales 🔑135—Party, contracting to deliver record as well as actual title, must deliver document purporting to convey title, in order to comply with contract.

One, who contracts to deliver not only actual title, but record evidence of that title as well, has not fulfilled his agreement until document purporting to convey title has been delivered, there being clear distinction between record title and actual title to either personal property or real estate.

10. Sales 🔑279—Warranty of title to personalty conferred by statute is not equivalent to written warranty of title (Civ. Code, § 1765).

Warranty of title to personal property, conferred by Civ. Code, § 1765, is not equivalent in every respect to written warranty of title.

11. Sales 🔑143—Failure to provide written warranty of title to personalty, as agreed, constitutes breach of contract, authorizing "rescission" (Civ. Code, § 1689).

Where there is an agreement to deliver written warranty of title to personalty upon sale hereof, refusal to comply with such agreement constitutes "rescission," pursuant to Civ. Code, § 1689.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Rescission.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; F. C. Drumm, Judge.

Action by John S. Hull against Carl Ray to rescind a contract to purchase registered cattle. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Sloane & Sloane, of San Diego, for appellant.

Fred W. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of defendant, in a suit to rescind a contract to purchase certain registered cattle. Appellant asserts that the findings of the trial court are so conflicting and irreconcilable as to require the reversal of the judgment. The evidence adduced at the trial is not before this court.

The findings of the trial court were to the effect that on November 13, 1922, defendant agreed, in writing, to sell plaintiff 14 head of registered cattle and 4 head of unregistered stock for the sum of $3,500; that said pedigreed stock were registered with the American Jersey Cattle Club of New York, and that the defendant held the certificates of such registered stock in his own name; that by the terms of said contract defendant agreed to "execute and deliver to this plaintiff a good and sufficient bill of sale of said cattle, together with a warranty of title"; that, as part consideration for the purchase of said cattle, plaintiff relied on the fact that said cattle were blooded and registered, which would render them more valuable for breeding purposes and for resale; "that the defendant did not, and has not, at any time, failed or refused to furnish the plaintiff the warranty of title, and certificates of record, transfer of ownership of said registered cattle," but that the only instruments which defendant did supply to plaintiff, pursuant to said contract, were tendered on November 13, 1922, and consisted of the following:

> "Bill of Sale.
>
> "April 10, 1923.
>
> "Received of John S. Hull, payment in full for 20 head of Jerseys, bought of me on November 13, 1922. [Signed] Carl Ray."

And accompanying this document were separate printed declarations of ownership of said blooded stock and authorizations for said cattle club to transfer to plaintiff the registration thereof. Each of these documents were filled out with the name, number, history, and description of the said blooded animals, in the following language:

> "Transfer of Ownership.
>
> "Send this paper for record to the American Jersey Cattle Club, No. 324 West Twenty-Third St., New York. (See directions on back.)
>
> "I sold to John S. Hull of Nester, Cal., the following Jersey animal, ——— (male; female). Name, ———. Herd Register No. ———. Date of delivery to buyer, ———.
>
> "I hereby authorize the transfer of ownership

as above, to be registered on the books of the American Jersey Cattle Club.

"[Signed] Carl Ray, Lankersham, Cal."

The court further found that the defendant did furnish to plaintiff "warranty of title, and certificates of record, transfer of ownership, indorsed to the plaintiff, and authorizing the American Jersey Cattle Club to transfer said registered cattle into the name of plaintiff"; that the "defendant declined and refused to supply plaintiff with any other or different instruments"; that on April 4, 1923, "plaintiff had fully performed all of said contract on his part," and thereupon demanded of the defendant a good and sufficient bill of sale of all of said cattle, together with the warranty of title in compliance with their written agreement, and on May 5, 1923, plaintiff offered to restore to defendant all of said cattle and gave notice of rescission of said sale.

Upon these findings, the court rendered judgment for the defendant.

It is not pretended that any instrument tendered to the plaintiff referred to or described any of the unregistered cattle which were purchased, nor that the title to the cattle was actually defective.

Appellant contends that the findings are fatally conflicting and that the defendant has failed and refused to supply him with (1) a good and sufficient bill of sale, (2) warranty of title to said stock, or (3) certificates issued by the American Jersey Cattle Club of New York, transferring upon their books the title of said cattle to plaintiff, and that the judgment should therefore be reversed.

[1, 2] Where findings are irreconcilably in conflict, the judgment must be reversed, for the reason that it is impossible, under such circumstances, to determine which findings controlled the court in rendering its judgment. Los Angeles Land Co. v. Marr, 187 Cal. 126, 200 P. 1051; Estep v. Armstrong, 91 Cal. 659, 27 P. 1091; Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454, 18 P. 872, 21 P. 11; Manly v. Howlett, 55 Cal. 94; Rand v. Columbian Realty Co., 13 Cal. App. 444, 110 P. 322. But findings should be liberally construed so as to support the judgment, if possible. Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 390, 35 P. 1005; Goodwin v. Snyder, 70 Cal. App. 98, 232 P. 763.

[3] The plaintiff cannot complain because the defendant has failed or refused to procure the transfer or registration of the blooded stock upon the books of the American Jersey Cattle Club. Nowhere in the contract does it appear that the defendant agreed to obtain this transfer. The name of the cattle club is not even mentioned in the contract. This club had no title to the stock in question and no authority to transfer title. We assume that it merely purported to keep for its members an authentic record of the ownership, history, and description of blooded stock, which upon application it would certify, or transfer, upon the payment of customary fees, not as a public record, but rather as a private enterprise. The contract involved in this case had nothing to do with membership in this cattle club, nor with the procuring of a transfer of the record of ownership upon the books of that organization. But certificates were tendered to plaintiff which authorized him to procure the transfer upon application. We are of the opinion that this was a compliance with the contract, so far as that feature of the agreement is concerned. It therefore follows that the trial court properly found that the defendant was not required to procure the actual transfer of the record of ownership of the blooded cattle on the books of the American Jersey Cattle Club.

But the defendant did agree to "execute and deliver to the plaintiff a good and sufficient bill of sale" to all of said cattle, both registered and unregistered stock, and to furnish him with a "warranty of title."

[4, 5] A bill of sale is not required to be under seal, nor couched in any particular form (35 Cyc. 162), so long as it sufficiently describes the property sold and contains language importing actual transfer of title. A bill of sale is a written agreement by which one person transfers his title to goods or chattels to another person. Black's Law Dict. 134; Berry v. Robinson, 122 Ga. 575, 50 S. E. 378. In Putnam v. McDonald, 72 Vt. 4, 47 A. 159, it was held that a signed instrument in the following language, "Terms cash. P. to M. dr. one bicycle, $47.50, paid July 27, 1896," constituted a mere receipt, and was not a bill of sale. The court there said:

> "A bill of sale is a writing evidencing the transfer of personal property from one person to another. The nature of the writing would seem to require that it contain some statement of the fact of transfer."

In Houghton v. Carpenter, 40 Vt. 588, it was said that a bill of sale must contain the substantial elements of a contract, and one of the defects pointed out in this writing, was that it did not contain any words importing a transfer of title. Under the English rule which requires the registration of bills of sale, it is held that the receipt for the purchase money of goods sold, not amounting on the face of it to a grant or transfer, is not a bill of sale.

[6] In the instant case, the defendant agreed to furnish plaintiff with a "good and sufficient bill of sale, together with a warranty of title." The use of the term "good and sufficient" implies that the title was to be clear and the stock unincumbered. Chancellor Kent says:

> "A covenant to execute and deliver a good and sufficient deed of a piece of land does not mean merely a conveyance good in point of form. That would be a covenant without substance. But it means an operative conveyance; one that carries with it a good and sufficient title to the lands to be conveyed." Clute v. Robinson, 2 Johns. [N. Y.] 595, 613; Story v. Conger, 36 N. Y. 673, 93 Am. Dec. 546.

[7] The respondent contends that the foregoing receipt, together with the transfer documents taken together, constitute a sufficient bill of sale in point of form, and that by the sale and delivery of the cattle, under the provisions of section 1765, Civil Code, the title was automatically warranted by law as completely as though the defendant had specifically incorporated a written warranty of title in the documents which he tendered to plaintiff. It is true that section 1765, Civil Codes, provides:

> "One who sells or agrees to sell personal property, as his own, thereby warrants that he has a good and unincumbered title thereto."

And it was said in Gross v. Kierski, 41 Cal. 111, 115:

> "The sale and delivery of the goods in possession, where nothing is said about the title, is, therefore, precisely equivalent to an express warranty of title, and, the facts being ascertained, the rights and liabilities of the parties are exactly the same."

[8] The document hereinbefore mentioned, termed a "bill of sale" is nothing more than an ordinary receipt for the purchase price of cattle. It does not purport to acknowledge the transfer of title to the stock. The form and language used in that document are insufficient to constitute a bill of sale. The second instrument hereinbefore mentioned, which is termed a "transfer of ownership," does not purport to be a present transfer of title, but seems to be merely on acknowledgment that the animal described in the document had been sold to John S. Hull, and authorizing the American Jersey Cattle Club of New York to transfer the record of ownership thereof on their books. Even though it may be said that the two documents, taken together, are sufficient in form to constitute a bill of sale as between the parties to such cattle as are described in these certificates of transfer, yet there was no such certificate executed with respect to any of the unregistered cattle. As to these four unregistered cattle, there is absolutely no document which even purports to represent a bill of sale. The mere delivery of personal property is not conclusive as to the passing of title thereto. The question as to whether the title to personal property actually passes to the purchaser upon its delivery depends upon the intention of the parties, which must be determined by the facts and circumstances of the case. While the actual delivery of personal property is a significant fact indicating an intention to transfer title, yet it is not conclusive. 35 Cyc. 308; South S. F. Packing, etc., Co. v. Jacobsen, 183 Cal. 131, 190 P. 628. If the transaction is evidenced by an instrument in writing, the intention of the parties is to be determined primarily by reference to the written document. 22 Cal. Jur. 948, § 34; Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 324, 104 P. 432, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609.

[9] There is a clear distinction between record title and actual title to either personal property or real estate. Regardless of the ownership of actual title, one who contracts to deliver not only the actual title, but record evidence of that title as well, has not fulfilled his agreement until the document purporting to convey the title has been delivered. In the case of Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172, 185, where plaintiff agreed to pay certain indebtedness, "when Richards signs off all his rights and title in said property," the court said:

> "We think the agreement * * * as to all tangible personal property * * * which would pass by mere delivery, be satisfied by a delivery to the defendants, so as to place the same in their full possession and control, and an acceptance of the same, unless written evidence of the transfer was specially requested. But if the defendants should refuse to accept such delivery without written evidence of the transfer of title, they would have the right to insist upon it, and might refuse to accept a delivery without it. * * *"

[10, 11] Nor is the warranty of title to personal property, which is conferred by section 1765 of the Civil Code, equivalent, in every respect, to a written warranty of title. The mere possession of the personal property in the hands of the purchaser is presumptive evidence of title, but it is not conclusive, for the reason that the actual transfer of title depends upon the intent of the parties. Where there is a written warranty of title, that document, in the absence of fraud or mutual mistake, will determine the intent of the parties. But where there is no written evidence of the warranty of title, the seller may show by oral testimony that in delivering possession of the property he had no intention of warranting the title. Miller v. Van Tassel, 24 Cal. 459; Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 179, 3 P. 625. It is therefore apparent that an agreement to deliver a written warranty of title to personal property, upon the sale thereof, is a material and valuable consideration, the refusal to comply with which would constitute a breach of contract and authorize an action for rescission, pursuant to section 1689, Civil Code.

For the reason that the defendant has failed and refused to deliver a bill of sale to plaintiff for the four unregistered head of cattle and has failed and refused to deliver a written warranty of title to any of the property sold, he has not complied with his written contract of sale.

The findings are in conflict and incapable of being reconciled in that they certify that the only documents tendered by the defendant to plaintiff, pursuant to their contract of sale, consisted of the two instruments hereinbefore set out, which, we are of the opinion, fail to comply with the agreement to "execute and deliver a good and sufficient bill of sale, together with a warranty of title." And, upon the contrary, the trial court has found "that the defendant did not, and has not, at any time failed or refused to furnish the plaintiff the warranty of title and certificates of record, transfer of ownership of said registered cattle," while it is further found that "the defendant declined and refused to supply plaintiff with any other or different instruments." These findings are irreconcilable, and the judgment must therefore be and is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

79 Cal. App. 662

TURNER v. STOCK. (Civ. 5578.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 8, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 6, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑544(2)—Whether findings support judgment and whether judgment grants relief warranted by findings are only questions open on appeal on judgment roll alone.

Where appeal is on judgment roll alone, without a bill of exceptions, questions whether findings support judgment and whether judgment grants the relief warranted by the findings, if properly made, are the only questions open for review.

2. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)—On appeal on judgment roll alone, court must presume that evidence was sufficient to support findings (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where appeal is on judgment roll alone, without bill of exceptions, appellate court must presume in support of judgment that evidence taken at trial was sufficient to support findings of trial court.

3. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)—On appeal on judgment roll alone, in suit for specific performance, court must assume that evidence cleared up uncertainties in writings and warranted decree.

Where appeal, in suit for specific performance, is taken on judgment roll alone, without bill of exceptions, court must presume that competent evidence was received to clear up uncertainties in the writings constituting the contract, and that such evidence warranted trial court in ordering specific performance.

4. Appeal and error 🔑931(7)—Where appeal is on judgment roll alone, court must assume that findings sufficient to support judgment were within issues framed.

Where appeal is on judgment roll alone, without bill of exceptions, appellate court must presume that findings sufficient to support judgment were within issues framed by the parties during the course of trial, and that they were proved by competent evidence admitted without objection.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1071(1)—Where appeal is on judgment roll alone and facts found support judgment, reversal is unwarranted, though findings were not within pleadings, no prejudice being shown.

Where appeal is on judgment roll alone and record shows that court found all facts essential to support judgment, though in some respects complaint did not sufficiently plead those facts, but does not show whether pleader asked leave to amend complaint to conform to proofs, judgment cannot be reversed unless appellant shows prejudicial error.

6. Appeal and error 🔑704(2)—Where objection is to particular finding or failure to find, evidence must be brought up.

Where objection is made that trial court has made an erroneous finding or has failed to find on a particular issue, appellant must bring up the evidence; otherwise, appellate court may assume that evidence supported finding, or that particular issue was abandoned, or requested finding thereon unwarranted.

7. Contracts 🔑23—Under statute, acceptance must be absolute and unqualified (Civ. Code, § 1585).

In view of Civ. Code, § 1585, acceptance to result in contract must be absolute and unqualified, a qualified acceptance being equivalent to a new proposal.

8. Evidence 🔑416—In suit for specific performance of contract, evidence explaining reference to "certificate" in telegram of acceptance held admissible, notwithstanding parol evidence rule.

Where contract sought to be specifically enforced consisted, in part, of letter referring to a prior letter and offering to sell property, and telegram accepting offer, with the direction "send deed and certificate for collection to bank," held evidence to show that reference to "certificate for collection" was not a new demand, but had to do with arrangements made in previous letter referred to, was admissible, notwithstanding parol evidence rule.

9. Specific performance 🔑28(2)—To warrant specific performance, contract must contain all material terms in sufficiently definite manner.

To warrant specific performance of contract for sale of real property, it must contain all the material terms expressed in a sufficiently definite manner.

10. Evidence 🔑452—Latent ambiguities in contract sought to be specifically enforced, arising from reference to extrinsic circumstances, may be remedied by same means.

Where contract, sought to be specifically enforced, contains latent ambiguities raised by reference to extrinsic circumstances, such ambiguities may be remedied by the same means, notwithstanding rule that contract must contain all material terms.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action for specific performance of contract to sell real estate by William S. Turner against George Stock. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. R. Dexter, Howard B. Henshey, and Bailie, Turner & Lake, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The petition for a rehearing is denied, but the opinion heretofore filed herein is modified to read as follows:

Plaintiff sued for the specific performance of a written contract for the sale of real property in Los Angeles county for the agreed sum of $6,000. The complaint alleged that the written contract was executed on August 18, 1921, and arose from two letters and a telegram passing between the parties; first, a letter dated June 8, 1921, sent from Detroit, Mich., by the defendant to the plaintiff, in which the defendant acknowledged receipt of plaintiff's letter of June 3, and offered to sell the property which is the subject of the action for the sum of $6,000; and, second, a letter dated August 6, 1921, and also sent by the defendant to the plaintiff from Detroit, in which the defendant stated that his former offer would stand until January 1, 1922; the third, a telegram dated August 18, 1921, sent by the plaintiff to the defendant in Detroit, in which the plaintiff stated that he would take the property for $6,000, and added:

"Send deed and certificate for collection to First National Bank Hollywood. Deed to run to me."

The defendant denied the execution of the contract on August 18, or at any other time, and set up a special defense, pleading that the plaintiff had taken an unfair advantage of him in the transaction, because of his knowledge of the increased value of the real property in and about Los Angeles. The trial court found that the parties executed a written agreement for the purchase and sale of the property involved for the sum of $6,000 on August 18, 1921, and gave judgment for the plaintiff as prayed. From this judgment, the defendant has appealed upon the judgment roll alone, without a bill of exceptions.

[1] On this appeal the appellant has advanced numerous points in his attack upon the judgment, as well as upon the finding of the trial court that the contract was executed as found. It is argued that the writings were incomplete and indefinite as to terms of payment and in other respects; that the minds of the parties did not really meet on all the essential elements; that there was a variance in the terms of the offer and the acceptance; that it was not shown that the contract was just and reasonable as to the appellant; and that the trial court failed to find on the special defense of unfair advantage claimed to have been taken by the plaintiff. No claim is made that the findings do not support the judgment, or that the judgment does not grant to the respondent the relief to which, in law and equity, he is entitled, if the findings have been properly made. These, we will endeavor to show, are the only questions open to the appellant on an appeal taken in this manner.

In support of the judgment the respondent insists that, inasmuch as the appeal is upon the judgment roll alone and without a bill of exceptions, it is not competent for this court to entertain the objections advanced by the appellant. The position of the respondent is that on this record the appellant has failed to show wherein any of the errors assigned by him have been prejudicial. The principle of law involved is that, under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, an appellate court may not reverse a judgment unless, upon an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, it is satisfied that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[2, 3] Because of this mandate we are compelled to presume in support of the judgment that the evidence taken at the trial was sufficient to support the findings of the trial court, and we are also compelled to presume that competent evidence was received to clear all the claimed uncertainties in the writings, and that this evidence was sufficient to warrant the trial court in ordering a specific performance of the contract. In Silvers v. Grossman, 183 Cal. 696, 702, 192 P. 534, 537, Mr. Justice Lennon, speaking for the court, said:

> "Where the appeal is upon the judgment roll alone, so that the record fails to disclose whether or not, at the trial, objections were interposed to evidence as not within the issues, it has been held that it will be presumed in support of the findings and judgment that the pleadings were treated as sufficient to raise the issues upon which the findings were made and that evidence in support of such issues was introduced and went in without objection." Platner v. Vincent, 194 Cal. 436, 442, 229 P. 24; Philbrook v. Randall, 195 Cal. 95, 104, 231 P. 739.

Thus, though the complaint may have been subject to demurrer, nevertheless, no demurrer having been filed and the parties having gone to trial, we are unable to say on this record that any error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. This is so, because, the action being in equity, the complaint is entitled to a more liberal construction (Brown v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irrigation District, 183 Cal. 186, 190 P. 797; Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, 88, 193 P. 84), and because on this record we are unable to say what occurred between the parties during the trial. They may have stipulated to any facts not pleaded, or permitted evidence to be received thereon without objection, or may have expressly waived any insufficiency in the pleadings.

[4] When the findings of fact and conclusion of law cover all the essential elements of the cause of action which should have been pleaded and the judgment is in accordance with such findings, we may assume, where the appeal is based upon the judgment roll alone, that any one or all of such transactions may have occurred during the course of the trial. Putting it in another way, when the findings are complete and sufficient to support the judgment, we must presume, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the facts so found were within the issues as framed by the parties during the course of the trial, and that they were proved by competent evidence admitted without objection.

[5] The proper method of procedure is to amend the pleadings to conform to the proof, but when the record, as presented on appeal, shows that the court found all the facts to be true which are essential to support the judgment entered, but that in some respects the complaint did not sufficiently plead those facts, and the record fails to show whether the pleader asked for leave to amend his complaint to conform to the proofs, we may not reverse the judgment unless the appellant shows that prejudicial error has occurred. Thus, if it be a fact that evidence was received without objection on an issue not properly pleaded and the respondent failed to ask leave to amend his complaint to conform to the proof, would the appellant be in any better position if such leave had been asked by the respondent and granted? If not, where is the prejudicial error?

[6] Upon the same principle, the appellant is not in a position to urge error in the failure of the trial court to find on his special defense. When the objection is that the trial court has made an erroneous finding (a finding not supported by the evidence), or that it has failed to find on a particular issue (that the evidence required a certain finding on that issue), it is incumbent upon the appellant to bring up the evidence so that the appellate court may determine whether error has occurred. Otherwise, we may assume that the evidence supported the finding made in the first instance, or, in the second instance, that the issue was abandoned, that the evidence would not support the finding asked for, or that it would have required a finding adverse to the appellant.

[7] At first glance, it appears that the telegram accepting the offer varied from the terms of the offer in that it added a demand upon the seller for a certificate of title. The rule is statutory that an acceptance must be absolute and unqualified, and that a qualified acceptance is a new proposal. Section 1585, Civ. Code. But here again we are confronted by appellant's failure to present a record disclosing error. The language used in the telegram of acceptance is:

> "Send deed and certificate for collection to First National Bank Hollywood."

[8] We are not satisfied that this is a demand upon the seller that he furnish a certificate of title at his own expense, or whether the respondent used the expression "certificate for collection," as referring to an authorization to the bank to receive and transmit the purchase money; and it does not appear from the letters alone what arrangements, if any, the parties had made as to a certificate of title in the respondent's letter of June 3. These are all matters which could have been cleared at the trial without infringement upon the rule covering the admission of parol testimony, and we must, upon this record, assume that that was done.

[9] The appellant strenuously insists that to affirm the judgment is to depart from the accepted rule regarding the specific performance of contracts of this nature. If the complaint had pleaded a contract which was void on its face a different situation would arise, but here the question is not one of the validity of the contract, but merely one of pleading and procedure. We have not questioned the general rule that to warrant the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real property it must contain all the material terms expressed in a sufficiently definite manner, or, to put it in a different way, that:

> "The memoranda must contain all the material elements of the contract; that is, it must show who is the seller and who is the buyer, what the price is and when it is to be paid, and must do describe the land that it can be identified." Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 529, 535, 21 P. 179, 181.

[10] There are, however, well-recognized exceptions to this general rule, and the one which is applicable here is appropriately stated by Mr. Justice Johnson in Barry v. Coombe, 1 Pet. 640, 652 (7 L. Ed. 295), where it is said:

> "Sir Francis Bacon, in his Elements of Common Law (Regula 23), is the author usually referred to on this distribution of ambiguities into patent and latent; the former appearing on the face of the instrument, and not to be removed by extrinsic evidence, but only, in the language of the author, 'to be holpen by construction or election'; the latter raised by reference to extrinsic circumstances, and remediable by the same means. It would perhaps be a more convenient, and certainly, a more intelligible distribution of the doctrine on this subject, if the cases were divided into positive, relative, and mixed; the positive corresponding to the patent; and the relative to the latent ambiguities of the authors who treat of the subject. The mixed would consist of those cases in which, although the ambiguity is suggested on the face of the instrument, the face of the instrument also suggests the medium by which the ambiguity may be removed."

This case comes within the third classification above noted. In the first letter found in the complaint, the appellant offers to sell to the respondent "the property I own on the northeast corner of Santa Monica blvd. and Formosa avenue." This letter is in answer to respondent's letter of June 3. By reference to this letter of June 3, if for no other reason, that letter became admissible in evidence, and by reference to the property which the appellant owned on this northeast corner evidence was admissible to further identify the property covered by the contract. Because, as we have heretofore said, none of this evidence has been brought up, we are unable to say that all the material terms of the contract were not made definite and certain "by full and clear proof," within the rule of Reymond v. Laboudigue, 148 Cal. 691, 694, 84 P. 189, and Buckmaster v. Bertram, 186 Cal. 673, 676, 200 P. 610, and, as we must assume on this record that such proof was made, the judgment must be affirmed.

We concur: CABANISS, Presiding Justice pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 19

PEOPLE v. BACCIOCCO et al. (Cr. 1334.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 25, 1927. Rehearing Denied Feb. 24, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 24, 1927.)

1. Criminal law ⚿274—Refusal to vacate plea of guilty of first degree robbery and allow plea to lesser offense held not abuse of discretion.

Refusal to vacate judgment, entered on plea of guilty of robbery in the first degree, and allow plea of guilty to attempt to commit robbery, held not abuse of discretion, in view of trial court's statement that defendants were represented by counsel and plea was entered knowingly and on condition that other charges be dismissed.

2. Robbery ⚿24(1)—Evidence held to show defendants' guilt of robbery in the first degree and not merely guilt of attempt to commit robbery.

Evidence on plea of guilty held to show defendants' guilt of robbery in the first degree by holding up night watchman with revolver and taking keys from his person, notwithstanding keys were subsequently returned to him.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Harold Louderback, Judge.

Nicholas Bacciocco and Charles Morrison pleaded guilty to robbery in the first degree. From an order denying motion to vacate judgment and sentence after plea, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TYLER, P. J. Appeal from an order denying defendants' motion to vacate and set aside a judgment sentencing them to suffer the penalty prescribed for the commission of the crime of robbery in the first degree, after plea of guilty by them to the commission of such offense. In the same motion appellants moved the court for permission to withdraw their plea of guilty and to interpose in lieu thereof a plea of guilty to the crime of attempt to commit robbery. In support of the motion it was claimed, first, that the plea of guilty was interposed by them through inadvertence and mistake and in the belief that they were at the time entering a plea to a lesser offense; and, second, that the facts involved in the case show that the offense committed by defendants was not that of robbery, but was simply an attempt to commit robbery.

[1] The motions were denied. It is here claimed that the court abused the discretion conferred on it by law in its refusal to vacate the judgment and to allow the entry of the proper plea. The appeal as to appellant Morrison has been dismissed, and the alleged error is here urged on behalf of appellant Bacciocco alone. We see no merit in his contention. The record does not show what proceedings were had at the time the plea was entered other than the defendants pleaded guilty to the charge of robbery in the first degree. It does show, however, that the motions here made were denied by the same judge who accepted the plea. It further shows that he was familiar with all the circumstances of the plea at the time it was entered. Upon the hearing of the motions to vacate the judgment and to permit a plea to the lesser offense, the court stated that defendants at the time they entered their plea knew exactly what was going on; that they were represented by counsel, and the plea was entered upon condition that other charges would be dismissed; that such charges were dismissed in accordance with the arrangement and the plea accepted. He further stated, in substance, that he had asked defendants if they were going to plead guilty to first degree robbery, which involved the commission of the offense with the aid of a gun, and that there was no suggestion from either of them or their counsel that they would not plead guilty of robbery in the first degree. The court further stated that both men were of sufficient intelligence to know exactly what was going on, and he was satisfied that their plea was not entered through any mistaken notion that they were pleading guilty to another and lesser offense.

---

*Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Under such circumstances the court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to vacate and set aside the judgment.

[2] Equally without merit is the claim that the evidence shows that defendants were merely guilty of an attempt to commit the crime of robbery. As the defendants pleaded guilty the prosecution was not called upon to present all the evidence it had concerning the commission of the crime. Defendants had waived preliminary examination in the police court, and in consequence the only evidence there received consisted of the testimony of the prosecuting witness and a police officer, which, in a limited manner, described the circumstances under which the crime was committed. The transcript of the evidence taken at such examination showed that the prosecuting witness testified to the effect that he was a janitor employed at the New Fillmore Theater; that on the 23d day of February, 1926, at about 12 o'clock at night, and when he was performing his duties, he heard some one pounding on the door; that immediately thereafter he was confronted by two men, one of whom placed a revolver against his stomach, and the other tied him up; that they then took him upstairs, defendant Bacciocco in the meantime keeping the revolver placed at his side; that they took a bunch of keys from his person and stood him in a corner with his hands tied; that they later conducted him to a room and tied his feet together. It is claimed that the testimony of the police officer showed that the keys taken from the prosecuting witness were returned to him by defendants and that the temporary taking of them from the person of the prosecuting witness did not constitute robbery. The testimony, as recited, shows without conflict that the keys were forcibly and through fear taken from the person of the complaining witness. It is true the record does not clearly show under what circumstances they were returned to the prosecuting witness. Their original taking, however, in the manner indicated, constituted the offense, and it was not undone by the return of the stolen articles, even assuming that they were returned by defendants. 23 R. C. L. 1141. The evidence was, therefore, sufficient to show that defendants were guilty of the offense charged. The court, in denying the motions, read a communication received from the bureau of detectives concerning the defendants and the circumstances surrounding the commission of the offense. It informed the court, in substance, that from a careful examination of the case the evidence showed that three felonies had been committed by the defendants in the perpetration of the crime charged. It recited that defendant Bacciocco had carried a gun inside the waistband of his trousers where it was ready for instant use; that after tying up the janitor, defendants had proceeded to open the safe contained in the building; that they succeeded in breaking off the combination and drilling a hole therein with the aid of tools attached to the electric light for drilling purposes; that they had a complete set of safe burglar tools, which were found in front of the safe; that when the officers arrived at the scene of the crime and attempted to make an arrest, they had to shoot through the door, and fired several shots before defendants surrendered. The communication also contained the records of defendants, which the court omitted reading. While the letter was not considered by the court as part of the record in denying the motions, it showed the circumstances surrounding the commission of the crime, and it is upon these facts that the claim is made that in truth the evidence shows defendants to have been guilty of a mere attempt to commit the crime with which they are charged, and that the mere temporary taking of the keys from the janitor to aid them in their attempted acts did not complete the offense. What we have said disposes of this contention.

As above stated, the appeal of Morrison has been dismissed.

The order appealed from as to Bacciocco is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 342

DAM v. BOND. (Civ. 3166.)*

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 17, 1926.)

1. Trial ⟹367—Argument in trial by court is matter of discretion (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 607, 631 et seq.).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 631 et seq., omitting subdivisions of section 607 as to right of argument in jury trials, argument in trial by court is matter of discretion, not of absolute right.

2. Appeal and error ⟹1015(2)—Appellate court cannot adjudge merely on affidavits that trial court's conclusion as to what was argued was erroneous.

Appellate court cannot adjudge, simply on face of affidavits as to matters argued before trial court, that latter's conclusion on such question was erroneous.

3. Appeal and error ⟹972—Strong showing of abuse of discretion in limiting argument in trial by court is necessary to set aside judgment on such ground.

Trial court sitting without jury may limit argument, and strong showing of abuse of discretion in doing so must be made before appellate court may set aside judgment on such ground.

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 14, 1927.

4. New trial 🔑140(3)—Affidavits as to questions argued and time consumed therein held not to show abuse of discretion in limiting argument, before court sitting without jury.

Abuse of discretion in limiting argument before court sitting without jury is not shown by conflicting affidavits as to what questions were argued, or showing without contradiction that about two hours were consumed in argument.

5. Trial 🔑367—Abuse of discretion in limiting plaintiff's argument in automobile collision case to question of defendant's liability for independent contractor's acts held not shown.

Record held not to show abuse of discretion by trial court, sitting without jury, in limiting plaintiff's argument, in action for injuries in collision between automobiles, to question of defendant's liability for acts of independent contractor driving his car.

6. Appeal and error 🔑989—Whether findings are supported by evidence involves, not weight or preponderance of evidence, but existence of substantial supporting evidence.

Question whether trial court's findings are supported by evidence involves, not weight of evidence, or whether it preponderates in favor of plaintiff or defendant, but whether there is substantial evidence in record supporting findings.

7. Automobiles 🔑168(2)—Automobile driver must slow down to less than statutory speed limit for safety of others (Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 22 [a], as amended by St. 1919, p. 220, § 13).

If conditions of highway are such that safety of persons and property require much lesser rate of speed in driving automobile than maximum fixed by Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 409), § 22a, as amended by St. 1919, p. 220, § 13, it is driver's duty to slow down.

8. Automobiles 🔑244(42) — Evidence as to speed held to justify finding of contributory negligence of driver of automobile meeting another automobile.

In action for injuries in collision between automobiles, evidence held to warrant trial court's conclusion that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, barring recovery as proximate cause of collision, in passing approaching cavalcade of horses and wagons at excessive speed, in reckless manner, and in disregard of person and property of others, where his view of highway beyond was limited to few feet.

9. Automobiles 🔑244(59)—Finding driver of automobile did not have last clear chance to avoid collision held supported by evidence.

In action for injuries in collision between automobiles on highway, evidence held to support trial court's conclusion that driver of defendant's car did not have a last clear chance to avoid collision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Action by C. H. Dam against Lon Bond. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. H. Dam, of San Francisco, for appellant.
Bond & Deirup, of Chico, and Richard Belcher, of Marysville, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The complaint sets forth, in substance, that on or about the 24th day of January, 1922, the plaintiff was driving an automobile, to wit, a Dodge Bros. commercial car, in a southerly direction along a public highway in the county of Yuba, state of California; that while plaintiff was then and there proceeding along by the side of several horse-drawn vehicles traveling in an opposite direction to plaintiff and while plaintiff was keeping on the westerly half of said highway, the defendant's car, driven by one J. W. Benner as the defendant's agent, was proceeding in an opposite direction to plaintiff along said highway, and then and there negligently attempted to overtake and pass said horse-drawn vehicles to his left or westerly side thereof, without having a clear and unobstructed passage ahead of said defendant for 100 yards, or for any distance at all; that plaintiff, seeing such attempt on the part of said Benner, then and there turned his machine to the right in order to get out of said defendant's way; that said Benner then and there was so negligently, carelessly, recklessly, and unlawfully driving and operating the defendant's automobile, to wit, a Buick car, that it ran into and collided with plaintiff's car, injuring the plaintiff and damaging his said car, all to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $5,350.

The answer of the defendant denies negligence on the part of the driver of defendant's car, denies that Benner was the agent of the defendant, and alleges that Benner was an independent contractor and, also, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence and that the collision was the result solely of negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

The trial court found that the collision was due to the fact that the plaintiff was driving his automobile at an unlawful rate of speed and at a speed in excess of 30 miles per hour; that at the time the said J. W. Benner attempted to pass said cavalcade of horses, wagons, and a truck, not mentioned in plaintiff's complaint, following the same, the highway to the left was unobstructed for the required distance; that for some period of time before meeting the cavalcade of horses and wagons, the plaintiff had been traveling on the easterly or left-hand side of the highway and continued along said easterly or left-hand side of the highway until within a short distance (estimated by some witnesses from 30 to 50 feet) before turning to the westerly or right-hand side of said highway, and by reason thereof plaintiff's automobile was not visible to any one attempting to pass said cavalcade traveling in the same direction therewith and turning to the left in order to proceed along past said cavalcade on the westerly half of the paved highway. The trial court further found that the plaintiff did not slacken the speed of his automobile until the time of the collision and that plaintiff's automobile was equipped with defective brakes. The trial court also found that Benner was an independent contractor.

The cavalcade herein referred to consisted first of a four-horse team drawing a cook wagon, a spring wagon, and a cart; second, a two-horse team drawing a wagon to which two cows were tied in the rear and were being led; and, third, an automobile truck which at the time was following said cavalcade at a distance of about 50 feet in the rear of the horse-drawn vehicle to which the two cows were tied.

The action was tried by the court without a jury and judgment passed for the defendant as heretofore stated. The trial was concluded on the 9th day of March, 1923, and the opinion of the court directing findings to be prepared in favor of the defendant was filed on the 28th day of July, 1923. A motion for a new trial was made on account of an alleged irregularity of the trial court during the argument of the cause. Affidavits in support of the alleged irregularity were filed and presented to the court upon plaintiff's motion for a new trial, plaintiff's motion on said ground being denied.

The plaintiff set forth in his affidavit relating to the irregularity of the trial court: That, at the close of the evidence, the court stated substantially as follows: "The only question upon which I care to hear argument is whether the defendant is liable for the acts of an independent contractor, and that is a matter of law." That after the court had so stated counsel for appellant proceeded in an argument for over one hour to review the California decisions in support of appellant's position that Benner was a servant of the defendant and not an independent contractor. That affiant understood the statement of the court to mean that on the question of Benner's negligence, the mind of the court was made up in plaintiff's favor and that defendant could escape liability only if Benner was an independent contractor, and accordingly did not argue the question of Benner's negligence. That affiant was prepared to argue the question of Benner's negligence at great length, and in view of what affiant considers to be the overwhelming weight of the evidence, that counsel could have convinced the court beyond a shadow of a doubt that plaintiff's injuries were due to Benner's negligence. That after the counsel for the plaintiff had concluded his argument, counsel for the defendant argued the question of negligence for about 45 minutes of time. That counsel for plaintiff then followed the argument of counsel for the defendant and had made but a very short argument when the court interrupted counsel for the plaintiff and stated that it had promised other counsel to hear a certain cause, and that the hour designated by the court for the hearing thereof had already passed. That counsel for the plaintiff was forced to close his argument, although he had hardly "scratched the surface of the argument counsel was prepared to make on the question of negligence."

The affidavit filed on behalf of the defendant sets forth, in substance, that defendant has no recollection of any such statement being made by the court; that counsel for the plaintiff did argue the questions of fact at length concerning Benner's negligence and the negligence of the plaintiff and did discuss the credibility of the witnesses and did comment at length upon the contention that the witnesses for the defendant were not entitled to credit; that the testimony of some of the witnesses was unsatisfactory and contradictory; that counsel for the plaintiff did maintain that the witnesses for the plaintiff were entitled to full credit; that counsel for the plaintiff referred to the standing of the witnesses and referred to one or more of them as being sons of pioneers. At the conclusion of the argument the court directed the testimony of two witnesses to be written up—the testimony of the plaintiff and the testimony of the defendant.

Upon this appeal it is argued that the alleged irregularity of the court prevented the plaintiff from having a fair trial; that it was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court and prevented the plaintiff from having a fair trial and that the action of the court constituted a surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against. A further ground of appeal is based upon the contention that the findings of the trial court are not supported by the testimony.

[1, 2] An examination of the various sections contained in chapter 5 of title 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, beginning with section 631 thereof, relative to trials by the court sitting without a jury, discloses that the Code is silent as to any right of counsel to argue causes tried without a jury. The subdivisions of section 607, Code of Civil Procedure, refer solely to causes tried before a jury where the right and the opportunity of arguments are recognized and provided for as an aid to jurors in reaching a conclusion. By omitting such provisions when outlining the procedure for trials before the court alone, the only inference that can be drawn therefrom is that the question of argument is left to the judicial discretion of the trial court. In other words, it is a matter of discretion and not of absolute right, as stated in the case of Center v. Kelton, 20 Cal. App. 611, 129 P. 960.

[3-5] In the case at bar the court did not refuse to hear any argument. It only sought to limit the argument of counsel. The affidavits to which we have referred presented to the court for decision the question as to what matters were argued before it, and it does not lie within the power of the appellate court, simply upon the face of the affidavits, to adjudge that the conclusion of the trial court was erroneous upon the question of what was argued. From the affidavits filed on behalf of the plaintiff and the defendant it appears that the cause was argued for approximately two hours. Whether the cause was argued upon questions which the trial court desired to hear is not a matter which we can pass upon, as presented to us upon this appeal. The right of the trial court to limit argument in cases where the court is sitting without a jury must be recognized as one clearly within the power of the trial court, in order that the business coming before it may be properly transacted. A very strong case showing abuse of discretion, where the matter of argument is one properly of discretion, must be made out before an appellate court would be warranted in setting aside a judgment on any such ground. Such abuse of discretion is not made out by conflicting affidavits as to what questions were actually argued, or showing without contradiction that approximately two hours of the time of the court were consumed in the argument of the cause represented by the respective counsel. It may be observed, however, that it does appear from the affidavits that counsel for plaintiff consumed the longer period of time in his argument, irrespective of what questions he may have argued. In passing upon these questions, we express no opinion as to whether the trial court did or did not allow counsel for the plaintiff all the time desired by him to present all the points involved in the case, or all the reasons that counsel for the plaintiff wished to urge upon the trial court, impelling a decision in favor of the plaintiff. All we decide is that the record does not present any such abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court justifying an appellate court to order a reversal of the judgment. This being a case tried before a court, where an argument is a matter of discretion and not a matter of right, it is not necessary to review the cases having to do with irregularity in the trial court in limiting or denying arguments in trials had before juries.

[6] Are the findings supported by the evidence? This question again involves not the weight of the evidence, not whether the evidence preponderates in favor of the plaintiff or in favor of the defendant, but whether there is substantial evidence in the record supporting the findings of the court. The testimony of the plaintiff was to the effect that as he was driving down the highway he was running at about 25 miles an hour; that at a point where the road curves slightly he saw an automobile following the caravan to which we have referred; that he continued to drive about the middle of the road a little to the left of the center until he got down to about 60 feet of the first team. On cross-examination he admitted having testified that as he approached the horses he was driving on the left side, had been driving on the left side for probably 300 yards, and that he drove on the left side until he came within 30 to 50 feet of the horses of the first team before he turned to the right; that when plaintiff was about 100 yards up the road Benner was about the same distance behind the last vehicle in the caravan; that while driving down the left side of the center of the highway he did not slow up; that the brakes on his car were a little weak; that when he saw the cook house in the caravan he was from 100 to 150 feet away, but did not go to the right side of the highway; that he did not slow down to 20 miles an hour; that he drove down directly toward the cook house until he came within 30 to 50 feet of the front of it and then swung to the right; that unless one were a little over the center of the road one could not see what was coming from the rear of the cook house; that when he swung around the cook house he was running at a rate of speed of 20 miles or better per hour; that a fraction after he swung out around the cook house Benner came out on the west side of the highway; that he put his foot on the brake just a little; that the foot brake was very weak; that he would not say that he did put on the brakes, that he did not use the emergency brakes; that he traveled a fraction slower as he was passing along by the horses and wagons. The testimony of the plaintiff also shows the following question and answer: "Q. You did not take any precautions yourself to avoid the collision other than swinging out into the dirt road? A. I don't know as I did."

The testimony of the witness A. Schorth, a driver of one of the teams, is to the effect that the plaintiff was traveling at about 36 to 37 miles per hour; that he did not think the plaintiff slowed up any.

The testimony of the witness Hurdle is to the effect that it looked to him as though the plaintiff was traveling between 35 and 40 miles per hour; that practically the same speed was maintained all the time by the plaintiff. The witness Hurdle was driving the truck heretofore mentioned. His testimony is to the effect that Benner had turned out and passed his truck and was in the act of passing the rear horse-drawn vehicle when the plaintiff swung into view at the head of the cavalcade, as he was coming down the highway from the north. The driver of the four-horse team drawing the cook wagon testified that he saw the plaintiff coming at a distance of 400 yards up the highway; that the plaintiff was circling back and forth on the highway; that he went to the left side of it; that he continued on the left side close to the head team; that he turned his leaders to the right over on the dirt, as the plaintiff was coming too close; that he had a colt in the lead team and was afraid it would be scared; that when the plaintiff passed the lead team he was about 4 feet distant; he just shaved the cook house as he passed; that the plaintiff was coming very fast. As compared to the ordinary speed of automobiles on the public highway, he thought he was going faster.

There was some testimony to the effect that when the plaintiff swung out past the cook house, he turned slightly to the left, and some testimony by one of the team drivers that the plaintiff and Benner were both making some "awful movements." There is also evidence in the transcript showing that Benner was at fault, but it need not be set forth herein, as so doing would only show the conflict of the testimony.

[7] At the time of the collision involved in this case, the Motor Vehicle Act, approved May 2, 1919, (St. 1919, p. 191), was in effect. Subdivision (a), § 20, of that act required the driver or operator of any vehicle on the public highway to travel on the right hand of such highway, unless the road ahead on the left-hand side was clear and unobstructed for at least 100 yards ahead, unless it was impracticable to drive on said right-hand side of the highway. Subdivision (a) of section 22 of the act approved May 2, 1919, limited the speed of motor vehicles to 30 miles an hour, except in the daytime when the road was clear and unobstructed for a distance of 400 feet. Subdivision (a) of section 22 of said act contained also the following provision:

> "Any person operating or driving a motor or other vehicle on the public highways shall operate or drive the same in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, and no person shall operate or drive a motor vehicle or other vehicle on a public highway at such rate of speed as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property."

This court, in the case of Graybiel v. Auger, 64 Cal. App. 679, 222 P. 635, said:

> "This provision of the section is just as much a portion of the law as that which allows a speed of 35 miles per hour under certain specified conditions."

We may add that where the testimony shows that this provision of the law is not being complied with, the trial court is justified in coming to the conclusion that the operator of a motor vehicle is driving at a reckless rate of speed, even though he is not exceeding the speed limit of 35 miles per hour allowed upon an unobstructed highway. In other words, it is not the absolute speed at which an automobile is being driven that determines whether it is or is not being propelled at a reckless rate, but the conditions and circumstances of the highway at the instant of time must be taken into consideration, and if these conditions are such that the safety of persons and property require a much lesser rate of speed, it is the duty of the driver of the motor vehicle to slow down the speed of his car.

[8] The testimony which we have set forth, if believed by the trial court, is sufficient to show that the plaintiff drove on the left-hand side of the highway until within a very short distance of the head team of the cavalcade and then ran along the side thereof at a rate of speed in excess of 30 miles an hour and passed the cook wagon, where his view of the highway was limited to a very few feet. Under such circumstances, it is evident that a just regard for the safety of the person and property of others demanded a much slackened speed of the plaintiff's car, and this in view of the distance which an automobile travels in a second of time. When traveling only 20 miles an hour, it is estimated that a car will travel 29⅓ feet per second, so that if the speed be increased to 30 miles an hour, the automobile would cover practically 45 feet in the same length of time. Applying this to the testimony of the plaintiff when driving around the cook house drawn by the four-horse team, it would appear, if the court accepted the testimony which we have herein set out, that the plaintiff was violating the provisions of subdivision (a) of section 22 of the Motor Vehicle Act, and was propelling his machine in a reckless manner and in disregard of the person and property of others. Hence, if the collision occurred under such circumstances, the court was justified in concluding that plaintiff's contributory negligence barred recovery, as the proximate cause of the collision.

[9] Our attention has not been called to any testimony which would lead to the view that the conclusion of the trial court that Benner did not have a last clear chance to avoid the collision is unsupported. Whether Benner was guilty of negligence is really immaterial and does not need to be considered by this court, for the reason that the testimony which we have set forth, if believed by the trial court, is sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, nor do we need to consider the question as to whether Benner was or was not the agent of the defendant Bond. Appellant, in his brief, has called attention to some alleged errors by the trial court in the admission and exclusion of testimony, which we have examined, but none of them are of sufficient merit to in any wise affect the ultimate decision in this cause. The errors assigned not being deemed sufficient to justify a reversal herein, the judgment of the trial court is hereby affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 328

PEOPLE v. HARRIS. (Cr. 1347.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 16, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑37—Where officers are procuring cause of crime, victim cannot be convicted.

Where officers are inducing cause of commission of acts constituting offense, victim thus entrapped cannot be convicted.

2. Criminal law 🔑569 — Evidence held insufficient to show that officers, simulating drunkenness, were inducing cause of sale of liquor.

Evidence held insufficient to show that officers were inducing cause of sale of liquor by defendant, though they simulated drunkenness in search for purveyors of illicit liquor.

3. Intoxicating liquors 🔑239(3) — Evidence held insufficient to justify instruction exonerating defendant, if he acted in selling liquor as officers' agent.

In prosecution for selling liquor, evidence held insufficient to justify instruction that, if defendant acted as agent for officers in purchase of liquor, he was guilty of no offense.

4. Criminal law 🔑561(3)—Good character may generate reasonable doubt of guilt, in prosecution for selling liquor.

Good character may, in connection with evidence, generate reasonable doubt and entitle defendant to acquittal, in prosecution for selling liquor, though without proof thereof there would be conviction.

5. Criminal law 🔑776(4)—Instruction that if jury believed defendant guilty beyond reasonable doubt they should so find, notwithstanding proof of good character, held erroneous.

Instruction that if jury believed defendant guilty beyond reasonable doubt they should so find, notwithstanding proof of good general reputation as peaceable and law-abiding citizen, held erroneous, where given without explanation, limitation, or qualification, and where instruction that evidence of good character may generate reasonable doubt was refused.

6. Criminal law 🔑721½(3)—In prosecution of deputy sheriff, argument that defendant failed to call superiors to testify to good character held to constitute misconduct.

In prosecution of deputy sheriff for selling liquor, district attorney's reference, in argument, to fact that defendant did not call sheriff, undersheriff, or chief deputy to testify to his good character held to constitute misconduct.

7. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)—Error held prejudicial, where acquittal on two counts indicated some doubt as to guilt (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Error held prejudicial, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where jury's acquittal on two of three counts indicated some doubt as to guilt.

8. Criminal law 🔑768(1)—Instruction that juror's membership in same lodge as defendant should not influence verdict held proper.

In prosecution of member of order of Elks, instruction that if any juror was member of such order his duty, as juror, transcended in importance any obligation he might feel toward defendant by reason of such membership held proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

William Edward Harris was convicted of selling intoxicating liquors, and he appeals. Reversed.

Howell W. Richardson and Thomas E. Parke, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

THOMPSON, J. In this action the appellant was charged in three counts with the sale of intoxicating liquors contrary to the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79). He was acquitted upon the first and third counts and convicted on the second. All three sales were alleged to have been made within 14 days—the first, on July 26, 1925; the second, the one for which defendant was convicted, on August 2, 1925; and the third on August 9, 1925. The testimony shows that the defendant was a deputy sheriff, running a lunch room at Topango Canyon, in the county of Los Angeles; that two members of the sheriff's office went to Topango Canyon for a couple of weeks in search of purveyors of illicit liquor and simulated drunkenness with the object of allaying suspicion as to their real purpose. Defendant's witnesses testified that the intoxication was not simulated, but existed in fact. Evidence was introduced to show that on July 26, one of the arresting officers, McDonald, purchased a pint bottle of liquor; that on August 2, McDonald and the other deputy, Frazier, purchased two pint bottles; that on August 9, they again purchased two pint bottles. Preliminary to the first purchase, McDonald asked the defendant "if he knew where" he "could get a little something to drink"; that he "wanted to get some whisky," to which the defendant replied:

> "I have got a little. I can let you have some."

A day or two prior to this McDonald had a conversation with the defendant in which, upon the initiative of McDonald, it was understood that both McDonald and the defendant belonged to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. On the other two occasions of purchase, McDonald had asked the defendant a day or so before the alleged purchase, as a favor to him, to get some liquor. Several character witnesses were called, all of whom testified to the good reputation of the defendant as a peaceable and law-abiding citizen prior to the arrest. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

This résumé, we think, gives the essential testimony, including the evidence directed toward the first and third counts, so far as is necessary to a proper understanding of the points urged by appellant.

[1] We will first consider the assignment urged by appellant that it was error for the trial court to fail to give an instruction to the effect that where the officers are guilty of entrapment, no crime was in fact committed. The basis or fundamental reason for such a rule lies in the fact that in those cases where the officers have, by their actions, been the inducing cause of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, or, in other words, where they have been the procuring cause or instigators of the criminal intent, it would be contrary to a sound public policy to permit the victim thus entrapped to be convicted. Woo Wai v. United States (C. C. A.) 223 F. 412; United States v. Echols (D. C.) 253 F. 862; People v. Barkdoll, 36 Cal. App. 25, 171 P. 440; In re Moore, 70 Cal. App. 483, 233 P. 805; People v. Norcross, 71 Cal. App. 2, 234 P. 438.

[2] However, we do not see in the testimony here sufficient to justify the jury in saying that the defendant was inveigled into the commission of the crime. He was asked to procure the liquor for the purchasers. He may have believed them to be addicted to its use by their actions. But sales are made by some indication on the part of the buyer of his desire or willingness to buy. That is, in effect, all the testimony amounts to. There were no seeds planted by the officers from which might be germinated the idea in defendant's mind that the sale of intoxicating liquors offered an avenue for a lucrative income, such as was the case in Woo Wai v. United States, supra. Therefore, there was no error in refusing the instruction.

[3] Nor do we think this evidence was sufficient to justify the instruction, which the defendant asked for and which the court refused, to the effect that, if the defendant was acting as agent for the officers in the purchase of the liquor, he was guilty of no offense. The court rejected a claim of agency much more clearly established in the case of In re Moore, supra.

[4, 5] The next specification of error which we shall consider is the refusal of the court to give the instruction:

> "You, the jury, are instructed that good character itself may, in connection with the evidence, generate a reasonable doubt and entitle the defendant to an acquittal, even though without said proof of good character you should convict,"

—and the giving by the court of the following instruction in lieu thereof:

> "The court instructs the jury that if you believe from evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty, then you should so find, notwithstanding proof of his good general reputation as a peaceable and law-abiding citizen."

This last instruction was given by the court without further explanation, limitation, or qualification.

There can be no question but that the requested instruction was a correct statement of a proposition of law relative to character testimony. As was said by our Supreme Court in the case of People v. Ashe, 44 Cal. 288, quoting from State v. Henry, 50 N. C. 65, which last case quoted Sergeant Talfourd:

> "There may certainly be cases so made out that no character can make them doubtful, but there may be others in which evidence given against a person without character would amount to a conviction, in which a high character would produce a reasonable doubt [italics ours]—nay, in which character will actually outweigh evidence which might otherwise appear conclusive."

In commenting upon the attempt to say that character testimony is only useful in doubtful cases, it is also there said, quoting from the same source:

> "The sophism lies in the absolute division of cases into clear and doubtful, without considering character as an ingredient which may render that doubtful which would otherwise be clear."

In the case of People v. Bell, 49 Cal. 485, the court refused an instruction closely akin to the one refused here, to wit:

> "If the defendant be proved of good character as a man of peace, such good character may be sufficient to create or generate a reasonable doubt of his guilt, although no such doubt would have existed but for such good character," —and gave in its place the following:

> "The good character of the defendant is a circumstance in the case for your consideration, in making up your verdict."

The Supreme Court held this to be error in the following language:

> "It is important in every criminal case, and especially so when the inculpatory proof is circumstantial in its character, that the jury should be instructed, if the prisoner so request, that in determining whether or not he is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, his good reputation, if he has such, as to traits involved in the charge, should be weighed as any other fact established, and that it may be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to his guilt."

In the last-mentioned cause the judgment was reversed for this error. Here the jury were told, in effect, that they might disregard character testimony, if they were otherwise convinced of defendant's guilt. Such is not the law, and it has been so held in People v. Ashe, supra; People v. Raina, 45 Cal. 292; People v. Bell, supra; People v. Casey, 53 Cal. 360; People v. Doggett, 62 Cal. 27; and in People v. French, 137 Cal. 218, 69 P. 1063. If the court here had given the requested instruction, or had even gone so far as to instruct the jury that testimony of good character was to be considered as any other testimony for the purpose of determining whether or not the defendant was guilty, then the instruction would not have been erroneous. People v. Kalkman, 72 Cal. 212, 13 P. 500; People v. Mitchell, 129 Cal. 584, 62 P. 187; and People v. Von Perhacs, 20 Cal. App. 48, 127 P. 1048. But in this case the jury were not properly instructed and were erroneously instructed concerning the use to be made of the testimony relative to the good character of the defendant, and we must hold that the failure to instruct and the giving of the instruction constitutes error.

[6] Related to this specification of error is the error claimed by reason of alleged misconduct on the part of the district attorney, it having to do also with the character of the defendant. The district attorney, in his argument, referred to the fact that the defendant did not call to testify as to his good character either the sheriff, Chief Deputy Sheriff Biscailuz or Chief Deputy Harry Wright, who were his superior officers. Exception was taken to the argument, but the court stated it to be within the bounds of argument and did not advise the jury. It is true that in instruction No. 14 the court instructed the jury that neither the defendant nor the prosecution was required to call all persons shown to be present or who may appear to have some knowledge of the matters here on trial. In view of the instruction concerning the testimony with respect to good character, however, we are not of the opinion that the error, if it was error, was cured. In State v. Hawkins, 27 Wash. 375, 67 P. 814, it was held that the error was not cured by an instruction from the judge to disregard the comments. It has been held erroneous for the district attorney to discuss unfavorably the failure of the accused to produce witnesses if they were equally available to the state. Brown v. State, 98 Miss. 786, 54 So. 305, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811, and note. And in People v. Smith, 121 Cal. 355, 53 P. 802, it was held to be prejudicially erroneous for the district attorney to comment upon the failure of the defendant to call a witness to the effect that it must be presumed that his testimony would have been adverse to the defense. The court there states:

> "The rule is universal that it is error to permit counsel, against objection, in argument before the jury, to make statements of or comments upon facts not in evidence; and, unless the court can see clearly that the error was as to some matter which could not in its nature have prejudiced the defendant's case, the judgment will be reversed."

And it seems to be well settled that, where the defendant in a criminal proceeding has not put his reputation in issue, it is improper for the prosecuting attorney to argue or infer therefrom that the character of the defendant is not good, or argue that the state cannot introduce evidence of bad character until the defendant has introduced evidence of good character. To this effect are Turner v. State, 94 Miss. 458, 48 So. 409, 19 Ann. Cas. 407; State v. Hawkins, supra; Cline v. State (Tex. Cr. R.) 71 S. W. 23; State v. Blodgett, 50 Or. 329, 92 P. 820. If counsel could properly argue that the sheriff, under sheriff, and chief deputy had not been called, why might he not with perfect propriety secure a list of all of the acquaintances of the defendant and so argue as to each and every one of them? And yet, of course, the number of character witnesses which may be called rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. We are of the opinion, therefore, that it was erroneous for the district attorney to so argue.

Referring now to the specification of error designated as G, which complains of the court's failure to instruct the jury that the defendant was entitled to the individual opinion of the jurors, we can probably add nothing to what was said or the admonition given to trial courts concerning the right of a defendant to an instruction that he is entitled to the individual opinion of the jurors in the cases of People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 P. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50; People v. Howard, 143 Cal. 316, 76 P. 1116; and People v. Singh, 20 Cal. App. 146, 128 P. 420.

[7] Standing alone, the last error did not constitute reversible error, but we have now to determine whether or not the errors heretofore pointed out constitute prejudicial error, under section 4½ of acticle 6 of the Constitution. We have carefully examined the transcript of the testimony, and, while from that reading, unaided by the opportunity to judge of the credibility of the witnesses, by seeing and hearing them, we are inclined to the belief that the defendant may have sold the liquor, we cannot say that there is no reasonable doubt upon the subject. The testimony for the people came from the two officers, who, according to several of defendant's witnesses, were drinking quite heavily during their operations at the beach. The defendant did not take the stand and deny the sale, but rested upon the presumption of innocence, and, while it was not assigned as error, there is in the argument of the district attorney a statement which the jury might well consider to have meant that the defendant did not take the stand and deny the sale. The defendant's brother, Wesley Harris, and his wife, Mrs. Carrie Harris, both testified they were around the store and room constantly; that they saw no liquor around the place, and saw no sale to either of the officers. The testimony of the officers as to the sale on the 9th (the subject of the third count) was met by the testimony of the witness J. H. Weileb, who says he was in the room when the sale is claimed to have been made, and that he saw no liquor sold or delivered to the officers, and while it is true that the evidence appears sufficient in cold print to support a verdict, it is, at least, some indication that the jury entertained some doubt that they acquitted on the first and third counts, even though they were told to disregard the testimony of good character, of which there was an abundance. We cannot in doubtful cases say that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution has cast upon the appellate tribunal the duty of substituting itself for the jury in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant. As was said by the Supreme Court very recently, in the case of Wright v. Broadway Department Store (Cal. Sup.) 250 P. 572, the error of the court "probably affected the * * * damages awarded" and "the evidence * * * was so evenly balanced," that without the erroneously admitted testimony "a contrary verdict might have been rendered." Our conclusion is, therefore, that the error complained of is prejudicial.

We do not consider it necessary to discuss at length the assignments of error in the refusal of the court to give the instruction, requested by the defendant, relating to the essentials of the offense, first, because the instruction requested by the defendant is not free from error, and, second, because upon a retrial the court will not probably content itself with referring to a sale "contrary to the provisions of the Wright Act of this state."

And, again, we find no occasion to pass upon the question of prejudicial error in the assignment designated as D. So far as it is concerned, the jury were properly instructed as to the matters and things they might take into consideration for the purpose of determining the credibility of the witnesses, and this instruction would give them the right to consider the intoxication of the officers at the time of purchase, if they were, in fact, intoxicated.

[8] Appellant also complains because the court instructed the jury that if any of them were members of the order of Elks, they should remember that their duty, as jurors, transcended in importance any obligations they might, under other circumstances, feel toward the defendant by reason of being a member of the same order. Appellant is probably correct in saying that if one of the jury did belong to this American order, his feeling would be one of resentment against the defendant if he believed him to be guilty, and that he had by his failure to observe its fundamental teaching of upholding the laws of the country brought reproach upon it, but the admonition of the court was in itself proper. It was but another way of saying that no relationship, fraternal or otherwise, should be permitted to influence them in arriving at a verdict.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

80 Cal. App. 275

PEOPLE v. WOOLLACOTT. (Cr. 1339.)*

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 14, 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑814(3)—In prosecution for embezzlement, refusal of instruction as to mere failure to pay, not supported by evidence, held not error.

In prosecution for embezzlement, refusal of instruction that mere neglect to pay over money or to hand over security or property was not sufficient evidence in itself of fraudulent conversion because there might be loss and failure to pay due to misunderstanding or other cause not criminal held not error, there being no evidence on which instruction could have been predicated, thus making it misleading.

2. Criminal law 🔑807(1)—Refusal of instruction, argumentative because stating court's reasons therefor, held not error.

In prosecution for embezzlement, refusal of instruction, argumentative in form because stating court's reasons in support of instruction, held not error, such reasons being not only surplusage but often confusing to jury.

3. Criminal law 🔑830—Entire instruction, if offered as whole, may be refused if any proposition contained therein should not be given.

Where requested instruction is offered as a whole and any proposition contained therein should not be given, court is justified in refusing whole instruction.

4. Embezzlement 🔑23—Though money may have been given and received to accomplish unlawful purpose, embezzlement by receiver is criminal.

Though money may have been given and received to accomplish an unlawful purpose, embezzlement of it by receiver is criminal, and instructions stating contrary proposition of law held correctly refused.

5. Embezzlement 🔑42—In prosecution for embezzlement of funds intrusted to defendant for grain deals, admission of files of corporation showing defendant's grain transactions with it held not error (Civ. Code, § 377).

In prosecution for embezzlement of funds to be used for grain deals, admission of documents taken from files and disclosing all of transactions in grain between defendant and company having files held not error, being verified by witness having custody of such files, being records required by Civ. Code, § 377, to be kept by all corporations for profit, and being unimpeached.

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 10, 1927.

6. Criminal law 🔑323—Records of corporation's business transactions, required kept by law, presumed correct unless impeached (Civ. Code, § 377).

Records of business transactions of corporation, required by Civ. Code, § 377, to be kept by all corporations for profit, are presumed to be correct unless impeached.

7. Criminal law 🔑683(1)—In prosecution for embezzlement of funds intrusted to defendant for grain deals, admission of individual ledger account for rebuttal purposes held not error (Civ. Code, § 377).

In prosecution for embezzlement, admission of individual ledger account of certain company, with certain bank required kept by Civ. Code, § 377, held not error, such exhibit being in rebuttal of defendant's claim that he had money of complaining witness on deposit in that bank in name of that company.

8. Embezzlement 🔑10—That funds embezzled were intrusted to defendant by third person to be credited to corporation held not to render defendant innocent of embezzlement charged.

Where defendant to prosecution for embezzlement handled individual's funds as if intrusted to defendant personally, defendant personally would be held to have committed embezzlement of funds, fact that such funds were intrusted to him by third person to be deposited for credit of certain company not rendering defendant innocent of embezzlement charged.

9. Criminal law 🔑620(1)—That separate trial had been ordered for each of two offenses in embezzlement indictment could not be complained of (Pen. Code, § 954).

That court had not ordered separate trial of two offenses charged in indictment in accordance with Pen. Code, § 954, permitting indictment for two or more offenses of same class in separate counts, could not be complained of; court not being required to so act and complaint not being timely made.

10. Embezzlement 🔑44(1)—Evidence held to support conviction for embezzlement.

Evidence held to support conviction for embezzlement of funds intrusted to defendant for grain transactions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

A. H. Woollacott was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hewitt, Ford, Crump & Penn and Homer C. Mills, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

YORK, J. Count I of the indictment charged that the defendant embezzled $9,844.88, in money, personal property of S. N. Bonsall. In count V of the indictment the defendant was charged with having embezzled $3,850 in money, belonging to one S. C. McClung.

[1-3] The first point made on behalf of appellant is that the court erred in not giving defendant's instruction No. 2. The refusal to give this instruction was not error. The request was that the court instruct the jury that mere neglect to pay over money, or to hand over security or property, is not sufficient evidence in itself of fraudulent conversion thereof to one's own use, "for there may be losses and failure to pay where a failure is due to misfortune or from other causes not criminal." There was no evidence on which this instruction could have been predicated and, hence the instruction would have been misleading. The requested instruction is also objectionable in that it requests the court to give the reasons on which the requested instruction is based. The instructions to a jury should not be argumentative. The trial judge is responsible for the instructions, and it is not for the jury to review them—hence the judge's reasons in support of the instructions would not only be surplusage, but often confusing to the jury. Where a requested instruction is offered as a whole, and any proposition contained therein ought not to have been given, the court is justified in refusing the whole instruction. Williamson v. Tobey, 86 Cal. 497, 25 P. 65; Wiley v. Young, 178 Cal. 681, 683, 174 P. 316.

[4] Appellant's second point pertains to the refusal of a requested instruction as to the character of the transactions between appellant and McClung, and is based upon the unlawfulness of the transaction under the provisions of article 4, § 26, of our state Constitution. Whatever our opinion may be as to the merit of this proposed instruction, we hold that it is the settled law of this state that, although the money may have been given and received to accomplish an unlawful purpose, the embezzlement of it by the receiver is criminal. People v. Ward, 134 Cal. 301, 66 P. 372; People v. Martin, 102 Cal. 558, 36 P. 952. Appellant's third point is that the court erred in refusing to give appellant's instruction No. 6. This requested instruction is based upon the appellant's contention that the transaction between appellant and McClung was unlawful. The instruction was correctly refused on the doctrine announced in People v. Ward, supra.

[5-7] Appellant's fourth point is that the court erred in admitting Exhibit No. 22 in evidence. This was a document taken from the files of Hutton & Co. showing all transactions in grain had by appellant with that company. It had been proven that the ledger from which the exhibit was taken was kept in the custody of the witness verifying it, and constituted that company's record of all grain transactions with all its customers, and was made under that witness' supervision, and that the entries were otherwise sufficiently verified. The ledger itself was present in court. Hutton & Co. were not parties to the action. The exhibits were records of the business transactions of a corporation required by law to be kept by all corporations for profit. Hurwitz v. Gross, 5 Cal. App. 620, 91 P. 109; section 377, Civ. Code. Having been so made, unless impeached, they are presumed to be correct. Therefore the court did not err in admitting the same. The same conclusion follows, in relation to appellant's fifth point, that the court erred in admitting in evidence Exhibit 23 purporting to be an individual ledger account of A. H. Woollacott Company with the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank. This was in rebuttal of appellant's claim that he had money of the complaining witness on deposit in that bank in the name of A. H. Woollacott Company. It had been proven that the ledger account was the original ledger showing the original ledger sheets of Woollacott Company which were kept in the vault of the bank. It had been shown that the complaining witness had been dealing indiscriminately with A. H. Woollacott and with A. H. Woollacott Company, and the account had been kept at the bank by A. H. Woollacott in the name of A. H. Woollacott Company.

[8] In reply to the brief filed in behalf of the state, a reply brief was filed in which other points in support of appellant's appeal were made. All the material points made in the reply brief had been made in the opening brief in a more condensed form. One of the additional points was made that there was no embezzlement by appellant, because the moneys alleged to have been embezzled by appellant were not intrusted to him, but to A. H. Woollacott Company, a corporation. But the evidence shows that the complaining witnesses dealt entirely with appellant in the transactions and that he controlled and handled the moneys they transferred to him, in the same manner as though A. H. Woollacott Company had had nothing to do with it. He was the person intrusted, and the only person who appeared to have anything to do with obtaining the moneys or disposing of them. We therefore hold that the embezzlement proven in this case was committed by defendant personally, and that he is as responsible for it as he would have been if A. H. Woollacott Company had not been mentioned in the transaction. It is apparent that the facts of this case do not bring it within the rule announced in Ballew v. State, 11 Okl. Cr. 598, 149 P. 1070. There it was charged that the defendant, cashier of a bank, embezzled funds of the bank's customer. The court held that the information was defective in that it alleged embezzlement of the funds of the customer, whereas it should have alleged embezzlement of the funds of the bank, because it appeared on the face of the information that the money embezzled was the bank's property, and was under defendant's control as cashier.

[9] Appellant contends that the indictment was not direct and certain in that it charges two distinct and separate offenses not in any manner connected or arising out of the same transaction, and brought by two complaining witnesses and each requiring two different lines of evidence and witnesses to support the same. In appellant's reply brief only has this point been raised. But section 954, Penal Code, provides that the indictment or information may charge two or more different offenses of the same class of crimes or offenses under separate counts. The court, under that section, could have ordered the two counts of the indictment tried separately, but was not required to do so, and it is now too late to complain that such order was not made.

[10] As to count I of the indictment, it appears from the evidence that on August 8, 1924, Bonsall gave appellant a check for $10,000 with instructions to immediately deposit the whole of said sum with E. F. Hutton & Co., in the name of A. H. Woollacott Company, for the purpose of opening up a special grain account and to secure any trades that Bonsall might make from time to time. Appellant was to buy and sell grain for Bonsall through this account, subject to the authorization of Bonsall. Thereafter, on October 8, 1924, Bonsall gave appellant a check in the sum of $2,000 to be deposited with E. F. Hutton & Co. in order to strengthen his grain account, and again on October 10, 1924, he gave appellant another check in the sum of $1,500 for the same purpose. Between August 8th and December 10th Bonsall instructed appellant to make 15 or 20 trades for him through E. F. Hutton & Co., and on or about the 12th of November Bonsall informed appellant that he (Bonsall) had discovered that no more than $5,000 of his money had been deposited as directed. Upon demand being made of appellant as to the whereabouts of the balance, amounting to approximately $10,000, appellant stated to Bonsall that this money was on deposit in the Hellman Bank. After conversation as to the bank account being attached, appellant informed Bonsall that the money was on deposit over at the Commercial Trust & Savings Bank and that that was unattached. Appellant also stated that $5,000 of Bonsall's money was attached at Hutton & Co., and then stated that there was $11,000 over at the said Commercial Trust & Savings Bank.

After Bonsall made an investigation and reported to appellant that there was no money at that bank, in any such account, Bonsall states that appellant told him that he had used the money. Bonsall made several trips to the office of appellant to receive the money, but it was never at any time paid to him. On each of these occasions appellant would request him to come back again. With the exception of a few dollars over $300, Bonsall never received any part of the $13,500 which he turned over to appellant. On November 30th appellant, in writing, admitted a credit to the account of Bonsall in the sum alleged to have been embezzled in count I of the indictment.

Deputy District Attorney Ryan, in his evidence, testified that when he asked appellant whether he owed Bonsall this money, that the appellant stated to him that he did owe it, but that he did not have it to return—that he had spent it in gambling in Tia Juana.

The original record of E. F. Hutton & Company, admitted in evidence after being identified by the employee of said company who made the same, showed that no more than $4,500 had been deposited by appellant. Receipts also were filed as exhibits herein, and after having been identified by the assistant cashier of E. F. Hutton & Co., after the statement that they were in his handwriting. These receipts were issued in the regular course of business and were part of the permanent records of E. F. Hutton & Co. In each instance where records of E. F. Hutton & Co. were introduced in evidence, they were either introduced by the man who made the same or by clerks who were employees of said company. The clerks, in each instance, testified that they were the original records of the company. An examination of these exhibits reveals that the appellant did not comply with Bonsall's instruction relative to deposit of the latter's money with E. F. Hutton & Co. According to the exhibits filed, appellant's balance at no time amounted to as much as $7.000. The original ledger sheets of appellant's account with the Hellman Bank were identified by the head bookkeeper for the bank and received in evidence. They show that on August 8, 1924, appellant deposited $10,000; on October 8, 1924, $2,000; on October 10, 1924, $1,500—these being the dates that Bonsall gave appellant checks for the sums of money identical with the amounts deposited.

It would make no difference that these amounts were deposited with appellant for the purpose of entering into an illegal transaction, or a strictly legal one, or whether it was for the purchase of grain on a margin, or whether it was for the purpose of buying or selling grain short, or whether it was buying stocks or grain on installments, for the money was still the money of Bonsall until it was expended as he directed. It has been held in People v. Ward, 134 Cal. 301, at page 309 (66 P. 372, 375):

> "It is also contended by appellant that as the authority given by the Union for the withdrawal of the money from the bank was for the fraudulent purpose of hindering and delaying its creditors, a conversion of it by the defendant did not constitute embezzlement, and that the court erred in not instructing the jury to that effect, as requested. The instruction was properly refused. The Union, by authorizing the withdrawal of the deposit, did not part with its ownership of the money, nor pretend or attempt to do so. As between it and its agent, to whom the money was intrusted, there can be no question as to its ownership. In Commonwealth v. Cooper, 130 Mass. 285, it was held to be no defense to an indictment for the embezzlement of the money that it was intrusted to the defendant for an illegal purpose. See, also, Commonwealth v. Smith, 129 Mass. 111; State v. Shadd, 80 Mo. 358; State v. May, 20 Iowa, 305; State v. Tumey, 81 Ind. 559; People v. Martin, 102 Cal. 558, 36 P. 952."

See, also, People v. Edwards, 72 Cal. App. 121, 122, 236 P. 944. One of the principal objections of the appellant which he is urging is that the court erred in refusing to give instructions directly contrary to the above rule as set forth.

The evidence in this case clearly discloses the fact that the appellant and A. H. Woollacott Company were substantially one and the same; that that was the name under which he was transacting business, using sometimes his own name and sometimes using the name of A. H. Woollacott Company without making any distinction between his own individual name and that of the corporation.

The same reasoning would apply to each of the objections made by the appellant to the introduction of evidence and the refusal of instructions as to count V of the indictment, excepting the conversation had with Ryan and Bonsall. From the conversation had between appellant and McClung, in reference to the money referred to in the fifth count of the indictment, it appears from the evidence that about April 1, 1925, appellant confessed to McClung that he had not bought the stocks in question, but instead had lost McClung's money in personal and unauthorized speculations. And again, in the first part of May, 1926, McClung and appellant discussed the dealings and appellant stated that he had been involved in similar trouble in 1920 and 1921 and did not wish to have McClung make him any further trouble now. Appellant stated to McClung at that time that he, McClung, had been very lenient with him up to that time, and that he appreciated it as he realized that he could have put him in jail at any time that he wanted to. McClung, however, in spite of the promises of appellant to reimburse him, never received any part or portion of the $3,850 which he acknowledged was due to McClung as representing the amount due from appellant to McClung on March 18, 1925. At the time that appellant admitted that he owed the sum of $3,850 to McClung, he represented to McClung that the stocks which had been attached, and which were referred to in the written acknowledgment—acknowledging the sum of $3,850 to be due—were all intact, and that it was only by reason of the attachment which he said had been levied that he was unable to make delivery of them. Later, however, on April 1, 1925, appellant confessed to McClung that he had not bought the stocks in question, but stated to him that he had lost McClung's money in personal and unauthorized speculations.

Therefore it appears to us that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict, and there are no errors of law justifying a reversal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 1

OFFEMAN v. ROBERTSON-COLE STUDIOS, Inc. (Civ. 3147.) *

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 26, 1926. Opinion Modified and Rehearing Denied Dec. 24, 1926.)

1. Master and servant 🔑39(2)—Plaintiff, not alleging nor proving disposal of interest in corporation, could not recover from employer on contract to reimburse.

Plaintiff, alleging that, by terms of contract of employment, as manager of defendant's studio, he was to dispose of his interest in another company controlled by him, and that defendant was to reimburse him for loss sustained thereby, may not recover for such loss, in absence of allegation or proof that he disposed of such interest.

2. Master and servant 🔑39(2)—Plaintiff, not alleging sale of furniture or loss thereby, could not recover from employer under contract to reimburse for loss in sale.

Plaintiff, alleging that defendant employer agreed to reimburse him for loss sustained by sale of furniture, may not recover for loss, in absence of allegations that he sold the furniture or sustained loss in the sale.

3. Master and servant 🔑40(3)—Finding employer agreed to purchase house of reasonable value, to become employee's property, held not sustained by evidence.

Finding that defendant employer agreed to purchase house of reasonable value, to become plaintiff employee's sole property, held not sustained by evidence that defendant would supply plaintiff with a house and furnish it.

4. Master and servant 🔑41(1)—Employee may not recover full value of residence, to be given him in part payment for three years' services, on performance of but part of services.

Under contract whereby employer is to give employee a residence in part payment of three years' services, employee may not recover full value of residence on performance of only part of such services.

5. Corporations 🔑1—Corporation and stockholders will be treated as identical, when necessary to redress fraud, to protect third persons, or to prevent palpable injustice.

When necessary to redress fraud, to protect rights of third persons, or to prevent palpable injustice, corporation and stockholders will be treated as identical entities, with identical duties and obligations.

6. Corporations 🔑428(7)—President, in accordance with duty, is presumed to report to trustees information concerning interests of corporation.

President is considered head of corporation and must report to trustees information concerning its interests and is presumed to do so, which presumption is usually conclusive.

7. Corporations 🔑428(1)—Within scope of employment, knowledge of officers is knowledge of corporation.

Knowledge of officers of corporation, within the scope of their duties and employment, is the knowledge of the corporation.

8. Corporations 🔑428(7) — Corporation is presumed to have been informed of terms of employment of general manager of motion picture corporation, where president was informed.

Where president was fully informed of terms of employment of general manager of motion picture corporation, it must be presumed that the corporation was so informed.

9. Frauds, statute of 🔑44(3)—Oral agreement for services as corporation manager for three years is unenforceable, under statute of frauds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973; Civ. Code, § 1624).

Agreement for services by employee, for three years, as manager of corporation operating motion picture studio, being oral and not to be performed within a year from the making thereof, held unenforceable, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, and Civ. Code, § 1624.

10. Frauds, statute of 🔑125(3) — Contract contrary to statute of frauds is voidable, remedy only being affected.

Contract within and in contravention to statute of frauds is voidable not void, the remedy and not the validity of the contract being affected.

11. Trial 🔑203(1)—Instructions should permit recovery on but one theory.

Recovery on but one theory should be permitted by instructions.

12. Frauds, statute of 🔑138(4)—On breach by employer of contract, unenforceable under statute of frauds, whose validity employer is estopped to deny, employee may recover on contract or may recover reasonable value of services, treating contract as rescinded, but not on both theories.

In case employer is estopped to deny validity of oral contract, unenforceable under statute of frauds, which was breached by him, employee can recover either contract price for services performed and damages for breach of contract or reasonable value for services performed, treating contract as rescinded, but not on both theories.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court January 24, 1927.

13. Frauds, statute of 🔑138(4)—Employee may recover reasonable value of services performed under contract, unenforceable under statute of frauds, but no interest prior to judgment.

Employee may recover reasonable value of services performed by him under contract, unenforceable under statute of frauds, though employer is not estopped to deny its validity, but not interest on such reasonable value prior to judgment.

14. Frauds, statute of 🔑158(4) — Estoppel by employer to deny validity of contract for services, unenforceable under statute of frauds, held not shown by evidence, as it did not show loss by employee.

Evidence held insufficient to establish estoppel of employer to deny that contract for services was unenforceable under statute of frauds, being insufficient to show loss by employee, and hence allowing interest prior to judgment was error, as no interest is allowable on recovery for reasonable value prior to judgment.

15. Master and servant 🔑40(1)—One changing residence, in accepting employment, held not presumed to suffer loss.

There is no presumption that one suffers loss by changing his place of residence from New York to Los Angeles, in accepting employment.

16. Appeal and error 🔑1139—Where finding would sustain verdict on theory of estoppel to deny validity of contract for services or on theory of implied contract to pay therefor, plaintiff, waiving other recovery on contract, but not otherwise, may have judgment, though it cannot be told which theory was adopted.

Since finding of reasonable value of employee's services to be same as contract price would sustain verdict on theory of estoppel of employer to deny validity of contract or on theory of implied contract to pay reasonable value of services, employee, waiving other recovery on contract, may have judgment for such sum, but not otherwise, as recovery cannot be had on both theories.

On Petition for Rehearing.

17. Frauds, statute of 🔑138(4)—Stipulations as to compensation in oral contract for services unenforceable under statute are admissible to show reasonable value, though not conclusive (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1967–1969, 1973; Civ. Code, § 1624).

Where oral contract for services is unenforceable under statute of frauds, Civ. Code, § 1624, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, oral stipulations as to compensation are in the nature of admissions as to reasonable value of services, and are admissible, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1967–1969, 1973, but not conclusive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Emil Offeman against the Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc., for breach of contract. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed, on condition of remittitur.

Loeb, Walker & Loeb, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment entered in the trial court in favor of the plaintiff. The complaint alleges:

"That on or about February 14, 1922, defendant, through its duly authorized agents, entered into a contract with plaintiff, whereby, in consideration that plaintiff immediately dispose of and/or give up his household goods and/or personal effects in and about the city of New York and dispose of his interest in the Reol Productions, Inc., controlled by plaintiff, at whatever loss sustained by plaintiff, by disposing of or giving up his household goods and/or personal effects and said business, and become general manager of Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc., in the county of Los Angeles, State of California, for a period of three years, beginning February 14, 1922, and ending February 14, 1925, defendant would compensate plaintiff as follows:

"(1) Pay to plaintiff the sum of $500 per week, payable at the end of each and every week, for and during said entire period beginning February 4, 1922, to and including February 4, 1925.

"(2) To issue and/or cause to be issued to plaintiff 10,000 shares of Class B common stock, of the par value of $10 each, in the R-C Pictures Corporation, upon and at the time of the entry of the employment by plaintiff of defendant pursuant to said contract.

"(3) To compensate and reimburse plaintiff for any loss sustained by plaintiff by the sale and disposal of his household goods and/or personal effects, his interest in said Reol Productions, Inc.; to pay the expenses of himself and family from New York to the city of Los Angeles, Cal., and return; to pay the purchase price of a house of reasonable value for plaintiff in or about Los Angeles, Cal., to be deeded to plaintiff and become plaintiff's sole property; and, further, to provide and pay to plaintiff for suitable living accommodations in and about the city of Los Angeles, Cal., until such time as said realty should be purchased for plaintiff by defendant.

"(4) To pay for and furnish plaintiff with reasonable and suitable household furnishings and furniture, to become the sole property of plaintiff, at or about the city of Los Angeles, Cal.

"(5) That a written contract would be forthwith entered into by and between plaintiff and defendant for said period of three years, and upon the consideration hereinbefore set forth.

* * *

"That confiding in, and relying upon the truth of the statements, representations, and contract of defendant, so made as aforesaid, plaintiff did, on or about February 4, 1922, > enter upon his said employment, and the performance of said contract, and faithfully, fairly, fully, and completely fulfilled and performed all of the conditions of said contract by plaintiff to be fulfilled and performed, on his part, until defendant, as hereinafter alleged, discharged the plaintiff. That solely by reason of accepting said employment, in and by said contract, as aforesaid, plaintiff has lost the entire value of his interest in said business, to wit, Reol Productions, Inc., of the value of about $50,000, the value of which was known to defendant, its agents, and representatives, at the time the contract hereinbefore set forth was made with plaintiff.

>
> "That defendant did, on or about November 24, 1923, without any complaint having been made against plaintiff by the defendant, and without any cause whatever, discharge plaintiff from said employment; and defendant has ever since said date refused, and still refuses to allow and permit plaintiff to perform the duties and conditions of said contract on plaintiff's part to be performed."

In his first cause of action, the plaintiff alleges that there is a balance due him, for services rendered at $500 a week, the sum of $33,725. He also alleges therein that, "by reason of accepting said employment, * * * plaintiff has lost the entire value of his interest in said * * * Reol Productions, Inc., of the value of $50,000." The second cause of action is for damages in the sum of $31,000, the amount which he would have earned at $500 a week during the remainder of the term of his employment. The third cause of action is for damages in the sum of $100,000 because of the defendant's failure to deliver the shares of stock agreed upon. The third cause of action also contains the following allegation:

> "That defendant, at all of the times herein alleged, has refused and still refuses to purchase a reasonable priced residence for plaintiff, and plaintiff was compelled to and did purchase a residence of the value of $15,000, on or about the 2d day of June, 1923, in which sum plaintiff has been damaged, and that no part of said sum has been paid."

In the fourth cause of action it is alleged that the plaintiff performed said services "upon the special order and request of said defendant"; that the "defendant promised to pay to plaintiff the reasonable value thereof"; that $500 a week is such a reasonable value; and that a balance of $33,725 thereof remains due and unpaid.

The answer admits that "on or about February 4, 1922, this defendant entered into a contract with plaintiff wherein and whereby plaintiff was employed as general manager of studios of the defendant in the said county of Los Angeles, but denies that said employment was for a period of three years * * * or for any other period exceeding a period of one week, and thereafter from week to week, at the option of this defendant," and denies that the defendant agreed to pay plaintiff $500 a week "or any other sum in excess of $150 a week." The answer denies the other allegations of the complaint herein quoted, except the averment that plaintiff performed the alleged services, and, as a separate defense, alleges "that if any contract was ever made or entered into, as alleged, * * * there was no note or memorandum thereof in writing," and that therefore it was invalid. As a third and separate defense, the answer alleges "that this defendant employed plaintiff as general manager of studios, from week to week, at a salary of $150 a week, plus house rental," that the defendant has paid the plaintiff such salary and "also supplied plaintiff with house rental during said employment."

The jury returned a general verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $75,000. A special verdict also was returned, by which the jury found, in substance, that the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff $500 a week for three years; to issue to him shares of stock, as alleged in the complaint; to reimburse plaintiff for loss sustained by him "by the sale and disposal of his household goods and/or personal effects, his interest in said Reol Productions, Inc.; * * * to pay the purchase price of a house of a reasonable value for plaintiff in or about Los Angeles, * * * to be deeded to plaintiff and become plaintiff's sole property"; to reduce the contract to writing; that the plaintiff left his business and employment in New York to accept said employment in Los Angeles and thereby suffered "loss to his interest in Reol Productions, Inc., and * * * in his personal effects and household goods"; that the plaintiff rendered services under the contract for 94 weeks; that $500 a week is the reasonable value of such services; that $15,000 is a reasonable value for a residence for plaintiff; and that by "giving up his business in New York and entering the employment of defendant" the plaintiff sustained a loss of $20,000.

The trial court granted a nonsuit as to plaintiff's claim for damages on account of defendant's failure to deliver the shares of stock alleged to have been agreed upon. The court granted a new trial "as to the issue that plaintiff has lost the entire value of his interest in said Reol Productions and was thereby damaged in the sum of $20,000, as found by the special verdict of the jury on that issue," thereby reducing the amount of plaintiff's recovery to $55,000.

In order that the picture presented by the record may be understood, it is necessary to describe the actors who have principal parts therein. At all times material to the questions raised by the appeal there were three corporations, all governed by "practically the same officers and the same directors" and occupying the same offices in New York City. The R-C Pictures Corporation was the parent company and the others were subsidiary corporations, the defendant being the picture producing company and the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation the distributing company. Grahams of London was a copartnership, not incorporated. The copartnership had various business interests in this country and owned all of the capital stock of the corporations named. Sir Erskine Crum was its business representative. He was "one of the London people of Grahams who usually handled the American accounts."

His particular authority to act for Grahams was not shown, but in the name of Grahams he executed a contract with Patrick A. Powers, hereinafter referred to, by which the latter was made the general manager of the three corporations, and which contract was carried into effect by such corporations. Crum authorized Powers to promise the delivery of a certain number of shares of Grahams' stock to some of the employees of the corporations as additional compensation. Powers accordingly promised stock to plaintiff and two other employees, named Berman and Schnitzer. Under date of April 30, 1922, in a letter to Schnitzer, Crum stated:

> "I write this on leaving for England to put on record the arrangements made with Mr. Powers for your interests in the R-C Pictures Corporation. Out of the 40,000 shares of treasury stock in the corporation of B. common stock, 10,000 shares of the par value of $10 each will be retained for you to be handed to you as follows."

The letter then proceeds to state the terms upon which shares of stock will be delivered to Schnitzer from time to time as preferred stock is retired. Powers testified that he was present at a meeting of the board of directors of the R-C Pictures Corporation in the fall of 1923, when H. C. S. Thomson presented to the board for approval contracts "entered into between Schnitzer and the Grahams and Mr. Berman and the Grahams," by the terms of which Schnitzer and Berman were to receive more shares of stock than had been promised them. The foregoing evidence tends to show that Crum had actual authority to enter into contracts in behalf of Grahams, and, since it was peculiarly within the power of the defendant to show with certainty the extent of Crum's authority and no evidence was offered to rebut the inference to be drawn from such evidence, the reasonable conclusion is that his acts were duly authorized. At the time the plaintiff was employed, the directors of the defendant corporation were Sir Erskine Crum, J. P. Kennedy, W. W. Lancaster, Rufus S. Cole, and R. J. Tobin. Cole was president of the corporation, and continued in that office until May 16, 1922, when he resigned, both as director and president, and Powers was elected to succeed him as managing director. Prior to that time, on the 17th of February, 1922, Powers had been elected managing director of the R-C Pictures Corporation. Tobin resigned as a director of defendant corporation March 10, 1922, and H. C. S. Thomson was elected to fill the vacancy. Thomson was chairman of the board of directors of the R-C Pictures Corporation from August, 1921, to October or November, 1923. He then became managing director in place of Powers.

Grahams had invested large sums of money in the moving picture enterprises of the corporations named and was receiving no returns therefrom. Powers was a man of affairs, with a wide experience in the moving picture industry. After various negotiations between Crum and Powers during January, 1922, a written agreement was executed on the 4th day of February, 1922, by Grahams, as party of the first part, and Powers, as party of the second part; Crum executing the agreement as attorney in fact of Grahams. Relative to this agreement, Powers testified:

> "I entered into an agreement with Crum, on behalf of Grahams & Co., of London, England, who were the entire owners * * * of the R-C Pictures Corporation and its subsidiary companies, to take over the management of the business."

Thomson testified that such agreement was the contract by which Powers was employed, and the agreement was offered in evidence by the defendant, but plaintiff's objection to its admission was sustained. The agreement is set forth at length in the record and there is nothing therein that could possibly strengthen the defendant's case. February 17, 1922, R-C Pictures Corporation amended its by-laws by creating the office of managing director and providing:

> "The managing director shall exercise general supervision of the business affairs and property of the corporation. He shall have the power and authority, subject at all times to the board of directors, to supervise the conduct, management and general policy of the corporation. * * * He shall consult and confer with the chairman of the board of the corporation upon any plan or action of substantial importance to be taken in connection with the affairs of the corporation and shall take no action of such character and shall have no power to bind, permit or otherwise involve the corporation in an amount in any way exceeding five thousand dollars, or to transfer or convey any of its property without first consulting with and receiving the approval of the chairman thereto."

On the same day the board of directors, as shown by the minutes, elected Powers "to the office of managing director of this corporation, to serve without compensation, in accordance with the provision of the by-laws. The vote in favor of the foregoing resolution was as follows: In favor: Sir Erskine Crum, W. W. Lancaster, H. C. S. Thomson. Oppose: Rufus S. Cole." The subsidiary corporations appear to have taken the same steps toward the amendment of their by-laws and the appointment of Powers as managing director.

During the month of January, 1922, Powers and the plaintiff arrived at an understanding to the effect that the plaintiff was to perform certain services in New York and then take charge of the defendant's studio in Los Angeles, as general manager thereof. February 4, 1922, Crum, Powers, and the plaintiff reached an understanding as to the terms of plaintiff's employment. Relative thereto, the plaintiff testified:

> "Mr. Powers said I would receive $500 a week from the company with a certain amount of stock to be set aside for myself; * * * that any losses I may sustain in leaving my own business in New York would be borne by the company, * * * would be reimbursed by the company; that they would supply me with a home here; * * * with a house, and furnish it. * * * He said he would buy a home and furnish it for me. * * * Sir Erskine Crum said * * * that all the terms Mr. Powers had just explained to him were perfectly satisfactory to him, that it was up to Mr. Powers who was managing director, who had charge of everything; * * * that all the terms of the agreement would be put in writing as soon as possible. * * * They asked me, Sir Erskine Crum and Mr. Powers, to immediately start with the work of reorganization of the R-C Pictures Corporation and its subsidiary companies. * * * Sir Erskine Crum told me two or three times, he says, 'We have millions at stake and the greatest leakage is in Los Angeles and * * * to go over there and stop it as soon as possible"; that about the middle of February Crum said, "You have got to go, time is the essence of everything, we are losing thousands of dollars every week; * * * never worry, go ahead, and we will take care of you."

The plaintiff left New York for Los Angeles on the 23d of the same month. Cole, who was then president of the defendant corporation, and Powers accompanied plaintiff on the trip. Testimony was introduced to the effect that, during the journey to Los Angeles, all the terms of plaintiff's employment were explained to Cole. Powers' testimony relative to the terms of plaintiff's employment were substantially the same as that of the plaintiff, except that Powers did not remember that anything was said in Crum's presence about buying a house for plaintiff. Crum died before the trial. Plaintiff was paid $150 a week for the services performed by him. He testified that in the aforesaid conversation in New York Crum told him to draw as much as he needed up to $500 a week, but that on account of the defendant's need of money it was understood between Cole, Powers, and the plaintiff that the latter "should draw as little as possible." Powers testified that such was the understanding. The defendant paid the expenses of the plaintiff and his family in going from New York to Los Angeles and paid the rental of their living quarters at the latter place for seven months at $250 a month. The plaintiff then purchased a residence in Los Angeles for $15,000, and the defendant expended about $3,500 in furnishing it and an additional sum in enlarging the house. Plaintiff testified that he sold his furniture in New York at a loss of about $4,000. He acted as general manager of defendant's studio in Los Angeles until his discharge, without cause, as alleged in the complaint. Shortly after his discharge, plaintiff commenced this action. No written agreement was entered into by the parties, although the plaintiff frequently asked Powers to cause the agreement to be reduced to writing, and Powers put him off from time to time, promising him, however, to have a written contract executed. Both Cole and Thomson testified that they were never informed of the terms of the oral agreement. It does not appear that plaintiff had any knowledge of the limitations on Powers' authority.

[1, 2] The trial court granted a new trial as to the issue of damages on account of plaintiff's alleged loss in giving up his business in New York, thus reducing the amount found by the jury to $55,000. The allegations of the complaint in this connection are, in substance, that the plaintiff was to "dispose of his interest in the Reol Productions" and that the defendant was to reimburse him for any loss sustained thereby. There is neither allegation nor proof that he disposed of such interest and, hence there is no basis for a recovery on account of any loss thereby. The jury found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for salary earned and interest thereon, $36,462.01, and on account of the purchase price of a residence the sum of $15,000. Deducting these amounts from $55,000 leaves $3,537,99, which the jury must have awarded for the loss on the sale of the furniture in New York. The complaint does not allege that the plaintiff sustained any loss in the sale of his furniture in New York, or even that he sold the furniture. The judgment therefore must be reduced by the amount awarded for such loss.

[3, 4] Plaintiff's uncorroborated testimony that it was orally agreed "that they would supply me with a home here, * * * with a house, and furnish it, * * * would buy a house and furnish it for me," is too indefinite and uncertain to support the finding of the jury that the defendant agreed "to pay the purchase price of a house of a reasonable value, * * * to be deeded to plaintiff and become plaintiff's sole property." In any event, if the defendant was to give the plaintiff a residence in part payment for three years' services, he is not entitled to recover the full value of the residence upon performance of services for only a part of such period of time any more than he would be entitled to recover at the rate of $500 a week for the unexpired term of the employment.

[5-8] In considering the case, it must be kept in mind that Grahams was the sole owner of all the capital stock of the corporations involved in the foregoing transactions.

> "When necessary to redress fraud, protect the rights of third persons, or to prevent a palpable injustice, the law and equity will intervene and cast aside the legal fiction of independent corporate existence, as distinguished from those who hold and own the corporate capital stock, and deal with the corporation and stockholders as identical entities with identical duties and obligations." Wenban Estate, Inc. v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, 696, 227 P. 723, 731.

Also, effect must be given to the fact that, at the time of plaintiff's employment and during a part of the time of the performance of his services, Cole was president of the defendant corporation and was fully informed of the oral contract under which such services were being performed.

> "The president is considered the head of the corporation, and it is his duty to report to the trustees information affecting the interests of the corporation. And the presumption is that he does so. Usually, this is a conclusive presumption." Balfour v. Fresno Canal, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 395, 397, 55 P. 1062, 1063; McKenney v. Ellsworth, 165 Cal. 326, 329, 132 P. 75. "As a corporation can have knowledge only through the information of its officers and agents, the knowledge of such officers within the scope of their duties and employment becomes the knowledge of the corporation." Montecito Valley Co. v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 578, 597, 77 P. 1113, 1120.

It must be presumed, therefore, that the defendant was fully informed of the terms of plaintiff's employment and, with that knowledge, accepted and received the benefit of his services.

[9, 10] Admittedly, the agreement between the parties being oral and not to be performed within a year from the making thereof, it is unenforceable, under the provisions of section 1624 of the Civil Code and section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant contends that it is void and ineffective for any purpose.

> "It is the general rule, however, that a contract falling within the operation of the statute, but made in contravention thereof, is not invalid in the sense that it is void. It is merely voidable. The statute is said to relate to the remedy only and not to affect the validity of the oral contract." O'Brien v. O'Brien (Cal. Sup.) 241 P. 861, 864.

In Producers' Fruit Co. v. Goddard (Cal. App.) 243 P. 686, 693, Mr. Justice Hart said:

> "An agreement not in writing, but which the statute requires shall be in writing to be enforceable, if legally unobjectionable in all other respects, is as effective as to all the purposes for which it has been made as is such an agreement whose terms have been committed to writing until its enforcement is voided upon the ground that it is not in writing." There are statements in some decisions in this state, especially the earlier ones, to the effect that a contract within the statute of frauds is void, but an examination of such cases discloses that the word "void" was used therein as synonymous with the word "unenforceable."

Appellant urges that it was error to admit proof of the terms of the oral agreement as evidence of the reasonable value of plaintiff's services. Particular reliance is placed upon Hanley v. Murphy, 70 Cal. App. 157, 232 P. 767, decided by this court in the year 1924. The invalid contract which was held in that case to be inadmissible in evidence, however, was not offered as proof of the value of the plaintiff's services, but to defeat plaintiff's cause of action, on the ground that such services had been performed under the invalid contract and not as alleged by the plaintiff. The invalid contract provided that the plaintiff was to be compensated by receiving a share of the wool and of the increase of a band of sheep, and it is clear that the terms of the contract would throw no light upon the value of plaintiff's services, in the absence of proof of the value of such wool and increase. Even though an oral contract may be unenforceable, the oral stipulations of the parties as to the compensation to be paid for services rendered under it are in the nature of admissions by them as to the reasonable value of such services and, while not conclusive, are admissible in evidence. In this case, the terms of the oral contract constitute the only evidence upon the question of the value of plaintiff's services. In a similar case it is said:

> "This value, in the absence of any other evidence on the subject, may be fairly assumed at what was stipulated for in the parol contract. Though not binding or conclusive, it may be regarded as admissible evidence for that purpose. Neither party though fit to adduce any other. * * * As a declaration of the parties, it is entitled to some credence." Clark v. United States, 95 U. S. 539, 543, 24 L. Ed. 518, 519. "In an action for services, evidence of the terms of the verbal agreement are admissible to establish * * * the value of the services, it is usually held [citing numerous cases], although there is authority to the contrary." 27 C. J. 380.

While no case in this state has been cited in which the facts are the same as in this, there are several analogous cases holding that an unenforceable contract is admissible in evidence to prove the reasonable value of services performed or materials furnished under the contract. Laidlaw v. Marye, 133 Cal. 170, 176, 65 P. 391; Condon v. Donohue, 160 Cal. 749, 754, 118 P. 113; Bringham v. Knox, 127 Cal. 40, 44, 59 P. 198; Joost v. Sullivan, 111 Cal. 286, 296, 43 P. 896; Booth v. Pendola, 88 Cal. 36, 41, 23 P. 200, 25 P. 1101; Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, 23 P. 127; Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 109;

Hawaiian, etc., Co. v. Butler, 17 Cal. App. 764, 770, 121 P. 709; Naylor v. Adams, 15 Cal. App. 548, 556, 115 P. 335.

[11] Appellant complains of some of the instructions given by the court and of the court's refusal to give certain instructions requested by the defendant. The special verdict, however, is sufficient to support the judgment for $33,725, the largest amount for which the judgment can be affirmed, and, since neither the instructions given nor those refused could have influenced the jury in making the special findings which support the verdict and judgment to the extent mentioned, it is unnecessary to consider them further than to say that, in the event of a new trial, the instructions should be so framed as to permit a recovery on but one of the theories to be hereinafter considered.

[12, 13] If it be determined that the defendant is estopped to deny the validity of the oral contract, then the plaintiff will be entitled to recover the contract price for services performed and, also, such damages, if any, as he has suffered by reason of the defendant's breach thereof, or he may treat the contract as rescinded by such breach and recover the reasonable value of the services performed, but he cannot recover on both theories, or partly on the one and partly on the other. If it finally be determined that the defendant is not estopped, still the plaintiff may recover the reasonable value of the services performed by him. In such case, however, he cannot recover interest upon such reasonable value prior to judgment. Swinnerton v. Argonaut L. & D. Co., 112 Cal. 375, 379, 44 P. 719; Macomber v. Bigelow, 123 Cal. 532, 535, 56 P. 449; Macomber v. Bigelow, 126 Cal. 9, 14, 58 P. 312. Since it is impossible to determine from the record whether the verdict is based upon the theory of estoppel or upon the implied promise of defendant to pay the reasonable value of the services performed, and since the evidence is insufficient to establish an estoppel, the award of interest cannot be upheld.

[14, 15] The only evidence tending to prove an estoppel is that the plaintiff sacrificed his business and his furniture in New York in reliance upon the oral agreement of employment. At most, the evidence only shows that plaintiff's business became valueless. It does not appear that it would not have become equally valueless if he had remained in New York, or that it was not conducted, after his departure, by persons as competent as himself. While there is testimony to the effect that he sustained a loss in the sale of his furniture in New York, the evidence is very unsatisfactory as to what the defendant agreed to do relative to such loss. The plaintiff's testimony in that connection is of the most general character. His wife sold the furniture in May, 1922, she having remained in New York up to that time. She testified that before the sale Powers told her to sell the furniture, to "just sell it and get all you can for it. He told me that they would replace my furniture." The defendant did replace the furniture by paying for other furniture for plaintiff's Los Angeles residence. There is no other evidence tending to show that the plaintiff sustained any loss by accepting the employment. There is no presumption that one suffers a loss by changing his place of residence from New York to Los Angeles. Standing v. Morosco, 43 Cal. App. 244, 184 P. 954.

[16] The jury expressly found from the uncontradicted evidence, the admissions of the parties in the oral agreement, that $500 a week is "a reasonable salary or a reasonable value of plaintiff's work and labor per week." This finding would be sufficient to justify the verdict to that extent upon the theory of estoppel, if an estoppel had been proved. It is also sufficient, upon the theory of an implied contract, to pay the reasonable value of such services. There appears to be no reason, therefore, why the judgment may not stand to the extent of such reasonable value, providing the plaintiff waive his alleged right to recover for the loss of his business and the value of his Los Angeles residence, but, if he desires to further prosecute the action for the recovery of the amount of such loss and value, then the whole case should be retried, because the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services in one trial, upon the theory of an implied contract, and upon the terms of the oral contract in another.

It is ordered and adjudged that if the respondent shall, within 30 days after the going down of the remittitur herein, file in the trial court a written release of the judgment to the extent of $21,275 and a written consent to the dismissal of all causes of action alleged in the complaint except that for the reasonable value of the alleged services actually performed by the plaintiff, then the judgment shall stand affirmed for the sum of $33,725 and costs in the trial court. If such release and consent be not so filed within said time, then the judgment shall stand reversed. In either case, the appellant to recover costs of appeal.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

FINCH, P. J. [17] Appellant has filed a petition for a rehearing, in which it is urged that a contract which is unenforceable, because within the statute of frauds, is not admissible in evidence in an action of quantum meruit as tending to prove the reasonable value of services rendered. Reliance is placed on the provision of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is herein italicized as follows:

> "In the following cases the agreement is invalid, unless the same or some note or memorandum thereof be in writing, and subscribed by the party charged, or by his agent. Evidence, therefore, of the agreement, cannot be received without the writing or secondary evidence of its contents: 1. An agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof. * * *"

The heading of chapter 6, tit. 2, part 4, in which section 1973 appears, is "Indispensable Evidence." The first section in the chapter, 1967, provides:

> "The law makes certain evidence necessary to the validity of particular acts, or the proof of particular facts."

Section 1968 provides that:

> "Perjury and treason must be proved by testimony of more than one witness."

Section 1969 provides:

> "A last will and testament, except a nuncupative will, is invalid, unless it be in writing and executed with such formalities as are required by law. When, therefore, such a will is to be shown, the instrument itself must be produced, or secondary evidence of its contents be given."

The evident intent running through the provisions of chapter 6 is to specify the "indispensable evidence" which is "necessary to the validity of particular acts, or the proof of particular facts" which are enumerated in that chapter, and not to make such provisions applicable to the proof of other acts or facts. The provision of section 1969, that, when "such a will is to be shown, the instrument itself must be produced, or secondary evidence of its contents be given," is similar to the provision of section 1973 upon which appellant relies. An invalid will may be admitted in evidence as a declaration of a decedent in a suit by one named as beneficiary thereunder to recover for services rendered the decedent. Estate of Rohrer, 160 Cal. 574, 576, 117 P. 672, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 479; Mayborne v. Citizens' T. & S. Bank, 46 Cal. App. 178, 187, 188 P. 1034. "A written statement is none the less competent as an admission because it is contained in a document which is not itself effective for the purpose for which it was made, either by reason of illegality or incompetency of a party thereto." 22 C. J. 307. If the terms of an ineffective written contract may be proved as admissions, no substantial reason appears for holding that the terms of an ineffective oral contract may not be so proved.

In Elliott on Contracts, § 1213, it is said that courts differ as to the construction to be placed on the statute of frauds; that some "always insist on a literal interpretation and application of the statute, regardless of its manifest intent and purpose"; and that others construe the statute "so as to make it apply only in those cases which come within the intent of the statute." The California cases cited herein and those cited in the original opinion show that the courts of this state have adopted the latter rule. It clearly appears from the provisions of chapter 6 as a whole, also from the provisions of section 1973 standing alone, that the language upon which appellant relies was not intended to exclude proof of admissions against the interest of a party upon the mere ground that such admissions constitute the terms of an unenforceable contract, but to exclude such proof when offered for the purpose of establishing the contract in an action to enforce the same. "When the contract is offered as evidence merely and not for the purpose of founding a claim, it may be received." 27 C. J. 379.

In this case proof of the oral contract was admissible, not for the purpose of founding a claim thereon, but as constituting an admission by defendant as to the value of the services which plaintiff rendered. Such evidence, as stated, is not conclusive, as it would be if the contract were enforceable. In a case such as this the oral agreement is not the basis of the action, "but evidence of its terms is often necessary to establish the implied contract upon which recovery is sought." Baldridge v. Centgraf, 82 Kan. 240, 108 P. 83; Longhofer v. Herbel, 83 Kan. 278, 111 P. 483. To give section 1973 the meaning attributed to it by appellant would often prevent the establishment of such an implied contract.

Appellant relies also on the case of Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 99, wherein it is said:

> "Evidence of the value of the land stipulated to be conveyed by the express void agreement is inadmissible as a measure of the value of services rendered by plaintiff. * * * To permit such testimony, for the purpose of establishing the reasonable value of services rendered by plaintiff, * * * would, in effect, allow a party in one breath to disaffirm a contract, and in the next to affirm and claim the benefit of the same contract as valid and subsisting, and substantially enable him to recover as for breach of a valid express contract in a simple action of assumpsit upon an implied contract."

It appears throughout the opinion in that case that the court had in mind the question whether the stipulated compensation in the invalid contract was the measure of the value of the services rendered by the plaintiff rather than the admissibility of the terms of the contract as an admission or declaration of the defendant tending to show such value. That case was decided in 1869, prior to the enactment of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 1624 of the Civil Code. The statute then in force provided:

> "Every contract for the leasing for a longer period than one year, or for the sale of any lands, or any interest in lands, shall be void, unless the contract, or some note or memorandum thereof expressing the consideration, be in writing, and be subscribed by the party by whom the lease or sale is to be made." Stats. 1850, p. 266.

The decision in Dreidlein v. Manger, 69 Mont. 155, 220 P. 1107, cited by appellant, is based upon the theory that a contract within the statute of frauds is absolutely void. Long v. Long, 162 Cal. 427, 122 P. 1077, merely holds that part performance of an oral contract does not take it out of the statute of frauds in so far as the contract remains executory. While unguarded dicta to the contrary may appear in some decisions, the courts of this state have uniformly held, since the decision in the case of In re Balfour & Garrette, 14 Cal. App. 261, 111 P. 615, that contracts within the statute of frauds are not void, but unenforceable only. In that case Mr. Justice Hart says:

> "The original object of the statute was unquestionably to lay down in express terms certain rules by which, only, certain contracts, in themselves perfectly legal and valid, could be proved."

The cases cited in the opinion heretofore filed herein show that the present rule in this state is in harmony with the original object of the statute as stated by Mr. Justice Hart. If the oral contract is valid, though unenforceable, no logical reason appears why an admission or declaration therein against interest may not be shown as tending to prove some issue in an action which is not upon the contract between the parties to the contract. In discussing a somewhat similar question in Dupuy v. Macleod, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 147, 150, 33 P. 1115, 1117, it is said:

> "A writing to satisfy the statute of frauds is one thing. A writing which is admissible in evidence as to some of the facts of a sale is, or may be, quite a different thing."

If at any time the defendant had made an oral statement as to the value of plaintiff's services, it would have been admissible in evidence against the defendant. The fact that the oral statement was one of the terms of the unenforceable oral contract does not, on any logical grounds, render it less admissible.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

I concur: HART, J.

PLUMMER, J. I concur in so far as the foregoing is substituted for the former opinion filed herein. In my opinion, the petition for a rehearing should be granted.

80 Cal. App. 402

LANE v. FEATHER RIVER LUMBER CO. (Civ. 3165.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 22, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 17, 1927.)

1. Logs and logging 🔑8(5)—Where contract for falling logs provided that plaintiff should receive extra compensation under certain conditions, burden was on plaintiff to prove that conditions arose.

Where oral contract for falling and delivering logs provided that in case plaintiff and defendant were compelled to go to eight-hour day he should receive extra compensation, burden was on plaintiff, in suit to recover extra compensation and damages for breach of contract, to prove that that condition arose.

2. Logs and logging 🔑8(5)—Evidence held not to show that condition arose entitling plaintiff to extra compensation under contract for falling logs.

In suit to recover for extra compensation and breach of contract, under oral contract for falling logs, providing that plaintiff should be entitled to extra compensation if he and defendant were compelled to go to eight-hour day, evidence held not to show that condition arose entitling him to extra compensation.

3. Logs and logging 🔑8(3)—That defendant adopted eight-hour schedule one week did not entitle plaintiff to extra compensation for entire season under contract for falling logs.

Under agreement that plaintiff should receive extra compensation for falling logs if defendant and he had to adopt eight-hour schedule, fact that defendant adopted eight-hour schedule one week did not entitle plaintiff to extra compensation for entire season.

4. Accord and satisfaction 🔑25(1)—Defense of accord and satisfaction was not available where not pleaded.

Where defendant claimed that monthly payments made to plaintiff constituted progressive accords and satisfactions as to all demands prior to each, defense was not available where he had not pleaded it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by E. I. Lane against the Feather River Lumber Company for damages for the breach of an oral contract for cutting of timber. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

L. H. Hughes, of Quincy, and McLaughlin, & McLaughlin, C. E. McLaughlin, and C. P. McLaughlin, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

H. B. Wolfe, of Quincy, Hinsdale & Metteer, of Sacramento, Charles A. Tuttle, of Fresno, and H. T. Hiatt, of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the trial court, and the defendant has appealed.

About March 1, 1923, the parties entered into an oral contract "whereby plaintiff was to fall, limb, buck, and deliver on board the cars * * * logs from an agreed logging area * * * for the price or sum of $9 per thousand feet." The following allegations of the complaint are denied by the answer: It was agreed that "if as a result of the demand of the employees of plaintiff the working day was reduced from ten hours as theretofore in effect to eight hours, that the price per thousand feet should be $10 instead of $9. * * * After the commencement of logging operations under said contract the employees of plaintiff and the employees of defendant refused to continue their employment working ten hours a day, and from and after April 25, 1923, the employees of plaintiff did work only eight hours per day." The demand is for compensation at the rate of $10 per thousand feet. As a second cause of action it is alleged that it was agreed "that work under said contract was to be commenced as soon as weather conditions permitted in the spring of 1923, and was to continue so long as defendant operated its sawmill and thereafter and until the mill pond of said defendant was filled with logs; that pursuant to such contract * * * plaintiff commenced work thereon on or about the 10th day of March, 1923, and diligently and continuously prosecuted the same until on or about the 8th day of November, 1923, at which time defendant, contrary to the agreement, * * * stopped logging operations by this plaintiff and refused to permit plaintiff to continue operations under said contract although at this time weather conditions permitted logging operations and said sawmill of defendant continued in operation, and that such operation under said contract could have been carried on to and including the 3d day of December, 1923, to the damage of this plaintiff in the sum of $6,600." The court found in accordance with the allegations of the complaint and gave judgment on the first cause of action for the balance due the plaintiff for services performed, computed at the rate of $10 per thousand feet, and, on the second cause of action, damages in the sum of $3,821.15.

At the time the agreement was made George Laws was the manager of the defendant corporation. The terms of the agreement must be gathered from conversations between the plaintiff and Laws. Relative to the particular conversation upon which the plaintiff relies, he testified:

> "I says, 'I want $9 a thousand for all of the logs delivered under the present conditions, and if I am forced to go to an eight-hour day, I want a dollar a thousand more. * * * I have learned during the winter, or heard a great deal of agitation for the eight-hour day among the workers, and I am positive in my own mind that they are going to make a demand for the eight-hour day, and I think they will win, and I won't take a contract to deliver logs without some protection, because if we have to go to the eight-hour day, as you know, it will cost me more money than it will under a ten-hour day,' and he says he didn't think there would be an eight-hour day, and I says, 'Well; I am pretty close to the most of the men, and I am satisfied there will be.' He says, '* * * I suppose if your wobbly camp * * * asks for eight hours you will expect that dollar a thousand extra, or you will want that dollar a thousand extra.' I says, 'Yes, I will want it, Mr. Laws, but I know you well enough to know that I won't get it; but if you go eight hours or any of the rest of them go eight hours, I want the dollar a thousand extra and will expect the dollar a thousand extra.' He says, 'That is all right, because I won't go eight hours. * * * You know well enough that I can't afford to go eight hours under the conditions here.' I says, 'I realize that very well, Mr. Laws, and I don't want to go to it any more than you do, but I think we will be forced to, and in that event I would go broke trying to log at a ten-hour price at an eight-hour day.' * * * He says, 'That will be all right. * * * Don't think there will be anything about the eight-hour day anyhow.'"

Those parts of the foregoing testimony which are herein italicized appear to constitute the agreement relative to the alleged extra compensation of $1 a thousand feet. While Laws testified that he did not agree to pay the plaintiff such extra compensation under any conditions, it must be presumed, for the purposes of this appeal, that the plaintiff's testimony is true and that the following statement in respondent's brief is a correct inference from the evidence: "The offer of respondent for additional compensation was conditioned upon appellant or the other lumber mills going to the eight-hour day."

Plaintiff commenced operations about March 10th. He testified:

> "I started camp, built lots of roads. The fallers started in falling timber on or about the 20th of March, I think, and done everything necessary to get going.
>
> "Q. And when did you start the delivery of logs? A. On the 8th day of May, 1923. * * * On the 25th of April, the morning of the 25th of April, my employees refused to go to work —quit in a body, every man except my foreman, and he stayed to take care of my horses. The rest of them all left camp, demanding an eight-hour day, among other things—an eight-hour day, sanitary conditions, etc.—and did not return to work again until the 7th day of May. * * * They came back under the eight-hour day.
>
> "Q. Was it possible thereafter, and during the season, for you to secure employees to work ten hours a day? A. It was not.
>
> "Q. What happened, if you know, at the Feather River Lumber Company, at the same time, concerning labor? A. They went on a strike the same day and went back to work the same day—the 6th of May. I heard that the Feather River had settled with them, granting them the eight-hour day, so I went down to see Mr. Laws, and he told me that he had settled, and that he was going to work Monday morning under the eight-hour day and for me to go back to work, which I did. * * *
>
> "Q. Did you later have agitation in your camp about the length of day? A. I did. My men heard that I was trying to go back to a ten-hour day and quit. * * * They stopped work one whole day over it. * * * Labor was very short. * * *
>
> "Q. Did Mr. Laws ever notify you that he had gone back to a ten-hour day? A. He did not.

"Q. Did he ever make any demand on you that you go back or attempt to go back to the ten-hour day? A. He did not. * * *

"Q. Did you make any effort to secure other employees? A. Well, no particular effort, no, because Mr. Laws said to lay off until the thing was settled, and I laid off until he told me to go back to work under the eight-hour day.

"Q. Do you know of any other logging camp, Mr. Lane, in Plumas County, that operated eight hours a day during the season of 1923 for any length of time? A. Yes, sir; the Feather River Lumber Company. * * * I have heard that they worked ten hours on the eight-hour basis with the pay for overtime for the balance of the season. * * * Their camp ran approximately ten hours, but it was my understanding that they worked on an eight-hour day and got pay for overtime.

"Q. * * * Were you compelled to reduce the hours and wages, or did you do it voluntarily? A. I was compelled to. It would have been utterly impossible for me to get men to work ten hours a day and Mr. Laws, or the Feather River Mill, was working eight. * * * I reduced the hours of labor simply on Mr. Laws' say so. * * * My men, personally, made no demand on me. The demand came through the office of the Feather River Lumber Company, through their committee of strikers, delivered to me by Mr. English. * * * My men made no personal demands. * * * They said that it was a general strike, and they were going out and not going to work until they got their eight-hour day. * * *

"Q. When Mr. English gave you that copy of the strikers' demands, did he direct you to comply with it? A. He didn't; * * * he gave it to me as a demand that had been made on them."

Laws testified that he never asked plaintiff "to resume work on the basis of eight hours per day for his employees." Laws further testified, and this testimony stands uncontradicted:

"We had a strike in the mill; not in the woods. * * * The woods never stopped a minute. * * * We had plenty of men at all times. Our time book will show it."

Mr. English, who was chief clerk and bookkeeper of defendant, testified that the defendant's logging camp did not close down at all during the season; that it operated on the basis of eight hours a day only from May 7th to 12th; that there was no shortage of men during the season; that "we revised our wage schedule in the mill, in the factory, and our logging camp kept right on at the same rate"; and that the men in the logging camp were paid no more after the strike than before.

April 25, 1923, plaintiff received a letter from Laws containing the following:

"When I met you in San Francisco you spoke of wanting $1 per thousand feet more for logs, providing the mills went to eight hours, and I made you no answer to this question. Please be advised that no matter what the hours will be we will pay you $9 per thousand feet for logs on cars at Gullings and no more."

Plaintiff testified that on the 6th of May—

"I went to see Mr. Laws. * * * I says, 'I received your letter, Mr. Laws, but I didn't take it seriously, because you know that it wasn't according to our contract.' He says, 'Well; that is all you are going to get, anyhow. If you don't like it you can quit.' I says, 'Mr. Laws, you know I can't quit, I have got all these logs down; I have bought my trucks and went in debt about $14,000 and I can't quit now and you know it.' * * * He says, 'That is all you are going to get, anyhow.' I says, 'I am going ahead on this contract as agreed and if you don't pay me, I am going to sue you for the money, but I simply can't quit now,' and he accepted the logs after that, with the understanding."

June 16th the plaintiff signed a receipt for "balance in full to May 31st," computed on the basis of $9 per thousand feet. In explanation thereof the plaintiff testified:

"When I went to get my first payment on the 16th of June, they wouldn't give to me unless I signed a receipt in full. * * * I read it and refused to sign it. I went back to Portola and tried every way that I could to * * * get money to meet my payroll and other expenses, without collecting that money and found that it was utterly impossible, that I would go bankrupt if I didn't get that money and went back and signed the receipt under protest, telling Mr. Laws that I did so simply to keep from going bankrupt."

Plaintiff was not asked to sign a receipt for subsequent monthly payments, but each month he was given a detailed statement "showing his credits and his detailed debits," computing the amount due him for logs delivered at $9 a thousand. At the close of the season the defendant tendered the plaintiff a check for the balance due him, computed at $9 per thousand, on condition that the plaintiff sign a receipt in full. This the plaintiff refused to do and thereupon commenced this action. During the whole season the defendant conducted a logging camp of its own and delivered logs to the same mill pond at which the plaintiff's logs were delivered. It is conceded that this was not a violation of the terms of the contract.

[1-3] The burden was upon the plaintiff to prove that the condition arose which entitled him to the alleged extra compensation. The evidence fails to show that he was compelled to go to the eight-hour day. He testified that he made no effort to secure men who would work ten hours a day and that the defendant continued to operate its logging camp for ten hours a day. According to his own testimony, the condition upon which he was to receive the extra compensation was that the defendant "go eight hours or any of the rest of them go eight hours." It is a fair inference that this condition had reference to the working hours in defendant's logging camp, because the work therein was of the same character as that in plaintiff's camp and defendant's mill employees were paid by the hour. The mere fact that the defendant reduced the daily working hours for a single week is not sufficient justification for awarding plaintiff the extra compensation for the whole season, particularly when he knew that the defendant had returned to the ten-hour day. Laws was without authority to order or direct the plaintiff to adopt the eight-hour day. If such direction was in fact given, the plaintiff could not have been misled thereby into the belief that it constituted an implied consent by the defendant to pay the extra compensation, because Laws expressly stated at the time that such extra compensation would not be paid, a statement which the plaintiff fully comprehended, for he then threatened that he would sue in the event of defendant's failure to make such payment. Neither was plaintiff misled into the permanent adoption of the eight-hour schedule for the remainder of the season, because, as stated, he knew that the defendant had returned to the ten-hour day.

Even if the other contentions of the plaintiff be conceded, he was not entitled to the extra compensation of $1 a thousand on all the logs delivered. While no logs were delivered prior to plaintiff's adoption of the eight-hour schedule, his employees worked ten hours a day from March 10th to April 25th in building roads, felling trees and preparing logs for shipment. In so far as this work contributed to the total production of the season, the plaintiff had the benefit of the ten-hour day, and this fact must be taken into consideration in determining what, if any, extra compensation he is entitled to recover.

[4] Appellant contends that the monthly payments made by the defendant to the plaintiff "constituted progressive accords and satisfactions as to all demands, statements, and logging done prior to each." That defense is not available here, however, because the defendant did not plead it. Berger v. Lane, 190 Cal. 443, 447, 213 P. 45.

What has been said applies with equal force to the second cause of action, the judgment for damages being based upon the theory that the plaintiff was entitled to $10 a thousand for all logs to be delivered by him.

It is deemed unnecessary to further discuss the alleged insufficiency of the evidence, because other or additional evidence may be produced on the retrial of the case.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; THOMPSON Justice pro tem.

Hearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. The petition for hearing is denied, upon the ground stated in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal that plaintiff was not entitled to extra compensation upon all the logs delivered, for the reason that the men worked for more than a month upon the 10-hour schedule, and this fact should be taken into consideration in determining the extra compensation to be allowed, if any.

It is to be understood that, in denying a hearing in this court, we express no opinion as to the portion of the decision of the District Court of Appeal which discusses the evidence upon the making of the contract between the parties and its legal effect, in order that such portions of the decision may not be considered the law of the case upon a new trial.

80 Cal. App. 301

HENEY v. HENEY et al. (Civ. 5449.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 16, 1926.)

1. Principal and agent 🔑48—Agency under power of attorney is fiduciary relationship requiring high standard of good faith on agent's part.

Acceptance of agency under power of attorney establishes fiduciary relationship between principal and agent, requiring high standard of good faith on agent's part, and breach of his duties amounts to constructive fraud.

2. Principal and agent 🔑68—Where deceased mortgagor's wife authorized junior incumbrancer to sell wine to pay first mortgage, and wine was not sold, there was no constructive fraud based on fiduciary relationship.

Where deceased mortgagor's wife executed power of attorney to junior incumbrancer, her brother-in-law, to sell quantity of wine produced on property to pay first mortgage, and wine was not sold, no constructive fraud could be predicated alone upon violation of fiduciary duty arising by operation of law from agency.

3. Principal and agent 🔑23(1)—Evidence held not to show agency out of which arose constructive fraud by junior incumbrancer, after being authorized to sell wine to pay first mortgage in buying property at first mortgage foreclosure sale.

Where deceased mortgagor's wife executed power of attorney to junior incumbrancer, her brother-in-law, to sell wine to pay first mortgage, and he bid in property at sale under first mortgage foreclosure for himself, evidence held not to show agency out of which constructive fraud arose.

---

*Opinion modified and rehearing denied January 15, 1927. Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 14, 1927.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1009(3)—Where evidence on equitable issues was conflicting, decision of trial court was controlling.

Where evidence on equitable issue of junior incumbrancer's intention in bidding in property at sale in first mortgage foreclosure was conflicting, decision of trial court thereon was controlling.

5. Principal and agent 🔑69(7)—Execution of power of attorney did not preclude junior incumbrancer from acquiring property at mortgage foreclosure sale, where he acted in good faith.

Execution of power of attorney to junior incumbrancer to sell wine produced on property did not preclude him from bidding in property at first mortgage foreclosure sale for himself, where he acted in good faith and fairly, after disclosing intention to do so, even though fiduciary relationship arose.

6. Mortgages 🔑607—Title acquired by junior incumbrancer at foreclosure sale under superior lien gives no right of redemption to debtor.

Since relation between mortgagee and mortgagor and between beneficiary of trust deed and maker thereof is not fiduciary, title acquired by junior incumbrancer at foreclosure sale under superior lien is not limited and gives no right of redemption to debtor.

7. Jury 🔑13(18)—Where issues tendered by defense in ejectment were purely equitable, defendants were not entitled to jury trial as matter of right.

Where issues tendered by defense in ejectment were purely equitable, defendants were not entitled, as matter of right, to jury trial thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action in ejectment and for mesne profits and damages for waste by Francis J. Heney against Mary A. Heney and Edwin A. Heney, in which defendants filed cross-complaint. From a judgment on a directed verdict for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Maurice E. Harrison, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, and Henry Brown, all of San Francisco, and C. C. Coolidge, of San Jose, for appellants.

Frank H. Benson, Louis Oneal, Wm. F. James, and E. M. Rea, all of San Jose (B. D. Townsend, of Denver, Colo., of counsel), for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Appellants herein, Mary A. Heney and Edwin A. Heney, prosecute this appeal from an adverse judgment in an action in ejectment brought by respondent to obtain possession of a tract of land in the Santa Clara valley, and for the mesne profits thereof and damages on account of waste alleged to have been committed thereon. Appellants are the widow and surviving son, respectively, of Richard J. Heney, Jr., deceased, a half-brother to respondent. The land in question, containing 100 acres planted mostly to vineyard, was owned by Richard J. Heney, Jr., and operated by him for the production of wine from 1882 until the date of his death in 1919, at which time his surviving wife, the said Mary A. Heney, succeeded to his interests, and thereafter and until the date of the entry of judgment herein the property was managed by the said Edwin A. Heney.

Respondent purchased the property on August 9, 1922, for the sum of $37,496.39 at a trustee's sale conducted under the terms of a deed of trust held by R. M. Wright, as executor, to secure payment of a loan amounting to more than $35,000, respondent at the time of sale being the owner and holder of a junior deed of trust given to secure the payment to him of the sum of $61,119.91 and interest, upon which there was due upwards of $80,000. Respondent purchased the property with funds obtained from the First Federal Trust Company of San Francisco, through the medium of a loan made to him in the sum of $40,000, payment thereof being secured by the property about to be purchased. A few days subsequent to the foreclosure sale respondent consented to resell the property to Mrs. Heney, and on November 23, 1922, gave a written option to that effect, but afterwards revoked the option and commenced this action.

Appellants denied respondent's asserted title as owner, and by answer and cross-complaint set up equitable defenses charging respondent with having acquired the property through actual fraud growing out of an alleged trust relationship, the substance of the allegations relating thereto being that when the foreclosure of the Wright deed of trust became evident, respondent, a lawyer of prominence and experience, sustaining toward Richard, during his lifetime, and after his death toward the members of his family, fiduciary relations founded upon mutual confidence and an affectionate family association of many years' standing, lulled appellants into the security that with the aid of a personal friend, Mr. Rudolph Spreckels, a banker connected with the First Federal Trust Company, he would prevent a loss of the property to Mrs. Heney at trustee's sale by obtaining a bank loan for her; and that, furthermore, on June 12, 1922, due to the trust and confidence reposed in him by Mrs. Heney, obtained from her a power of attorney, authorizing him to sell a large quantity of bonded wine which had been produced on the property, and shown by the evidence to be of the estimated worth of $40,000, one-half of which was subject to a chattel mortgage given for the principal sum of $5,000 to one Steinfeld, and with the proceeds of the sale to pay the Steinfeld and Wright indebtednesses, and any excess to Mrs. Heney; that shortly prior to the date of the foreclosure sale respondent falsely represented that owing to a question of title the bank required as a condition to granting said loan that the loan transaction be consummated with him personally, and that he take title at the sale in his name; but that respondent further represented that in doing so he would still be acting in the interests of Mrs. Heney with no intention of acquiring the property for himself and would convey the same to her on demand; that Mrs. Heney, being thus lulled into security, made no independent effort to obtain funds to avert a loss of the property, but, on the contrary, assisted respondent in obtaining said loan, and permitted him to purchase said property in his own name as sole bidder therefor, being unaware of his intention to permanently deprive her of the property until October 22, 1922. Appellants therefore claimed that respondent's title was merely that of a trustee, which gave appellants the right to continue in possession and also the right to redeem.

Respondent denied the accusations of fraud and the existence of confidential relations at the time of the impending sale. He also denied that he had practiced any deception or concealment whatever as to his intentions to acquire the property in his own interests, but alleged that, on the contrary, he had repeatedly warned appellants over a period of several months that if the Wright loan was not taken care of by them and a foreclosure sale resulted, he would be compelled, in order to protect his own rights under the second deed of trust, to borrow the money personally and bid in the property, in which event he would retain title and take possession. Regarding said power of attorney, respondent alleged that the debt secured by the Steinfeld chattel mortgage was about due and its payment was guaranteed by him; that since appellants had been unable to sell said wine his object in obtaining said power of attorney was to dispose of the same, if possible, prior to the foreclosure sale, with the hope of securing enough money to extinguish the Steinfeld and Wright indebtednesses, thereby giving his junior deed of trust priority as a first and superior lien; but, being unable to sell the wine, he so notified appellants on July 22, 1922, and thereafter borrowed the money on his own account to bid in the property.

The equitable issues thus presented were tried by the court sitting without a jury, and findings were made absolving respondent as to all charges of fraud, the court in its decision having followed substantially the denials and the allegations of the answer to the cross-complaint. Thereupon a jury trial was had of the legal issues, but, claims for waste and mesne profits having been abandoned, a directed verdict was rendered in favor of respondent for the possession of the premises, and judgment was entered in accordance with said findings and verdict.

Appellants concede that in so far as the question of actual fraud is concerned the decision of the trial court is conclusive, the findings exonerating respondent as to the allegations of specific misrepresentations being based upon conflicting evidence and therefore unassailable on appeal; but they now seek to segregate the transaction involving the execution of said power of attorney from the charge of actual fraud as pleaded by them, and again urge said transaction as the basis of a charge of constructive fraud, contending that the sole purpose of granting said power of attorney was to prevent a loss of the property to Mrs. Heney at foreclosure sale, and that therefore the effect of the execution of said instrument was to create an agency which by implication of law imposed upon respondent as agent the duty of protecting Mrs. Heney's interests alone as to all matters connected with the sale of said property and precluded him while said agency existed from acquiring the property in his own interests or from gaining any personal advantage as a result of said sale; that during the pendency of said agency respondent, contrary to the obligation of his trust, purchased said property at foreclosure sale in his own interests, the purchase being attended by circumstances showing, as appellants claim: "(1) a grossly inadequate price; (2) a lulling of the principal into security; (3) a failure until too late to report a lack of success in securing the object of the agency, and (4) the securing of an advantage at foreclosure sale by procuring a renewal" of the debt secured by his junior deed of trust, which respondent had inadvertently allowed to become outlawed. In other words, it is claimed in substance that without having terminated said agency by any clear disclaimer and without notifying Mrs. Heney of the failure to sell the wine until it was too late for her to save the property from foreclosure sale through her own efforts, by effecting a sale of said wine or the real property or both, respondent, under circumstances showing that Mrs. Heney was lulled into security, purchased said real property in his own interests, for a sum grossly disproportionate to its value; and as an additional advantage gained has been allowed to continue in force against Mrs. Heney the obligation to pay the full amount of indebtedness previously secured by the junior deed of trust. Appellants therefore contend that, regardless of the findings on the issues of actual fraud, a case of constructive fraud has been established as a matter of law, based upon the agency created by the execution of said power of attorney, which cast upon respondent the obligation to restore to

Mrs. Heney as prayed for in her cross-complaint the legal title to said property, subject to the imposition of the usual equitable conditions.

[1, 2] It is doubtless the law, as appellants contend, that the acceptance of an agency under a power of attorney in itself establishes a relationship fiduciary in character between the principal and agent, which holds the agent to a high standard of good faith, full disclosure, and absolute disinterestedness pertaining to the particular agency created, and that a breach of the duties thus imposed amounts to constructive fraud; but it is apparent that here a case of constructive fraud cannot be predicated alone upon the asserted violation of any fiduciary duty arising by operation of law from the agency defined by the express terms of the power of attorney now before us, because that instrument merely authorized respondent to sell a quantity of wine and with the proceeds derived from the sale to pay certain debts; and since the wine was not sold it cannot be held that there has been any breach of fiduciary duty relating to the subject matter of that particular agency.

[3] Appellants contend, however, that the result of the execution of said power of attorney was to create an agency more extensive in its scope than the one indicated by its terms—one whereby respondent, being Mrs. Heney's confidential advisor, lulled her into the security that by granting said power of attorney he would avert a loss of the property to her at said sale. It will therefore be seen that the agency now contended for by them as having been created as the result of the execution of said power of attorney, and which is now being urged as the basis of the case of constructive fraud, is to all intents and purposes identical in its scope with the one heretofore urged by them as the basis of the case of actual fraud, and, consequently, like in the latter case, must depend necessarily for its establishment upon extrinsic evidence. As already pointed out, the trial court concluded upon the evidence adduced that no such agency existed, basing its conclusion mainly upon findings that there were no confidential relations existing between the parties at the time of the foreclosure sale, and that Mrs. Heney was not lulled into the security that respondent's activities were being exercised entirely in her behalf and would result in the saving of the property for her at foreclosure sale; but, on the contrary, respondent made full and complete disclosure in good faith of his intention to acquire the property in his own interests in the event of a sale thereof. It follows that unless, as appellants claim, said findings are wholly contrary to the evidence, the theory of a constructive fraud is destroyed. This branch of the case therefore resolves itself into a question of whether there is substantial evidence in the record to sustain the findings mentioned, and we are convinced that there is.

The evidence bearing upon the questions of fact under consideration related to events covering a long period of time, the trial of the equitable issues having consumed several weeks, and, although we shall endeavor to notice herein only the important features of respondent's evidence which in our opinion tend to support the contested findings above mentioned, the relative positions of the parties at the time of the execution of said power of attorney, their feelings toward each other, and their intentions as to the enforcement of their respective rights cannot be fairly described without referring to much of the testimony.

As to respondent's financial interest in said property, about which there is little if any dispute, the evidence shows that it arose and afterwards increased in the manner following: From the beginning the operation of the vineyard for the manufacture of wine does not appear to have been a financial success, and soon after acquiring the property Richard began to borrow money, the debts steadily increasing until ultimately the property was sold under the Wright foreclosure proceedings. As early as 1884 he borrowed money from his father, the obligations due the latter being eventually inherited by his daughters, Helena and Elizabeth, who were half-sisters to Richard and full sisters to respondent, and they continued to lend Richard money. Loans were also obtained from other individuals and certain banks. From 1894 until the end of 1913 respondent made large cash advances to Richard, guaranteed loans made to him by others, and in 1906 assumed the burden of Richard's indebtedness to Helena and Elizabeth, amounting to $18,000, thereafter paying them interest on that sum monthly. Consequently, in 1913 the total indebtedness to respondent aggregated $48,974.89, and he was given a mortgage on the real property for the principal sum of $42,474.89 and a chattel mortgage on wine for the balance of $6,500, the mortgage on the real property being subordinate to the lien of a trust deed held by Wright securing payment of $20,000 and interest. Both liens on the real property were renewed in 1918 for increased amounts, the one to Wright for the sum of $28,000 and the one to respondent in the form of a junior deed of trust for the sum of $61,119.91, bearing simple interest at 7 per cent., which did not include the sum of $6,500 covered by the chattel mortgage; and when the Wright deed of trust was foreclosed in 1922 the amount due under respondent's junior trust deed amounted to approximately $85,000, of which sum $50,000 represented the amount of cash actually advanced by respondent for the benefit of Richard and his family.

Prior to 1914 respondent's personal relations with Richard and the members of his family were most affectionate and of a fiduciary character. Besides assisting Richard frequently in a financial way, respondent acted as his confidential advisor and agent. But early in 1914 a breach occurred, caused primarily, it appears, by the constant demands Richard was making upon respondent for further financial help when the latter, on account of sickness and other adversities, was unable to respond. Thereafter respondent refused to advance more money, and they dealt with each other in a formal way, each protecting his own interests, their business being transacted with frequent manifestations of anger and resentment. About this time, respondent had a violent quarrel with Richard's sons, Edwin and Seth, over the sale by the latter two of incumbered wine, and a few weeks later the estrangement was accentuated by the refusal of Richard to execute at respondent's request a crop mortgage, the effect of which would have been to deprive Richard of the management of the property, Richard becoming enraged at what he considered was an intrusion, and threatening the agent who presented the document for him to sign. As evidence of the strained relations then existing may be cited a letter written in February, 1914, by respondent to Richard in which he strenuously objected to further demands being made upon him for money, and complained bitterly because Richard had referred certain unsecured creditors to him for payment of their claims. In part the letter read:

> "It is bad enough for me to be compelled to borrow money and strain my financial credit to the breaking point to help you, without having all your unsecured creditors flock down on me * * * demanding that I should pay them. No one of them would have thought of doing such a thing if you had not told (them) to do so."

He further stated that Richard's sons were able to support the family, and it was their duty to help. The letter concluded:

> "I cannot be worried in this way any more, and I warn you now that I shall not stand for it. You are hurting me and hurting my credit by it, and you have no moral or other right to do so."

In 1915, respondent, then living near Los Angeles, believing foreclosure proceedings imminent under the Wright trust deed on account of default in payment of interest, made arrangements with Spreckels to bid in the property for him, conditioned upon taking possession of the property after the purchase. A few months later Edwin was informed of this arrangement when he called on respondent in Los Angeles to ask respondent to meet the payment of the delinquent interest on the Wright loan, which respondent refused to do, telling Edwin, so respondent testified, that in case Spreckels did bid in the property Edwin's father and mother "would have to get off" the place; and, furthermore, that it was useless for Edwin or any other member of the family to attempt "to get any money from him (respondent) for any purpose at any time thereafter," because he was "absolutely through doing business with them." During the years intervening between 1915 and 1921, respondent met neither Richard nor any member of his family, except Seth, whom he saw occasionally; nor did he afterwards visit the vineyard, as had been his custom to do, until shortly prior to the foreclosure sale of August, 1922; and, confirming his previously declared intentions, he informed Wright, in 1915 and also in 1917 in response to the latter's demand for interest money, that he did not intend to pay anything further at any time on behalf of Richard.

In 1918, the business connected with the renewal of respondent's security was conducted by respondent's agent under a letter of instruction from respondent declaring his distrust of Richard and his family, stating that they should be dealt with as strangers who he feared might take advantage of him, and also that he "was intending to go to San Francisco to see Rudolph Spreckels to have him buy the property in" for his, respondent's, benefit. When shown this letter, Richard was deeply affected, and during his last illness the year following expressed a friendly feeling toward respondent and a desire to see him, in response to which respondent sent Richard an affectionate message, but there appears to have been no reconciliation between them prior to Richard's death.

The evidence further demonstrates that following Richard's demise the strained family relations were not relaxed, but that, on the contrary, respondent evinced a stronger determination to enforce his rights under the deed of trust on account of the equitable interest held therein by his sisters. With respect thereto the proof shows that in the fall of 1920 negotiations were being carried on between Wright and Edwin to refinance the property, and respondent agreed to accept $18,000 within 40 days in full settlement of his demands. In the letter extending the option, which was sent to Wright, respondent said:

> "If this proposition is not accepted and fully consummated within the period specified herein, I shall be forced to take steps immediately thereafter to clean the matter up, as my three sisters, who are the equitable owners of more than half the indebtedness which is due under my aforesaid trust deed, are all too aged to earn a living for themselves, and are absolutely dependent for their support and living expenses (in large measures as to two of them, and entirely as to one of them) upon the interest which I have been paying to them regularly every month since 1904. * * *"

And as indicative of his personal feelings, respondent concluded the letter by saying that he knew Edwin had not represented the situation fairly, nor had he been inclined to give him, respondent, "a square deal, notwithstanding the many and great sacrifices" he had made in the past to save the family "from bankruptcy." The option was not acted upon, however, and later in San Francisco respondent charged Edwin with conniving to defeat the entire obligation. Respondent testified that he was willing at that time to settle in full for the lesser amount of $18,000 because he had exhausted his last available assets during recent sieges of sickness, even to borrowing on his life insurance policy, and, being fearful that his sisters would be left with practically nothing if anything happened to him, he concluded that if he could obtain $18,000 out of the settlement for them he would be willing to lose all that was coming to him personally.

During the latter part of the year following, 1921, owing to Wright's threats to foreclose because of default in payment of interest and Steinfeld's demand for payment of his loan, respondent held three conferences with Edwin in San Francisco to ascertain if the latter was taking any measures to raise the money to pay the debts mentioned. According to respondent's testimony he demanded at these conferences, as he had done many times before, that Edwin sell the grape crops, which were bringing big prices, and thereby pay off the loans, instead of continuing to manufacture wine as Edwin had been doing in anticipation of an early modification of existing prohibition laws, finally telling Edwin, so he claims, that unless the grapes were marketed instead of making them into wine he would proceed to sell the property under the terms of his security, adding: "You know what that means, Ed; you are going to lose the vineyard; your mother is going to lose it." Although Edwin promised at first to comply with respondent's demand, he subsequently declared his intention to manufacture wine, which he did, thereby apparently intensifying the hostility already existing.

Coming down to the year 1922, the evidence offered on behalf of respondent was to the following effect: On April 6 respondent forwarded to the county recorder for filing a notice of his intention to foreclose, assuming that Wright had filed a similar notice, and which respondent afterwards learned had been filed the preceding month. He immediately notified Edwin by letter of his action, stating that it was necessary for him to be in a position to sell at the time of the Wright sale, and inquiring as to what effort Edwin was making to raise funds to avoid a loss of the property. Edwin replied that Wright thought he would be able to take up the loan himself if given a little time, and that he would let respondent know as soon as he heard further from Wright. Subsequently, and on May 1, at a meeting between Edwin and respondent in San Francisco, respondent learned of the nature of Wright's proposition, which he declared unsatisfactory, and he again warned Edwin, according to his testimony, that if Edwin did not succeed in paying the Wright debt and respondent was required to borrow the money to buy in the property at a foreclosure sale, he "would take possession of it as owner" and that Edwin's folks would have to get off," stating further in this regard:

> "Now, Ed, keep this in mind; there is only one way for you to save the vineyard for your mother, and that is by you and Seth selling this wine in time to pay off Wright, because if I have to borrow enough money to buy this place in, I am going to buy it for myself and my sisters, and you folks will have to get off."

On June 6, having received a letter from Steinfeld demanding immediate payment of his loan, respondent notified Edwin by mail of that fact; also that under the notice given by Wright it was legally possible for Wright to sell the vineyard on or after July 12, 1922, stating:

> "Under these circumstances it is necessary for us to make haste if your mother is not to lose the vineyard, and if I am not to lose all that is owing to me."

In this letter suggestion was made as to the granting of the power of attorney in question, respondent saying in this regard that when in San Francisco last Spreckels informed him that if he secured a power of attorney from Mrs. Heney authorizing respondent to sell the wine, he, Spreckels, believed he could dispose of the same through a friend, the wine to be sold for sacramental purposes under government permit. Respondent therefore requested that such power of attorney be given and also that a statement be furnished of the quantity and quality of the wine, respondent admonishing Edwin in the letter that immediate action was necessary if anything was "to be saved out of the wreck." In reply Edwin furnished said statement and asked that the power of attorney be forwarded to his mother for execution, which was done, respondent's letter to Edwin accompanying said instrument stating in part:

> "I want to see the vineyard pulled out and saved, first for your mother, if that is possible, and, secondly, for myself for the protection of my sisters, if it is not possible to save it for your mother."

Respondent further stated in said letter that there was no assurance that Spreckels could dispose of the wine, but that respondent knew he would do the best he could in that behalf. On the same day respondent wrote Spreckels to the effect that the power of attorney was forthcoming, and gave him a statement as to the grade and quantity of the wine; and on June 20, 1922, again wrote to him that the power of the attorney was then in his possession, and suggesting that the 40,000 gallons of wine ought to bring enough to pay off the Wright loan. On account of sickness in respondent's family nothing further was done until July 12, when Edwin wired to respondent in Los Angeles: "Wright to advertise Friday, can you stop him?" and respondent replied: "No, cannot stop him. I arrive in San Jose next Thursday" (the 20th). Upon respondent's arrival in San Jose he ascertained from Wright that his plan to refinance the property, so far as it affected respondent, was to have Mrs. Heney give respondent a note for $20,000, secured by a crop mortgage, in full payment of his claims. Respondent rejected the proposal, stating that he would be entitled to the crop in any event if he bought in the place at foreclosure. The day following, in San Francisco, Spreckels informed respondent of his inability to dispose of the wine, and respondent thereupon stated that, inasmuch as the vineyard was about to be sold at foreclosure, he wanted to borrow $40,000 with which to buy it in. Spreckels agreed to grant the loan upon the condition, required by the bank, that respondent take possession of the property, which respondent agreed to do; and, after signing an application for the loan, a bank appraisal of the property was ordered. A few days later the bank demanded an abstract of title, which was forwarded to the bank by Edwin at respondent's request, after some difficulty in locating the same.

On the morning of July 22 respondent visited the vineyard for the first time since 1914, and, meeting Edwin, told him, according to respondent's testimony, of the failure to sell the wine, of Wright's unsatisfactory proposals, and of his application for the bank loan. Respondent's testimony regarding the conversation was as follows:

> "I said, 'I am going to buy this property in at the sale; if the First Federal Trust Company doesn't loan me the money I am going to try and borrow it from my friends and buy it in to protect myself and your aunts.' I asked him what his reply to that was, and it was an assent. He made no objection to it, and no criticism of it. I told him that if he and Seth would sell the wine before the sale day for enough to pay Wright that I fould be willing to have a first lien on the property, but that if I had to borrow any money to buy that property in, I was going to buy it in for myself, and that I would not take second place, because I had had experience enough on that with the first mortgage creeping up in amount on me, so that my security gradually got less."

The bank authorized the loan, and respondent and his wife executed the necessary documents therefor at the bank on August 4, 1922. On the same day respondent held an extended conference with Seth regarding the effect of the consummation of the loan. Although it appears that Seth had been taking an active interest in his mother's behalf, the evidence fails to show that he was authorized to represent her the same as Edwin was, and therefore the conversations held with him may be disregarded.

Respondent offered other evidence to show that following the sale he exercised acts of ownership over the property and that appellants recognized him as owner. Immediately after the sale he notified Edwin by letter that he would assume personal control of the property, which he did by harvesting the grape crop, negotiating the sale thereof, and selling it. He also asserted title to the proceeds from the sale of the prune crop, which Edwin had sold. Furthermore it was shown that Edwin dealt with respondent as owner in his effort to be retained as manager of the property and in trying to deter respondent from leasing the property to others; also by obtaining the option to repurchase.

[4] As opposed to the evidence contained in the foregoing narrative appellants offered much proof, but apparently no useful purpose can be accomplished by setting it forth in detail herein, because at most it does no more than raise a conflict on the vital issues under discussion. Said proof consisted largely of testimony of witnesses who gave entirely different versions as to the substance of the conversations in which respondent claims to have warned appellants of his intention to acquire the property in his own interests at the foreclosure sale. But in that state of the record the question of determining which of the two versions represented the truth was one exclusively within the province of the trial court. Appellants also point out that Edwin assisted in obtaining the loan by locating the abstract of title and forwarding it to the bank, and that on August 1, at respondent's request, he obtained from his mother a written acknowledgment of respondent's outlawed debt, neither of which services, appellants argue, would he have likely performed if he had known of respondent's intention to acquire the property in his own interests. Moreover, attention is called to the fact that respondent never did notify Mrs. Heney personally of his intention to acquire the property to her exclusion, notwithstanding that on July 31, 1922, he met her at her home for the first time since the breach in the family relations in 1914, greeted her affectionately, and that the social intercourse was most cordial; also that on the day of the sale respondent conveyed Mrs. Heney to San Jose in his automobile for the purpose of having her acknowledge before a notary public a second document relieving his debt from the effect of the operation of the statute of limitations. Furthermore appellants draw certain inferences from portions of respondent's letters hereinabove alluded to, written during the progress of the loan and the power of attorney transactions, showing, as appellants claim, that Mrs. Heney was lulled into the security that respondent was acting in her interests and not in his own. But conceding the force of the facts and circumstances just related, and of others of like character but of less importance, which are not necessary to enumerate herein, the evident effect thereof is, as before stated, merely to produce a conflict in the evidence, and consequently, under the well-established rule, the decision of the trial court thereon must be taken as controlling.

[5] Finally on this point it may be stated as a legal proposition that the mere execution of a power of attorney does not prohibit an agent from dealing with the subject-matter of the agency, providing he shows affirmatively that he acted in good faith, fairly, and honestly, and made full disclosure of his intentions (Hemenway v. Abbott, 8 Cal. App. 450, 97 P. 190; Curry v. King, 6 Cal. App. 568, 92 P. 662); and therefore in the instant case, even assuming that the execution of the power of attorney of itself created the agency contended for by appellants, out of which a fiduciary relationship between the parties necessarily arose, respondent was not thereby precluded from acquiring the property in his own interests, having, as the trial court found and as the evidence shows, acted in good faith and fairly, after having made full and seasonable disclosure of his intentions to do so.

Regarding the contention that respondent acquired the property for a grossly inadequate price, and would be allowed also, if the judgment be affirmed, to continue in force against Mrs. Heney the obligation to pay the balance of the debt secured by his junior deed of trust, it should be observed that appellants, in making this contention, do not take into consideration the trial court's finding to the effect that ever since the foreclosure sale it "has been his (respondent's) bona fide intention to forgive Mary A. Heney her said indebtedness to him and to refrain from ever attempting to collect the same." The balance due on said indebtedness, after giving credit for the proceeds received from the sale of the grape crop, if added to the amount already paid at foreclosure sale, would bring the total amount of the purchase price to nearly as much as the value of the property as fixed by appellants. But assuming, as appellants contend, that the statements in the finding are not legally binding on respondent, the situation is not altered, because, in the absence of fraud, the advantages complained of were such as respondent was entitled to gain as a result of the exercise of his legal rights.

[6] Appellants further contend that, irrespective of the questions arising from the execution of the power of attorney, respondent, as holder of the second lien upon the property, owed a special duty to the owner with respect to the foreclosure sale, which placed him under the obligations of a fiduciary, and that therefore, having, as junior incumbrancer, purchased at foreclosure sale under the first lien, he cannot claim absolute title as the result of the purchase, but must accord the debtor the right to redeem. Taylor v. Heggie, 83 N. C. 244; Pritchard v. Smith, 160 N. C. 79, 75 S. E. 803. The rule adhered to in this state is, however, that "the relation between a mortgagee and mortgagor is not fiduciary. De Martin v. Phelan, 115 Cal. 538, 47 P. 356, 56 Am. St. Rep. 115. Neither is that between the beneficiary of a trust deed and the maker thereof. Copsey v. Sacramento Bank, 133 Cal. 659 [66 P. 7, 204, 85 Am. St. Rep. 238]." Lineker v. McColgan, 54 Cal. App. 771, 202 P. 936. To the same effect is Ferry v. Fisk, 54 Cal. App. 763, 202 P. 964. Therefore the title acquired by a junior incumbrancer at foreclosure sale under the superior lien is not limited and gives no right of redemption to the debtor.

[7] The issues tendered by appellants' defenses were, in our opinion, purely equitable, and therefore appellants were not entitled as a matter of right to a trial by jury thereon. Fish v. Benson, 71 Cal. 428, 12 P. 454; Angus v. Craven, 132 Cal. 691, 64 P. 1091.

For the reasons given, we believe the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

200 Cal. 132

In re PARKER'S ESTATE.

STEARNS et al. v. ABBOTT.

(L. A. 9141.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1926.)

1. Executors and administrators 🔑111(1)—Trusts 🔑227—Executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee, who is attorney, may be entitled to allowance for other attorney's services.

Executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee, who is also attorney, may properly employ another attorney to render necessary legal services and may be entitled to allowance for value of such services.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑111(1)—Trusts 🔑227—Executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee, who is lawyer, is not entitled to allowance for legal services rendered by himself.

Executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee, who is a lawyer, is not entitled to allowance for legal services if he acts as his own attorney, in absence of statute.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑111(1)—Executor or administrator may be allowed credit for attorney's fees to firm of which he is member, if not sharing therein.

Executor or administrator, who is lawyer, may be allowed fees to be paid law firm of which he is member, only if it was agreed that he is not to share in fees.

4. Executors and administrators 🔑111(1)—Executor or administrator, employing law firm of which he is member, is presumed to share in fees.

Presumption is that executor or administrator, employing law firm of which he is member, shares in fees received by them from him.

5. Executors and administrators 🔑497—Statute, allowing payment for extraordinary services, held not to allow payment of attorney's fees to executor or to law firm of which he is member (Code Civ. Proc. § 1618).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, providing that executor may be allowed additional compensation for extraordinary services, held not to allow payment for legal services to executor who acted as his own attorney or to law firm of which he is member.

6. Trusts 🔑231(1)—One in fiduciary relation may not act in both individual and representative capacity.

Public policy forbids one in fiduciary relation to act in both individual and representative capacity, or in other position where tempted to betray trust.

7. Executors and administrators 🔑497—Where executor was member of law firm employed by him and had received all compensation allowed by law, allowing additional compensation to firm was error (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1618, 1619).

Even if Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, allows executor who is own attorney compensation as such because allowing executor extra compensation for extraordinary services, where executor who employed law firm of which he was member had received all compensation allowed by statute, allowing additional compensation to firm was error, in view of section 1619.

8. Executors and administrators 🔑497—Statute, becoming effective after order decreeing distribution, held not to authorize allowance for legal services to firm of which executor was member (Code Civ. Proc. § 3, and § 1618, as amended by St. 1925, p. 624).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, as amended by St. 1925, p. 624, to remove limitation on amount of extra compensation that may be allowed executor for extraordinary services, held not to render proper allowance of compensation for legal services by law firm of which executor was member, where final account and distribution were ordered before amendment became effective, since Code Civ. Proc. § 3, forbids construction that statute is retroactive unless expressly so declared, and statute will not be given retroactive construction which will impose new liabilities.

9. Statutes ⚷266—Retroactive construction of statute, imposing new liabilities, will not be adopted.

Statute will not be given retroactive construction which will impose new liabilities.

10. Executors and administrators ⚷111(5)—Study of stock market to enable advantageous sale of shares of stock held not legal services, but ordinary duty of executor.

Study of stock market to enable advantageous sale of shares of stock belonging to estate held ordinary duty of executor, not professional service for which lawyer might charge estate.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Clark Parker, deceased. From the portion of the order settling final account of Leon M. Abbott, as executor of said estate, which allows extra compensation to his attorneys for extraordinary services, Henry A. Stearns and others appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam, of Pasadena, for appellants.

Bates, Nay, Abbott & Dane, of Boston, Mass., and Henry O. Wheeler, Jr., and Henry O. Wackerbarth, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, J. Three residuary legatees under the will of Clark Parker, deceased, have appealed from that part of an order settling the executor's final account which allows $40,000 as extra compensation to the attorneys for extraordinary services alleged to have been rendered by them in the probate proceedings.

The respondent, Leon M. Abbott, is the executor of the will, appointed as such by the superior court for Los Angeles county. Mr. Abbott is a member of the law firm of Bates, Nay, Abbott & Dane, a firm of attorneys practicing law in the state of Massachusetts, with offices in the city of Boston. He employed his firm and two Los Angeles lawyers, Messrs. Henry O. Wheeler and Henry O. Wackerbarth, to act as his attorneys in the performance of all the legal services incident to the probate proceedings. When the estate was ready for distribution, respondent filed his final account, report, and petition for distribution. In the account he claimed credit for all of the statutory commissions and all of the extra compensation to which he possibly could be entitled as executor, under the statute as it then read; also, all of the statutory commissions to which his attorneys could be entitled, and an additional sum as extra compensation to the attorneys for extraordinary services alleged to have been performed by them. The specific amounts for which he thus claimed credit in his final account are: (1) $3,147.13, the regular commissions due him, under section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for ordinary executorial services; (2) $1,573.57 (one-half of the regular commissions) as extra compensation for extraordinary services performed by him as executor; (3) $3,147.13, the regular attorneys' commissions allowable, under sections 1618 and 1619, for legal services rendered in conducting the ordinary probate proceedings; and (4) $50,000 as further compensation to the attorneys for extraordinary legal services alleged to have been performed by them. In due time the residuary legatees who have taken this appeal appeared in the court below and objected to the allowance of any amount for extraordinary legal services. Thereafter the court made an order settling respondent's final account. The order allows the items of $3,147.13 and $1,573.57 as credits, respectively, for respondent's regular commissions and extra compensation for extraordinary services performed by him as executor, the item of $3,147.13 as attorneys' fees for the services of the attorneys in conducting the ordinary probate proceedings, and the sum of $40,000 as further compensation to the attorneys for extraordinary legal services performed by them. Included in this item of $40,000 is an undetermined amount representing the share of respondent's law firm in the extra compensation for extraordinary services. That is to say, the amounts due, respectively, to respondent's law firm and to the two local attorneys for such extraordinary services are not segregated but are lumped in one sum. It is from the allowance of this credit of $40,000 that this appeal is prosecuted.

At all the times when respondent performed his services as executor, and, indeed, at the time when the court made its order settling the final account and decreeing distribution, section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided that an executor, when no compensation is provided by the will or he renounces all claims thereto, shall be allowed, as compensation for his ordinary services, commissions at certain specified rates upon the amount of the estate accounted for by him, and that "such further allowance may be made as the court may deem just and reasonable for any extraordinary service," but that the total amount which the court may allow for extraordinary executorial services shall not exceed one-half the amount of commissions allowed the executor for his ordinary services. By section 1619 it is provided that attorneys for executors and administrators shall be allowed as fees for conducting the ordinary probate proceedings the same commissions that are allowed to executors and administrators under section 1618, and that for any "extraordinary services" rendered by the attorneys, such as sales or mortgages of real estate and other specifically designated kinds of professional services, "such further allowance may be made as the court may deem just and reasonable." By an amendment which became effective July 24, 1925 (St. 1925, p. 624), 2½ months after the entry of the order settling the final account and decreeing distribution, section 1618 was so amended that, as it now reads, no limitation is placed upon the amount of the extra compensation which may be allowed an executor for his extraordinary services.

[1, 2] An executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee who is himself an attorney at law may properly employ another attorney to render the necessary legal services for the estate, and he may be entitled to an allowance out of the estate for the value of such legal services. Estate of Graham, 187 Cal. 222, 201 P. 456, 18 A. L. R. 631. But if the executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee, being himself a practicing lawyer, elects to act as his own attorney in the performance of the legal services incident to the administration of the estate, the general rule is that he will not be entitled to an allowance against the estate for his professional services, in the absence of some statutory provision entitling him thereto. Collier v. Munn, 41 N. Y. 143; Lent v. Howard, 89 N. Y. 170; Parker v. Day, 155 N. Y. 383, 49 N. E. 1046; In re Wallach, 164 App. Div. 600, 150 N. Y. S. 302, affirmed in 215 N. Y. 622, 109 N. E. 1094; Willard v. Bassett, 27 Ill. 38, 79 Am. Dec. 393; Hough v. Harvey, 71 Ill. 72; Whittemore v. Coleman, 239 Ill. 450, 88 N. E. 228; Taylor v. Wright, 93 Ind. 121; Doss v. Stevens, 13 Colo. App. 535, 59 P. 67; Slusher v. Weller, 151 Ky. 203, 151 S. W. 684; Holding v. Allen, 150 Tenn. 669, 266 S. W. 772, 36 A. L. R. 743; notes to Estate of Graham, supra, in 18 A. L. R. pp. 635 et seq., and notes to Holding v. Allen, supra, in 36 A. L. R. pp. 748 et seq. See, also, Estate of Runyon, 125 Cal. 195, 197, 198, 57 P. 783, where the principle enunciated in the above cases is recognized with approval. This rule is supported by the weight of authority (Holding v. Allen, supra); and though there is considerable apparent and perhaps real conflict of authority upon the subject (24 C. J. p. 108), we deem it a sound and wholesome doctrine, founded upon reasons of public policy. In Estate of Graham, supra, this court says:

> "If he [an administrator] did perform such services which were not in the line of his duty as administrator, he might not be permitted to receive compensation, but the reason would be one of public policy forbidding him to be his own employer."

In Stanes v. Parker, 9 Beav. 385, 50 Eng. Reprint 392, it was said:

> "The safety of the public has been justly thought to require the rule now clearly established, that, although a trustee, being a solicitor, may appoint another solicitor to execute the professional business relating to the trust, yet if he does it himself, he shall not be allowed to charge for his professional services."

See, also, In re Bank of Niagara, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 213, 215.

In Broughton v. Broughton, 5 De G. M. & G. 160, 43 Eng. Reprint 831, the Lord Chancellor said:

> "The rule applicable to the subject has been treated at the bar as if it were sufficiently enunciated by saying that a trustee shall not be able to make a profit of his trust, but that is not stating it so widely as it ought to be stated. The rule really is that no one who has a duty to perform shall place himself in a situation to have his interests conflicting with that duty; and a case for the application of the rule is that of a trustee himself doing acts which he might employ others to perform, and taking payment in some way for doing them. As the trustee might make the payment to others, this court says he shall not make it to himself; and it says the same in the case of agents, where they may employ others under them. The good sense of the rule is obvious, because it is one of the duties of a trustee to take care that no improper charges are made by persons employed for the estate. It has been often argued that a sufficient check is afforded by the power of taxing the charges, but the answer to this is that that check is not enough, and the creator of the trust has a right to have that, and also the check of the trustee. The result therefore is that no person in whom fiduciary duties are vested shall make a profit of them by employing himself, because in doing this he cannot perform one part of his trust; namely, that of seeing that no improper charges are made. The general rule applies to a solicitor acting as a trustee."

[3, 4] An executor or administrator, who is himself a lawyer, may be allowed a credit for fees to be paid a law firm of which he is a member, if it was agreed between him and his partners that he is not to share in the moneys to be received by the firm for its services. Estate of Schillaber, 1 Cof. Pro. Dec. 101. But if he is to participate in the compensation to be earned by his firm, then the same principles and policies which are opposed to the allowance of additional compensation to an executor or administrator for legal services rendered by him individually, as an attorney at law, are equally opposed to the allowance of compensation to his law firm. Taylor v. Wright, supra; Liles' Succession, 24 La. Ann. 490; Needham v. Needham, 34 Idaho, 193, 200 P. 346; Collins v. Carey, 2 Beav. 128, 48 Eng. Reprint 1128; Christophers v. White, 10 Beav. 523, 50 Eng. Reprint 683; Lyon v. Baker, 5 De G. & S. 622, 64 Eng. Reprint 1271. As was said by the Indiana Supreme Court in Taylor v. Wright, supra:

> "To hold that an executor or administrator, while he may not be compensated out of the estate for his individual legal services, can share with a partner compensation for legal services rendered the estate by the firm, would be suggesting an easy method for evading the law."

The record before us is silent as to the existence of any express agreement between respondent and his partners as to whether he was or was not to participate in the compensation to be be received by his firm for its legal services. In the absence of any such showing, the presumption is that respondent was to share the compensation with his partners. Needham v. Needham, supra; Liles' Succession, supra.

[5, 6] From the foregoing it follows that the court erred in allowing the item of $40,000, unless justification therefor may be found in some provision of the statute. Section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as we have seen, provided, at the time of the rendition of the professional services, that an executor shall be allowed certain specified commissions for his ordinary services, and that, for any extraordinary service performed by him as executor, such "further allowance may be made as the court may deem just and reasonable," not exceeding one-half of the commissions allowable for his ordinary executorial services. Cases are to be found in some jurisdictions which hold that where it is provided by statute that executors or administrators may be allowed extra compensation for extraordinary services, an executor or administrator who, being an attorney, performed legal services for the estate may be allowed, in addition to the usual commissions attached to his office, a further compensation for his legal services. Sloan v. Duffy, 117 Wis. 480, 94 N. W. 342. See, also, In re Wilson's Estate, 83 Neb. 252, 119 N. W. 522, and Davidson v. Story, 106 Ga. 799, 32 S. E. 867.

In Sloan v. Duffy, supra, the Wisconsin court holds that legal services, performed by an executor who is an attorney, are "extraordinary services," within the meaning of a statute, providing that for all "extraordinary services" rendered by an executor the court shall make such an allowance over and above the statutory fees as might be adjudged reasonable. The theory underlying these cases, tacitly assumed rather than expressed, seems to be this: The only reason for ever holding that a lawyer executor may not charge the estate for legal services rendered by him is that, if the statute makes no provision for extra compensation, he would, in effect, be charging double commissions, or compensation over and above the statutory fees to which he is entitled as an executor, if he were to charge the estate for legal services rendered by him in his professional capacity. This theory completely ignores the fact that the fundamental basis for the rule which we have been considering is one of public policy —that, as was said by the Lord Chancellor in Broughton v. Broughton, supra, it is a rule which is grounded upon the principle that a trustee shall not "place himself in a situation to have his interest conflicting with" his duty as a fiduciary. The law, for wise reasons, forbids a person occupying a fiduciary relation to assume a position which might possibly be adverse to his duties. It is against public policy to permit such a person to be placed where he might be tempted to betray his trust. Western States Life Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 190, 191, 135 P. 496; Sims v. Petaluma Gas Light Co., 131 Cal. 659, 63 P. 1011; Pacific Vinegar, etc., Works v. Smith, 145 Cal. 365, 78 P. 550, 104 Am. St. Rep. 42.

"When one undertakes to deal with himself in different capacities—individual and representative—there is a manifest hostility in the position he occupies. His duty calls upon him to act for the best interests of his principal; his self-interest prompts him to make the best bargain for himself. Humanity is so constituted that when these conflicting interests arise the temptation is usually too great to be overcome; and duty is sacrificed to interest." Western States Life Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, supra.

It clearly is the duty of every executor, when engaging counsel to render professional services for the estate, to employ the best legal talent available for the stipulated compensation. But he would place himself in a position where there would be a clash between his own personal interest and his duty to employ the ablest counsel obtainable for the agreed compensation if, being himself a lawyer, he should undertake to perform that service himself with the intention of charging the estate therefor, or if, being a member of a law firm and sharing in the profits to be made, he should employ his firm to render the necessary professional services. Again, it is the duty of every executor to oppose any charge which the attorney or attorneys employed by him might make against the estate for extraordinary legal services, if there be no substantial ground for the claim that the services were indeed extraordinary. But his personal interest would conflict with this duty, if the services were rendered by his own law firm and he is to share in the earnings. These examples will suffice to show how an executor might be tempted to look with too friendly an eye upon improper claims for legal services if we were to relax the salutary rule announced in such cases as Collier v. Munn, supra, merely because our Code provides that an executor may be allowed extra compensation for extraordinary service. We are not to be understood as intimating that this respondent, in asking an allowance for extraordinary legal services performed by his law firm and the two local attorneys, was not acting in good faith, or that no extraordinary legal services were, in fact, performed by the attorneys. We have no reason to suspect bad faith in this case, and the examples which we have instanced of a possible conflict of duty with personal interest have been cited by us solely for the purpose of showing why it is that public policy should be regarded as the basic reason for the general rule that a lawyer executor may not charge the estate for his own or his firm's professional services.

[7] But even if public policy had nothing whatever to do with the rule, and even if it should be held that, where the statute allows an executor extra compensation for his extraordinary services, a lawyer executor may be allowed extra compensation for extraordinary legal services performed by him or by his law firm, nevertheless respondent still would fail to uphold the propriety of the credit for $40,000. As we already have stated, a portion of that sum—how much does not appear—represents the share claimed by respondent's law firm for its part in the extraordinary legal services, and the balance, whatever it may be, represents the share of the two local attorneys for their part in such services. If, therefore, this item of $40,000 were allowed, then respondent, as one who is entitled to participate in the profits earned by his law firm, would receive some part of this extra compensation. But in the item of $1,573.57 allowed him as extra compensation, over and above his commissions for ordinary executorial duties, he already has been allowed all of the extra compensation to which, as executor, he possibly can be entitled, under section 1618 as it read at the time when the services were rendered. It follows, therefore, that any allowance of compensation to his law firm for extraordinary legal services, or even for ordinary legal services, must inevitably result in respondent receiving more than was allowable to him, as executor, under section 1618 prior to its amendment in 1925. Therefore, even if we were to give to that Code section the same effect which the Wisconsin court in Sloan v. Duffy, supra, gave to a similar statutory provision, the allowance of this item of $40,000 would be improper, nevertheless.

[8, 9] Respondent seeks to avoid this conclusion by arguing that his right to extra compensation must be measured by section 1618 as it now reads, and that, since that section no longer places a limit upon the amount which may be allowed an executor or administrator as additional compensation for an extraordinary service performed by him, the extra compensation which already has been allowed respondent for his extraordinary services presents no obstacle to an allowance of the item of $40,000, if the reasoning of the Wisconsin case be followed. Respondent takes the position that if, subsequent to a judgment appealed from and prior to a decision by the appellate court, there be an alteration or repeal of the law applicable to the rights of the parties, the appeal must be decided according to the then existing law, citing United States v. Schooner Peggy, 5 U. S. (Cranch) 103, 2 L. Ed. 49, and a number of other analogous cases. The cases cited by respondent are not applicable to the situation here presented, and there is no merit in his contention. A decision on the rights of the parties to this appeal, in accord with the provisions of section 1618 as amended in 1925, would give to that amendment a retroactive effect. But that effect we may not give for the reason that no part of the Code of Civil Procedure "is retroactive unless expressly so declared." Code Civ. Proc., § 3; Central Pacific R. Co. v. Shackelford, 63 Cal. 264; Estate of Frees, 187 Cal. 155, 201 P. 112. The amendment in question, to the extent that it removes all limitation upon the amount which may be allowed to executors and administrators as extra compensation for extraordinary services performed by them, has the effect of imposing new and additional liabilities upon estates in probate. A statute will not be given a retroactive construction by which it will impose liabilities not existing at the time of its passage.

> "Laws which create new obligations, or impose new duties, or exact new penalties because of past transactions have been universally reprobated by civil and common-law writers, and it is to be presumed that no statute is intended to have such effect unless the contrary clearly appears." Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 160, 51 P. 48.

In Estate of Daly, 180 App. Div. 307, 167 N. Y. Supp. 229, affirmed without opinion in 223 N. Y. 671, 119 N. E. 1037, it is held that an amendment to section 2753 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure requiring the surrogate to allow to an executor, who is also an attorney and who has rendered legal services, in connection with his executorial duties, reasonable compensation for those services, is not retroactive so as to permit an allowance for services rendered prior to the amendment.

Though the part of the order appealed from must be reversed for the reason that it allows the executor, indirectly, compensation which should not be charged against the estate, it does not necessarily follow that the local attorneys, Messrs. Henry O. Wheeler and Henry O. Wackerbach, are not entitled to extra compensation for any extraordinary legal services which they may have performed.

[10] In his petition for an allowance of extra compensation for the attorneys, respondent describes many different kinds of services, a number of which unquestionably cannot be classified as extraordinary legal services. Take one example for illustration. It is alleged that respondent and his counsel studied the stock market in order to be able to make an advantageous sale of certain shares of stock belonging to the estate. This is not a professional service for which a lawyer may make a charge payable out of the estate. It is but the performance of an ordinary duty of the executor in selling the property of his testator. The order from which the appeal was taken does not show what services were made the basis for the allowance of the $40,000. From the record before us it is not possible to determine what part, if any, of the $40,000 was allowed for services which are not extraordinary legal services, within the meaning of section 1619 of the Code. That this situation, in the event of a second appeal, may not again arise, the lower court, on the going down of the remittitur, should, if counsel be so advised, entertain a motion to strike from the petition all references to services which are not "extraordinary" legal services, within the meaning of section 1619; or, as an alternative, that court, on the retrial of the issues involving the claim of the two local attorneys for extra compensation, should expressly find, either by appropriate recitals in the order or otherwise, the precise services performed by the local attorneys, if any, which it finds to be extraordinary.

The part of the order appealed from is reversed, and the matter is remanded to the lower court for a new trial, in accordance with this opinion, upon the issues presented by respondent's petition for extra compensation to the attorneys.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; SEAWELL, J.

200 Cal. 77

HALL v. IMPERIAL WATER CO. NO. 3.

SAME v. IMPERIAL WATER CO. NO. 5.

(L. A. 9294, 9307.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error ⚷110, 873(3)—Order denying motion for new trial is not appealable, but is reviewable on appeal from judgment (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 956, 963, as amended by St. 1915, pp. 209, 328).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended by St. 1915, p. 209, an order denying motion for new trial is not an appealable order, but is reviewable on appeal from judgment under section 956, as amended by St. 1915, p. 328.

2. Appeal and error ⚷113(2)—Orders denying motions to vacate and set aside judgments presenting matters reviewable on appeals from judgment held not appealable orders (Code Civ. Proc. § 660).

Where plaintiff's proceedings for new trial terminated by expiration of statutory period under Code Civ. Proc. § 660, and would be reviewable on appeal from judgments, orders denying plaintiff's motion to vacate and set aside judgments are not appealable since presenting matters reviewable on appeals from judgments.

3. Judgment ⚷386(1)—Motion to vacate judgment not void on its face must be made within six months from entry thereof (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Motion to vacate judgment not void on its face must, by analogy with Code Civ. Proc. § 473, be made within six months from entry thereof.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. S. Marsh, Judge.

Separate actions by Maude Hall against the Imperial Water Company No. 3 and the Imperial Water Company No. 5. Judgments were rendered for plaintiff, and from orders denying plaintiff's motion to vacate and set aside judgments, plaintiff appeals. On appellee's motion to dismiss appeals. Motion granted.

See, also, 250 P. 394.

Jesse George, of San Diego, for appellant.

Leon R. Yankwich and Luther G. Brown, both of Los Angeles, and J. Stewart Ross and R. B. Whitelaw, both of El Centro, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a motion to dismiss each of two appeals herein on the ground that the orders appealed from are not appealable orders. By stipulation of the parties said two appeals have been consolidated.

On May 10, 1917, the appellant instituted a separate action against each of the above-named respondents in the superior court of the county of Imperial to recover damages for injuries to her land, alleged to have been caused by the seepage of water from the irrigation canals of said respondents. Judgment was entered in each of said actions on July 1, 1924, awarding damages to the appellant, and thereafter, on July 7, 1924, she filed a notice of motion for new trial in each cause. Among other grounds the notices stated that the respective motions would be based on the alleged disqualification of the trial judge to hear said causes. The motions for new trial, however, were never made in open court. The time within which appeals from the judgments might be perfected and within which proceedings on motion for new trial would have to be determined has elapsed without any steps having been taken by the appellant in those directions other than as above indicated. Subsequently, and on February 18, 1925, approximately 7½ months after said judgments were entered, appellant served and filed notices of motion to vacate and set aside each of said judgments on the ground that the judge who tried the causes was disqualified by reason of his owning real property in the Imperial irrigation district. These latter motions came on for hearing in the court below on March 27, 1925, and were denied on May 28,

---

1925, by Hon. M. S. Marsh, judge of the superior court of the county of San Diego, sitting as a judge of the superior court of the county of Imperial. As already indicated, the appeals herein are from the orders denying said motions to vacate and set aside the judgments in the above-entitled causes.

Respondents move to dismiss the consolidated appeals on the ground that an order refusing to vacate and set aside a judgment is not an appealable order. It is contended that there are but two exceptions to this rule, namely, where the matter specified in the motion to vacate could not have been reviewed on an appeal from the judgment and where the judgment affects injuriously one who is not a formal party to the action, or, if a party, he has not received due notice so that the judgment as to him has been given improperly and ex parte. It is then urged that the instant appeals do not come within either of said exceptions, for the alleged disqualification of the trial judge "was the ground for the motion to vacate the judgment" and "was also the chief ground for her motion for a new trial," and "the question of disqualification, being before the court below, on motion for new trial, its ruling on the matter was reviewable on appeal from the judgment," thus precluding, it is asserted, the instant appeals from the orders refusing to vacate and set aside the judgments on said ground.

In opposition thereto the appellant urges, among other things, that to grant respondents' motion to dismiss the appeals herein "would be setting at naught the rule that the judgment and all of the acts of a judge disqualified for interest * * * are absolutely void and must be disregarded wherever the fact of disqualification is made to appear. * * *"

Preliminary to a consideration of the question presented herein the following pertinent and well-settled principles should be kept in mind:

[1] Since the 1915 amendment to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Stats. 1915, p. 209), an order denying a motion for new trial is not an appealable order. Hughes v. De Mund, 195 Cal. 242, 246, 233 P. 94; section 963, Code Civ. Proc. The Legislature has provided, however, by means of an amendment to section 956 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Stats. 1915, p. 328), that such an order is reviewable on an appeal from the judgment. Hughes v. De Mund, supra; section 956, Code Civ. Proc.

[2] Under the general rule an order refusing to vacate and set aside a judgment is likewise not an appealable order. In re Yoder (Cal. Sup.) 251 P. 205; Bell v. Solomons, 162 Cal. 105, 109, 121 P. 377. An exception to this latter rule provides that an order denying a motion to vacate and set aside a judgment is appealable where the record on appeal from the judgment would not disclose the ground of the motion. In re Yoder, supra; Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 3, 11, 79 P. 527. As stated in Re Yoder, supra, such an order is an appealable order where the circumstances are such that an appeal from the judgment "would be vain for lack of a record showing the rights of the aggrieved party."

[3] In our opinion an application of the foregoing principles to the instant appeals requires that they be dismissed. As stated above, the appellant herein instituted proceedings for new trial in each cause by filing her notices of intention to move for such relief. And, though these motions were never made viva voce, the new trial proceedings were terminated in each cause by the expiration of the statutory period (section 660, Code Civ. Proc.) and would be reviewable on an appeal from the respective judgments. This being so, the orders denying appellant's motions to vacate and set aside the judgments are not appealable orders, for they present matters which would have been reviewable on appeals from the judgments.

Moreover, the motions to vacate the judgments were made, as indicated above, approximately 7½ months after the entry of said judgments. The authorities declare that a motion to vacate a judgment not void on its face, as is the case here, must by analogy with the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, be made within six months from the entry thereof. Consolidated Constr. Co. v. Pac. E. Ry. Co., 184 Cal. 244, 247, 193 P. 238; People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 673, 675, 77 P. 651.

For the foregoing reasons, the motion to dismiss the consolidated appeals herein is hereby granted.

SHENK, J., being disqualified, does not participate in the foregoing.

---

200 Cal. 50

SCHULTZ et al. v. CITY OF VENICE et al.
(L. A. 9177.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error ⚷694(1)—Where bill of exceptions fails to set out evidence on litigated questions, its sufficiency to support findings cannot be considered (Code Civ. Proc. § 648).

Bill of exceptions having failed to contain any specification of insufficiency of evidence to sustain trial court's findings, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 648, and findings of trial court having so far disposed of questions sought to be litigated as to require such specifications, insufficiency of evidence to support findings cannot be considered, and, no other questions being presented to appellate court, judgment of trial court would be affirmed.

2. Exceptions, bill of ⚷8—Provisions of Code relating to bills of exceptions are mandatory (Code Civ. Proc. § 648).

Provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 648, relating to bills of exceptions, are mandatory.

3. Appeal and error ⚷931(7)—Where appeal record disclosed findings on certain issue, it will be presumed that pleadings sufficiently presented issue to require findings.

On appeal, record disclosing that trial court had made findings on certain issue, Supreme Court will presume that case was tried on theory that such issue was sufficiently tendered by pleadings, and that court was therefore required to make findings thereon.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry A. Hollzer, Judge.

Suit for injunction by Floyd A. Schultz and others against the City of Venice and others, to enjoin the carrying out of certain public improvements. From a judgment denying the injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

McClure, Griffin & Yokum, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Lucius P. Green, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

George Acret, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles denying the plaintiffs an injunction. In their complaint praying for that relief the plaintiffs allege that they are residents of and owners of property within the corporate limits of a municipal corporation known as "The City of Venice" and situate within the county of Los Angeles; that the duly constituted municipal officers thereof have instituted and are about to carry forward certain public improvements therein under and by virtue of the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), and the amendments thereto, which, if permitted to be consummated, will result in the assessment of the properties of said plaintiffs and each of them to pay the costs and expenses of said improvements. Said plaintiffs also sue in their capacity as members of the general public, contending that said proposed improvements are unlawful for the reasons hereinafter to be set forth. In support of their foregoing averments the plaintiffs aver in substance the following to be the facts of the case: During the years 1904–1905, and for some years thereafter, the Abbot Kinney Company, a corporation, was the owner and in possession of a tract of marsh land lying along the coast line near the city of Ocean Park, in the county of Los Angeles, which those in control of it conceived the idea of reclaiming and creating thereon a city to be known as "Venice of America," with a system of waterways and canals, resembling those of the city of Venice, Italy. In accordance with this conception the corporation caused the lands to be reclaimed and laid out in lots, blocks, streets, and intercommunicating waterways converging into an artificial lagoon and connected with the adjacent ocean, all in conformity with the outlines of a map of the tract which the corporation caused to be prepared and filed for record with the county recorder of said county. The corporation also caused the banks of these waterways, or so-called canals, to be cemented, and the strips of land adjacent thereto to be planted with trees, vines, and shrubbery, and to be ornamented with structures of Italian types of architecture, and also caused archways and bridges to be built in harmonious designs and at such elevations as would not interfere with the use of these waterways for boating, canoeing, and other aquatic purposes and pleasures. The lagoon into which these waterways converged was also provided with structures suitable for such public pleasure purposes as swimming, diving, water sports, and festivities. The streets intersecting these canals were also laid out and so improved as to be adapted for residential purposes, and the lands adjacent thereto were subdivided into residential lots and tracts, and when these designs and improvements were well under way were offered for sale upon a plan of advertising which emphasized the unique features of this particular dream city as the proposed "Venice of America," with the result that the lots and tracts within the same were largely sold to residential buyers, who thereafter built and occupied residences thereon. The plaintiffs herein, or their predecessors, were among those who were thus induced to purchase and improve and reside upon the lots and tracts therein thus advertised and sold. With respect to the foregoing facts, there appears to be no controversy between the parties hereto and they are fully set forth in the findings of the trial court.

The plaintiffs further allege that, by the foregoing acts and conduct of said corporation in the conception and carrying out of the plans and purpose of creating upon said tract the so-called "Venice of America" with its waterways, lagoon, and other artificial resemblances to the old world city, and by the adaptation thereof to those public purposes, sports, and pleasures which would constitute the natural and appropriate uses of such waterways and lagoon, and in the devotion of the same to such purposes through a series of years, and in the system of promotion and advertising by which the said corporation disposed of a large portion of the residential and other lots and tracts within the limits of said city, the said corporation had long prior to the year 1925 wrought a dedication of the areas covered by said waterways and lagoon, and the banks and strips of land adjacent thereto, to public purposes, and also that the uninterrupted public use thereof during all of these intervening years had so consummated and effectuated such dedication thereof to such uses as to result in the setting apart and devotion of said waterways and their immediately adjacent lands to such public uses and purposes forever.

The plaintiffs further allege that the said corporation, by its aforesaid representations made in the course of the advertisement and sale of the residential and other lots and tracts within the area of said city whereby the plaintiffs and the inhabitants generally within the same were induced to buy and build upon and occupy their several homes and properties therein, were such as to entitle the said plaintiffs representing themselves and all the other residents and property owners within said city to the full benefit of such dedication of said waterways and their immediately adjacent lands as delineated upon the recorded map of the same to such public purposes and to claim an estoppel of said corporation and of its successor or successors in interest from the assertion of any right to devote said dedicated areas to other than such specified purposes or to interfere with or destroy the utilization thereof for the purposes to which they had been fully dedicated and devoted during a long series of years, and the plaintiffs particularly allege that the defendants, by the proposed plan of improvement of said areas under the act of 1911 as contemplated and as in the course of being carried forward by them, will destroy the public uses to which said waterways and their said adjacent strips of land have thus been dedicated and devoted to the irreparable injury of the said plaintiffs and the public at large. Wherefore they sought the injunctive relief prayed for in their said complaint. The defendants, constituting the City of Venice, a municipal corporation, and also the officers and trustees, and also the Abbot Kinney Company, a corporation, duly appeared and answered herein: their said answer and the amendments thereafter offered thereto embracing certain admissions and denials to be hereinafter considered. Thereupon the respective parties to the action entered into certain stipulations relating to the procedure in the course of the trial of the action and the presentation of certain of the evidence to be produced by the respective parties in the form of affidavits. The cause then came on for trial, pursuant to the procedure outlined in said stipulations before the court sitting without a jury, and, having been thus tried and submitted, the trial court in due time filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and upon the basis thereof caused its judgment to be entered in favor of the defendants, denying to the plaintiffs any injunctive relief. Thereafter a bill of exceptions was duly prepared, certified, and filed and this appeal by the plaintiffs taken.

[1, 2] The primary question presented for our consideration upon this appeal relates to the sufficiency of the record herein to present the main question which the plaintiffs seek to have determined. The bill of exceptions presented herein, while it contains a considerable amount of the evidence presented at the trial in the form of affidavits in support or dispute of the issues embraced in the pleadings, does not contain any specification of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the trial court. Such specifications are expressly required by the provisions of section 648 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to bills of exceptions, and it has been uniformly held that such provisions are mandatory and that in their absence the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the trial court cannot be considered by this court upon appeal from the judgment. Beeson v. Schloss, 183 Cal. 618, 192 P. 292; Mills v. Brady, 185 Cal. 317, 196 P. 776, and cases cited.

The appellants herein contend, however, that the foregoing rule of procedure has only application to those matters which are put in issue by the pleadings, and that as to the question of the dedication of the waterways with their adjacent lands and premises to which this action particularly relates, arising out of the acts and conduct of the defendant Abbot Kinney Company in connection with its conception and execution of its designs for the creation of the unique community to be known as "Venice of America," and also as to the consummation of such dedication to the particular public uses to which said waterways and their adjacent premises were devoted through the public use thereof during a long series of years, the averments of the plaintiffs' pleadings have not been sufficiently denied by the defendants' answer or the amendments thereto, and hence were not in issue so as to require any findings on the part of the trial court, and that, this being so, no specification of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain those undenied and thus admitted averments was required.

[3] When we examine the pleadings in the case in the light of this contention we are constrained to hold that there was, to say the least of it, some attempt on the part of the defendants to deny those averments of the plaintiffs' complaint which tendered the issue as to the original dedication of these waterways and their adjacent premises to the particularly alleged public uses, and also to deny the alleged consummation of such dedication to such uses through the public acceptance of the same. Whether these denials would have been deemed sufficient to have presented the particular issue if tested by demurrer to the defendants' answer or by motion for judgment upon the pleadings, we do not deem it necessary to determine. When we look to the findings of the trial court for the purpose of ascertaining what issues in the case it deemed to be before it, and hence to require findings, we discover that court did in fact make findings upon this particular issue, and, this being so, we must conclude that the cause was tried before it upon the theory that such issue was sufficiently tendered by the pleadings and that the court was therefore required to make findings thereon.

The findings of the trial court expressly negative the dedication of the said premises either by the acts and conduct of the defendant corporation with relation thereto, or by the subsequent user thereof by the public. In that connection the findings of the court are to the effect that the plans and purposes of said corporation with relation to the laying out, construction, opening, and sale of the said tract of land were such as to merely amount to a dedication of the canals and waterways therein and of the lands immediately contiguous thereto to the public at large as public ways for all way purposes, and that the public use thereof continuously and for a long period without objection or limitation on the part of said corporation amounted to a public use thereof for all way purposes, and not otherwise.

The trial court further found that as to the plaintiffs herein their rights and interests in said waterways and canals were not other or different from those of the public at large. Based upon these findings of fact and upon the further finding that the said Abbot Kinney Company, having retained the title to lands upon which said waterways and canals were located, subject to the aforementioned public easement and use, had, by sufficient conveyance, transferred to the City of Venice, a municipal corporation, in the year 1912 its title in fee to said areas, and that the said City of Venice, after maintaining said waterways and canals as such public ways for a number of years, had finally determined that said public ways would be more useful to the public through their conversion into surface streets, and hence had initiated and was proceeding with the improvement of the areas thereof as such under the Improvement Act of 1911, the trial court as its conclusion of law found that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief prayed for in their complaint. Considering these findings as a whole and in the light of the record before us, we are constrained to hold that they so far dispose of the questions sought to be litigated by the parties to this action as to have required specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain them in order to enable us to consider and dispose of that question upon this appeal. The appellants herein present no other question; nor do they in any manner assail the sufficiency of the proceedings had and taken under the act of 1911 for the public improvement of the premises in accordance with the provisions of said act and of the amendments thereto.

It follows that the judgment of the trial court, upholding such proceedings, and denying said plaintiffs the relief sought from the operation and effect thereof, was not erroneous, and that the same should be and is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; SULLIVAN, J.

200 Cal. 57

In re McDONOUGH'S ESTATE.

McDONOUGH v. JOYCE.

(S. F. 12018.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1926.)

1. Wills 🔑55(7)—Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding of mental incompetency of 78 year old testator.

Evidence of physical infirmities attending old age, and testimony of intimate acquaintances admitted under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10, and other evidence, held insufficient to sustain jury's finding of mental incompetency of 78 year old testator.

2. Wills 🔑38(2)—Proof of hallucinations or delusions does not ordinarily show testator incompetent.

Proof of hallucinations or delusions does not show testator incompetent, unless bearing directly upon the testamentary act.

3. Evidence 🔑568(2)—Opinions of subscribing witnesses as to testator's capacity are entitled to more weight than those of passive witnesses.

The law presumes that subscribing witnesses noted the mental capacity of testator, and their opinions are entitled to more weight than those of passive witnesses.

4. Wills 🔑53(1)—Amount paid by testator for board, lodging, and care held not pertinent to issue of mental competency.

That aged testator, beginning some time after making will, paid $100 monthly for board, lodging, and care, held not pertinent to issue of competency.

5. Wills 🔑55(1)—Proponent's evidence must be considered in weighing contestant's case.

In determining whether evidence sustains verdict against testator's capacity, evidence of proponent as well as that of contestant must be considered.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Application by Elizabeth C. Joyce for the probate of the will of Christopher McDonough, deceased. From a judgment in favor of contestant, Daniel McDonough, revoking the probate on the ground of unsoundness of mind, Elizabeth C. Joyce appeals. Reversed.

Theodore J. Savage, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John C. Quinlan and James F. Brennan, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. On August 29, 1922, Christopher McDonough made his last will and testament, and died June 5, 1924, one year and nine months thereafter. At the time of his death, he left surviving him his son, Daniel, the contestant herein, aged about 44 years and a resident of Massachusetts. The other children of the testator, according to the testimony of Daniel, had died without issue prior to the death of the testator. By his will he devised his estate, which at the time his will was executed consisted of a sum less than $8,000 in bank, except the sum of $100, to proponent, Elizabeth Joyce, the wife of Martin Joyce. The contestant by his action herein alleged two grounds of contest: First, undue influence; and, second, unsoundness of mind. A nonsuit was granted as to the first ground, and the finding of the jury that the testator was of unsound mind at the time he executed the will was sustained by the trial court, and judgment was accordingly entered thereon, annulling and revoking the probate of said will. The appeal is taken from the whole of said judgment.

There seems to be some uncertainty as to the exact age of testator at the time he made his will. It is probable that his age, as declared in the will to be 78 years, was approximately correct.

[1] The testator was a native of Ireland, unable to read or write, and by trade a street paver. The date of his arrival in this country does not appear from the record, but it does appear that he was a resident of the state of Massachusetts in 1887. At that time his wife was living, and he was the father of seven young children, contestant then being 7 or 8 years of age. It would seem that the home was destroyed by a cause not disclosed in the record, the parents went apart, and the custody of the young children fell to the father. The testimony of contestant, who was then but 7 or 8 years of age, was to the effect that his father, in 1887, placed said children in the care of an institution conducted by the Roman Catholic Church. He never saw his mother thereafter, and saw his father but once, for a short time in 1915, when the latter visited the son at his home in Massachusetts. The record is silent as to the date of the mother's death.

It seems that upon leaving Massachusetts McDonough resided for a time at Salt Lake City, and finally took up his residence in San Francisco in 1894, where he resided until the day of his death, a period of approximately 30 years. His early life was spent in the old world, where rigid economy was a rule of necessity, and saving became a fixed habit, which he practiced during the entire earning period of his life.

It is contestant's contention that, prior to going to live with the Joyce family, the testator lived in a condition of extreme squalor, which alone was sufficient to create a serious doubt as to his sanity. Much stress is laid upon his method of living covering a period of about three years. The first insight given of his methods of living begins with the year 1901. In that year he became a roomer at a rooming house conducted by Mrs. Anna McManus, where he remained until forced out by the fire and earthquake of 1906. Mrs. McManus re-established herself after the fire and the testator returned as a roomer. He remained at her house until 1915, at which time he made a visit to his son, who was residing in Massachusetts. After three months' absence in the East, he returned to San Francisco and again took a room at the McManus home. He remained there until July, 1917, when, against his wish, he was compelled to seek another rooming place, as Mrs. McManus needed the room for her own purposes. He then went to live with Michael Moran in South San Francisco. It is claimed by several witnesses offered by proponent that the "shack," as the building was described, presented a revolting picture of squalor and filth. Paradoxical as it may appear, several of the witnesses who expressed a pronounced feeling of disgust at the wretched conditions that prevailed at the Moran place nevertheless sought the companionship of McDonough and were very frequent visitors at the home of filth. The principal witness to the unsanitary and filthy condition of the premises admitted that his visits often continued as long as two or three hours at a time. McDonough and Moran, according to testimony offered by the proponent, lived in the state of wretchedness described by some of the witnesses for a period of about three years. McDonough, however, without apparently consulting his old associates, left the Moran place and established himself at the Joyce home. Giving full credit to the testimony of the witnesses as to the conditions existing at the Moran premises, it would seem that McDonough finally and fully awoke to a sense of realization of the degradation by which he was surrounded, as was evidenced by his resolve to enter a home where neatness and order prevailed, in which he might pass the remaining years of his life enjoying the comforts of a home and receiving the care and attention which only a woman's hands can administer. In quitting the Moran premises, he certainly acted wisely. He had laid aside a sum sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to secure him against want.

[2] Contestant produced witnesses who testified that testator was in the habit of picking up copper wire, mechanical bolts, nuts, broken pipes, and broken hairpins and safety pins, tin cans, and cigar and cigarette stubs, which he brought to his room. At times he complained of being dizzy and of seeing specks or spots in the air, and he also was heard to complain of pains in the back of his head, and had been heard to say, "I wish I was dead." He had been known to fail to recognize an acquaintance upon meeting him on the street until such person made himself known. His eyes upon a few occasions appeared to be "starey," and sometimes he would "glare." It is said that at times he had worn copper wire about his wrist as a sort of talisman against aches and pains, that upon certain occasions he had fallen and had to be assisted to his home, and that he had fallen asleep while reclining outdoors and awakened after the rain had started to fall. Mental lapses, repetitions in conversation, loss of sense of location for the moment, and failure to appreciate the passing of time, as well as acts which may or may not be evidence of mental weakness, were testified to by witnesses called by the contestant. Thirty years of the testator's life were brought into review, and the acts culled therefrom which it is claimed show a want of testamentary capacity are wholly insufficient to sustain the judgment. The witnesses for contestant, who testified as to the mental unsoundness of testator by virtue of the provisions of section 1870, subd. 10, Code of Civil Procedure, which permits an intimate acquaintance to give an opinion of the mental sanity of a person, the reason for the opinion being given, related certain acts and circumstances in support of their opinions which in point of time were somewhat remote from the exact time the will was executed. Much of the evidence amounts to nothing more than a conclusion, and the reasons for the opinions given lack convincing force. Not one of contestant's witnesses was willing to say that testator was suffering from settled insanity. When put to the test, scarcely one was willing to say that he believed him to be "crazy" in the general sense of the term. Those most unfavorable to the theory of sanity said there were times at which the testator appeared to be mentally all right and there were times at which he appeared not mentally at himself. The incidents which would indicate departures from the normal were the exceptions rather than continuous abnormal acts indicating a settled disturbed mental condition. The acts upon which the opinions rested may as well be attributed to habit, environment, idiosyncrasy, caprice, or infirmities of age as to mental disorder. That he was enfeebled by age during the latter months of his life there can be little doubt. No substantial evidence, however, tending to establish settled insanity or dementia or insane delusions or hallucinations on the part of the testator, was adduced. There is absolutely nothing in his relations with his son, whom he visited in 1915 with the intention of remaining a member of his household, that would in any wise support the theory that the testator, in concluding that he was not welcome, or at least that he would not be satisfied to remain with his son, was moved in so concluding by an insane delusion or hallucination. He made a trip across the continent on his own initiative to his son's home, investigated the situation, and decided that he would spend the remainder of his days in California. We have read the son's testimony describing the father's visit to him, and it contains nothing that would support an inference that he was mentally unsound. Proof of the existence of hallucinations or delusions is not alone sufficient to annul a will, unless such hallucinations or delusions bear directly upon the testamentary act. Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 237 P. 1079; Estate of Presho, 196 Cal. 639, 238 P. 944; Estate of Gunther (Cal. Sup.) 248 P. 514; Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 128 P. 932.

[3] Tested by a long list of decisions of this court, the evidence in the instant case must be held to be insufficient as a matter of law to establish testamentary incapacity. Almost every act upon which contestant relies to establish incompetency has been considered by this court and its evidentiary weakness judicially pointed out. The opinions expressed by said witnesses founded upon facts and conditions described by them are not sufficient to overturn the uncontradicted evidence of the witnesses who testified to testator's sound mental condition at the very time the will was executed or at times very near thereto. As has been said by this court in many decisions, the question to be determined is not what might have been the mental condition of the testator, but what in fact was his mental condition at the time he made the will. Estate of Perkins, supra; Estate of Relph, 192 Cal. 451, 221 P. 361; Estate of Wilson, 117 Cal. 262, 49 P. 172, 711. The law presumes that the subscribing witnesses to the execution of a will had their attention drawn to and noted the mental capacity of the testator. The opinions of such witnesses are entitled to more weight than that of one who is merely passive. Estate of Holloway, 195 Cal. 711, 235 P. 1012. Besides the subscribing witnesses, there was also present the pastor and spiritual adviser of testator. No one attempted to question the honesty or standing of said witnesses, and no impeachment of their testimony was attempted. Paraphrasing the language in Estate of Carson (Cal. App.) 239 P. 364, it may be said here, as it was said with respect to the testator in that case, that McDonough was able to and did keep in mind all things necessary to qualify him to make a will, and was, as shown by the only evidence given as to his mental condition at the very time the will was made, free and able to act in its execution. A résumé of the testimony of those present at the time the will was made and as to which there is no direct contradiction, if indeed there can be said to be any evidence to show mental incompetency, follows:

The Reverend Timothy Galvin, while not a subscribing witness to the will, was present at the time of its execution. He first met Christopher McDonough in July, 1922, and he saw him frequently until the day of his death, June 5, 1924. He visited him in the capacity of spiritual adviser at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Joyce, and his relations with him were of an intimate character. From the first time he met him to the day he made the will—a period of about two months—he saw him five or six times. Thereafter he saw him at least once, and frequently twice, monthly. During the entire period of his acquaintance he never knew of his doing an unusual or unreasonable act or heard him say an unreasonable thing. He gave intelligent answers to questions asked him, and understood what he was doing, and had the free use of his will power. He was cheerful at all times, and was always glad to see him, and upon his departure invited him to return. At the time the will was executed, there were present in the room at Mr. and Mrs. Joyce's residence Theodore Savage, Denis O'Shea, Mr. McDonough, and himself. The will was drawn and subsequently read to the testator in the presence of the persons above mentioned, and Mr. McDonough was asked by Mr. Savage if he was satisfied with it and if it was his last will. He saw the testator sign it by affixing his mark to it, and he saw the witnesses sign it as such. Some time in July the testator told Rev. Galvin that Mrs. Joyce had taken him in and had been very good to him, and she intended to keep and care for him during the remainder of his life. He said he had some money and wished to leave it to her upon his demise. In a second conversation that took place about the 1st of August, four weeks before the testator executed the will, he repeated what he had previously said as to the kind treatment he had received at the hands of Mrs. Joyce, and stated that it was his intention to leave to her the money he had on deposit with the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society. He also spoke of a business transaction he had had with the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society that was not entirely satisfactory to him. The witness advised him to secure the services of a lawyer if he wished to make his will or transact important legal business. The witness informed Mrs. Joyce that the testator desired a lawyer to draft his will. The testator spoke of his family affairs, and said he had a son in one of the Eastern states—the witness did not remember the particular state—but he did not want anything to do with him, as he had visited him some years previous and received a poor welcome at his hands; that, in fact, his son "refused to give him a dinner; that he called one day and left on the next train." The testator did not appear to be more than 75 years of age, and did not seem to be feeble for a man of his years; in fact, he appeared well. He did not complain of suffering from any ailment.

Denis O'Shea, a neighborhood merchant, was one of the witnesses to the execution of the will. He first became acquainted with the testator in 1919, and knew him intimately from the time he came to live with the Joyce family until his death, June 5, 1924. He had many conversations with him on various topics, and had ample opportunity to observe him. There was nothing peculiar or unusual in his conversation or conduct at any of the times he met him, and he appeared at all times to be perfectly sane. He used a stick or cane when walking, and said that he had bad feet and could not trust himself on the hillsides. The Joyce home was in a hilly section of the city. He did not appear feeble or infirm, but was quite strong for a man of his age. The witness detailed a conversation he had with the testator on the increase of the cost of living above the ruling market prices of former years, in which he gave concrete illustrations of the shrinkage in the purchasing value of money within his experience, which would clearly indicate that he was well oriented as to the subject of the conversation. Other subjects were discussed, and no diseased mental condition or mental fault was observed in the testator at any of the times the witness was thrown into contact with him. The witness was called to the Joyce home on August 29 by Mrs. Joyce to witness the testator's will. When he arrived, the only persons he saw in the house were Father Galvin, Mr. Joyce, and Mr. McDonough. Mr. Savage and Mrs. Joyce came afterward. The attorney excluded every one from Mr. McDonough's room, closed the door, and spent some time with Mr. McDonough, without the hearing or presence of any other person. Mr. Savage finally came out of the room and proceeded to write the will. Upon completing it, he called the witness and Rev. Galvin into the room where Mr. McDonough was sitting in a chair and closed the door. Neither Mr. Joyce nor Mrs. Joyce was in the room. Mr. Savage read the will over twice and asked the testator if he knew what the paper was, and the testator replied that it was his will. He then signed it with a cross. The testator requested the witness to sign it, and he complied with the request. Mr. Savage also signed as a witness.

Theodore J. Savage, an attorney who has practiced his profession for 30 years in San Francisco, testified that he drew the will under the instructions of the testator. A day or two before the will was drawn, Mrs. Joyce, who was a total stranger to him, came to his office and stated that an old gentleman stopping at her house wished to make his will. She brought with her a card from Dr. George T. Brady, an acquaintance and an occasional client of the attorney. The attorney told Mrs. Joyce that he would be at the house either on the next or second day at a fixed hour, and instructed her to have present two persons who were acquainted with Mr. McDonough to serve as witnesses to the execution of the will. Upon his arrival, he found Father Galvin and Mr. O'Shea there. He was introduced to McDonough, who was fully dressed and seated in a chair. He talked with him at considerable length, and, after taking his instructions in detail, went into the dining room, from which all persons withdrew at his request, and he there drew the will which is assailed by contestant. He read the will aloud to the testator in the hearing of those present and discussed some of its provisions with him. The testator said he could neither read nor write, and requested that the will be read a second time. He asked the attorney to write his name at the place where he was to affix his mark, declared the instrument to be his will, made his mark, and requested the attorney and Mr. O'Shea to sign as witnesses to its execution. The attorney testified that in his opinion the testator was perfectly sane in mind at the time he made his will; his reasons therefore being founded upon the conversation held with him for the purpose of obtaining necessary information to prepare the will. He asked the testator many questions, which tested in a large degree his testamentary capacity. The testator stated that he was born in Ireland, and was 78 years of age, and he talked generally about the different places he had visited in this country. He said the only property he owned was about $8,000 deposited with the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society. Upon inquiry as to his family history, the testator said he had been separated from his family for a great many years and had no communication with any member. He said he had a son named Daniel, residing in the East; that he visited him some seven or eight years prior with the intention of remaining, but he was not welcome and so came back to California. He stated that he was the father of other children, but that Daniel told him all the other children were deceased, and that he did not know whether the issue of any deceased child was living. He wished to leave Father Galvin $100 to celebrate masses for the repose of his soul, and the balance he wished to leave to Mrs. Joyce, as he and the Joyces had been friends for a long time. Mr. Savage inquired as to his health, and the testator said he was all right except his feet and legs bothered him a great deal, and he could not get around as well as he should. When asked by the attorney if he wanted him to draw his will, his reply was that he did. His appearance was good, and he seemed bright and intelligent. There was nothing in his appearance to indicate that he was otherwise than perfectly competent to make a will. Asked if he had a place of deposit for his will, he said he once had a safe deposit box but had surrendered it. The attorney informed him that he had a safe at his office, and, if he wished, he would keep the will in his office and upon his death he would file it at the proper time with the county clerk. McDonough said that was very good, and requested the attorney to preserve the will and file it at the proper time. The attorney gave him his professional card, and told him that, if he should thereafter desire to make any change in his will, to call him up and he would come to him and make any change or changes which he might desire to make.

Dr. Thomas H. O'Connor was called to attend the testator during the latter days of August, 1922, close to the day on which the will was executed. The testator was at that time suffering from an eczemic condition in his lower limbs. He was able to walk about, and there was nothing to indicate feebleness in his condition. His body was neither emaciated nor poorly nourished. The physician was of the opinion that the testator was of sound mind. Six months thereafter the physician was again called to attend him on account of a cold he had contracted. He found McDonough's condition about the same as upon his previous visit. His arterial system then was, as no doubt the fact is with a vast majority of aged persons, in a condition of hardening. The testator, however, lived for more than a year thereafter and was frequently seen by neighbors and others upon the sidewalk and about the premises, and he appeared to be rational in both conversation and conduct. After the death of the testator, the witness prepared the medical certificate of death, wherein the cause of death was stated to be cerebral hemorrhage and the contributory cause arterio sclerosis. The physician testified in this connection that death was instantaneous upon the occurrence of the hemorrhage. Medical testimony was offered to establish as a fact that hardening of the arteries is common to most persons who have passed middle life. This knowledge is common to the laity. It is nature's inevitable law, and marks the beginning of the disintegration of the human body. It by no means follows, however, that testamentary capacity ceases with the approach of, or even with the most advanced stages of, arterial hardening. This condition or stage in life is but partial evidence to be considered in connection with other evidence in determining whether or not arterio sclerosis has shut off the blood supply to the brain to the extent that the mind is unable to correctly function. Any other theory would deprive almost every person who has passed middle life of the right to dispose of his estate by will.

We have epitomized the testimony of the four witnesses, three of whom were present at the exact time the will was executed, two being subscribing witnesses, to show the testamentary competency of decedent at the period of time which the law regards as being of prime importance in this class of cases. Two of these witnesses were intimate acquaintances and testified to the sound and disposing mind of the testator, not only at the time the will was executed, but at other times very near to the day the will was executed, both prior and subsequent thereto. As to the other two, one was his physician who had attended him but a few days before he executed the will, and the other was an attorney whose first duty to his profession required him to satisfy himself that the testator was fully competent to make a will before engaging in an act which possessed the potentials of excluding heirs from their inheritances. Besides the testimony of the spiritual adviser, the lawyer, and the layman, who were present at the time the will was executed, which was not contradicted by direct evidence, other witnesses, four of whom seemed to have had no pecuniary interest in the result of the trial, gave testimony as to testator's mental soundness at the very time the will was made as well as at other periods of time both near to and remote from the day in question. John J. Matthew's acquaintance with the testator covered a period of seventeen years. After the testator came to reside at the Joyce home, he saw him at least once, and sometimes twice, a month. His testimony was that he was bright and intelligent, seemed clear in mind and exhibited no peculiarities of conversation or conduct at any time. Miss Mary Ryan saw him while he was at the Joyce home at least once a week, conversed with him frequently, and pronounced him to be perfectly sane. Elizabeth Craig, a pupil attending the city public schools and a recent arrival from Ireland, the birthplace of herself and McDonough, visited the Joyce children practically every day, and conversed with McDonough almost daily from the time he came to the Joyce home until his last illness. In her opinion he was perfectly sane.

Mr. and Mrs. Joyce both testified at length as to the circumstances under which McDonough came to live in their family. Mr. Joyce had known McDonough for many years prior to his marriage, and the latter visited at the family home after said marriage. Mrs. Joyce was exceptionally kind to him during all the time he was at her home, and cared for him tenderly during his last illness, which was somewhat protracted. McDonough was greatly pleased with the care and treatment he was receiving, and expressed gratitude for the comforts of real home life. Both testified as to his competency.

Two medical witnesses were called in the case, one by the contestant and the other by the proponent. In response to a hypothetical question embracing substantially the same assumed statement of facts, one was of the opinion that the testator was of unsound mind, and the other was of the opinion that he was mentally sound.

[4] The fact that McDonough, beginning some time after he made his will, paid $100 monthly for the board, lodging, and care which he received, is not pertinent to the issue of his competency to make a will. The amount, however, was not unreasonable, under the circumstances of the case.

[5] Contestant has quoted at considerable length from Dunphy v. Dunphy, 161 Cal. 380, 119 P. 512, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 818, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1230. That case considered the question as to the degree of unsoundness of mind that must be proved to authorize a judgment annulling a marriage contract. We are not here considering the mental capacity requisite to make a valid marriage contract, which presupposes an understanding on the part of the contracting parties of the duties, obligations, and responsibilities of the marital state. Here we are considering merely the ability of the testator to make a simple will. The capacity requisite to do so has been repeatedly defined by decisions of this court and it is not necessary to cite specific cases. In considering the question of a testator's competency, the rule by which the evidence must be measured is thus stated:

> "* * * The issue does not rest upon the contestant's evidence alone. The testimony of proponent's witnesses must be taken into account in weighing the sufficiency of contestant's case. Evidence which standing by itself might be sufficient to sustain a verdict may in the light of all the facts be wholly inadequate, and that without invading the province of the jury as the judges of the weight and sufficiency of the evidence." Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 192 P. 1085.

Measured by the law of this state, the evidence must be held to be insufficient to sustain the judgment.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SULLIVAN, J.

200 Cal. 70

SISKIN v. ALLIANCE INS. CO. OF PHILADELPHIA. SAME v. NETHERLANDS FIRE & LIFE INS. CO. OF THE HAGUE, HOLLAND. SAME v. NIAGARA FIRE INS. CO. OF NEW YORK. (L. A. 7570.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1927.)

1. Insurance ⚷146(3)—Fire policy written by insurer's agents is to be liberally construed in favor of insured (Civ. Code, § 1654).

In view of Civ. Code, § 1654, terms of fire policies written by agents of insurer are to be construed liberally in favor of insured and strictly against insurer, any ambiguity or uncertainty having been caused by insurer.

2. Insurance ⚷165—Fire policy covering merchandise in building and its additions held to cover merchandise wherever situated in plant.

Fire policy "on merchandise contained in or attached to two-story brick building and its additions adjoining and communicating," certain address is intended to refer merely to location of merchandise at date of issuance of policies, and covers merchandise wherever situated in insured's plant in course of its progressive movement therein during process of manufacture.

In Bank

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Separate actions by Harry Siskin, doing business as the Angelus Furniture Maufacturing Company against the Alliance Insurance Company of Philadelphia, against the Netherlands Fire & Life Insurance Company of The Hague, Holland, and against the Niagara Fire Insurance Company of New York, consolidated for trial. Judgments for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and H. F. Prince, all of Los Angeles (E. H. Conley, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Paul H. McPherrin and L. Frank Ottofy, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The three cases, the appeal in each of which is before this court for determination, were consolidated and tried together upon an agreed statement of facts and certain other forms of evidence presented at such trial. Each of these actions was brought by plaintiff doing business under the name of the Angelus Furniture Manufacturing Company for the recovery of a sum of money alleged to be due by the defendant in each case, according to the terms of an insurance policy and as the result of a fire which occurred in the plaintiff's premises. The question presented in each case involves an interpretation of the covering clause in each of these insurance policies. From the stipulated facts in the case and from the findings of the court based thereon it appears that the plaintiff, at the time of the issuance to him of each of said policies and for several years prior thereto, had been engaged in the business of manufacturing furniture in the premises wherein the stock of merchandise and material covered by each of said policies was located at the time of the issuance thereof and of the occurrence of the fire. The building wherein the plaintiff's said business was originally conducted was a two-story brick building situate in the city of Los Angeles, between Stanford avenue and Paloma street, and described as Nos. 935–943 East Pico street. Some years, however, before the issuance of these insurance policies, the plaintiff had found that the increase in his business required the erection of an additional building, and he had accordingly caused the same to be erected immediately adjacent to the former structure and as a part thereof, to the extent that the west wall of the earlier building formed, to the height thereof, the east wall of the added structure, and that through said common wall large openings, supplied with metal doors, were so placed as to furnish such full and adequate means of intercommunication as the convenience or necessities of the increasing business of the plaintiff required. The various departments of the manufacturing plant were so located in different parts of his amplified building that the raw materials to be used in the process of manufacture would be located in the rear of the older unit and would pass therefrom during the progressive processes of manufacture through the various portions of the amplified structure until it was finally placed as a finished product in the storeroom thereof, from whence it passed out to the trade.

For several years prior to the issuance of the policies here in question the plaintiff had carried insurance upon the large stock of materials and merchandise which were thus in process of manufacture, and the defendant in each of these cases had been among the number of insurance companies with whom his insurance policies had been placed. On October 14, 1920, when the insurance policy which he had theretofore carried with the Alliance Insurance Company of Philadelphia was about to expire, the authorized agents of said insurance company applied to the plaintiff for a renewal of said policy, and, as the result of interviews between the agents of said company and the plaintiff, the insurance policy which forms the basis of the action against said insurance company was issued and the agreed premium paid thereon. On April 28, 1920, a similar transaction occurred with relation to the insurance theretofore carried by the Niagara Fire Insurance Company of New York, and, as a result thereof, a similar policy was issued and the agreed premium paid thereon. On July 20, 1920, a like transaction occurred with relation to the insurance theretofore carried by the Netherlands Fire & Life Insurance Company of The Hague, Holland, and with the result that a like insurance policy was issued and the agreed premium paid thereon. Each of these insurance policies was in the standard form and in each of them the covering clause was substantially the same, reading as follows:

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

> "On stock of merchandise and materials * * * [describing same] all while contained in or attached to the two-story brick building and its additions, adjoining and communicating, situate Nos. 931–937, 929–933 rear East Pico street."

It is conceded that the stock of merchandise described in each of these policies was destroyed or damaged by the fire which occurred subsequently, on March 18, 1921, within the plaintiff's above-described premises; and it is also conceded that the loss and damage resulting to plaintiff from said fire was duly ascertained and agreed upon between the parties, as set forth in the agreed statement of facts; thus leaving as the only matter for determination the respective proportions of said loss to be borne by each of said insurance corporations, depending upon the interpretation to be placed upon the aforesaid covering clause in each of said policies. It was assumed by the respective parties to each of these actions upon the trial and also upon appeal that the terms of said covering clause are ambiguous, and hence are to be aided as to the interpretation thereof by the circumstances attending the issuance of said policies. Accordingly, upon the trial of said actions, certain affidavits, which had theretofore been made by the persons who had acted as the agents of each of said insurers in the interviews with said plaintiff preparatory to the issuance of said policies and in the preparation and issuance thereof pursuant to such interviews, were offered in evidence under the stipulation of the parties that they were to be considered as having the same effect as though the affiants had been present and testified to the facts therein stated. Upon the trial of said consolidated actions, as well as upon this appeal, the sole question which was and is presented for determination is as to whether the aforesaid covering clause in each of said policies amounted to blanket insurance upon the stock of merchandise described therein wherever situate in the premises of plaintiff at the time of the destruction thereof in said fire, or whether the said coverage was limited to the unit or section of said building designated as the rear thereof and to the portion of the stock of merchandise situate therein at the date of the fire.

[1] Before entering upon a consideration of the precise terms of the covering clause in each of said policies, certain principles of interpretation applicable to contracts of the character of those sued upon herein should be adverted to. It is a conceded fact herein that the insurance brokers or agents who conducted the preliminary interviews with the plaintiff herein, prior to the issuance of each of said policies, were the duly authorized agents of the respective insurance companies represented by each of them in said interviews, and that they were in no degree agents or representatives of the plaintiff in the procurement and issuance of said policies or in the preparation or inclusion therein of the terms of the covering clause in each which is presented for interpretation upon these appeals. This being so, it is a well-settled rule of interpretation that the terms of said clause in said policies are to be construed liberally in favor of the insured and strictly against the insurer, and this by reason of the fact that whatever ambiguity or uncertainty exists therein has been caused by the insurer. Mah See v. North Am. Acc. Ins. Co., 190 Cal. 424, 213 P. 42, 26 A. L. R. 123; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 178 Cal. 494, 173 P. 993; Greer-Robbins Co. v. Insurance Co., 47 Cal. App. 63, 190 P. 187; Civ. Code, § 1654; 26 Corpus Juris, pp. 74, 75, and cases cited; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Sacramento Stockton S. S. Co. (C. C. A.) 273 F. 58.

Applying the foregoing principle to the facts of these cases as embodied in the agreed statement of facts presented at the trial thereof, and considering the same without reference to the affidavits above referred to as having been also read in evidence at said trial, we are unable to distinguish the facts of these cases from those presented and considered by the District Court of Appeal in the case of Greer-Robbins Co. v. Insurance Company, supra, wherein that court was called upon to interpret the provisions of an insurance policy substantially the same as those embraced in the coverage clauses of the three insurance policies here under review. The precise question presented in that case was whether goods, materials, and merchandise which were located in a rear room of the plaintiff's building at the time of the issuance of the insurance policy thereon remained covered by such insurance when removed therefrom to other portions of the plaintiff's building wherein they were located at the time of the occurrence of the fire. The insurance policy in that case referred to the property insured thereby as situate "in the rear" of plaintiff's building and purported to insure the same while contained in said building "and its additions"; and it was therein held in accordance with the rule of interpretation above set forth that, by use of the term "in the rear," the intent of the framers of the policy was merely to refer to the location of said property in said plaintiff's building at the date of the placing of the insurance thereon, and that the removal of said property to other portions of said building and its additions did not operate to take the same out of the insurance provisions of the policy.

[2] Approving the rule of interpretation therein declared, we are constrained to hold that, by the use of the word "rear," or of the clause "in the rear," in each of the policies here under review, it was the intention of the framers thereof to refer merely to the location of the stock of merchandise to be covered by such insurance at the date of the issuance of the policies of insurance thereon, and that by the use of the term "additions adjoining and communicating," in each of said policies, the framers thereof intended that the coverage clauses therein should apply to said stock of merchandise wherever situate in the plaintiff's plant in the course of its progressive movement therein during the processes of manufacture.

It is, however, contended by the appellants herein that the foregoing interpretation of these policies has been rendered impossible of application by virtue of what appears in the affidavits of the insurance brokers or agents of said defendants having relation to their preliminary interviews with the plaintiff prior to the drafting of said policies and to the form thereof and of the coverage clause placed therein as the result of such interviews. These affidavits disclose substantially the following facts; namely, that the plaintiff had for several years prior thereto carried blanket insurance upon the stock of merchandise in his plant and had placed the same through these brokers and agents of said respective defendants; that, upon the occasion of said interviews held prior to the issuance of these policies, the plaintiff had been informed by the defendants' representatives, who were each thoroughly familiar with the plaintiff's place of business and with the character and nature of his manufacturing activities conducted therein, that the board of fire underwriters of Los Angeles had recently notified their respective companies not to issue policies of insurance in blanket form unless the insured would submit to and accept the insertion of a 90 per cent. coinsurance clause in the policy; that the plaintiff expressed himself as opposed to the coinsurance clause plan, and that, upon his expressing such opposition, the agents of these respective insurance companies, being desirous of continuing to write insurance for said plaintiff, undertook to so write such insurance as to give the plaintiff the benefit of blanket insurance upon his said stock of merchandise, without appearing expressly so to do, in the form of the policies to be issued to him, and without the requirement of coinsurance; and that, in accordance with this understanding and with such purpose in view, these authorized agents of these respective defendants prepared and inserted in said policies their aforesaid coverage clauses, intending the same to have the effect of insuring the plaintiff's stock of merchandise not only while the same was located "in the rear" of his said plant, but wherever the same was to be placed in the "additions adjoining and communicating therewith," during the course of manufacture; and that in accordance with such understanding, purpose and intent the coverage clause in each of said policies was inserted therein with the approval not only of the insurance corporations issuing the same, but also of the board of fire underwriters.

The effect of the foregoing statements on the part of the defendants' representatives is, in our opinion, precisely the opposite of that for which the appellants herein contend with relation to the interpretation to be placed upon the coverage clauses of said policies and which were so inserted therein not only after a thorough understanding upon their part as to what sort of insurance the plaintiff desired, but also after their express admissions that these policies were so prepared with a view to conforming to the plaintiff's said desire. If anything further were needed to justify the interpretation which the trial court placed upon the coverage clause in each of said policies in awarding the plaintiff the full relief sought, such justification was supplied by the evidence of the defendants' agents and representatives as above set forth. We are therefore of the opinion that the trial court acted correctly in so interpreting said policies as to award the plaintiff the full recovery sought thereon.

The judgment in each of said cases is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SULLIVAN, J.

80 Cal. App. 561

HAUB v. TUTTLE et al. (Civ. 5148.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1926.)

1. Municipal corporations 🔑217(5)—Charter provision covering examination and appointment held to apply only to original appointments, not to promotions.

Power of civil service commission of San Jose to determine eligibility for promotion held granted by Charter of San Jose, § 106, to be exercised with in the limits thereof, but under rules and regulations adopted and approved pursuant to section 104 of said charter, section 105 applying only to original appointment and employment in service, there being evident intention, as shown by section 107, to have regulations concerning appointment and concerning promotion separated.

2. Statutes 🔑206—Statutes must be so construed as to give some effect to every word and especially to every provision.

In statutory construction, some effect, if possible, must be given to every word and especially to every distinct provision of an act.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑217(5)—Civil service commission held not authorized to base determination of eligibility for promotion in fire department upon competitive examinations.

Under the provisions of Charter of San Jose, § 106, of civil service commission held not authorized to base its determination of eligibility for promotions in fire department upon competitive examinations.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑216(1)—Civil service commission may not exercise power not given directly by charter, or necessarily implied.

Civil service commission, deriving its power from charter creating it, may not exercise any power not directly given or necessarily implied from prerogatives so conferred.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑217(5)—Charter grant of authority to appoint to classified service held not to make provision governing promotion dependent thereon to be operative.

Fact that section 105 of Charter of San Jose contains the only provision granting power to city manager to make appointments to positions in classified service held not to make section 106 of such charter dependent upon such section to be operative, section 104 providing for adoption by civil service commission of code of rules providing for appointment in classified service, which should have force and effect of law.

6. Municipal corporations 🔑60—Long continued exercise of powers by officers raises no presumption of grant to city of such powers.

Exercise of powers by city officers in excess of their authority for great length of time will raise no presumption of grant to city of such power.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑217(5)—Civil service commission of San Jose may require applicants for promotion to undergo mental and physical tests.

Under Charter of San Jose, § 106, civil service commission may require applicants for promotion to undergo mental and physical tests.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑217(5)—Action of civil service commission of San Jose on past examinations for promotion is not reviewable.

Where applicant has submitted to past examinations for promotion, action thereon by civil service commission of San Jose held not open to review.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Mandamus by Theo. C. Haub against Hiram D. Tuttle and others, to compel respondents, as members of the Civil Service Commission of the City of San Jose, to desist from requiring applicants for promotion in the fire department to take mental or physical tests to be eligible for promotion. From a judgment granting the writ, respondents appeal. Reversed.

Archer Bowden, City Atty., and Owen D. Richardson, both of San Jose, for appellants.

Frank H. Benson and Harry Houser, both of San Jose, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. This is a proceeding in mandamus in which Theo. C. Haub, a member of the fire department of the city of San Jose, obtained a judgment in the trial court commanding the members of the civil service commission of said city and the secretary thereof to "certify all the applicants for promotion in the fire department of the city of San Jose on their records of merit, efficiency, character, conduct, and seniority, and refrain and desist from compelling applicants for promotion in said department to undergo mental or physical tests in order to be eligible to promotion." (Italics ours.) From said judgment, the members of the commission and the secretary thereof have appealed and present for determination questions relating particularly to the italicized portions of said judgment.

The city of San Jose is governed under a freeholders' charter, providing, among other things, for a "city manager" form of government and a system of civil service to be administered by a commission, the powers and duties of said commission, so far as they are in question here, being defined by the following charter provisions:

"Rules.

"104. The commission, subject to the approval of the council, shall adopt, amend, and enforce a code of rules and regulations, providing for appointment and employment in all positions in the classified service, based on merit, efficiency, character, and industry, which shall have the force and effect of law. * * *

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court March 1, 1927; Waste, C. J., and Shenk, J., voting for a hearing.

"Examination and Appointment.

"105. The secretary shall provide examinations in accordance with the regulations of the commission and maintain lists of eligibles of each class of the service of those meeting the requirements of the said regulations. Positions in the classified service shall be filled by the city manager from a list of the three persons, if there be that number, on the eligible list who have received the highest standing on examination: Provided, that for good reason shown the city manager may reject all three and call for a new list.

"Promotion.

"106. The commission shall provide for promotion to all positions in the classified service, based on records of merit, efficiency, character, conduct, and seniority. (Italics ours.)

"Probation Period.

"107. An appointment or promotion shall not be deemed complete until a period of probation not to exceed six months has elapsed, and a probationer may be discharged or reduced at any time within the said period of six months."

Pursuant to section 104, said commission adopted and the city council approved a code of rules and regulations, one of which provided that positions in the classified service should be filled by the city manager from an eligible list certified by said commission, said list to contain three names, or double that number if more than one place was to be filled. Another rule provided that vacancies should be filled by the promotion of applicants from the next lower rank, and that "promotional examinations shall be competitive."

The following are the facts: Haub became a member of said fire department some time prior to the year 1916, and on October 23, 1918, having successfully passed a civil service examination, his name was placed upon the eligible list of the civil service in the grade of acting captain, where it remained for a period of two years, at which time said list lapsed by limitation of time. On December 31, 1920, however, under an emergency provision of said charter authorizing temporary appointments, the city manager appointed him lieutenant, to act until an eligible list was created by the civil service commission or until said appointment was revoked; and he was still acting in that capacity at the time of the trial of this proceeding. On July 12, 1922, said commission held a competitive examination to fill two lieutenancies, one being provisionally occupied by respondent. Eleven members of the department, including respondent, competed at such examination, the scope thereof as prepared by the commission and the allotment of the total number of 100 credits to be granted for a perfect examination being as follows:

"Merit, efficiency, character, and conduct to be ascertained by written examination in the following subjects: Fire Fighting, Duties of Lieutenant, Fire Limits, Location of Fire Water Hydrants and Boxes, Arithmetic, Care of Equipment, and Fire Prevention (designated by the commission as 'mental'), 60 credits; Physical Examination, 10 credits; merit, efficiency, character, and conduct (as shown by the records of the department), 20 credits; Seniority (½ credit for each year of service or fraction thereof, but not to exceed 10 credits), 10 credits."

The record of the examination shows that although respondent registered a perfect score in the physical examination and was second highest in seniority and in "merit, efficiency, character, and conduct," as shown by the department records, the markings he received in the written "mental" examination caused a reduction of total credits so that his name appeared fifth on the list of the six competitors certified by said commission, and the name of the applicant who had served the shortest period of time in the department—less than one year—appeared first on the eligible list, his markings being the highest on the written "mental" examination.

Respondent's cause of action, as set forth in the amended petition, was based upon allegations to the effect that although said commission had "caused to be kept records of merit, efficiency, character, conduct, and seniority" of the members of said department it "failed, neglected, and refused to provide for promotion" based upon such records; but, on the contrary, had "in the past, and unless restrained * * * will in the future compel applicants for promotion * * * to undergo certain mental and physical tests," and "will consider said tests in certifying members of said department for promotion"; also that said commission had in the past, and unless restrained, "will in the future certify all applications for promotion on a basis of 100 points, 60 of which will be determined by said mental and physical tests, and only 40 of which will depend upon the records of the members of said department"; and that by reason of the failure and refusal of said commission "to certify the members of said department for promotion on their records, and by reason of having compelled all applicants for promotion to undergo certain mental and physical tests," respondent "has not been certified as eligible to promotion from fireman to lieutenant. * * *" The trial court found the above allegations to be true, and gave judgment in accordance with the prayer of the petition.

The main question upon which the parties seek a determination is whether under the charter provisions quoted said commission is empowered to subject applicants for promotion to competitive examinations, and may determine their eligibility and grade therefrom. The answer to this question depends primarily upon the proposition of whether, as appellants contend, section 105, like section 106, applies to promotions, or whether, as respondent claims, section 105 governs in cases of original appointment only, and the commission's power to deal with promotions is derived exclusively from section 106.

[1, 2] Assuming that, under the circumstances stated, the remedy of mandamus is available to respondent a point made by appellants in the trial court but not stressed here and assuming further that, such remedy being available, the pleadings herein raise the issue of the right to hold competitive examinations for promotions we conclude that the commission's power to determine eligibility for promotions is granted by section 106, to be exercised within the limitations thereof, but under rules and regulations adopted and approved pursuant to section 104 of said charter; and that the provisions of section 105 apply only to original appointment and employment in the service. This conclusion is grounded mainly upon the fact that the charter treats the subject of promotions separately, under a distinct subtitle, the distinction between original appointments and promotions being further emphasized in section 107 by the use therein of the disjunctive "or"—"An appointment or promotion," etc. Moreover, if appellants' construction be adopted and it be held that section 105 was designed to cover the matter of promotions, then it must be held also that the enactment of section 106 was entirely unnecessary and constitutes surplusage, which we think may not be done in view of the rule of statutory construction "that some effect, if possible, must be given to every word, and certainly to every distinct provision of the act." Langenour v. French, 34 Cal. 92; Donlon v. Jewett, 88 Cal. 530, 26 P. 370; Hannon v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 12 Cal. App. 350, 107 P. 335.

[3, 4] Turning, then, to section 106, it would appear that the provisions thereof do not authorize the commission to base its determination of eligibility for promotions upon competitive examinations. A civil service commission derives its power from the charter creating it, and may not exercise any power not directly given or necessarily implied from the prerogatives so conferred (Cook v. Civil Service Commission, 160 Cal. 598, 117 P. 662); and section 106 is entirely void of any language which even inferentially justifies the commission in requiring competitive examinations, the language used therein being that the commission shall provide for promotions "based on records of merit," etc. If in framing the charter it was intended that promotions should depend, in whole or in part, on competitive examinations, provisions from which such inference might be drawn would, doubtless, have been incorporated in section 106 the same as has been done in other civil service laws. For example, section 13 of the state civil service law provides that:

> "Promotions shall be based upon merit and competition and upon the superior qualifications of the person promoted as shown by his records of efficiency." Stats. 1919, p. 1346.

Under the New York law, promotions are made "according to merit and fitness to be ascertained as far as practicable by competitive examinations." Hale v. Worstell, 185 N. Y. 247, 77 N. E. 1177, 113 Am. St. Rep. 895. The charter of the city and county of San Francisco declares that:

> "The commission shall provide for promotion in the classified service on the basis of ascertained merit and standing upon examination. * * * All examinations for promotion shall be competitive among such members of the next lower rank * * * as desire to submit to such examinations."

In Los Angeles the charter reads (section 237):

> "The commission shall by its rules provide for the promotion of such classified civil service on the basis of ascertained merit and seniority in service and examination. * * * All examinations for promotion shall be competitive among such members of the next lower class as desire to submit themselves to such examinations. * * *"

The charter of the city of San Diego (section 5, art. 11) requires that the commission shall provide rules "for promotion based upon competitive examination and records of efficiency, character, conduct, and seniority. * * *" And the Oakland charter reads (section 97, Stats. 1919, p. 1366):

> "Promotions in the fire department shall be based on ascertained merit, seniority of service and standing upon competitive examination; * * *"

It would therefore seem that in the framing of the charter before us, the requirement of competitive examinations for promotion in the classified service was purposely omitted.

[5] Appellants make the point that section 106, to be operative, must necessarily depend upon the provisions of section 105, because the latter section contains the only charter provision granting power to the city manager to make appointments to positions in the classified service. Section 104 of the charter declares, however, that said commission shall adopt, subject to the approval of the council, "a code of rules and regulations providing for appointment * * * in the classified service * * * which shall have the force and effect of law," and since the rule hereinabove referred to, embodying the grant of power mentioned, has been adopted and approved pursuant to said section, the authority to appoint does not appear to be lacking.

[6] The fact that said commission has operated for a number of years under the interpretation appellants are contending for here cannot be held to affect the present legal situation, for the reason that the exercise of powers by city officers, in excess of their authority, for a great length of time, will raise no presumption of a grant to the city of such powers. Vernon Irrigation Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 237, 39 P. 762. To the same effect is the case of City of Corona v. Merriam, 20 Cal. App. 231, 128 P. 769.

[7] We cannot agree, however, with respondent's contention that, under the provisions of section 106, said commission may not require applicants for promotion to undergo mental and physical tests; and, in view of the injunctive relief granted in the judgment to that effect, said judgment must be reversed.

The language used in the fore part of said section 106 is: "The commission shall provide for promotions * * *" (italics ours), which, reasonably construed, means that it may in accordance with section 104 provide rules and regulations for promotion; and that being so, the nature of those rules and regulations are left necessarily to the discretion of said commission, providing they do not have the manifest effect of nullifying the fundamental principle which said section 106 declares shall be followed in determining eligibility for promotion.

As to the extent of the discretion thus vested in a civil service commission, we quote from Pratt v. Rosenthal, 181 Cal. 158, 183 P. 542, as follows:

> "It is a well-established proposition that a commission with the powers conferred upon the civil service commission in the examination of applicants for public employment has a wide discretion with regard to the manner of performing its duties and exercising its powers. * * * 'Courts should let administrative boards and officers work out their problems with as little judicial interference as possible. They may decide a particular question wrong—but it is their question. Such boards are vested with a high discretion and its abuse must appear very clearly before the courts will interfere.' Maxwell v. Civil Service Com., 169 Cal. 339 [146 P. 869]."

Upon the same subject it is said in Dillon on Municipal Corporations (vol. 1, § 339) that when power is given to the members of such commission "to test the qualifications of applicants for public office, the method of such examination, with the result arrived at, necessarily rests within their discretion and judgment upon the examination had, and is not a judicial determination of any question presented to them in such a sense that it may be reviewed by the courts on certiorari or mandamus or otherwise"; and in the case of Cook v. Civil Service Commission, 160 Cal. 589, 117 P. 663, it is held that the conducting by the civil service of an examination for promotion of captains in the fire department of that city to the rank of battalion chief, and the declaration by them of the percentages attained by the various candidates for promotion were not the exercise of a judicial function, and their action in such matters could not be reviewed on certiorari; that having jurisdiction to act, and not acting judicially in holding examinations, said commission, even if acting unfairly, could not have its actions subjected to examination by a writ of review.

"Physical fitness and health are prime requisites for a fireman, whatever his work in the service" (Maxwell v. Civil Service Commission, supra), but, under the terms of the judgment rendered herein, if allowed to stand, said commission would be precluded from causing any physical or mental tests whatever to be made of applicants for promotions, the effect of which would be to compel said commission to certify as eligible applicants whose records in the lower ranks of the service were excellent, even though it were manifest at the time of promotion that said applicants were totally unfit physically or mentally to occupy the higher and more responsible position.

[8] Regarding the argument made by appellants as to the effect of an adverse ruling herein on the question of competitive examinations, and as to the possible consequences which might flow from any judgment to be hereafter rendered by the trial court in this proceeding, it may be said that, according to the allegations of the amended petition herein, the purpose of this proceeding is not to annul any past transaction of said commission, nor has it been directed toward any particular threatened action in the future; and, in view of the foregoing authorities, it would seem clear that where an applicant has submitted to past examinations for promotion, the action of the commission thereon is not open to review, nor can it be annulled for the reason that, by virtue of said section 106, jurisdiction was vested in said commission to deal with the matter of promotions.

For the reasons hereinabove stated, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

80 Cal. App. 427

BALL et al. v. WARNER et al. (Civ. 4656.)*

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 23, 1926.)

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑42 — Purchaser waived vendors' misrepresentations as to capacity of well by performance and requests for modification of contract for payment of installments.

Requests by purchaser, after knowledge of vendor's misrepresentations as to capacity of well, for modifications of contract for payment of installments and performance of contract in part for over four years held to estop purchaser from raising question of fraud.

2. Trial 🔑397(5)—Purchaser having waived vendors' fraud with resultant damage, finding on issue of damages was not required.

Where purchaser of farm waived fraud of vendors in misrepresentation as to capacity of well, with its resultant damage, no necessity existed for making finding on issue of damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Wm. H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by G. W. Ball and others against L. L. Warner and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant named and another appeal. Affirmed.

C. W. Benshoof and O. K. Morton, both of Riverside, for appellants.

Sarau & Thompson, of Riverside, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage on real property which was security for a promissory note.

The essential facts are that on May 21, 1917, the plaintiffs sold to appellants Warner certain real and personal property for the sum of $8,000, of which amount $2,000 was paid in cash, and a part of the balance, to wit, $5,000, secured by mortgage on the land, and the remainder thereof, to wit, $1,000, by chattel mortgage on the personal property. On June 13, 1917, the appellants Warner sold said property, subject to said mortgage, to the defendants Kamphefner. On August 29, 1917, defendant George D. Kamphefner acquired all the interests in the property belonging to the other defendants Kamphefner, and on the same day, for a consideration of $5,500, resold to defendant L. L. Warner an undivided one-half interest in the property, and ever since said 29th day of August, 1917, the said Kamphefner and the said Warner have been operating all of the property together and sharing the profits therefrom.

The sum of $1,000 secured by the chattel mortgage was paid, but the sum of $5,000 secured by the mortgage on the real property, together with interest due thereon from November 21, 1920, to May 21, 1921, not having been paid, a suit to foreclose the mortgage was commenced approximately four years after the property was originally sold to defendant L. L. Warner. That part of the affirmative defense of the defendants Warner which is of material consequence on this appeal, in substance, is that in the negotiations between the plaintiffs and the defendants Warner leading up to the original sale of the land, the plaintiff George W. Ball—

> "falsely and fraudulently told and represented to defendants Warner that there was a well on said property and that said well would produce 65 inches of water continuously for irrigating purposes, but that, in truth and in fact, said well never furnished over 15 inches of water, continuous pumping."

During the course of the trial the plaintiffs filed a supplemental answer to the several affirmative defenses set up by the defendants, which answer included allegations to the effect that by certain actions and conduct of the defendants they had waived the fraud with which the plaintiffs were charged, and that thereby and therefrom the defendants were estopped to raise the question of fraud as against the plaintiffs.

On the trial of the action the plaintiffs admitted that, in no event, could a deficiency judgment be rendered against any of the defendants other than defendants Warner.

In effect, the court found that the material allegations of the complaint were true; that the facts sustaining defendants' affirmative defense of fraud were true; but that, because of certain acts and conduct of said defendants, the said fraud of the plaintiffs was waived, and defendants were thereby estopped from in any manner raising the question of fraud or misrepresentation

[1] From the resultant judgment the defendants Warner have appealed to this court. While many different reasons are suggested by appellants for a reversal of the judgment, each of them is dependent upon the one question of whether there was a waiver by defendants of the fraud of the plaintiffs. As is stated by appellants in their brief:

> "The only point, therefore, necessary to be considered on the part of the defendants Warner on this appeal is, Did Warner waive the fraud? If he did waive it, then he has no right of action against the plaintiff."

Although the evidence is somewhat conflicting, for the purpose of enabling the trial judge to determine the finding of facts tending to establish the alleged waiver, it sufficiently appears that the interest due on the note in November, 1917, was promptly paid; that when the next interest payment became due, defendant L. L. Warner requested of plaintiffs an extension of time within which to make such payment—which request was granted; that at the time when the succeeding interest payment fell due in November,

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 21, 1927.

1918, defendant L. L. Warner asked of the plaintiffs that, instead of paying the interest in cash, he be permitted to make payment in straw—to which request plaintiffs acceded and credited interest as paid to the amount of $117.07—the value of the straw; and that approximately two weeks after the note for $1,000 became due, because of the fact that at that time the grain crop raised on the property had not been sold by defendants, L. L. Warner asked plaintiffs for an extension of time within which to pay said note—which request was also granted.

It also appears directly from the testimony of defendant L. L. Warner that almost immediately after the property was purchased by him from the plaintiffs he saw the defendants Kamphefner unsuccessfully "trying to irrigate" a little garden by the use of the irrigating well on the property. He testified in part:

> "They would start the pump and it would run for a while, and the water would run about two or three hours and then stop. It would pull down to the limit of suction and quit."

And in answer to a question as to whether any test was made prior to the fall of 1918 to find out how much water the well would furnish, defendant L. L. Warner testified:

> "We never made any test, but in everyday pumping it would furnish but very little water."

The testimony given by defendant L. L. Warner further shows that he was an experienced farmer, and that for two years preceding the purchase by him of the property involved herein he "had quite a little to do with water and the measurement of water as zanjero" for two different water companies.

It is thus clear that defendant L. L. Warner had actual knowledge, or, at least, that he was in position to acquire complete information, regarding the capacity of the irrigating well in question long before any payment, whether on account of the principal or the interest on his indebtedness to the plaintiffs, became due; notwithstanding which fact he made several requests for modifications of the contract for payment of subsequent installments of principal or interest and as to each of which he was accommodated.

Although waiver is largely a question of intent, its determination must frequently rest upon deeds rather than words. In the instant case defendant L. L. Warner, being in full possession of every fact necessary to establish the misrepresentation of plaintiffs, in effect, indicated that he regarded it of no material consequence. It would seem that in such circumstances, by his continuing to perform the contract at least in part for a period of over four years, he ratified it; and by his repeated requests for modifications thereof and his being accorded favors by the plaintiffs, which he had no legal right to exact and to which requests plaintiffs were not bound to accede, a waiver of any claim for damages arising out of the fraud of plaintiffs necessarily followed.

While general definitions and abstract statements of the law may undoubtedly be found tending to support appellants' contention that the acts and general conduct of defendant L. L. Warner were not such as to warrant the conclusion that, with knowledge of the facts constituting the alleged fraud, he had deliberately and intentionally waived the fraud, together with the resultant damage to him, no authority, in which facts analogous to those here under consideration were present, has been attracted to the attention of this court. On the other hand, numerous authorities, both in this state and elsewhere, arising under facts similar in many respects to those involved in the instant case, attest the principle that in circumstances like those here present a waiver necessarily results.

In the case of Schmidt v. Mesmer, 116 Cal. 267, 48 P. 54, the plaintiff sought to recover damages for an alleged false and fraudulent representation made by the defendant to the plaintiffs with respect to a certain lease executed between the parties. It appears that after the expiration of more than one year subsequent to the time that the plaintiffs acquired knowledge of the fraud practiced upon them, without giving to the defendant any intimation of the alleged fraud, they asked to have the rent of the premises reduced, and later solicited and obtained an extension of the time for the payment of the rent; also, that the plaintiffs failed to pay the rent as in the lease provided. In holding that the plaintiffs had thus waived the fraud, the Supreme Court cites several authorities and lays down the rule that:

> "If, after his knowledge of what he claims to have been the fraud, he elects not to rescind, but to adopt the contract and sue for damages, he must stand toward the other party at arm's length; he must on his part comply with the terms of the contract; he must not ask favors of the other party, or offer to perform the contract on conditions which he has no right to exact, and must not make any new agreement or engagement respecting it; otherwise he waives the alleged fraud."

In Doherty v. Bell, 55 Ind. 205, 208, cited in the case of Schmidt v Mesmer, supra, it is said:

> "If the appellee, with full knowledge of all the facts, * * * agreed to pay the note, provided a certain extension of time was allowed him, and in consideration thereof such an extension was given him, we must regard him as having ratified the execution of the note, and as having waived whatever objection or defense he may have had to the manner of its execution."

In Negley v. Lindsay, 67 Pa. 217, 227 (5 Am. Rep. 427), the statement is made, quoting Judge Baldwin in a certain case, that:

> "If, after a party has acquired a knowledge of facts tending to affect a contract with fraud, he offers to perform it, on a condition which he has no right to exact, he thereby waives the fraud, and cannot set it up in an action on the contract. 'This,' said he, 'is a waiver of the objection to the contract on the ground of fraud, if he was informed of all matters which bore upon that question.'"

In the course of the opinion in the case of Burne v. Lee, 156 Cal. 221, 226, 104 P. 438, 440, the following language occurs:

> "* * * One of these limitations is that when a party claiming to have been defrauded, enters, after discovery of the fraud, into new arrangements or engagements concerning the subject-matter of the contract to which the fraud applies, he is deemed to have waived any claim for damages on account of the fraud."

In an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage which was given in a transaction involving an exchange of properties, it was held that where the defendants examined the property before making the exchange, lived on it for several months, and received extensions of time on payments due on the mortgage, they were precluded from raising the question of fraud. Hough v. Ferguson, 36 Cal. App. 120, 171 P. 804.

While, as a matter of first impression, it might seem unreasonable and out of harmony with right thinking that the mere asking of such usual and commonplace favors, as are hereinbefore indicated, would have the effect of working an absolute forfeiture of rights arising from an unquestioned fraudulent act—it must be concluded that, reasoning from the principle announced in each of the foregoing authorities, it would follow that the defendants waived the fraud of the plaintiffs and were estopped from raising the question.

In view of the direct testimony on the trial by defendant L. L. Warner, the question of the admissibility of certain evidence given by defendant George D. Kamphefner, relating to his knowledge of the alleged fraud and of his personal acts and conduct tending to establish a waiver as to defendant L. L. Warner, becomes of no importance. It is apparent that if it be conceded (without deciding the question) that such evidence was inadmissible, nevertheless on other unquestioned evidence the same conclusion would have been reached.

An examination of the record on appeal convinces this court that the evidence adduced on the trial of the action was sufficient to justify each of the findings made by the trial court.

[2] Appellants complain that the trial court made no finding as to the issue of damages alleged to have been suffered by the defendants; but, it is clear that if defendants waived the fraud of the plaintiffs with its resultant damage, no necessity existed for making such finding. No prejudice to any rights of the defendants appearing from the commission of the specified error, defendants are in no position to complain.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

SAN FRANCISCO & S. RY. CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 5700.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 28, 1926. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1927.)

Master and servant ⚷375(1)—Injury received while working outside scope of employment, without employer's consent and not in emergency, held not compensable.

Compensation cannot be allowed for death of captain of ferry, killed while engaged in technical and hazardous occupation of repairing electric lines entirely beyond scope of his employment, without knowledge or consent of employer, and not in emergency case.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act for death of Captain Ough, employee, against the San Francisco & Sacramento Railway Company, employer, and others. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for death, the employer and another bring certiorari. Award annulled.

Jesse H. Steinhart and R. P. Wisecarver, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner and W. F. Beem, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission. The petitioner owns and operates the ferryboat Ramon, used for the purpose of transporting its electric trains over the San Joaquin river. These trains are operated by means of an overhead electric trolley terminating at each wharf in a V-shaped contact point, so that when the ferryboat is docked the train can readily take up the electric current and proceed on its way. These contact points had frequently been bent out of place through careless docking of the ferryboat, and the captains had been specifically instructed to "log" the damage and to immediately report it to the line repair staff for repair. Captain Ough was one of three captains working on separate shifts and, as such, was in full charge of the ferryboat during his period of service. One of these contact points having been "jammed," Captain Ough left his boat and went on the wharf to repair it. He failed to taken the precaution of turning off the current, but climbed a ladder to the place where the live wires were attached, and, coming in contact with the current, was throw to the wharf and killed.

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Hearing granted by Supreme Court February 24, 1927.

At the hearing before the commission the defendant (petitioner herein) contended that, because the work of repairing the electric lines was of a technical and hazardous character, it had provided a specially trained staff of electric linemen for that work; that the captain had been given express orders to call upon these linemen when repairs were needed; and that, when he left his ship and attempted to repair the contact point on the wharf, he was acting beyond the scope of his employment. At the close of the hearing, a continuance was granted at the request of those seeking compensation for the death of the captain to enable them to produce some evidence tending to show that the captain was acting within the scope of his employment when the accident occurred. Some time thereafter the parties reached an agreement of compromise for the sum of $1,000. When this was filed the commission forthwith ordered the cause submitted, and, without notice or hearing, entered judgment against the defendant for the sum of $5,150. A rehearing was denied the defendant, and it prosecutes this application on the ground that there is no evidence to sustain the award.

The evidence is without conflict and shows beyond question that the captain was killed while engaged in work entirely beyond the scope of his employment; that it was done without the knowledge or consent of the employer, and was not a case of emergency which called the captain in his employer's interest to go beyond the scope of his employment. The case is covered by the rule of Williamson v. Industrial Acc. Com., 177 Cal. 715, 718, 171 P. 797, 798, where the Supreme Court say:

> "It would be an unwarranted extension of the statute to give it application to acts done without the knowledge or consent of the employer, which, however, commendable from the viewpoint of loyalty to one's employer, are not only outside of the employee's specific employment and duty, but which are in themselves of such a hazardous character as that the employee ought not to be reasonably expected or required to do them."

The same principle is stated in a different way by Schneider on Workmen's Compensation Law, vol. 1, p. 696, where it is said:

> "Notice must be taken that a factory of today usually includes within the fields of its operations many fairly distinct lines of work, from that of the roustabout engaged in the ordinary labor that almost any one may perform, to that of the expert mechanic, which can be done safely by those only with skill and experience. The difference between these various kinds of work was always recognized by the common law, and it was held to be negligence for the master to require of the servant, without warning and instructing him, the performance of work outside and more dangerous than that which the latter had contracted to perform. Such classification of work exists in the very nature of things, and as much under the statute as at common law. Its recognition is required by any organization of a factory, not only for efficiency, but as well for the purpose of guarding against accident and injury. And if a workman, when there is no emergency, should of his own volition see fit to intermeddle with something entirely outside the work for which he is employed, he ought not to be allowed compensation upon the mere plea that he thought his act would be for the benefit of his employer."

Award annulled.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

80 Cal. App. 337

WILLETT et al. v. SCHMEISER MFG. CO. et al. (Civ. 5129.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 17, 1926.)

1. Exceptions, bill of 🔑43(2)—Ignorance of statute shortening time does not excuse neglect to present bill of exceptions within time prescribed (Code Civ. Proc. § 660, as amended by St. 1923, p. 233).

Counsel's ignorance of amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 660, by St. 1923, p. 233, shortening time for serving and presenting bill of exceptions, cannot be deemed result of mistake, surprise, or inadvertence, excusing neglect to prepare and serve it within time prescribed.

2. Exceptions, bill of 🔑43(2)—Unusual press of business, preventing discovery of statute shortening time for presenting bill of exceptions, is no excuse for noncompliance therewith (Code Civ. Proc. § 660, as amended by St. 1923, p. 233).

Unusual press of business causing counsel's failure to discover amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 660, by St. 1923, p. 233, shortening time for serving and presenting bill of exceptions, is no legal excuse for failure to comply therewith.

3. Exceptions, bill of 🔑40(7)—Discussion of compromise and failure to object to continuances held not equivalent to stipulation for extension of time to present bill of exceptions.

Discussion of possible compromise of judgment and failure of respondent's counsel to object to continuances held not equivalent to stipulation for extension of time to present bill of exceptions.

4. New trial 🔑120—Inability to obtain reporter's transcript in seasonable time held no excuse for failure to present motion for new trial within statutory time (Code Civ. Proc. § 660).

Inability to obtain reporter's transcript of evidence in proper season held no excuse for failure to present motion for new trial within time allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 660, in view of requirement that reporter, failing to transcribe proceedings in time, attend hearing and read notes on request of court or either party.

5. Exceptions, bill of 🔑40(4)—Order, made after statutory period, extending time for settling bill of exceptions, is void, in absence of stipulation.

Appellant has right to have bill of exceptions settled within time limit provided or such further time as court may grant by order made before expiration of such time, and order made after expiration thereof is ineffectual and void, in absence of stipulation of attorneys for parties.

6. Appeal and error 🔑956(2)—Exceptions, bill of 🔑43(2)—Denial of relief from default in not presenting bill of exceptions in time is discretionary and will not be disturbed unless discretion was clearly abused (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473, 660).

Granting or denying motion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, for relief from default in not presenting bill of exceptions within time allowed by section 660, is in trial court's discretion, which will not be interfered with unless clearly abused.

7. Exceptions, bill of 🔑43(2)—Denial of motion for relief from default in not presenting bill of exceptions in time held not abuse of discretion (Code Civ. Proc. § 473, and section 660, as amended by St. 1923, p. 233).

Denial of motion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, for relief from default in not presenting bill of exceptions within time allowed by section 660, as amended by St. 1923, p. 233, on ground of mistake and inadvertence in not discovering amendment of statute shortening time because of unusual press of business, held not abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Walter M. Willett and another against the Schmeiser Manufacturing Company and another. From an order denying a motion for relief from a default in not presenting a bill of exceptions within the time allowed by law, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. C. Lowell, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Grant & Bailey, of Woodland, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from an order of the trial court denying an application made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be relieved from a default in failing to present a bill of exceptions within the time allowed by law.

Appellants' motion was made on the following grounds:

> (1) "That through mistake and inadvertence of plaintiffs' counsel they were not advised of the time when plaintiffs' time for serving and presenting such proposed bill of exceptions commenced to run," and (2) "that through mistake and excusable neglect plaintiffs were unable to obtain the reporter's transcript of the testimony taken upon the trial within the time for serving and presenting their proposed bill of exceptions, and were thereby prevented from preparing such proposed bill of exceptions within proper time."

In support of their motion for relief because of the asserted mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect of plaintiffs' counsel, the affidavit of such counsel was filed. The substance of this affidavit, after setting forth the professional engagements and press of business of affiant and letters in which respondent's counsel made no objection to the time being extended, is contained in the concluding paragraphs, as follows:

> "That the sole reason for plaintiffs' failure to present their motion for new trial in the above-entitled action within the time allowed by section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California was due to the inability of this affiant to obtain the transcript of the evidence in the trial of said action in proper season, together with the ignorance of affiant as to the change in said section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, effective August 17, 1923, and that, in turn, affiant's ignorance of the amendment of said section 660 was due to the fact that affiant, at all times since said amendment became effective, has been overburdened with work so that it was impossible for him to properly acquaint himself with the amendments to the laws of California, effective August 17, 1923. That plaintiffs were absolutely unable to serve and present a bill of exceptions earlier than May 10, 1924, owing to the fact that, notwithstanding all affiants' efforts to obtain a transcript taken upon the trial of the action, they were unable to obtain a sufficient or any transcript prior to the 8th day of May, 1924."

Appellants' time for presenting their proposed bill of exceptions expired, under the provisions of section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended (St. 1923, p. 233), on March 29, 1924. On April 14, 1924, the trial court made its order extending plaintiffs' time to serve and present to the court for settlement their proposed bill of exceptions, and on July 7, 1924, the court made its order denying plaintiffs' motion for relief from default entered against them for not presenting their proposed bill of exceptions within the time allowed by law. It will be seen from the foregoing that the bill of exceptions was not served nor presented within the time allowed by law, stipulation of the parties, nor by any order of court extending such time, made before the time allowed by law had expired.

[1] The first point urged by appellants, that through mistake and inadvertence they were not advised of the time when their time for serving and presenting the proposed bill of exceptions commenced to run—that is, that because of unusual press of business plaintiffs' counsel did not discover that section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure had been amended, and the time for serving and presenting the bill of exceptions shortened from three months to two months, is without merit.

> "Ignorance of the time within which a statement or bill of exceptions must be prepared and served cannot be deemed the result of mistake or surprise or inadvertence, and the neglect to prepare and serve it within the time prescribed by the Code is not excusable." Ingrim v. Epperson, 137 Cal. 370, 70 P. 165; Blumer v. Meyhew, 17 Cal. App. 223, 119 P. 202; Kammerer v. Marino, 66 Cal. App. 720, 226 P. 980; Bennett v. Hillman, 37 Cal. App. 586, 174 P. 362; Garroway v. Jennings, 189 Cal. 97, 207 P. 554.

[2] Nor is unusual press of business a legal excuse. To accept this as a legal justification for the failure to comply with the statute would be to discourage diligence in the prosecution of appeals and establish a precedent that might lead to vexatious delays. Erving v. Napa Valley Brewing Co., 16 Cal. App. 43, 116 P. 331; Klarquist v. Security Trust & Sav. Bk., 61 Cal. App. 548, 215 P. 398.

[3] Nor is the fact that there was a possible compromise of the judgment discussed, or that counsel for respondent failed to object to continuances, equivalent to a stipulation for an extension of time. Klarquist v. Security Trust & Sav Bk., supra.

[4, 5] As to the second ground urged by appellants, that they were unable to obtain the reporter's transcript, it is sufficient to say that such transcript is not necessary on motion for a new trial; that, if the phonographic reporter fails to transcribe the proceedings in time, he must, upon request of the court, or either party, attend the hearing and read his notes, or such part thereof as is requested. Code Civ. Proc. § 660. The motion for a new trial, not being made within the two months prescribed by the statute, was, by its terms, automatically denied on March 19th, and the 10 days within which to present the proposed bill of exceptions expired on March 29th, and it was not until May 10th that the proposed bill of exceptions was presented to the clerk for the trial judge and served upon opposing counsel. If the transcript of the testimony could not be had within the 10 days within which the bill of exceptions is required to be served and presented, an order extending the time should have been obtained before the 10 days expired. The party appealing has the right to have his bill of exceptions settled within the time limit provided, and within such further time as the court might grant by an order made before expiration of such time. Tregambo v. Comanche M. &. M. Co., 57 Cal. 501. An order made after the expiration of the statutory period, in the absence of stipulation of the attorneys for the parties, is ineffectual and void. Estate of Clary, 112 Cal. 292, 44 P. 569.

[6] The granting or denying motions of this character is in the discretion of the trial court, and such discretion will not be interfered with and its order reversed unless it is clear that the trial court has abused its discretion. Ingram v. Epperson, 137 Cal. 370, 70 P. 165; Alferitz v. Cahen, 145 Cal. 397, 78 P. 878; Horne v. Standard Auto Sales Co., 62 Cal. App. 478, 216 P. 970. The record here does not clearly show such an abuse of discretion.

[7] Appellants in their brief call our attention to the cases of Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 P. 63, and Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., 156 Cal. 576, 105 P. 590, as authority for their contention that, in the instant case, the trial court abused its discretion in denying their application for relief from their default. In Nicoll v. Weldon the court held that the terms imposed by the trial court as a condition to granting a motion of the defendant to set aside a default must, in the absence of a contrary showing, be held to be ample compensation to the plaintiff for any injury he may have suffered by the delay occasioned by the motion, and that the discretion of the trial court is best exercised when it tends to bring about a judgment upon the merits. In Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co. the affidavit of the attorney was to the effect that he was busily engaged and sick a part of the time, and that he relied upon his clerk, who informed him from time to time that he had obtained more time to present his bill of exceptions, and that he believed his subordinate was getting extensions of time from plaintiff attorneys by stipulation, instead of which he had obtained orders from the court and the last order extended the time beyond the 30 days in which the court was permitted to extend the time, without the stipulation of the parties, as provided by section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the court held that the mistake of the attorney was one of fact. In the instant case, it will be noted that the time had expired before the matter was in any manner brought to the attention of the court. We cannot say that the trial court abused its discretion in denying appellants' motion. On the contrary, it appears that the court was amply justified in ruling as it did.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

80 Cal. App. 433

SAN FRANCISCO BREWERIES, Limited, v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 5729.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 24, 1926.)

1. Mandamus 🔑187(9)—It must be assumed in view of allegations that court granted motion to abate, that proper order for abatement was entered.

Where record is silent as to order or judgment, but where petitioner for mandamus alleged that court granted motion to abate action and respondent alleged that court ordered action abated, it must be assumed that proper order for abatement was in fact made and entered.

2. Judgment 🔑217—Judgment abating action is final and terminated action; "final judgment."

Judgment granting motion to abate action held "final judgment," terminating action, which court could not thereafter set aside and revive action or set it for further hearing except on motion for new trial or application for relief, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Final Decree or Judgment.]

3. Mandamus 🔑26—Mandamus will not issue to correct errors in passing on questions regularly submitted.

Mandamus cannot be used to correct errors of court in passing on questions regularly submitted in course of judicial proceedings.

4. Mandamus 🔑3(13), 4(1)—Where trial court rendered final judgment, plaintiff's remedy was by mandamus, if appeal or new trial were unavailable (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where judgment abating action was final, it was immaterial whether trial court arrived at correct conclusion, and, if plaintiff could not obtain relief by motion for new trial or under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, its remedy was by appeal and not by mandamus.

5. Corporations 🔑661(6)—Foreign corporation, not having paid taxes after year 1923, held precluded from maintaining action in state courts (St. 1915, p. 422, as amended by St. 1917, p. 370).

Corporation, created under laws of foreign country not having paid state corporation taxes after year 1923, held, in view of St. 1915, p. 422, as amended by St. 1917, p. 370, precluded from maintaining action in state courts.

6. Mandamus 🔑187(9)—In absence of contrary testimony, reviewing court must assume that corporation continued to do business while action instituted by it was pending (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32).

Where it was alleged that corporation, organized under laws of foreign country, was doing business in California during 1923, in absence of testimony to contrary, reviewing court must assume, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32, that it continued to do business during years 1924–1926, while action instituted by it was pending in superior court.

7. Evidence 🔑67(1)—Status once established is presumed to remain until contrary appears.

It is a disputable presumption that status once established is presumed to remain until contrary appears.

8. Mandamus 🔑187(9)—Where two grounds for abatement existed, it must be assumed that trial court refused to proceed further on proper and legal grounds.

Where two grounds existed on which court could have abated action instituted by foreign corporation for failure to comply with St. 1923, p. 1034, and to pay taxes, if proofs warranted, and evidence is not reported, it must be assumed that court refused to proceed further on proper and legal grounds.

Original application for writ of mandate by the San Francisco Breweries, Limited, a corporation, against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco and another. Writ denied.

L. M. Hoefler, Finlay Cook, and C. K. Bonestell, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Joseph E. Bien and Werner Olds, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an original proceeding in mandamus. The petitioner seeks an order of this court compelling the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco and Hon. J. J. Van Nostrand, judge thereof, to set for further hearing and trial the case of San Francisco Breweries, Limited, a Corporation, Plaintiff, v. Leon Morgen, Defendant, now pending in said superior court, and numbered 140167 in the files of said court.

It appears from the record before us that petitioner herein, the San Francisco Breweries, Limited, is, and was during all of the times herein mentioned, a corporation formed and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

On October 3, 1923, the petitioner herein, as plaintiff, commenced an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against one Leon Morgen, defendant, to recover the sum of $44,800, claimed to be due as rent of certain premises in San Francisco, owned by the petitioner herein, and claimed to have been leased to the said defendant Morgen.

Thereafter, and on the 17th day of December, 1923, the defendant Morgen served and filed his answer to the complaint in said action, in which he denied said indebtedness and pleaded the statute of limitations against plaintiff's cause of action. On the 14th of April, 1924, the trial of said action was commenced in said superior court before the above-named judge thereof, sitting without a jury, and certain evidence was offered and received on behalf of the said plaintiff therein, and thereafter the trial was continued from time to time until the 15th of June, 1925, at which time the plaintiff therein (the petitioner here) was granted leave to amend its said complaint to conform to the proofs in certain particulars. Thereafter, on the 18th of June, 1925, the trial of said action was again resumed and said plaintiff therein, on the same day, rested its case. A motion for a nonsuit was made by said defendant Morgen and denied by the court. Immediately after the denial of said nonsuit the defendant Morgen was granted leave to file an amended answer and on the 29th of June, 1925, the said defendant Morgen served and filed his said amended answer in said action. On December 10, 1925, the trial of said action was again resumed, at which time the defendant Morgen moved the court to abate the said action. Thereafter, and on March 10, 1926, the court granted the motion to abate said action.

Petitioner and respondent do not agree as to what evidence was offered or received in support of or in opposition to the motion made by the defendant Morgen to abate the action; neither do they agree upon what ground the court granted the motion. The petitioner contends that the plea in abatement was granted upon the ground that plaintiff was a foreign corporation and had failed to pay the license tax to the state of California for the year beginning January 1, 1924, and had thereby forfeited its right to maintain said action, and in support of this motion petitioner contends that the defendant Morgen presented a certificate from the secretary of state of the state of California, showing that the San Francisco Breweries, Limited, the petitioner herein and the plaintiff in said action, had been recorded by the secretary of state as "suspended" for failure to pay its license tax for the year 1924, in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of an act of the Legislature of the state of California, approved May 10, 1915, and amended in 1917 and 1923, prescribing terms and conditions upon which corporations may transact business in this state, and providing penalties and forfeitures for noncompliance.

Petitioner does not refer us, either in its petition or briefs, to any other evidence, nor does it state that no other testimony was in fact taken on said motion. Neither are we furnished with a copy of the said certificate from the secretary of state. The respondent, on the other hand, contends that other evidence was actually taken upon the hearing of the said motion, and that the motion to abate said action, made by defendant Morgen on December 10, 1925, was a motion made under the third and last defense pleaded in the answer on file in said action in the court below, which defense as set forth is as follows:

> "That plaintiff is a foreign corporation, to wit, is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; that plaintiff is not authorized under the laws of the state of California, and particularly under chapter 215 of the Statutes of 1917, p. 371 et seq. thereof, or any amendments thereof or otherwise, to maintain this action; that plaintiff's charter has, for more than one year last past, been suspended; that Thomas Alton, who was designated as the agent of the plaintiff upon whom process issued by authority of law may be served, died approximately in the year 1922 and prior to the commencement of this action, and plaintiff did not, within 40 days after his death, or at all, make a new designation of an agent and has not now such a designated agent in the state of California; that the transaction upon which suit was brought grew out of business done by plaintiff in the state of California; and that plaintiff, as alleged in said complaint, is doing business in the state of California."

The respondent further contends that the court, after an examination of the pleadings and records in said cause, and after the submission of said motion on proofs, on March 10, 1926, granted said motion for the abatement of said action. The respondent, however, does not furnish us with a record of what evidence it claims was actually offered and received on behalf of the motion.

The petitioner herein, in paragraph VII of the petition, referring to the motion of defendant to abate the action, alleges:

> "That thereafter, to wit, on the 10th day of March, 1926, the said court granted said motion of said defendant for the abatement of said action."

Thereafter, on the 9th day of April, 1926, the petitioner herein, as such plaintiff, moved the said court for an order setting said action down for further hearing and trial, and the court denied said motion and refused further hearing or trial of said action, and at that time signed and filed the following order, to wit:

> "The motion of the plaintiff herein for an order setting this action on the calendar for further hearing this day coming on regularly for hearing in open court upon notice duly given, Finlay Cook, Esq., and C. K. Bonestell, Esq., appearing as attorneys for the plaintiff, and Werner Olds, Esq., appearing as attorney for the defendant, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that, upon the trial of this cause heretofore had, defendant, after plaintiff had presented its evidence and had rested its case, moved the court to abate the action on the ground that plaintiff, a foreign corporation, had failed to pay state license tax and could therefore no longer maintain the action, and that the court had thereupon granted said motion; wherefore it is ordered, that plaintiff's said motion to set said cause for further trial and hearing be and the same is hereby denied for lack of jurisdiction in the court to proceed further with said action."

No testimony was offered by either side on the hearing before this court. Under this condition of the record before us petitioner contends that the trial court has refused to make any order or render any judgment in said action of San Francisco Breweries, Limited, against Leon Morgen.

[1] Thus we have a situation presented where the record is silent as to what order or judgment the trial court did actually make, if it made any, but where petitioner alleges, in its petition for writ of mandate, that the trial court granted defendant's motion for the abatement of said action, and the respondent does not deny that the court made such an order, but affirmatively alleges that the trial court did make an order abating said action.

[2] It seems clear that under such a condition we must take the allegations of the pleadings as stating the facts and assume that a proper order for the abatement of said action was in fact made and entered by the court. Therefore it was a final judgment and terminated the action, and the trial court had therefore no authority to set aside said order or to revive said action, or set it for further hearing, except upon motion for a new trial, or upon application for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Watterson v. Owens River Canal Co., 190 Cal. 88, 210 P. 625, and cases therein cited. Petitioner did not attempt to avail itself of either of these remedies, but merely moved the court to set the cause for further trial, with the order of abatement still in force. This motion the court had no power to grant, and it was properly denied.

[3, 4] The rule is well established that the writ of mandamus cannot be used to correct the errors of a court in passing upon questions regularly submitted to it in the course of judicial proceedings. Gesford v. Superior Court, 114 Cal. 466, 46 P. 383; Lapique v. Superior Court, 24 Cal. App. 314, 141 P. 223. It is therefore immaterial, as far as this proceeding is concerned, whether the trial court arrived at a correct or an erroneous conclusion, so long as it rendered a judgment, and, if petitioner could not obtain relief by a motion for a new trial, or by a motion under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, its remedy was by an appeal, and mandamus will not lie.

[5] Irrespective of whether or not the trial court did in fact make an order abating said action, under the record before us, we are of the opinion that such an order should have been made for at least two reasons: First, it is alleged in both counts of the original complaint and in both counts of the amended complaint of plaintiff (petitioner here) that plaintiff was a corporation created and existing under the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and lawfully doing business in the state of California. Defendant Morgen answered this complaint and admitted that plaintiff was a corporation created under the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and doing business in the state of California, but denied that it was doing business lawfully in the state of California, and further alleged that said corporation had not complied with the laws of this state to entitle a foreign corporation to do intrastate business in the state of California.

[6, 7] These pleadings therefore establish two things without the necessity of any proof, viz.: (a) That the San Francisco Breweries, Limited, is a foreign corporation created under the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; (b) that it was doing business in the state of California during the year 1923, when it commenced the action against Leon Morgen in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. In the absence of any testimony to the contrary, we must assume that said corporation continued to do business in California during the years 1924, 1925, and 1926, while said action was pending in said superior court; for it is a well-known disputable presumption of law that a status once established is presumed to remain until the contrary appears (Kidder v. Stevens, 60 Cal. 414; Eltzroth v. Ryan, 89 Cal. 140, 26 P. 647; Metteer v. Smith, 156 Cal. 572, 105 P. 735), or, as expressed in section 1963, subd. 32, of the Code of Civil Procedure, "that a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature." Indulging, therefore, in this presumption, it follows that the San Francisco Breweries, Limited, was doing business in the state of California for the years 1924, 1925, and 1926, and the only controverted issue would be whether said corporation was doing business lawfully during this time. On this question it is admitted by the said corporation that it never paid any corporation taxes to the state of California after the year 1923. It follows then that, under these presumptions and admissions in the pleadings, said corporation was doing business in California when the trial court refused to proceed with the trial of San Francisco Breweries, Limited, v. Morgen in direct contravention of the statute (Stats. 1915, p. 422, and amendments thereto; Stats. 1917, p. 370), and should be precluded from maintaining the action in the court below. On this ground alone the superior court might properly have granted the order of abatement.

[8] Second. One of the special defenses set forth by defendant Morgen in his verified answer, which answer is made part of the petition herein, is that one Thomas Alton, who was designated as the agent of the petitioner upon whom process might be served, died in the year 1922, and that petitioner failed to designate another agent within 40 days and has never made, and has not now, a designated agent in the state of California. Section 1 of the act prescribing terms and conditions upon which foreign corporations may transact business in this state, and providing penalties and forfeitures for noncompliance, as amended in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 1034), provides in part that every foreign corporation shall file with the secretary of state a designation of some person residing within this state upon whom process may be served as the representative of such corporation, and, within 40 days after the death or removal from the state of any person so designated, such corporation must make a new designation, or be subject to the provisions and penalties of this section. One of the provisions of said section is that any foreign corporation that has not complied with said section shall not be entitled to the benefits thereof, nor can any such foreign corporation maintain or defend any action or proceeding concerning its property in this state or any intrastate business or transaction in any court of this state.

There were therefore at least two grounds upon which the court might have abated the action, if the proofs warranted, and, the evidence not being before us, we must assume that the trial court refused to proceed further with the trial of said action upon proper and legal grounds.

For the reasons stated, we think the writ of mandate should be denied, and it is so ordered.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

80 Cal. App. 411

PATTERSON et al. v. SOUTHERN TRUST CO. et al. (Civ. 5582.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 23, 1926.)

1. Mines and minerals 🔑55(8)—Plaintiffs had burden to prove their title and invalidity of mineral rights reservations in deed of grantor bank (Bank Act, §§ 61, 62).

Where plaintiffs sought to quiet title to entire estate and cancel reservations of mineral rights by grantor bank, they had burden to show both their title and invalidity of reservations, under Bank Act, §§ 61, 62 (St. 1919, pp. 631, 641).

2. Evidence 🔑60—In absence of evidence to contrary, it must be presumed that grantor bank, in reserving minerals, observed law (Bank Act, §§ 61, 62).

In absence of proof that reservation of minerals, in deed of grantor bank, was in violation of Bank Act, §§ 61, 62 (St. 1919, pp. 631, 641), it must be presumed that law has been observed and regular course of business followed.

3. Evidence 🔑60, 69—Grantor bank presumed to have possessed land legally and to have reserved mineral rights which it could take and hold (Bank Act, §§ 61, 62).

In view of plaintiffs' failure to prove that grantor bank reserved minerals illegally and of presumption that regular course of business was followed, it must be assumed that grantor possessed land, in first instance, legally, and reserved to itself mineral rights which, under Bank Act, §§ 61, 62 (St. 1919, pp. 631, 641), it was entitled to take and hold.

4. Banks and banking 🔑295—Where savings bank acquired land within terms of Bank Act, provision declaring forfeiture must be pointed out before forfeiture can be decreed.

When savings bank, having acquired real property within terms of Bank Act (St. 1919, p. 622), retains possession beyond time permitted, it is necessary to point to some provision of act declaring forfeiture of rights in property so held, before court will decree forfeiture.

5. Mines and minerals 🔑55(8)—Action to cancel savings bank's reservation of mineral rights held without equity.

Action by purchasers of land to quiet title and cancel reservation of mineral rights by grantors, because it would be of material property benefit to plaintiffs, held without equity.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ralph H. Clock, Judge.

Action by James M. Patterson and others against the Southern Trust Company and another. From judgment for defendants on the complaint, and for defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank on its cross-complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Thomas K. Case, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles (Raymond L. Haight, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued to quiet title to several separate tracts of land situated in the Antelope valley, Los Angeles county. The amended complaint alleged that the plaintiffs had acquired title to their respective holdings through conveyances from the Southern Trust Company, the predecessor in interest of the Security Trust & Savings Bank. It was also alleged that in all the deeds of conveyance to these plaintiffs a reservation was inserted expressly excepting out of the conveyance all minerals and rights in relation thereto, including oil, petroleum, asphaltum, and like substances and the right to mine, dig, or bore for the same. The theory of the complaint was that the reservation deteriorated the value of the plaintiffs' holdings, and the prayer was that the reservation be declared void and that the defendant be restrained from entering upon the property for any purposes under the reservation. The defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank filed its answer and cross-complaint, setting up its title to the minerals and the right to remove them, as found in the reservation contained in the deeds of conveyance, and asking for a declaratory judgment in its favor based upon this reservation. The trial was had before

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 21, the court without a jury, and resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendants on plaintiffs' complaint and in favor of the defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank upon its cross-complaint. The court expressly found that the rights of the respective plaintiffs in the properties described were subject to the reservation contained in the deeds of conveyance. From this judgment, the plaintiffs have appealed upon a typewritten record.

[1, 2] The grounds of appeal are variously stated under separate headings, but, in fact, present but one question and that is, may a grantee question his grantor's title to his own benefit? The position of the appellants is that, under certain provisions of the Bank Act under which the respondent has been incorporated, the holding of real property for investment purposes is prohibited and the holding of mineral and oil rights is not expressly permitted; therefore, the appellants say that the respondent acted beyond its power when it acquired these lands, in the first instance, including the mineral rights, and that when it conveyed to the appellants it acted beyond its power in reserving to itself these mineral rights. The appellants have cited section 61 and section 62 of the Bank Act (Stats. 1919, pp. 631, 641). Section 61 authorizes savings banks to purchase, hold, and convey such real property as may have been mortgaged, pledged, or conveyed to it in trust, and such as may have been purchased at sales under pledge, mortgage, or deed of trust. Section 62 of the act prohibits a savings bank from directly or indirectly dealing or trading in real property in any other case than as authorized by the act. Because of these provisions, the appellants argue that, the respondent having failed to show that it had acquired the property in trust or at a sale under the terms provided in the act, it must have acquired the property illegally and its acts in retaining possession thereof and in reserving the mineral rights therein were ultra vires. The weakness of appellants' position is that, having sought to quiet title to the entire estate and having prayed for a decree canceling the reservations, the burden of proof was on them to show both their title and the invalidity of the reservations. They have failed to bring any evidence before this court to support their allegations in either respect. On the other hand, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, we must presume that the law has been observed and that the regular course of business has been followed.

[3] In view of these presumptions, it is necessary to assume that the respondent came into the possession of the property legally, in the first instance (that it acquired the property either in trust or in satisfaction of money loaned under pledge, mortgage, or deed of trust), and that, when it conveyed to the appellants, it passed a good title and reserved to itself a right which, under the provisions of the Bank Act, it was entitled to take and hold.

[4] It may be that, on proper showing, the rights awarded to the respondent under the reservations are such as must be disposed of under section 54 of the Bank Act (added by St. 1913, p. 136, amended by St. 1917, p. 622). But this is a question which is not raised on this appeal. Assuming that the appellants, as grantees from the respondent, could raise the question of "ultra vires" in the holding of the mineral rights by the respondent, the remedy under the Bank Act would be a sale of the mineral rights by the respondent, and not a forfeiture thereof to its next door neighbor. Plainly, the provisions of the Bank Act were written for the benefit and protection of the stockholders and creditors of the bank, and, when the bank, having acquired real property within the terms of the act, retains possession thereof beyond the time permitted by the act, it would be necessary to point to some express provision of the law declaring a forfeiture of the rights in the property so held before a court would be justified in decreeing a forfeiture.

[5] The case here is simply one of a failure of proof to show any measure of equity in appellants' plea. They asked to quiet title to an interest in property which they have never acquired and have asked that the property of the bank be taken from the bank and given to them, not because they are entitled to it upon any rule of law or equity, but because it would be of material property benefit to them if this could be done. Their case is without equity, and judgment properly went for the respondent.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 526

Ex parte GOEPPNER. (Cr. 1371.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 29, 1926.)

Adoption ⚿14—Adoption of minor child by Adelaine Howard does not give Adelaine Howat right to retain custody of child as against natural mother.

In habeas corpus proceedings by natural mother to recover possession of child in care and custody of one Adelaine Howat, latter has no right to retain custody by reason of adoption proceedings relating only to one Adelaine Howard, in absence of any explanation as to discrepancy in names.

Application for a writ of habeas corpus to recover custody and possession of Audrey Madeline Goeppner, also known as Audrey Madeline Howard, a minor child. Writ granted, with directions.

Lelia R. Leep and Robert L. Levy, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

John D. Harloe, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The petitioner sues for a writ of habeas corpus to recover the custody and possession of her minor child, Audrey Madeline Goeppner. In her petition she alleges that the child is illegally and forcibly detained by one Adeline Howat; that the petitioner is the natural mother of said child, which was born out of wedlock; that she has at no time abandoned the child, but that, at all times, except when prevented by said Adeline Howat, said child has been in the actual care, custody, and control of the petitioner.

A return to the writ issued herein has been filed by the person who has the present custody of the child, and who will hereafter be referred to as the respondent. This return reads in part as follows:

> "Comes now Adelaine Howat, also known as Adelaine Howard, and makes this return."

None of the allegations of the petition is denied, but it is alleged that on March 25, 1924, Adelaine Howat, also known as Adelaine Howard, duly adopted the child by proceedings in the superior court for that purpose. A copy of these proceedings was not attached to the return, as required by section 1480 of the Penal Code, but the original proceedings were exhibited at the time of the oral argument.

From this record it appears that on March 20, 1924, Adeline Howard filed her petition for leave to adopt the minor child in which she alleged that written consents of her husband and of the natural mother of the child to the adoption of the child in accordance with the petition had been filed. As a part of the record we find a paper signed by Karl J. Howard, as husband of Adeline Howard, consenting to the adoption of the child by Adeline Howard, and another paper signed by Elva Goeppner consenting to the adoption of the child in accordance with the petition. The order of adoption recites the filing of the petition by Adeline Howard and the written consent of Karl Howard and Elvie Goeppner, and orders that Adeline Howard adopt the said child, and that the said Adeline Howard and said child shall thereafter bear toward each other the relation of parent and child. No explanation is made of the use of these various names—Adelaine and Adeline Howat, and Adelaine and Adeline Howard, or Karl Howat, and Karl Howard and Karl J. Howard, or Elva Goeppner and Elvie Goeppner. In the argument the petitioner claims that there are no such persons as Adeline Howard or Karl Howard, but that the true name of the person restraining the liberty of the minor is Adeline Howat, and that the true name of her husband is Karl Howat. The only answer of the respondent is that the English pronunciation of the name Howat is Howard, but of this fact there is neither allegation nor proof.

The respondent relies solely upon the adoption proceedings in justification of her retention of the child from its natural mother, but, as we have seen, those proceedings related to one Adeline Howard only. Whether Adeline Howat and Adeline Howard are one and the same person or whether Adeline Howard is a purely fictitious person, or whether the use of the name Adeline Howard was in furtherance of a plan conceived to practice a fraud upon the court and upon the adopted child are all questions which are not necessary to be decided at this time. It is sufficient to say that, upon the admitted facts before us, the respondent who now has the custody and control of the child has failed to show any right to retain that custody. The case is on a line with Ex parte Clarke, 87 Cal. 638, 25 P 967, except that in the Clarke Case the Supreme Court held that the order of adoption was void because of errors in the names of the parties involved, which to our minds were not as flagrant errors as appear here.

It is ordered that the petition be granted and that the respondent Adeline Howat forthwith restore to the petitioner herein the care, custody, and control of the minor child known as Audrey Madeline Goeppner, and also known as Audrey Madeline Howard.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

80 Cal. App. 410

Ex parte POVLITZKI. (Cr. 1461.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 22, 1926.)

Husband and wife ⚷313—Prosecution of husband for failure to provide for wife must show wife had no independent means (Pen. Code, § 270[a]).

Prosecution of husband for failure to provide for wife must show that wife had no means of support, other than that derived from husband, whereby to provide herself with necessaries, contemplated by Pen. Code, § 270(a).

Original application by A. W. Povlitzki for writ of habeas corpus to be released from custody on commitment for failure to support his wife. Petitioner discharged.

John R. Stowe, of San Luis Obispo, for petitioner.

H. J. Dubin, of San Luis Obispo, for respondent.

WORKS, P. J. This is an application for the writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner is detained under a commitment issued pursuant to a preliminary examination upon a charge of failure to provide for his wife, under the provisions of section 270 (a) of the Penal Code. Several points are made by the petitioner, but we deem it necessary to refer to but one of them. The rule is that the prosecution in such a case must show that the wife has no means of support, other than that to be derived from her husband, whereby to provide herself with the necessaries contemplated by the section. People v. Smith, 31 Cal. App. 736, 161 P. 753. The testimony at the preliminary examination in the present instance shows a failure of evidence upon that point. There is, in truth, affirmative evidence in the record which tends to show that the wife did have independent means. Petitioner was therefore committed by the magistrate without probable cause.

There is a statement in the petition that a charge is pending against petitioner for a failure to provide for his children, but there is no showing, either in the petition or in the return, that he either is or is not held in custody pursuant to that charge. In dealing with the question before us, therefore, we contemplate only the commitment issued pursuant to the preliminary examination already mentioned, and not any commitment which may have been issued upon the charge as to the children.

The petitioner is discharged from custody.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 528

PEOPLE v. RAMOS. (Cr. 1421.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Dec. 30. 1926.)

1. Criminal law 🔑965—"New trial," under statute, held trial upon issues of fact (Pen. Code, §§ 1179, 1202).

"New trial," referred to in Pen. Code, § 1202, is a trial upon issues of fact, in view of section 1179.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, New Trial.]

2. Criminal law 🔑913(1)—Defendant, awaiting judgment under plea of guilty, is not entitled to new trial (Pen. Code, § 1202).

Right to new trial, as given by Pen. Code, § 1202, does not apply when defendant is awaiting judgment under plea of guilty.

3. Criminal law 🔑977(3)—Failure to impose sentence within time limit does not affect jurisdiction of court to impose sentence (Pen. Code, § 1191.)

Failure to impose sentence within time limited by Pen. Code, § 1191, does not affect jurisdiction of court to impose sentence.

4. Criminal law 🔑1176—Denial of new trial after plea of guilty held procedural error, not resulting in reversal unless miscarriage of justice was shown.

Even if court's denial of motion for new trial when plea of guilty had been entered was error, such procedural error was not grounds for reversal unless error resulted in miscarriage of justice.

5. Criminal law 🔑982—Where probation order was combined with void order directing defendant to remain in sheriff's custody, such order was severable, making probation order valid.

Where defendant pleaded guilty and attempt was made to combine with probation order an order retaining defendant in custody of sheriff, latter portion, being void, would be separated from valid probation order; defendant having violated conditions of probation after being placed thereon after pleading guilty to burglary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Joseph Ramos was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

S. S. Hahn and M. H. Silverberg, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CONREY, P. J. On an information charging defendant with the crime of burglary, he pleaded guilty, and was permitted to file an application for probation. Plea of guilty was entered on the 22d day of August, 1924. Thereafter, in due course, the court on October 14, 1924, entered its order as follows:

> "That proceedings herein be suspended and the defendant granted probation for the term of three years, under the supervision of the probation officer and subject to the terms and conditions stated by the court. The first nine months of said probation period, defendant is to be in the custody of the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, during which time he shall be permitted to work on the public highways of Los Angeles county."

On May 28, 1925, the court made the following order:

> "Order of October 14, 1924, is now modified as follows: Defendant is ordered released on probation under the terms and conditions stated by the court."

On August 6, 1926, defendant was brought before the court pursuant to suggestion made that, since his release on probation the defendant had violated the conditions of his probation. The defendant by his counsel then suggested that he was not legally on probation, and asked permission to file an application for a new trial. The application was filed, if we may so infer from the judge's statement: "So far as the written motion is concerned it may be deemed filed." The motion itself is not in the record. The court thereupon rendered judgment that the defendant be imprisoned in the state prison of the state of California, at San Quentin, for the term prescribed by law. The defendant appealed from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. In his "statement of grounds of appeal under Penal Code, §§ 1246 and 1247," defendant specified that the court had no jurisdiction to pronounce judgment, for the reason that defendant was not sentenced within the time provided under sections 1191 and 1202 of the Penal Code, and that the court erred in denying his motion and request for a new trial.

Section 1191 of the Penal Code states and limits the time for pronouncing judgment, and defines the rules governing extensions of time for pronouncing judgment. Section 1202, Penal Code, provides, among other things, that, if the judgment be not rendered or pronounced within the time fixed by the court, or to which it is continued under the provisions of section 1191, the defendant shall be entitled to a new trial.

[1, 2] The first question which suggests itself relates to the meaning and effect of the foregoing provision for a new trial, in a case where there has been no first trial. This, of course, always is the condition of the case when a defendant has pleaded guilty. The "new trial" referred to in section 1202 is a trial upon issues of fact. It seems to be axiomatic that on such plea there are no issues of fact, and that there is nothing for a jury to try or to decide. "A new trial is a reexamination of the issue in the same court, before another jury, after a verdict has been given." Pen. Code, § 1179. We conclude that the right to a new trial, as given by said section 1202, does not apply when the defendant is awaiting judgment under a plea of guilty.

[3, 4] Further, it is now settled by decision, that failure to impose sentence within the time limited by section 1191, Penal Code, does not affect the jurisdiction of the court to impose sentence. Rankin v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 189, 106 P. 718. And, even if it were conceded that the defendant was entitled to a new trial, the court's denial thereof was an error in a matter of procedure. Such error is not a ground for reversal, unless the error has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. People v. Zuvela, 191 Cal. 223, 215 P. 907; People v. Haines, 64 Cal. App. 628, 222 P. 183.

[5] There is only one other suggested reason offered as a basis for the claim that on August 6, 1926, the court had lost jurisdiction to sentence the defendant. This relates to that part of the record which shows an attempt to combine with a probation order an order retaining the defendant in the custody of the sheriff during a part of the probationary period. On the authority of People v. Mendosa, 178 Cal. 509, 173 P. 998, this court in two of its decisions held that the superior court is without authority to suspend execution of sentence or imposition of sentence without admitting the defendant to probation. In re Clark, 70 Cal. App. 643, 234 P. 109; In re Howard, 72 Cal. App. 374, 237 P. 406. In those cases the orders which were in question therein were construed to be orders not made as probation orders. In the Clark Case, we said that for two sufficient reasons the order was not an order admitting to probation in this:

> "First, that the order itself states that the application for probation is denied; and, second, because it attempts to retain the defendant in actual custody."

We are satisfied, however, that the mere attempt by the court to retain the defendant in custody of the sheriff in the manner shown in the present case is not alone sufficient to affect the validity of the entire order, in the face of the plain and positive provisions of the order granting probation to the defendant for the period of three years. The void portion of the order, directing that defendant remain in the custody of the sheriff during the first nine months of the probation period, is severable from the order admitting to probation which was the principal element of the entire order as made by the court. As we have shown in the foregoing statement of facts, the order of May 28, 1925, was made within that period of nine months, and the defendant was thereupon released from custody. In harmony with the decisions above mentioned, this is exactly what the court could have been required to do. In the Matter of Fink (Cal. App.) 250 P. 714 (Div. 2, Second Dist.), the trial court had attempted to include in a probation order an order that the defendant be kept in the psychopathic ward of the county farm of Los Angeles county. On habeas corpus, it was ordered that the defendant be discharged from confinement in the county farm, "and remain in the charge and under the supervision of the probation officer subject to the lawful orders of the superior court."

So it appears that from and after the 28th day of May, 1925, the defendant was regularly on probation pursuant to an order suspending proceedings against him and granting him probation for the term of three years; that, while thus at large, and within the unexpired term of his probation, the defendant violated the conditions thereof. This being so, and the facts having been duly determined by the court below, the validity of the judgment seems to be clearly established.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

80 Cal. App. 494

LAMBORN v. LAMBORN. (Civ. 3186.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1926.)

1. Evidence 🔑14—It is common knowledge that many people, suffering from some ailment and receiving treatment, continue usual employment.

It is common knowledge that many people, suffering from some ailment for which they are receiving treatment, continue their usual employment for considerable periods at a time.

2. Divorce 🔑245(3)—Evidence, on question of alimony modification, that former wife was incapacitated as professional nurse, did not require conclusion that she could not do other work.

Evidence, in proceeding for modification of alimony award, that former wife had phlebitis which prevented her following her profession as nurse, did not require conclusion on part of trial court that she was unable to earn money in other fields of labor.

3. Divorce 🔑240(2)—Where former husband is earning wages by daily labor, alimony should not be awarded in sum inducing idleness on part of former wife.

Trial court, in awarding alimony, should not do so in sum inducing idleness on part of former wife, where former husband is earning wages by daily labor.

4. Divorce 🔑245(2)—In modifying alimony award court could consider wish of husband to remarry.

In modifying alimony award, trial court was justified in considering husband's wish to remarry, and that he should not be so crippled in his finances that another home could not be established, unless it appeared that necessities of former wife compelled such course.

5. Divorce 🔑286—Appellate court could not interfere with trial court's discretion in modifying alimony award, in absence of abuse of discretion.

Whether divorced wife was able to become self-supporting was equitable matter for trial court to weigh, in considering modification of alimony award, and appellate court could not interfere, in absence of manifest abuse of discretion.

6. Divorce 🔑231 — Word "circumstances," used in statute relating to alimony, includes everything having legitimate bearing upon present and prospective matters affecting lives of both parties (Civ. Code, § 139).

Word "circumstances," as used in Civ. Code, § 139, providing for suitable allowance for wife in divorce action for such period as seems just, having regard to "circumstances" of parties, includes practically everything which has legitimate bearing on present and prospective matters relating to lives of both parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Circumstances.]

7. Divorce 🔑245(3)—Modification of alimony award from $45 to $30 per month held not abuse of discretion, in view of evidence.

Reducing amount of alimony from $45 to $30 per month held not abuse of discretion, in view of evidence that husband wished to remarry, and that wife had not been working.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Dudley Kinsel, Judge.

Suit for divorce by Frances G. Lamborn against Ervin H. Lamborn. From an order reducing alimony after final decree, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 190 Cal. 794, 214 P. 862.

Dixon L. Phillips, of Oakland (Esther B. Phillips, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

David D. Oliphant, Jr., and Hayes, Oliphant & Dukette, all of Oakland, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order of the superior court of the county of Alameda, made and entered on the 6th day of June, 1921, reducing the amount of alimony from $45 to $30 per month, the former being the amount allowed in the interlocutory decree of divorce entered in said cause on the 19th day of May, 1919, and continued in effect in the final decree of divorce made and entered on the 21st day of May, 1920. The order appealed from bears date the 6th day of June, 1921. The bill of exceptions herein was settled and allowed by the judge of the superior court on the 27th day of September, 1921. The printed transcript on appeal was certified to by the county clerk of Alameda county and ex officio clerk of said court on the 9th day of August, 1924. Appellant's reply brief in this cause was filed on the 28th day of December, 1925. The appeal, having been taken to the Supreme Court, was by the Supreme Court, in 1926, transferred to this court for hearing and determination, and was placed upon the calendar for hearing on December 7, 1926. Whether the issues involved have now become moot after the lapse of 5½ years, we are unable to ascertain from the record, but, whatever the cause of the delay in reaching a final decision in this matter, the dates which we have set forth disclose the fact that whatever laches there may have been in reaching a final conclusion, they are not attributable to the District Court of Appeal.

The order reducing the alimony from $45 to $30 per month was made upon the application of the defendant and after hearing, wherein testimony orally and by way of affidavits was admitted. The transcript shows that the respondent herein was then of the age of 33 years, was an employee of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway, earning a sum slightly less than $160 per month; that the respondent desired to marry again; that the plaintiff in said action was able to earn money for her own support; that the decree was oppressive and deprived the petitioner herein of money for his own needs; and that the health of the plaintiff, the appellant in this proceeding, and her professional training enabled her to earn money for her own support.

The testimony taken upon the hearing shows that the defendant was earning the sum per month hereinbefore stated; that the plaintiff was a trained nurse, but, owing to the fact that she was suffering from an ailment known as phlebitis, she was unable to follow her profession or calling as a trained nurse; and that she was unable to remain upon her feet for any considerable length of time. In other particulars, the record would lead to the conclusion that the appellant herein was an ordinary healthful person. The record also discloses that during the examination, and while the appellant was upon the witness stand, the trial court inquired whether the appellant had at any time since the month of May, 1919, endeavored to find employment, to which the appellant answered, "No." The appellant was then asked by the court why she had not sought employment, to which the appellant replied: That she did not think it was necessary; that Judge Brown had so stated at the trial; and she did not feel like doing so; that since February, 1920, she had been incapacitated from following her profession as a trained nurse because of phlebitis, and, further, in reply to a question by the trial court as to why she had not sought other employment, the appellant stated that she had not done so for the reason that she did not feel like it. The affidavits of the physicians who testified in the matter were simply to the effect that the ailment mentioned incapacitated the plaintiff from her professional work as a trained nurse. There is also an affidavit by a sister of the appellant in this suit, introduced in evidence, to the effect that the appellant had been ill for some months.

The trial court had the parties before it, had the benefit not simply of the affidavits to which we have referred, but of the personal presence of the plaintiff and the defendant, and could judge from the appearance of the plaintiff as to whether she was or was not physically able to earn any part of the money necessary for her own support. The replies of the appellant to the questions of the trial court upon the cold record indicate, at least, a lack of any real disposition on the part of the appellant to earn any part of her own living.

[1, 2] Our attention is called to the fact that one of the physicians whose affidavit was read in evidence testified that he had treated the appellant for a number of months. This, however, does not require the conclusion that the plaintiff was wholly incapacitated for work. We think it is common knowledge that many people, suffering from some ailment for which they are receiving treatment, continue their usual employment for considerable periods at a time, nor is an ailment which incapacitates a person for a particular line of work a sufficient reason why a trial court should come to the conclusion that such person is not able to earn money in other fields of labor. To determine this question the trial court must necessarily have some knowledge of the intellectual capacity of the persons in question, their intelligence, their power of adaptability, none of which can properly be considered by this court upon appeal. The presence of the parties involved is the essential equation in order to approximate a conclusion as to whether any one is so endowed as to capacitate him to perform some labor, and, at least, make a reasonable effort toward self-support.

[3-5] We agree with the substance of appellant's argument that trial courts should not be niggardly in the matter of awarding alimony, and we also coincide with the effect of respondent's insistence that where the ex-husband is earning wages by daily labor, a trial court, in awarding alimony, should not do so in a sum inducing idleness on the part of the ex-wife. Where there are no children involved and the parties are both young in years, we think the trial court may take into consideration, in awarding alimony, the possibility, probability, and the desirability of allowing the respective parties to establish another and, perhaps, more congenial home. The prevalence of divorces may well call for judicial support of the institution of marriage, and we cannot say it is an abuse of discretion for a trial court to admit testimony and consider proof relative to future marriage. While the mere desire of a party to remarry may not, in and of itself, be a sufficient ground for reducing the award of alimony, it is a matter to be taken into consideration, when determining whether the other party has or has not evinced a willingness to earn something toward her own support. In other words, we think the trial court was justified in considering the laudable wish of the respondent to remarry, and that he should not be so crippled in his finances that another home may not be established, unless it appeared to the trial court that the necessities of the former wife compelled such a course. The change in the industrial world which has taken place in the last few years presents to the trial court many matters for consideration and calls for the exercise of its discretion in awarding alimony. Thousands of women and girls are now employed, where formerly men and boys were once found. The employment of women in all lines of work is now so general that it may almost be said to be a mark of distinction for a woman to be self-supporting. Whether the plaintiff is sufficiently able to enter this class and become independent, or, at least, to make a reasonable effort to attain that end, and so relieve the opposite party from the monthly draft upon his wages, were all equitable matters for the trial court to weigh and consider, and, unless there appears a manifest abuse of discretion, this court has no authority to interfere.

[6] Section 139 of the Civil Code provides that where the divorce is granted for an offense of the husband, the court may compel him to make such suitable allowance for the wife during her lifetime, or for a shorter period as may seem just, having regard to the circumstances of the parties respectively, and the court may, from time to time, modify its orders in these respects.

We do not need to go into an extensive definition of the word "circumstances," but we think it includes practically everything which has a legitimate bearing upon the present and prospective matters relating to the lives of both parties. In 11 C. J. 768, the word is thus defined:

> "Proof, evidence, actually existing facts, as distinguished from opinions and motives, the surrounding facts, means, influence, etc., especially as related to one's support and way of living; circumstances appearing at the trial, circumstances of the parties, etc."

The mere fact that the appellant was granted a divorce in this action does not absolutely brand the defendant as one whose means and circumstances should not be taken into consideration. It is true that the decree was granted on the alleged ground of cruelty. A reference to the complaint, which is made a part of the record in this proceeding, shows that the alleged cruelty is based upon the following allegations:

> "That about three times a week the defendant would angrily, etc., say to the plaintiff that she was uncleanly in her person and about her home; that she was a bad housekeeper, and that defendant became angry about once a week because the plaintiff went to services at the church of which she was a member and would not speak to her for some days thereafter, and that the defendant did not desire to have any children." [No criminal acts intimated.]

We are not called upon to decide whether such matters amounted to cruelty, as defined by the Code, so as to entitle one to a decree of divorce, but they are certainly not sufficient to show an abandoned and malignant heart, justifying a trial court in awarding alimony that would be in any wise oppressive.

[7] From an examination of the transcript in this cause, we cannot say that there has been any legal abuse of discretion in modifying the order awarding alimony. Whether the court did or did not err in judgment is entirely beside the question. The same is true of whether we do or do not think that the court might properly have allowed the original order to remain unmodified. Necessarily, there is latitude of discretion to be exercised by the trial court, and we cannot say that this latitude has been exceeded or the discretion abused. Our inquiry can extend no further. 2 Cal. Jur. 896; 1 Cal. Jur. 964 et seq.; Dickerson v. Dickerson, 108 Cal. 351, 41 P. 475; Nave v. Nave, 35 Cal. App. 27, 169 P. 253; Gorman v. Gorman, 134 Cal. 378, 66 P. 313; White v. White, 73 Cal. 105, 14 P. 393; Stewart v. Stewart, 156 Cal. 651, 105 P. 955; Soule v. Soule, 4 Cal. App. 97, 87 P. 205. Other cases might be cited, but they all announce the same ruling; i. e., that it must be plainly made to appear that the trial court has abused its discretion before an appellate court is authorized to interfere.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PRESTON, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 533

LILLYWHITE v. SUPERIOR COURT WITHIN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5454.) *

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 30, 1926.)

1. Statutes 🔑158—Court will not hold enactment repealed by inference, unless intention so to repeal is clear.

Court will hold that enactment was meant to repeal formerly existing enactment by inference only where inferential repeal was clearly intended, as such repeals are repugnant to rules of statutory construction.

2. Criminal law 🔑260(4)—Right to appeal orally from conviction of misdemeanor in justice's court to superior court held not defeated by subsequent statute (Pen. Code, § 1239, and section 1467, as amended by St. 1925, p. 950, § 2).

Pen. Code, § 1467, as amended by St. 1925, p. 950, § 2, providing appeal from justice's court might be taken under Pen. Code, §§ 1235–1265, within 15 days after judgment, by filing written notice of appeal, did not prevent taking of appeal from justice's court to superior court for misdemeanor by oral announcement in open court, as provided by section 1239, as section 1467 merely allows additional time in which written appeal, also provided for in section 1239, may be taken, without affecting oral appeal; Code Civ. Proc. § 1859, relating to statutory construction being inapplicable.

3. Statutes 🔑206—Every word in statute will be given effect if possible.

Every word of statute will be given effect, where it is possible to do so consistently with intent of Legislature as gathered from entire statute.

Proceeding by Dan Lillywhite for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arthur Keetch,

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 28, 1927; Seawell, J., dissenting.

Judge, requiring respondent to set for hearing plaintiff's appeal from a judgment of the justice's court for conviction of a misdemeanor. Writ granted.

C. B. Hubbard, of Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and Pierce Works, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for defendants.

CRAIG, J. The question involved in this proceeding is as to whether or not, in view of the provisions of section 1467 of the Penal Code, a written notice of appeal is required on the taking of an appeal from the justice's court to the superior court in a misdemeanor case.

The defendant was found guilty of a misdemeanor, a motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and judgment was pronounced. Thereupon, in open court, his attorney announced that he appealed from the judgment and the order denying such motion. No written notice of appeal was either filed or given. Later a time was set for hearing the appeal, but, on motion of the district attorney, it was dismissed on the ground that no written notice of appeal had been filed, and by this proceeding in mandamus it is sought to require the superior court to place the appeal upon its calendar and hear the same.

The issue arises from an alleged conflict between the provisions of sections 1239 and 1467 of the Penal Code. Title 9, pt. 2, of the Penal Code contains the provisions for appeal to the Supreme Court. One of the sections therein is No. 1239, which reads:

> "An appeal from a judgment may be taken by the defendant by announcing personally or through his attorney in open court at the time the judgment is rendered that he appeals from same or by filing a written notice of appeal within two days after the rendition of judgment with the clerk of the court wherein judgment was rendered; and from any order made after judgment, by announcing in open court at the time the same is made that he appeals from the same."

Title 11, c. 2, deals with appeals to the superior court, and within it is to be found section 1467, which reads:

> "The appeal may be taken, heard and determined as provided in title nine, part two of this code, except that such appeal must be taken within fifteen days after the judgment is rendered in a justice's or police court, or entered in a municipal court, or within ten days after the order is made from which the appeal is taken, by filing a written notice of appeal."

[1] Respondent argues that, as to appeals to the Supreme Court in criminal cases, the provisions of the section last quoted take the place of and repeal all of section 1239 upon the subject of time and manner of taking appeals; hence that no such appeal may now be taken except by the filing of written notice within the time limits designated. Of course, there is no express repeal of that part of section 1239 which gives a defendant the right to appeal "by announcing personally or through his attorney in open court at the time the judgment is rendered that he appeals from same." Such a repeal, if it has been made, must have been by inference. Repeals by inference are repugnant to established rules of statutory construction. Only when the intention to repeal by inference is clear will a court be justified in holding that an enactment was meant to repeal a formerly existing one. People v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. App. 770, 222 P. 864.

[2] The language of section 1467, as amended in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 950), and the circumstances surrounding the enactment thereof, do not meet these requirements. It cannot be said that an intent to repeal by inference is clear. The provision of section 1239 allowing appeals to be taken orally at the time of the rendition of judgment is not irreconcilably opposed to the language contained in section 1467 as it now reads. That this is so is made doubly clear from the fact that section 1239 authorizes both the oral method of appeal to the superior court, and that by written notice as well as by People v. Superior Court, supra.

Nor is there anything at all inconsistent with these conclusions found in the history of these sections and their amendments. It is true that until 1909 there was no provision in title 11, pt. 2, for the taking of an appeal orally, although section 1467 of the Penal Code had previously required appeals to the superior court to be taken, heard, and determined as provided in the title having to do with appeals to the Supreme Court. In 1909 section 1239 was amended so as to allow an appeal to be taken orally in open court. No amendment was at that time adopted as to section 1467. Hence the right to appeal orally as then provided in section 1239 was extended to appeals taken to the superior court. In 1917 section 1239 was again amended, and this time to read in its present form, in effect still authorizing oral appeals to the superior court, as well as to the Supreme Court. Thereafter, and in 1925, section 1467 was amended by adding the words, "by filing a written notice of appeal." Respondent argues that the order in which these changes in the section under discussion took place is evidence that the Legislature intended to differentiate the method as well as the time of taking appeals to the superior court from those appealed to the Supreme Court. We cannot agree with the reasoning in that behalf, nor do we interpret People v. Superior Court, supra, as authority for that contention. Although the case last cited is relied upon by both of the parties to this appeal to uphold their respective claims, we are constrained to regard its purport to be as argued by the petitioner. An appeal to the superior court had been taken by filing a written notice of appeal. It was contended that, since the amendment of section 1240 of that Code, providing that "such appeal must be taken within fifteen days after the judgment is rendered or within ten days after the order is made from which the appeal is taken," the latter was inferentially repealed, and the only way left to take an appeal to the superior court was by oral announcement in open court at the time of the rendition of judgment. The argument of respondents is based upon the history of the legislation in the matter. The opinion points out the fallacy of this argument, and rejects it.

Nor can we agree with respondents that the real basis of the decision under consideration is the rule, expressio unius est exclusio alterius. On the contrary, a careful analysis of the opinion shows that, after stating the facts before the court and the general principles concerning the hostility of the law toward repeals by inference, the opinion proceeds to apply these principles to the facts in the following language:

> "We have here two statutes relating to the same subject-matter; one of them by its exception applies strictly to appeals from the justice's court, and the other as originally enacted and without reference thereto by any other statute, applies solely to appeals from the superior court. They are not irreconcilably inconsistent one with the other. There is no express repeal of the statute first enacted, and it may stand without doing violence to the later statute. In such circumstances it must be held that the right of the people to appeal herein was not lost until after the expiration of fifteen days after the judgment was rendered."

No opportunity arose for the application of the maxim, expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Nor is there such in the instant case.

Neither can we find room here for the rule announced in section 1859 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be brought into play. That section, cited by respondents, reads: "When a general and a particular provision are inconsistent, the latter is paramount to the former." But obviously it is a condition precedent to the application of this rule that "a general and particular provision are inconsistent." We find no real conflict between the Code sections here in question, but only that, as to methods of taking appeals to the superior court, they are to be read together, and, when so read, provide alternatives. Other considerations lead us to the same conclusion.

But we think counsel have mistaken the issue. The problem to be determined is not so much whether or not there has been a repeal by inference as one of construction of the sections involved as they are now worded, and of course reading them together. As we have said, section 1239 provides for both oral appeals from judgments and those by written notice. As to the latter, until the amendment to section 1467 was enacted in 1925, the time within which the notice must have been filed was two days after the rendition of judgment. We think the only effect of the amendment was upon this provision, and in that regard the result is to extend the period from two to fifteen days. The words, "by filing a written notice of appeal," contained in section 1467, modify the subject of the phrase which precedes them. "By filing a written notice of appeal" limits the manner in which appeals may be taken; but not as to all such appeals—only those which are taken within 15 days after the order is made from which the appeal is taken. Viewing the question in this light, it appears that the amendment was not intended to affect the provision for the taking of an oral appeal at the time judgment is rendered, but only to alter that which formerly concerned the taking of an appeal by written notice.

[3] It is a well-recognized rule of statutory construction that no single phrase or word of a law will be held to be meaningless, but effect will be given to every word, where it is possible to do so consistently with the intent of the Legislature as gathered from the entire statute, and weighed by other established rules of statutory interpretation. Should we uphold the respondents' contention, the word "taken" in the first sentence would be given no meaning whatever, but would be eliminated from the law by judicial construction. All of the language following the word "except" is contained within and is applicable to the exception. To extract a few words from a proviso or exception clause and attach it to the body of the statute would be a novel procedure and one utterly irreconcilable with either the rules pertaining to the proper use of the English language or to those governing statutory interpretation.

Let the peremptory writ issue as prayed.

We concur: HOUSER, Presiding Justice pro tem.; THOMPSON, J.

MONTEZUMA MOUNTAIN RANCH SCHOOL et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5719.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 28, 1926. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1927.)

1. Master and servant 🔑367 — Independent contractor's employee is not entitled to compensation as against principal.

As Constitution authorizes award of compensation only to employee, person injured is not entitled to compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), if independent contractor or employee of independent contractor.

2. Master and servant 🔑367—Son, injured while working on father's crew, cutting wood for school, held not entitled to compensation as "employee" of school (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 8b).

Where father of applicant agreed to saw logs for school at fixed price, and later agreed to cut up trash wood at agreed rate per hour, school reserving right to stop work, applicant, working on father's saw crew, held not entitled to compensation as "employee" of school under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 835), § 8b, where father had sole supervision over workers, and sole right to hire and discharge crew and pay wages.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employee.]

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Forrest Wilder, opposed by the Montezuma Mountain Ranch School, a corporation, employer, and the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, insurer. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission granting an award, employer and insurer bring certiorari. Award annulled.

R. P. Wisecarver and Redman & Alexander, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. J. A. Wilder, father of the applicant for compensation, was a rancher living near Los Gatos in the vicinity of the Montezuma school. The father purchased a power saw, mounted it on a wagon, and entered into a contract with the agent of the school to cut up a quantity of cordwood into stovewood lengths at a fixed price per cord. As a part of the contract Wilder agreed to furnish the saw, the power to run it, and the crew to operate it. This work was done according to agreement, and, at about the time it was completed, the parties entered into another arrangement whereby Wilder, Sr., agreed to cut up a pile of trash wood lying on the premises. Because of the uncertainty as to the quantity and as to the time this work would require, the parties agreed that Wilder, Sr., would furnish the saw, the power, and the crew, and that the school should pay to him $2.50 an hour, with the express reservation that, if it should be found that the cost was too great for cutting the trash, the school might stop the work. The work progressed for a few days under this arrangement, when one of Wilder's crew quit, and the school "loaned" him a workman about the place. At about the same time two other employees of the school were directed to carry the trash down from a hillside, and to pile it near the saw in order to help speed up the work. Forrest Wilder, the applicant, while working as a member of the saw crew, received an injury to his foot, and the entire work was stopped. The school paid Wilder, Sr., the full amount for the services rendered, estimated by him on the cord basis for sawing the cordwood, and on the hour basis for sawing the trash. From this amount Wilder, Sr., paid the members of his crew at the rate of 50 cents an hour for the full time they were employed. The respondent commission found that the applicant was an employee of the school, and awarded him compensation as such.

[1] It is the settled rule that the Constitution authorizes an award of compensation to an employee only, and that, if the party injured is an independent contractor, or an employee of an independent contractor only, he is not entitled to compensation as against the principal. Carstens v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 572, 158 P. 218; Flickenger v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 181 Cal. 425, 184 P. 851, 19 A. L. R. 1150; Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v Industrial Acc. Comm., 180 Cal. 497, 181 P. 788.

[2] It has been held that, where a party is injured while performing service for another, "under any appointment or contract of hire," the burden is upon the latter to show that the party injured was an independent contractor and not an employee. Hillen v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (Cal. Sup.) 250 P. 570. In the same case the rule was reiterated that the finding of the commission upon this issue was binding, unless there is no substantial evidence in support of it.

The question whether a party in a given case was an employee or an independent contractor being a mixed question of law and fact, our courts have endeavored on numerous occasions to lay down definite rules of law so that the law side of the question might be determined according to fixed and uniform rules. Many tests have been declared to be controlling while other elements have been held to be important as tending to support the conclusion of the commission under review. We will not attempt to analyze the great number of cases which have been cited on this subject, as we are fully aware that one more opinion will not serve to make the rule of interpretation any more stable.

---

*Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 258 P. 84.

The latest expression of the Supreme Court is found in Hillen v. Industrial Accident Commission, 250 P. 570, where it is said:

> "One of the best tests to determine whether the relation is that of an independent contractor or that of employer and employee is the right of control. * * * Coincident with the right of control is the right of either the employer or the employee to terminate the relation without liability."

Applying either of these tests to the case at hand, it becomes apparent that the applicant was not an employee of the school.

In the course of the oral argument the respondent commission conceded that the first contract for cutting the cordwood created the relation of an independent contractor, and that the applicant was not then an employee of the school. When the arrangement was made for cutting the trash, no change was made as to the management or control of the work. Wilder, Sr., provided the implements and the crew which he employed and directed without interference, or the right of interference, on the part of the school. He had sole charge of the time, place, and manner in which the work was to be carried on. He had the sole power to hire and discharge the members of his crew, and to fix and pay their wages. He had sole power to determine when the men were to commence work, how many hours in a day they were to work, and when they were to stop. The school did not exercise or retain the right to exercise any direction, supervision, or control over Wilder or his men. The service was plainly within the definition of an independent contractor "for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only, and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished." Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 835) § 8b.

The reservation by the principal of the right to stop the work if the cost proved too high would tend to emphasize the intention of the parties to contract for a definite result rather than for a mere employment. The agreement having been to cut up a certain pile of wood, the principal would have had no right to stop the work, because the cost appeared too high, unless that right had been reserved in the contract. There would, however, have been no necessity for this reservation in the case of a mere employment.

The case is parallel with Pryor v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 186 Cal. 169, 198 P. 1045, where, as here, two separate contracts had been made; one to bore a well at a fixed price per foot, the other to remove sand from the well at a fixed price per day. The court held that neither the change in the method of payment nor the right of the principal to continue the work changed the status from that of an independent contractor. Other cases in point are Donlon Bros. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 173 Cal. 250, 159 P. 715; Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Brush, 176 Cal. 448, 168 P. 890; Parsons v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 178 Cal. 394, 173 P. 585, and Worswick v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 181 Cal. 550, 185 P. 953.

Award annulled.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 321

PEOPLE v. SUGARMAN.

SAME v. PASSARELLO.

(Cr. 1360, 1361.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 16, 1926.)

1. Criminal law ⚿511(1)—Accomplice's testimony held sufficiently corroborated to sustain convictions of burglary and grand larceny (Pen. Code, § 1111).

Accomplice's testimony held sufficiently corroborated, under Pen. Code, § 1111, to sustain convictions of burglary and grand larceny.

2. Criminal law ⚿992—Sentencing for second degree burglary, instead of setting aside conviction of first degree burglary committed in daytime, held not error (Pen. Code, § 1161).

Pen. Code, § 1161, does not negative trial court's authority to pronounce sentence on lesser offense necessarily included in that of which defendant is convicted, so that court did not err in sentencing defendant for second degree burglary, instead of setting aside conviction of first degree burglary on evidence of commission of crime in daytime.

3. Criminal law ⚿829(10)—Refusal of instruction that corroboration of accomplice as to immaterial matters, commission of crime, and his connection therewith, is insufficient, held not error, in view of instructions given.

Refusal of instruction that corroboration of accomplice as to immaterial matters, fact that crime was committed, and his connection therewith, would not, alone or combined, be sufficient to support conviction, held not error, in view of instructions that accomplice's testimony is insufficient to connect defendant with crime unless corroborated.

4. Criminal law ⚿510—Accomplice's testimony is subject to same rules as any other, except that it must be corroborated as to defendant's connection with crime.

Accomplice's testimony is to be viewed, and is subject to same general rules, as that of any other witness, both as to its weight and sufficiency, except that it must be corroborated on element of connecting defendant with commission of crime.

5. Criminal law ⚷780(4)—That accomplice's corroboration on his connection with offense is not proof of defendant's connection is too obvious to require instruction.

That corroboration of accomplice on his own connection with offense is not proof of defendant's connection therewith is too obvious to require an instruction.

6. Criminal law ⚷777—Court need not instruct that facts entirely disconnected with point in issue have no bearing thereon.

Court is not burdened with duty of enumerating all facts which ingenuity of counsel may conceive, and instructing that they, no matter how disconnected with point in issue, have no bearing thereon.

7. Criminal law ⚷829(1)—Refused instructions substantially covered need not be considered.

Refused instructions, substantially covered by instructions given, need not be further considered.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Utey J. Sugarman and Paskie Passarello were convicted of burglary and grand larceny, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Joseph M. Wapner and Harold Ide Cruzan, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant Sugarman and one Harry Herman were charged by two counts of an information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county with burglariously entering a store and building in the city of Los Angeles and with having on the same date committed grand larceny therein. Appellant Passarello was likewise charged with burglary and grand larceny upon the same premises, on the same date. The cases were consolidated and tried together in the superior court, and the appellants were convicted upon each charge. This is an appeal by Sugarman and Passarello from the respective judgments and orders denying their motions for a new trial.

A witness for the people, by the name of Sam Geller, testified upon the trial that on March 31, 1925, his tailor shop at 4415 Central avenue, in Los Angeles, was entered, and that trousers and bolts of cloth of a value of about $1,200 were stolen; that portions of the rear door were broken off, and that the lock with which he had previously fastened the door had been removed; that he thereafter identified all of his stolen property at the preliminary examination of the defendants. This witness further testified that the defendant Berman lived near said store, and that he had known Berman for about six years. The proprietor of an automobile livery testified that on March 31, 1925, he rented to Berman a Ford touring car bearing license No. 996644, which the witness thereafter found at the Lincoln Heights police station, in custody of certain officers. A railroad towerman swore that on the last-named date a Ford touring car approached the railroad tracks near his tower and stopped; that three men alighted therefrom; that one of the men was tall, and one was much shorter than the others, that "there was a distinct difference in all three of their sizes"; that the men left the machine, whereupon the witness and a companion, named Charles Bill, inspected it and found therein the trousers and cloth which were produced at the trial and identified by Geller. Bill corroborated the testimony of the towerman, and identified Passarello as one of the men formerly seen in the Ford. He further averred that Berman and Sugarman resembled the other two. It also appears that the auto livery obtained the rented Ford from the police station; that Berman visited the livery to pay the rental bill and was arrested. Thus it was shown the automobile which was rented to Berman was the same machine which the defendants deserted, in which Geller's goods were found, and which subsequently was held by the police, registered by them at the station, and returned to its owners.

When Berman was apprehended he made a confession, which he repudiated at the preliminary examination, saying that he had been threatened with violence unless he so testified; upon redirect examination at the trial Berman testified that Passarello had told him that he would be beaten up in the jail if he did not deny such confession.

Previously to the trial Berman pleaded guilty and requested probation. When called by the prosecution as a witness he testified that he had known Passarello and Sugarman for some years; that on March 31st he first met Sugarman; that he rented the Ford car, and the two men thereafter took Passarello in the car and all three drove to Geller's place of business, where the witness remained in the car, and his two companions robbed the store, placed the goods in the machine, and that the three then drove in a circuitous route, finally arriving at the railroad tracks where the towerman and the witness Charles Bill testified to having first seen them; that some one called to them that a train was approaching, whereupon they backed up, jumped from the machine. and ran toward north Broadway; that Berman and Sugarman rode with some person to Second street, while Passarello took a street car, and that all three men again met at Temple street. Berman further swore that Passarello advised him to leave town; that Sugarman told him to telephone the livery that the Ford had been stolen; that he called the livery, and, being informed that they had recovered the car, he went there to pay the rental bill, but was arrested.

A police officer testified: That when Sugarman was arrested he was asked if he was with Berman at the time of the robbery, to which Sugarman replied, "Yes; I will tell you everything when we are alone." That Berman was asked in the presence of Sugarman as to whether or not he had burglarized the Geller store, and that Berman admitted that he had, and that Sugarman was with him, to which the latter made no reply. Police officers also testified to a conversation between Sugarman and Berman, wherein Berman asked the former if he had told them anything, and that Sugarman said: "Don't say anything about it; don't let them know that I was in on the job; I am on seven years' probation now." Sugarman admitted on the stand that he was with Berman on the 31st of March, but denied having had any connection with the robbery. It appears that Passarello was present at the preliminary examination of Berman and Sugarman, and that he was there positively identified by the witness Charles Bill as one of the men who alighted from the Ford car as heretofore recited. Bill also identified Passarello at the trial as one of the former occupants of the machine who ran away, and swore that he and one Williams immediately searched the car and police officers were summoned.

[1] It is urgently insisted that the testimony of Berman, an admitted accomplice, was not corroborated, and that therefore the verdict and judgment appealed from are contrary to both the law and the evidence. The principle stated in a brief excerpt from People v. Ames, 39 Cal. 403, quoted by the appellants, is opposed to this contention. It was there said, with reference to section 1111 of the Penal Code:

> "As we construe this provision, the corroborating evidence must, of itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tend, in some degree, to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. It need not, of course, be sufficient to establish his guilt; for, in that event, the testimony of the accomplice would not be needed."

It was there further said that aside from the testimony of the accomplice, "there was no evidence whatever in this case 'tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense.'" In the instant case the circumstances and the evidence of many witnesses strikingly substantiated in detail the story told by Berman from the witness stand. The loss of the property, descriptions of the men at the railroad yards, recovery and identification of the goods and of the automobile, positive identification of Passarello, remarks of Sugarman overheard at the police station, and other details which we deem it unnecessary to relate, all contributed to establish the fact that the offense had been committed by these three men. We think that the accomplice was abundantly corroborated.

[2] The jury found appellants guilty of burglary in the first degree, but the trial court decided that the offense was burglary of the second degree, and sentenced them accordingly. It is insisted that the court below had but two alternatives—to sentence the appellants for burglary in the first degree, as fixed by the jury, or to set the verdict aside and grant the motion for a new trial.

After careful research we have been unable to find any case in which the exact point here presented has been decided in this state. However, this same question has been determined in a number of other jurisdictions with uniformity. The general rule is stated in 16 C. J. at page 1303, § 3076, to be that where the court is of the opinion that the evidence does not warrant the verdict rendered by the jury, but that it is sufficient to support a conviction of a lesser offense necessarily included therein, it has power to impose sentence for the latter. This conclusion is sustained by the citation of authorities from a number of states whose statutes provide for such procedure, and also from others having no statute upon the subject when the question was presented. In United States v. Linnier (C. C.) 125 F. 83, the decisions are reviewed at length. It was there said that, although the jury rendered a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, if the evidence showed the defendant to be guilty of manslaughter only, it was the duty of the court to pronounce judgment for the lesser offense. The theory upon which this right is founded is that, by the verdict of guilty of the greater offense, the jury decided that the defendant is necessarily guilty of each lesser offense included within the greater. The following authorities are to the same effect: State v. Schele, 52 Iowa, 602, 3 N. W. 632; State v. Fields, 70 Iowa, 196, 30 N. W. 480; State v. Keasling, 74 Iowa, 528, 38 N. W. 397; Comm. v. Squire, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 258; Comm. v. Mahar, 8 Gray (Mass.) 469; Sullivan v. State, 44 Wis. 595; Anderson v. State, 56 Ark. 8, 19 S. W. 99; State v. McCormick, 27 Iowa, 402, 414; Hogan v. State, 30 Wis. 438, 11 Am. Rep. 575; Johnson v. Comm., 24 Pa. 386; State v. Bloedow, 45 Wis. 279; McEntee v. State, 24 Wis. 43.

In section 1161 of our Penal Code it is provided that:

> "When there is a verdict of conviction, in which it appears to the court that the jury have mistaken the law, the court may explain the reason for that opinion and direct the jury to reconsider their verdict, and if, after the reconsideration, they return the same verdict, it must be entered. * * *"

Obviously, the trial court could not follow the first alternative suggested by appellants, to wit, that of sentencing the defendants for burglary in the first degree, since there was an utter absence of evidence to sustain such a verdict, as the crime was committed in the daytime.

People v. Peete, 54 Cal. App. 333, 202 P. 251, and People v. Machuca, 158 Cal. 64, 109 P. 886, are cited by appellants. These cases, however, go farther than to hold that where the jury has rendered a verdict of guilty of the offense charged, and the evidence was of a contradictory character, it was not within the province of the trial court to substitute its judgment for that of the jury by pronouncing judgment upon a lesser offense, but that the action of the jury is conclusive, and that the trial court proceeds properly by pronouncing judgment upon the verdict rendered. There is nothing in these decisions which even remotely bears upon the question here presented, nor does the provision quoted from section 1161 of the Penal Code in any way negative the authority of the trial court to pronounce sentence upon a lesser offense necessarily included within that of which a defendant has convicted a defendant.

[3] The trial court was requested by the defendants to instruct the jury that corroboration as to immaterial matters to which the accomplice testified, as to the fact that the crime was committed, and as to the connection of the accomplice with the crime, would not alone or combined be sufficient to support a conviction. Such instruction was refused, but the court did instruct that:

> "A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof."

And further:

> "That while it is true that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, yet I charge you that such corroborative evidence need not tend to establish the precise facts testified to by the accomplice. It is sufficient if such corroborative evidence standing alone tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged."

[4-6] The only limitation placed upon the sufficiency of the testimony of an accomplice, as distinguished from that of any other witness, is that the testimony of the former must be corroborated upon the element of connecting the defendant with the commission of the crime. With respect to other matters, the testimony of an accomplice is to be viewed and is subject to the same general rules as that of any other witness; this is true both as to its weight and sufficiency. Consequently, when the court instructed the jury as it did in two separate instructions that the testimony of an accomplice is not sufficient to connect the defendant with the crime alleged in the information, unless corroborated, it gave them all the information that could be required. It is true that the corroboration of an accomplice upon his own connection with the offense is not proof of the defendant's connection with it. That is a fact too obvious to require an instruction. The court is not burdened with the duty of enumerating all of the facts which the ingenuity of counsel may conceive and of instructing that such things, no matter how disconnected they may be with the point in issue, have no bearing upon that point. As the instructions given stated the law upon the one element of proof as to which there is a distinction, and as to the necessity for other evidence than that of an accomplice, it did all that the law requires.

[7] The refusal of the trial court to give other requested instructions is also assigned as error, but they were substantially covered, and we do not deem it an advantage to consider them further.

No error appearing, the judgments and orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 444

LOWER v. HUGHES. (Civ. 5544.) *

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 27, 1926.)

1. Automobiles 🔑245(72)—Pedestrian waiting near center of street for automobiles to pass held not contributorily negligent as matter of law.

Pedestrian advancing nearly to center of street and waiting for automobiles to pass held under evidence not contributorily negligent as matter of law when run down by defendant's automobile.

2. Evidence 🔑222(2)—Evidence of defendant's admission that skid marks of automobile were undoubtedly his held properly admitted (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2, and section 2061, subd. 4).

Where witnesses examined scene of automobile accident and stated to defendant there were skid marks, evidence of defendant's reply that skid marks were undoubtedly his held admissible as admission, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2, and section 2061, subd. 4.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1066—Instructions based on statutes inapplicable to facts held not prejudicial.

In action for injury to pedestrian from being run down by defendant's automobile at street intersection, instruction based on Motor Vehicle Act 1923, § 125, subd. (c), and section 130 (St. 1923, p. 517), inapplicable to facts, held not prejudicial to defendant.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 24, 1927.

4. Automobiles 🔑246(31)—Instruction that pedestrian was entitled to assurance automobile would not approach crossing at excessive speed held not error under facts (Motor Vehicle Act 1923, § 125, subd. [c]).

In pedestrian's action for injury from being run down by automobile at street intersection, instruction based on Motor Vehicle Act 1923, § 125, subd. (c) (St. 1923, p. 517), that plaintiff was entitled to assurance that defendant would not approach at excessive speed and that plaintiff had right to take place of safety at street intersection held under facts not error.

5. Trial 🔑191(7)—Instructions as to assurance against excessive speed of automobile and pedestrian taking place of safety held not erroneous as assuming facts.

In pedestrian's action for personal injury from being run down by automobile at street intersection, instructions that plaintiff was entitled to assurance that defendant would not approach crossing at excessive speed, and plaintiff had right to take place of safety at street intersection, held not erroneous as assuming facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Action by Edna Lower against Lloyd S. Hughes. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon, and J. E. Reardon, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Glickman & Glickman, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by her when struck by the automobile of the defendant. The defendant answered and a trial was had in the trial court before the court sitting with a jury. At the end of the plaintiff's case the defendant made a motion for a nonsuit. The motion was denied. Thereupon the defendant rested without introducing any evidence. Thereafter the defendant moved for a directed verdict repeating the grounds of the motion for nonsuit. That motion was also denied. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. A judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff in accordance with the verdict so returned, and from that judgment the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] At about 6 o'clock on the evening of the 9th day of December, 1923, the plaintiff and her escort, Mr. George Moon, left Mr. Moon's house in Oakland to go to Fruitvale. It was their intention to take a San Pablo avenue car at Thirty-Fourth Street. San Pablo avenue runs north and south and Thirty-Fourth street crosses it, running east and west. On San Pablo avenue there is a double street car track. On the easterly track the cars run to the north; on the westerly track the cars run to the south. A large street lamp is suspended over the center of the street crossing. The plaintiff and her escort walked along the sidewalk on the north side of Thirty-Fourth street until they reached the curb at the street crossing. There they paused for the traffic to pass which was traveling in a northerly direction. They then attempted to cross the street car tracks to take a position on the northwest corner of the crossing for the purpose of boarding the street car. When they were out in the middle of the street they paused to allow the traffic to pass which was going in a southerly direction. The plaintiff testified that they paused on the west rail of the north car track. She stood on Mr. Moon's right. From that time until the accident happened she stood perfectly still, not moving in any direction, and during all that time she was looking at the approaching traffic coming from the north down the west side of San Pablo avenue. The blocks are short, but the plaintiff testified that the first cars to pass were followed by other cars which were at the time she first observed them about a block away. These other cars consisted of three, and we will hereafter refer to them as "the group." They were coming from the north in line in the space between the east curb of San Pablo avenue and the west rail of the street car tracks. The space between the left-hand side of the moving traffic and the rail on which the plaintiff stood was wide enough for three cars to travel abreast. The group of cars came from the north, one behind the other, separated by spaces of about 20 feet. The defendant was driving the rear car. The plaintiff testified that she was looking at the cars continuously. As Mr. Moon stood on the south side of the plaintiff he was in a position to testify as to how her head was turned but clearly he could not testify as to what her sight was resting on. As Mr. Moon stood slightly at the back of her head it is equally clear that the plaintiff could not testify on what the sight of Mr. Moon was resting. We shall not pause, therefore, to consider the statements of either of the witnesses made in response to questions propounded to them as to where the other one was looking. The plaintiff repeatedly said that she was looking at the group of cars and repeatedly stated that she did not have her eyes focused on the defendant's car. When the group of cars had proceeded to a point about 100 feet from the plaintiff, the plaintiff testified that they were in line. She also testified that when the first one of the group was opposite to her that the other two were quite a good ways behind, but they were coming in line. She estimated that the defendant's car at that time was 40 feet away. When the second car was right opposite her she testified that Hughes' car was on top of her. The plaintiff and Mr. Moon were the only eyewitnesses examined. The plaintiff testified that she did not see the defendant's car leave the line, swerve to the left, and attempt to pass the cars ahead of it. Her testimony was that the defendant's car was at all times in the line until immediately before it struck her, when she obtained a mere flash of it. Mr. Moon testified that he saw the car swerve to the left, and that he stepped backwards about 10 inches and attempted to draw the plaintiff backward by pulling on her arm. He also testified that at the same time he was pointing at the Hughes car. The plaintiff testified that she did not see Mr. Moon point and that she did not feel him pull on her arm. Mr. Moon testined that at the time the defendant attempted to pass the other cars that the defendant was then driving 35 or 40 miles an hour. If defendant's car was traveling 40 miles per hour as it swerved to the left and when it was 40 feet from the plaintiff, it is apparent that the time elapsing between the instant it turned out of the line and the instant of the impact was less than three-fourths of a second. The plaintiff testified that she was not afraid and did not see any danger before the collision. The appellant contends that as a matter of law the plaintiff under the foregoing facts was guility of contributory negligence, and he cites Finkle v. Tait, 55 Cal. App. 425, 432, 203 P. 1031; Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493; Mayer v. Anderson, 36 Cal. App. 740, 173 P. 174; Moss v. H. R. Boynton Co., 44 Cal. App. 474, 186 P. 631; Ogden v. Lee, 61 Cal. App. 493, 215 P. 122. No one of those cases is addressed to a state of facts such as we have before us in this case. In so far as the motion for a nonsuit and the motion for a directed verdict were based on the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, the motions were properly denied.

[2] The next day after the accident Mr. Moon and his brother Ralph went to the scene of the accident and examined the street at the point where the accident had occurred. They found some skid marks. They measured the length of them, and thereafter they went to the office of the defendant and held a conversation with him. Testifying regarding what occurred in that conversation, each one of the Moon boys said that George Moon stated to the defendant that they had been out there and saw where the accident happened and measured the place up, and George then said, "There was 28 feet of skid marks"; and Mr. Hughes replied, "They were undoubtedly mine." The testimony was objected to, and the objection was overruled, and at this time the appellant strenuously urges that it was error to overrule the objections. We think there is no merit in the contention. The evidence of the admissions of a party to an action is admissible. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2. After the evidence was received the defendant might have asked for an instruction regarding what caution the jury should exercise in weighing the oral admissions. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 4. But the trial court was correct in ruling that the objection to the admissibility of the evidence should not be sustained.

The appellant complains regarding certain instructions given on the subject of the defendant's negligence. Before taking up these matters it is proper to state that the plaintiff's complaint was framed on the complaint that was before the court in Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 113 P. 663. There was no evidence introduced showing that the territory immediately adjacent to the place where the accident occurred had been "sign-posted." Motor Vehicle Act 1923, § 114, subd. (c) (St. 1923, p. 517). The record does not disclose, therefore, whether the territory was a business district, a residence district, or outside of a business or residence district. The defendant was not called as a witness, his absence was not accounted for, and his deposition was not produced.

[3] The trial court gave two instructions purporting to be based on section 130 of the statute. The facts to which that portion of the statute is applicable were not introduced in evidence, and the record contains nothing showing that the jury based its verdict on anything contained in said section. The trial court gave two instructions purporting to be based on section 125, subdivision (c), of the statute. An examination of those provisions of the statute discloses that the care therein provided for is in behalf of the vehicles at the rear, or of the vehicle that is being passed or overtaken. As neither of such vehicles was injured, the provisions of the statute which we have cited were inapplicable. As plaintiff stood looking at the group of cars she was not injured by the defendant's failure to give the statutory signal, as he turned out of the line to pass the cars ahead of him. Dewhirst v. Leopold, 194 Cal. 424, 229 P. 30. Therefore there is nothing in the record from which we can say, as a matter of law, that the giving of the instructions, hereinabove referred to and which we have shown were inapplicable to the facts, in any way prejudiced the rights of the defendant.

[4] The appellant complains of two other instructions which the trial court gave. The first one is as follows:

"The plaintiff in this action had the right to assume while crossing the intersection of Thirty-Fourth street and San Pablo avenue that the defendant, Lloyd S. Hughes, approaching from her right, would travel along the opposite side of the street in a southerly direction so as not to endanger her in any event until she had passed its center, and the plaintiff herein is further entitled to the assurance that the defendant, Lloyd S. Hughes, would use such care and circumspection as the circumstances required, and that he (the defendant) would not approach at an excessive speed and would not endanger her without warning." (Appellant's italics.)

In his argument the appellant does not show to the court wherein there was any error in said instruction.

The trial court also gave an instruction worded as follows:

> "You are further instructed that plaintiff had the right to take a place of safety at the intersection of Thirty-Fourth street and San Pablo avenue in crossing said San Pablo avenue, and plaintiff had the right to assume that any vehicle coming from the direction of the approaching traffic from the north would observe the statutory regulation as to the rate of speed and that any vehicle would not attempt to overtake another vehicle at the intersection of Thirty-Fourth and San Pablo avenue unless directed so to do by a traffic or police officer." (Appellant's italics.)

The instruction purports to be based on subdivision (c) of section 125 of the statute. The accident occurred at the intersection of Thirty-Fourth street and San Pablo avenue. The impact took place within the boundaries of the four corners made by the intersecting streets. At the time of the impact the defendant's car was in the very act of passing the other car which had been immediately in front of it. From the evidence adduced the jury could rightly determine whether the defendant was directed by an officer to overtake the car ahead of him.

[5] As to both of the instructions last referred to, the appellant contends that they assume certain matters of fact. We submit that a most cursory reading of the instructions discloses that no question of fact is assumed. If any fact was assumed, such fact was not a controverted fact in the case. The only evidence before the court was the evidence of the plaintiff and Mr. Moon. As to the alleged assumed facts, those two witnesses did not disagree.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; NOURSE, J.

81 Cal. App. 126

PEOPLE v. SMITH. (Cr. 1375.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 28, 1927.)

1. Criminal law ⚷814(12)—Instruction on character of alleged robber for peace, quiet, and law-abidingness was properly refused where not supported by evidence.

In prosecution for robbery, there being no testimony concerning accused's character as to peace, quiet, and as law-abiding citizen, court properly refused to instruct as to such traits.

2. Criminal law ⚷1038(3)—One charged with robbery cannot complain on appeal of failure to instruct concerning honesty, in absence of request.

In prosecution for robbery, there being testimony, but no instruction requested, upon trait of honesty, accused cannot complain on appeal of failure to instruct concerning same.

3. Criminal law ⚷830—Whole instruction may be rejected if any part is improper.

If any part of a single instruction should not have been given, action of court in rejecting the whole will be affirmed.

4. Criminal law ⚷830—Where instruction concerning reputation for law-abidingness was not supported by evidence, court need not substitute trait of honesty, which was in evidence.

In prosecution for robbery, testimony having been introduced as to character of accused for honesty but not for peace, quiet, and law-abidingness, court was not bound to amend instructions by striking out traits of peace, quiet, and law-abidingness, which were included in request for instructions, and substituting therefor trait of honesty, concerning which there was no request.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Jesse Smith was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Warren L. Williams and Seymour S. Silverton, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of robbery. Judgment was pronounced upon the verdict, and a motion for a new trial of the action was denied. From the judgment and the order defendant prosecutes this appeal.

During the trial of the action the defendant called three witnesses who testified that his general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity was good. The defendant requested the following instruction, which the court refused to give:

> "You are instructed that in all criminal cases the law permits the defendant to introduce evidence concerning his good reputation upon the points of character involved in the special case under consideration; and in this case the law permits the defendant to introduce evidence of his good character as to peace, quiet and as a law-abiding citizen; and you are instructed that if such good character has been satisfactorily shown, it is a fact which must be taken into consideration in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and you are instructed that the reputation of the defendant, in the respects above indicated, may of itself be sufficient to create such reasonable doubt as to his guilt, that you should give him the benefit of the doubt and acquit him."

[1-3] It has been held in People v. Chrisman, 135 Cal. 282, 67 P. 136, that character or reputation for honesty is the trait involved in a charge of larceny, and we think it is one of the traits involved in the charge of robbery. It will be noted, however, that the instruction here proposed by the defendant assumed that some testimony had been introduced relative to the reputation of the defendant "as to peace, quiet, and as a law-abiding citizen," and that the instruction touched only upon these traits and not upon the trait of honesty. There being no testimony concerning the defendant's character as to peace, quiet, and as a law-abiding citizen, the court properly refused to give the instruction. There being no instruction requested upon the trait of honesty, the appellant cannot now complain that the court did not give such an instruction. People v. Haun, 44 Cal. 96; People v. Ah Wee, 48 Cal. 236; People v. Gray, 66 Cal. 277, 5 P. 240; People v. Olsen, 80 Cal. 128, 22 P. 125; People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 260, 76 P. 1017; People v. Lips, 59 Cal. App. 381, 211 P. 22; and People v. Golsh, 63 Cal. App. 609, 219 P. 456. In the last-mentioned case this court, speaking through Mr. Presiding Justice Finlayson, says:

> "The rule is that if any part of a single instruction should not have been given the action of the court in rejecting the whole will be affirmed"—citing People v. Davis, 64 Cal. 440, 1 P. 889.

The same was announced in People v. Lips, supra.

[4] If, therefore, we view the refusal to give the present instruction not as a failure to instruct upon a proposition concerning which no instruction was asked, but as a failure to give an instruction requested, the last two cases are authorities for the rule that the court was under no obligation to amend by striking out the traits concerning which no testimony was offered and substituting in place thereof a trait concerning which testimony was offered.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 352

W. H. MARSTON CO. v. KOCHRITZ et al.*

(Civ. 5471.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 20, 1926.)

1. Judgment 🔑131—Clerk's failure to enter judgment on regularly entered default cannot prejudice plaintiff's rights, or confer any right on defendant.

Clerk's failure to enter judgment on regularly entered default cannot prejudice rights of plaintiff or confer any right on defendant who subsequently moved to quash summons and dismiss action as to him.

2. Parties 🔑51(4)—Plaintiff, in suit to enforce stockholder's liability, may amend to make administrator of deceased stockholder party defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

In suit to enforce stockholder's liability, where administrator of deceased stockholder was not made party in original complaint, plaintiff had right to amend and make him defendant in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 473, since he was proper party.

---

*Hearing denied by Supreme Court February 17, 1927.

3. Parties 🔑53—General order, giving leave to amend in action to enforce stockholder's liability, is sufficient to permit bringing in administrator of deceased stockholder.

In action to enforce stockholder's liability, general order giving leave to amend held sufficient to permit amended complaint to bring in administrator of deceased stockholder as new defendant.

4. Appeal and error 🔑187(4)—Decree cannot be attacked on appeal because making new parties without leave of trial court, where question was not raised in trial court.

Decree cannot be attacked on appeal because of filing of amended petition making new parties without leave of court and notice to adverse parties, where amendment was proper, and no question of defect of parties was made in trial court.

5. Appeal and error 🔑241—On appeal from order dismissing action, contention not stated in notice of motion to dismiss cannot be raised (Code Civ. Proc. § 1010).

On appeal from order dismissing action to enforce stockholder's liability, administrator of deceased stockholder cannot raise question that action against him was prematurely brought, where such ground was not stated in notice of motion to dismiss action, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1010.

6. Appeal and error 🔑173(4)—Nonpresentation of claim to administrator cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

Nonpresentation of claim to administrator is matter of abatement, which must be raised by proper means in trial court, and, if not so raised, it cannot be urged on appeal.

7. Process 🔑6—Clerk must issue alias summons on second amended complaint, where summons on original complaint had been filed (Code Civ. Proc. § 408).

Where summons on original complaint had been returned and filed, clerk must, under Code Civ. Proc. § 408, issue alias summons on second amended complaint.

8. Pleading 🔑252(2)—Amended complaint supersedes all previous complaints.

When amended complaint is filed, the original ceases to be complaint in action, and is entirely superseded, and second amended complaint supersedes all previous complaints.

9. Pleading 🔑332—Process 🔑6—Amended complaint must be served on defendants that have appeared and summons issued thereon served on defendants that have not appeared.

Amended complaint must be served on all defendants who have appeared, and, if any have not appeared, summons must be issued on amended complaint, and served on such defendants.

10. Process 🔑45—Summons issued on second amended complaint held "alias summons," though another party had been added (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 407, 408).

Summons issued on second amended complaint held "alias summons" within Code Civ. Proc. § 408, though another party had been added, since such addition does not prevent summons from being "in the same form as the original," in view of section 407.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Alias Writ.]

11. Appeal and error 🔑870(2)—Order quashing service of summons may be reviewed, where it was part of order dismissing action; "final judgment" (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 956, 963).

Order of trial court quashing service of summons may be reviewed, where such order was part of order dismissing action, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 956, since latter order was "final judgment" within section 963.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Final Decree or Judgment.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by the W. H. Marston Company against F. J. Kochritz and others. From an order quashing summons and dismissing the action as to Mathew Hamilton as administrator of the estate of J. Carmichael, deceased, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for appellant.

B. D. Marx Greene, of San Francisco, and Hugh K. Landram, of Merced, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This in an action against the stockholders of Central Alaska Fisheries, Inc., to enforce their stockholders' liability. On June 26, 1924, the trial court made an order quashing the summons issued upon the second amended complaint and dismissing the action as to Mathew Hamilton, as the administrator of the estate of J. Carmichael, deceased, and this appeal is from that order.

The grounds of the action, as alleged in the second amended complaint, are that W. H. Marston guaranteed the notes of the Central Alaska Fisheries, Inc., aggregating $138,000; that as such guarantor he paid $126,644.60 on account of the principal and interest of such notes; and that the corporation has repaid to him the sum of $18,681.89 and no more. The action is brought by the W. H. Marston Company, as the assignee of W. H. Marston, against the stockholders of Central Alaska Fisheries, Inc., to recover the amount expended by W. H. Marston over and above the amount repaid to him by the corporation.

The first complaint was filed on September 17, 1923. It named J. Carmichael as the owner of 400 shares of the total of 9,794 shares of the subscribed capital stock of Central Alaska Fisheries, Inc. On July 2, 1923, prior to the commencement of the action, J. Carmichael had died.

On December 20, 1923, a stipulation was signed by the attorneys representing the defendants who had appeared in the action, stipulating that the plaintiff could file an amendment to his complaint. This amendment named the administrator of the estate of J. Carmichael, deceased, as a party defendant, and added a paragraph to the complaint which alleged that on July 2, 1923, J. Carmichael had died; that on July 20, 1923, the administrator had been appointed and had qualified; that on November 7, 1923, the plaintiff had filed a claim against his estate for $5,272.20, with interest, "being the proportion of the debts of the said corporation due by the said J. Carmichael to the W. H. Marston Company, as assignee of W. H. Marston on account of the stockholders' liability incurred by the said J. Carmichael to the said W. H. Marston," and that the plaintiff had elected to treat the refusal of the administrator to act on this claim as a rejection of it.

This amendment was filed on December 27, 1923, but no minute order was made by the court granting plaintiff leave to file it. The summons in the action, together with a copy of the amendment to the complaint, was served by the sheriff of San Joaquin county on the administrator on January 11, 1924, and the summons was returned and filed February 14, 1924.

The plaintiff moved to amend his complaint The motion was based on a notice of motion, to which was attached a copy of the proposed amended complaint. The proposed amended complaint named the administrator as a party defendant, and contained the same allegations respecting the death of J. Carmichael, the appointment and qualifications of the administrator, and the filing and rejection of the claim, as those set out in the amendment to the complaint filed on December 27, 1923.

On February 8, 1924, the court made its order granting plaintiff leave to file the amended complaint. Certain defendants filed a demurrer to this amended complaint, and on March 21, 1924, the court made an order sustaining the demurrer and granting plaintiff leave to amend.

The plaintiff, in pursuance of this order, on April 7, 1924, filed a second amended complaint, which also named the administrator as a party defendant, and contained the same allegations respecting the death of J. Carmichael, the appointment and qualification of the administrator, and the filing and rejection of the claim, as those contained in the amendment to the complaint, and the amended complaint. The original summons in the action was returned and filed on February 14, 1924, and on April 7, 1924, when the second amended complaint was filed, the clerk issued a summons thereon which was served on the administrator on April 9, 1924, and was returned and filed on April 11, 1924. On May 22, 1924, the default of the administrator for failing to answer the second amended complaint was entered by the clerk.

On June 7, 1924, the administrator served a notice of motion on plaintiff, reciting that the administrator appeared in the action "specially only," and that he was going to move the court for an order quashing the summons issued upon the second amended complaint "upon the grounds that there has been no order of this court authorizing or directing the issuing of an amended summons in this action," and also for an order dismissing the action as to the administrator "on the ground that there has been no order of this court bringing in said Mathew Hamilton, as administrator of the estate of J. Carmichael, deceased, as a necessary party defendant in this action." When this motion came on for hearing, the court made its order quashing the summons issued upon the second amended complaint and dismissing the action as to the administrator of the estate of J. Carmichael, deceased.

Heretofore, respondent made a motion in the Supreme Court to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the orders appealed from were nonappealable. This motion, as stated by respondent, was denied, the court holding that the order dismissing the action was appealable, and that the order quashing the summons was a part of the other order, inasmuch as it was a part of the same document. It will be noted that according to the record the motions to quash and dismiss were contained in one document, as were likewise the order to quash and to dismiss.

The first point discussed by appellant in his brief is the effect of the default of the administrator, and cites us to Christerson v. French, 180 Cal. 525, 182 P. 27, as holding that a default having been entered against the administrator, he was out of court, and not entitled to make the motion, nor take any other step in the cause. In the case cited, the court stated the effect of the default as follows:

> "In the matter of entering judgment the clerk had no discretion, but having entered the default he was bound under the said subdivision [subdv. 1, sec. 585] to enter judgment 'immediately thereafter.' The fact that he did not enter judgment 'immediately thereafter' in no way prejudiced the rights of plaintiff and conferred no right on the defendant whose default had been regularly entered. * * * A defendant against whom a default is entered is out of court and is not entitled to take any further steps in the cause affecting plaintiff's right of action."

The case goes on to say that the filing of a demurrer and motion to strike out did not suspend the duty of the clerk to enter judgment, and the filing of such papers could have no legal effect.

[1] In the instant case the respondent concedes that, after the default was entered, he could not demur nor plead to the complaint, but urges that he has not attempted to appear in the action, but appeared specially, and attacked directly the jurisdiction of the court; that is, that the entry of the default was without jurisdiction and void. This he would have the right to do even after entry of judgment. While judgment was not actually entered by the clerk, the default having been entered, the fact that judgment was not immediately entered must be considered as entered so far as the proceedings in this action are concerned, as the clerk's failure to enter judgment upon the default can in no way prejudice the rights of plaintiff and can confer no right on defendant whose default has been regularly entered. Edwards v. Hellings, 103 Cal. 204, 37 P. 218; Beck v. Pasadena Water Co., 130 Cal. 50, 62 P. 219; Christerson v. French, supra. The respondent, however, contends that the default was not regularly entered, but was without jurisdiction, because there was no order of court joining the administrator as a necessary party defendant; and, second, because there was no order of court directing the issuance of summons upon the amended complaint. As to this second point urged, appellant concedes that no order was made by the court directing the issuance of summons.

[2] The administrator of the estate of J. Carmichael, deceased, was appointed and qualified as such on July 20, 1923. The suit was commenced on September 18, 1923. The administrator was not made a party defendant in the original complaint, and, while he was not a necessary party to determine the rights as between the parties plaintiff and defendants, he was a proper party defendant, for, by bringing him in, the entire matters growing out of the transaction could be adjudicated. Under the circumstances the plaintiff had the right to amend his complaint, making him a party defendant in the action. Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

> "The court may in the furtherance of justice, and on such terms as may be proper, allow a party to amend any pleading or proceeding by adding or striking out the name of any party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party."

There can be no doubt but that, under section 473 of the Code, plaintiff had the right to amend his complaint by making the administrator a party. The claim, however, is made that the amendment joining the defendant was made without leave of court.

[3] On December 27, 1923, plaintiff moved to amend its complaint. The motion was based on notice of motion to which was attached a copy of the proposed amended complaint. The proposed amended complaint named the administrator as a party defendant, and was before the court when it made its order giving plaintiff leave to file an amended complaint. What amended complaint? Why assuredly the amended complaint, a copy of which was before the court, and which named the administrator a party defendant. A demurrer was sustained to this amended complaint, and the court made an order giving plaintiff leave to again amend. It would be supertechnical to hold that, when a motion is made to amend, and the motion has attached to it the amendment itself which it is proposed to file, in granting the motion, because it does not expressly so state, it does not include the right to file the proposed amendment which is submitted to the court as the basis for the order. However, there can be no doubt but that the administrator was a proper party, and that plaintiff was given leave generally to amend, and that, therefore, whether it be held that the order to amend, based on a motion which had attached to it the proposed amendment, carried with it the right to file the proposed amendment, in the absence of the order expressly directing such filing, is of no moment, as, under the authority of Louvall v. Gridley, 70 Cal. 507, 11 P. 777, the general order giving leave to amend is held sufficient, under circumstances similar to those in the instant case, to permit the amended complaint to bring in a new defendant who was a proper party. In Louvall v. Gridley, the court says:

> "We think the rulings were right. The administratrix was a proper party to the action, and the plaintiff, having obtained leave to amend generally, had a right to make her a party without any special permission to do so."

[4] The question as to whether the filing of an amended complaint without leave of court renders a judgment void where such order is a prerequisite to filing an amended complaint has not been passed upon in this state so far as we have been able to discover; at least none has been cited. In other jurisdictions, however, the rule is that the filing of an amended complaint without leave of court does not render a judgment void, but is a mere irregularity which cannot be taken advantage of for the first time on appeal. It is the rule that an amended complaint, filed after answer and without leave of court first obtained, where plaintiff was not entitled as a matter of right to file such amendment, is subject to be stricken from the files on motion of the defendant. But, if it is not stricken, and the court thereafter recognizes it, the irregularity will be deemed cured. Danielson v. Danielson, 62 Mont. 83, 203 P. 506. A decree cannot be attacked on appeal because of the filing of an amended petition making new parties without leave of court and notice to adverse parties, where the amendment was proper, and no question of defect of parties was made in the trial court. West Side Lumber Co. v. Hathaway, 115 Iowa, 654, 89 N. W. 35. See, also, Ross v. Berry, 17 N. M. 48,

124 P. 342; Carlisle v. Sells-Floto, 180 Iowa, 549, 163 N. W. 380.

[5, 6] Respondent urges that, because the claim was not presented to the administrator and rejected, which was a necessary prerequisite before filing suit—before the original complaint was filed—that the action, as far as the administrator is concerned, was prematurely brought. This point cannot be raised at this time. Section 1010 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a notice of motion must state the grounds upon which it will be made, and it has been held under this section that the court may consider only such grounds as are specified in the motion. Mojave & Bakersfield Ry. Co. v. Cuddeback, 28 Cal. App. 439, 152 P. 943; Garrett v. Garrett, 31 Cal. App. 173, 159 P. 1050. The respondent's notice of motion to dismiss the action was based only upon one ground, and this did not include his present claim that the action was prematurely brought. If, however, respondent could now raise this point, it would be of no avail to him, as it is established in this state that the nonpresentation of a claim to an administrator is a matter of abatement, and that it must be raised by proper means in the trial court, and that, if it is not so raised, it cannot be urged on appeal. Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 555; Coleman v. Woodworth, 28 Cal. 567; Peterson v. Hornblower, 33 Cal. 266; Preston v. Knapp, 85 Cal. 560, 24 P. 811; Burmester v. McNear, 42 Cal. App. 527, 183 P. 832. Here it is not contended that a plea in abatement was filed, nor that the objection was in any manner raised in the trial court. In the case of Bemmerly v. Woodward, 124 Cal. 568, 57 P. 561, in which case the facts closely parallel the instant case, the court says:

> "The supplemental complaint avers that the claim for the amount due plaintiffs was duly presented to the defendant as executrix of the estate of Woodward within the time allowed by law for the presentation of claims, and that it was rejected. These allegations are admitted in the answer. Still the complaint itself shows that the suit was commenced before the claim had been presented and rejected. There was no plea in abatement, nor was any objection made on this account at the trial or before judgment. * * * Section 1498 enacts that, if rejected, suit must be brought within three months; and section 1500, that no holder of a claim shall maintain an action thereon, unless the claim is first presented, except upon mortgage liens. It is contended that plaintiffs had no cause of action at the time that the suit was commenced, and such objection may be made at any time in the trial court, although it cannot be made for the first time in this court. It has been held, however, that this is a mere matter of abatement, which is waived unless pleaded. Formerly, such pleas could only be interposed before a plea to the merit. Under our Code all defenses may be included in one answer, but if a defense which is mere matter of abatement is not made by that time, it should be deemed waived."

In Hentsch v. Porter, supra, holding that this question must be raised in the answer by way of plea in abatement, the court gives the reason for the rule:

> "It is simply a matter of abatement—a defense which is not favored, and must be made by plea, and in proper time, or it is waived. * * * In this case if the defense had been promptly made, plaintiffs could have dismissed their suit and brought another. But if, after three months had elapsed after the claim was rejected, the point could be successfully urged, plaintiffs would have lost their right of action."

[7] A motion was also made to quash the service of summons upon the ground that the court made no order permitting the plaintiff to amend the summons, and an order was made granting this motion.

The summons issued upon the original complaint, which was returned and filed on February 14, 1924, did not name the administrator as a defendant. When the second amended complaint was filed on April 7, 1924, the clerk issued a summons upon this complaint, which named the administrator as a defendant, and which was served upon him on April 9, 1924, and filed on April 11, 1924. No order of court was made at the time the second amended complaint was filed, directing the issuance of summons thereon. It is contended that, in the absence of such an order, the clerk had no right to issue summons upon the second amended complaint, and that his act in so doing was void.

[8, 9] It is elementary that, when an amended complaint is filed, the original complaint ceases to be the complaint in the action. It is entirely superseded by the amended complaint, and in this action the second amended complaint superseded all previous complaints filed. An amended complaint must be served upon all defendants who have appeared in the action. If any defendants have not appeared, a summons must be issued upon the amended complaint, and served upon such defendants. Thompson v. Johnson, 60 Cal. 294; Witter v. Bachman, 117 Cal. 318, 49 P. 202; Linott v. Rowland, 119 Cal. 452, 51 P. 687. As the summons on the original complaint had been returned and filed, the clerk had power, and it was his duty, under section 408 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to issue an alias summons upon the second amended complaint—the only complaint in the action—and, as the administrator was named as a party defendant, the summons issued necessarily included him. Section 408 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

> "If the summons is returned without being served on any or all of the defendants, or if it has been lost, the clerk, upon the demand of the plaintiff, may issue an alias summons in the same form as the original, and within such time as the original might have been served if it had not been lost or returned,"

—and, as the administrator was named as a defendant in the second amended complaint the summons issued thereon necessarily included him.

[10] The summons issued on the second amended complaint, while entitled an "amended summons," is an "alias summons," and is in the same form and language of the original summons, excepting for the addition of the administrator as a party, and respondent contends that such addition changes the form of the summons, and, not being in the same form as the original, it was not an alias summons, and therefore its issuance was without authority. Section 408 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an alias summons shall be "in the same form as the original." Section 407 of the same Code provides what shall be the form and contents of the summons, viz. that it must be directed to the defendant, signed by the clerk, and issued under the seal of the court, and must contain: (1) The names of the parties, the court in which the action is brought, and the county in which the complaint is filed; (2) a direction that defendant appear and answer the complaint within a specified time; and (3) notice that, unless he does appear and answer, the plaintiff will take judgment for the money or damages demanded, etc. "The provision of section 408 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to the form of the alias summons means no more than that it shall conform to the requirements of section 407 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and did not preclude the insertion therein of the name of a defendant, which, through clerical error, had been omitted from the original summons." Doyle v. Hampton, 159 Cal. 729, 732, 116 P. 39, 41. In the light of this case there can be no doubt but that the alias summons issued in the instant case is in the "same form" as the original.

[11] Respondent insists that the appellant has not the right to have the order of the trial court quashing the service of the summons reviewed upon this appeal. As hereinbefore stated, the Supreme Court denied a motion to dismiss this appeal, holding that the order quashing the summons was a part of the other order dismissing the action. This order of the trial court dismissing the action was a final judgment within the meaning of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and appellant has the right to a review of the order quashing the service of summons under section 956, Code of Civil Procedure.

Respondent has cited a number of authorities which he urges uphold the order of the trial court. After a careful reading of the cases and Code sections cited, we conclude that they are not in conflict with the views herein stated.

From what we have said it follows that the court below erred in quashing the service of the summons and dismissing the action as to Mathew Hamilton, as the administrator of the estate of J Carmichael, deceased, and that, as the default was properly entered, it is the duty of the clerk to enter judgment in favor of appellant upon such default.

The order appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

FINN v. GOLDSTEIN. (Civ. 5043.)*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 30, 1926. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1927.)

1. Pleading 🔑312—Instrument containing agreement for sale of land, sought to be specifically enforced, determines terms thereof, and not pleadings construing instrument.

Terms of agreement for sale of land, sought to be specifically enforced, are to be determined from agreement itself, and not from construction put on agreement by pleadings.

2. Frauds, statute of 🔑108(4)—Instrument for sale of land must state price of property sold to be sufficient as memorandum, under statute.

Instrument containing agreement for sale of land, to be sufficient as memorandum, within statute of frauds, must state price for which property is sold.

3. Frauds, statute of 🔑108(4)—Recital, "Cost of property—$11,500," is not sufficient statement of sales price for memorandum, within statute of frauds.

Agreement for sale of land reciting, "Cost of property—$11,500," does not contain sufficient statement of price for which property is sold, required of memorandum within statute of frauds.

4. Frauds, statute of 🔑108(4)—Memorandum relied on for specific performance of contract to sell land should have contained purchaser's offer to assume incumbrances.

Offers by purchaser of property to assume incumbrances and pay defendant balance in cash, if made pursuant to agreement to sell property, were material elements of contract, and should have been contained in memorandum relied on for specific performance of contract.

5. Vendor and purchaser 🔑50—No other writing than instrument for sale of land is part of contract, where it contains no cross-reference to other writings.

Where writing relied on by purchaser for specific performance of contract to sell land contained no cross-references to any other writing, no other writing could be said to be part of contract.

---

*Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 258 P. 85.

6. Frauds, statute of 🔑108(4)—Written instrument reciting receipt of deposit on certain property held insufficient as memorandum, under statute of frauds, to be specifically enforced.

Instrument reciting receipt of deposit on real property located on certain street known by certain numbers, cost of property, and that deposit is to stand good until certain date, held insufficient as memorandum of sale, within statute of frauds, and could not be specifically enforced by purchaser.

7. Specific performance 🔑114(3)—Complaint, not pleading extrinsic facts identifying property not described by metes and bounds in contract sought to be specifically enforced, is insufficient.

Complaint for specific enforcement of contract to sell land, failing to plead extrinsic facts to identify property not described in contract by metes and bounds, held insufficient.

8. Specific performance 🔑114(2)—Allegation that sale price in contract sought to be specifically enforced was not disproportionate to value held insufficient, under statute (Civ. Code, § 3391).

Amendment to complaint for specific performance of contract to sell property, reciting that sale price is not disproportionate to value of property, held not to meet requirements of Civ. Code, § 3391, prohibiting decree of specific performance, unless contract is just and reasonable and supported by adequate consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Joseph T. Finn against Rose Goldstein. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Milton T. U'Ren and Albert Jacoby, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

R. M. J. Armstrong, of San Francisco, for respondent.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

STURTEVANT, J. Action in specific performance. The judgment of the trial court was in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed, bringing up the judgment roll only.

The plaintiff's complaint was as follows:

"Plaintiff complains of defendant and for cause of action alleges:

"I. That the defendant on the 19th day of March, 1923, was the owner in fee of the premises hereinafter described, and that she then and there entered in an agreement with the plaintiff, executed under their names and seals, whereby plaintiff agreed to buy, and defendant agreed to sell, the property hereinafter described; that said agreement was in the words and figures following, to wit:

" 'San Francisco, March 19, 1923.

" 'Received from Mr. Joseph Finn fifty dollars. Deposit on three flats and four stores located on Twenty-Fourth street known as Nos. 3257 to 3269 Twenty-Fourth street.

" 'Cost of property—$11,500.

" 'Deposit to stand good until April 2, 1923.

" '[Signed] Rose Goldstein.

" 'I accept above agreement.

" '[Signed] Joseph T. Finn.'

"II. That the plaintiff has duly performed all the conditions of said agreement on his part to be performed.

"III. That on the 27th day of March, 1923, at the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., the plaintiff tendered to defendant the sum of fifty-nine hundred and fifty ($5,950.00) dollars and requested a conveyance of said premises according to the terms of said agreement, but defendant then and there, and ever since, has refused to execute and deliver such conveyance.

"IV. That there are two liens upon said property as follows: A deed of trust in the sum of fifty-five hundred ($5,500.00) dollars, executed to the Title Insurance & Guarantee Company, trustee for Jerome S. J. Bettman, dated April 20, 1922, and recorded on April 25, 1922; and another deed of trust in the sum of one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars, executed to the Title Insurance & Guarantee Company, trustee for Henry Redlick, dated November 14, 1922, and recorded in the office of the county recorder of the city and county of San Francisco; that the total amount due on said deeds of trust is the sum of sixty-five hundred ($6,500.00) dollars; that the equity of defendant in and to said property is the sum of five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars.

"V. That the plaintiff ever since the 27th day of March, 1923, the time of said tendering of the said sum of fifty-nine hundred and fifty ($5,950.00) dollars, has kept said money so tendered on deposit in the Title Insurance & Guarantee Company, located at 250 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and that said money is unproductive, and is ready to be paid over to said defendant on said agreement, and in this court.

"Wherefore," etc.

The defendant interposed a general demurrer, the demurrer was overruled, and the case went to trial before the trial court sitting without a jury. Thereafter, and before the findings were signed, the plaintiff filed an amendment by which he added to his complaint:

"That the sum of eleven thousand five hundred ($11,500) dollars is not disproportionate to the value of said property."

The defendant filed another demurrer, it was overruled, and the defendant answered, denying many of the allegations contained in the complaint, and denying the allegations contained in the amendment. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff and a judgment was entered in his favor.

The first point made by the appellant is that the demurrer should have been sustained. For several reasons we think that on this point the appellant is clearly correct. In his complaint the respondent sets forth the writing and alleges that it is the contract on which he relies.

[1] Let us test the pleading first by the law governing specific performance. The general rule governing the case was quoted by Mr. Justice Richards in Patterson v. Reddish, 56 Cal. App. 197, 202, 204 P. 565, 567, as follows:

> "It is not necessary to cite authorities to support the proposition that the court, when called upon specifically to enforce an agreement, must ascertain the terms of the instrument sought to be enforced from the instrument itself and not from the construction put upon it in the pleading demanding its enforcement. A complaint in specific performance cannot supply the deficiencies which may render the contract nonenforceable in equity."

Speaking of a similar paper, in Allan v. Bemis, 120 Iowa, 172, 180, 94 N. W. 560, 562, the court said:

> "Thereby Bemis does not agree to sell, nor does Allan agree to purchase. That parties may by writing make admission of a prior oral contract or agreement to sell lands is not to be doubted. And an oral contract thus established may be enforced as of the time made as fully as the subsequent writing makes disclosure thereof. It is well settled, however, that in all such cases the court cannot look beyond the writing to ascertain the terms, conditions, or provisions of the contract. [Citing cases.]"

In the case of Heller v. Cochran, 280 Pa. 579, 124 A. 737, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania had before it a writing which was more definite than the writing in the instant case, but that court quoted with approval as follows:

> "The agreement in this case is too vague and indefinite to permit equity to enforce it. * * * In addition to the vagueness in the description of the property, there is nothing contained in the agreement relative to the terms or time of payment or delivery of the deed; all of these matters will have to be established by parol evidence, and, indeed, as to some of them the bill alleges verbal agreements were entered into."

Speaking of a writing that was more formal than the one before us, in the case of Buckmaster v. Bertram, 186 Cal. 673, at page 676, 200 P. 610, 611, the court said:

> "On its face the agreement is too uncertain to be enforceable by way of specific performance."

[2, 3] Let us now test the pleading under the statute of frauds. To be sufficient as a memorandum coming within the provisions of the statute of frauds the writing should state the price for which the property is sold. Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 529, 535, 21 P. 179. The recital, "Cost of property—$11,500," is by no means a clear statement that it was an attempt to state the sales price. If it was an attempt to state the sales price, it does not appear whether the plaintiff was to pay $11,500 over and above existing incumbrances or otherwise. Speaking of such a writing, the Supreme Court of Connecticut, in Wetkopsky v. New Haven Gas Light Co., 88 Conn. 1, 8, 90 A. 30, 33, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 968, at page 970, said:

> "The two receipts which were in evidence were not sufficient memoranda of any contract to satisfy the statute. They did not show any sale, present or prospective, of the house, and would apply as well as money received on a lease as on a sale of the house."

In Patterson et al. v. Underwood, 29 Ind. 607, at page 610, the court said:

> "The receipt is not a sufficient memorandum in writing to take the case out of the statute. It contains no promise to convey. There was no note or memorandum, therefore, in writing, of the contract."

[4-6] From the allegations contained in the complaint it appears that the property was incumbered; that the plaintiff has offered to assume the incumbrances; and that he has offered to pay the defendant the balance in cash. If these offers were made pursuant to the agreement, such terms of the agreement were material elements of the contract, and as such should have been contained in the memorandum relied on. Fritz v. Mills, 170 Cal. 449, 458, 150 P. 375. However, the writing is wholly silent on these matters. The writing contains no cross-reference to any other writing, therefore no other writing can be said to be a part of the contract. Craig v. Zelian, 137 Cal. 105, 106, 69 P. 853; Eaton v. Wilkins, 163 Cal. 742, 746, 127 P. 71. It follows that the written instrument set forth in the complaint was insufficient as a memorandum within the statute of frauds.

[7] As the writing did not purport to describe the real estate by metes and bounds, the pleader proceeded to do so. In so doing he added to the writing; but he had no right to do more than lay a foundation for introducing evidence of the extrinsic facts. To do that he should have pleaded the extrinsic facts. Having failed to do so, the complaint was insufficient. Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 202, 20 P. 386; Eaton v. Wilkins, 163 Cal. 742, 745, 127 P. 71; Joyce v. Tomasini, 168 Cal. 234, 239, 142 P. 67.

[8] In this state it is provided by statute that a court of equity may not grant a decree in specific performance, unless it appears that, as to the defendant, the contract is just and reasonable and is supported by an adequate consideration. Civil Code, § 3391. To meet the requirements of the statute the pleader amended his complaint by adding the amendment which we have quoted above. The amendment fell short of the requirements. Joyce v. Tomasini, 168 Cal. 235, 237, 142 P. 67.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; NOURSE, J.

80 Cal. App. 478

SMITH et al. v. SCHRADER et al. (Civ. 3128.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1926.)

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑170—Variations from contract in purchaser's instructions to escrow holder held insufficient to justify vendor's refusal to perform.

In action by purchaser for specific performance of land contract deposited in escrow, vendor's refusal to perform held not justified because purchaser's instructions to escrow holder varied from contract in that one lot might be released from mortgage on payment at any time before specified date instead of on that date, and in that one note was given for aggregate sum due instead of a number of notes for fractions of it payable in successive years, in view of purchaser's willingness and readiness to comply with terms of contract.

2. Specific performance 🔑121(8)—In purchaser's action for specific performance, evidence held to sustain necessary finding that price was just.

Evidence held to sustain finding that price in land contract was fair, just, and reasonable as required to authorize specific performance.

3. Specific performance 🔑128(3)—Rent paid by purchaser seeking specific performance for other premises after vendor should have conveyed held erroneous measure of damages (Civ. Code, §§ 3306, 3334).

In purchaser's action for specific performance, amount of rent paid by purchaser for other premises after vendor should have conveyed held erroneous measure of damages, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 3306, 3334, since not relating to value of rents, issues, and profits of property to be conveyed.

4. Appeal and error 🔑221—Rule making unavailable error as to measure of damages where case was tried on theory that measure was proper held inapplicable to party who objected.

Rule that error cannot be based on measure of damages where case was tried on theory that measure was applicable held not to apply to party who objected to adoption of such measure.

5. Specific performance 🔑128(3)—Interest on purchaser's deposit in escrow held element of his damages in action for specific performance.

Purchaser, who according to land contract deposited $5,000 in escrow, held entitled to interest on this sum as an element of damages in action by him for specific performance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul Burks, Judge.

Action by Lisle L. Smith and another against George Schrader and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Joseph Musgrove and Fred O. McGirr, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Action to compel specific performance of a contract to convey real estate. Plaintiffs had judgment, and the defendants appeal.

The transcript shows that on the 19th day of January, 1923, the plaintiffs and defendants, other than the Paul Kent Truck Company, entered into the following agreement for the sale and purchase of certain lots situated in the city of Los Angeles:

"This agreement, made this 19th day of January, 1923, at the city of Los Angeles, by and between George Schrader, hereinafter called the vendor, and Lisle L. Smith and Stoughton Smith, hereinafter called the vendees, witnesseth:

"That the said vendor agrees to sell and the vendee agrees to buy the following described real estate situate in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, and known as lots 164, 166, 188, 187, 186, and 185 of the Wingerter tracts, for the sum of thirty-two thousand dollars ($32,000), to be paid in the manner following:

"$5,000 to be deposited with the Title Insurance & Trust Company upon the placing of the deal in escrow.

"$3,000 two years thereafter (should, however, the said vendees pay $5,000 in lieu of said $3,000 at said time, the said vendor will release said above lot No. 188);

"And the sum of $3,000 each year thereafter, together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on all deferred payments, said obligations to be evidenced by promissory notes bearing 6 per cent. interest and secured by mortgage upon the premises to be conveyed; interest to be paid quarterly.

"And the said George Schrader agrees upon this transaction being placed in escrow to serve written notice upon the tenant now in possession of said premises, to vacate the same within ninety days, according to provisions of certain lease under which said tenant now holds the said premises.

"This agreement to be binding upon the heirs and executors of the parties hereto.

"Dated the day and year first above written.

"Geo. Schrader.
"Lisle L. Smith.
"Stoughton Smith."

On the same day, the defendant George Schrader executed and delivered to the Title Insurance & Trust Company, the escrowee named in the foregoing agreement, a memorandum of instructions, the part material to be considered herein being as follows:

"As a part of the consideration for said deed, you will also procure note executed by above vestees and Abbie M. Smith and Eleanor A. Smith, their wives, in favor of George Schrader, for $27,000.00 due in annual install. of $3,000.00 each, due in 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 yrs. after 1/25/23 with int. at 6 per cent. per annum from 1/25/23, payable at Los Angeles, Calif., payable quarterly (See special privilege below) secured by a mortgage your form on said premises which by your guarantee shall 'Privilege reserved in mortgage of paying $5,000.00 to apply on principal at any time prior to 1/25/25 by paying accrued interest to date of such payment.' In the event this option is exercised lot 188 is to be released from the mortgage at time of such payment."

At the same time the plaintiffs executed and delivered to the Title Insurance & Trust Company a like memorandum of instructions, the material part of which necessary to be considered herein is as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 19, 1923.

"Title Insurance & Trust Company: I hand you herewith check for $5,000.00 and will hand you funds sufficient to cover my portion of your charges together with note and mortgage for $27,000.00 as set out below; all of which you are authorized to use in connection with your order No. 643902 when you can issue, in your usual form, your cont. guarantee of T. G. & Tr. Co. or L. A. T. I. Co.'s (with your liability thereunder not to exceed $32,000.00) on lots 164, 166, 185, 186, 187, 188 of Wingerter tract, city and county of Los Angeles, California, at 15/52 M. R. which will show record title to said property vested in Lisle L. Smith and Stoughton F. Smith, both married men, free from incumbrances except * * * and a mortgage your form, executed by vestees and wives in favor of George Schrader for $27,000.00, due in annual installments of $3,000.00 each in 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 yrs. after 1/25/1923, with int. at 6 per cent. per annum from 1/25/23 payable quarterly at Los Angeles, Cal. Privilege reserved of paying $5,000.00 of the principal at any time prior to 1/25/25 by paying accrued interest to date of such payment without bonus. In the event this option is exercised lot 188 of the above tract is to be released from the mortgage."

These memoranda of instructions contained much detailed matter not involved in this action and therefore need not be set forth herein. After the execution of the agreement of sale and purchase and memoranda of instructions, as set forth herein, it appears that the defendant George Schrader noticed that there had been some slight variations between the memoranda of instructions and the agreement of purchase and sale, and thereupon, on the 24th day of January, 1923, the following letter was sent by the defendant George Schrader to the Title Insurance & Trust Company, and, also, to the plaintiffs in this action:

"Los Angeles, Cal., January 24, 1923.

"To the Title Insurance & Trust Company, Messrs. Lisle L. Smith and Stoughton F. Smith and Bernard Meidenberg:

"Gentlemen: I hereby notify you that the escrow instructions in escrow No. 195057 (order No. 643,902), the terms for the sale of lots 164, 166, 185, 187, and 188 of the Wingerter tract were deviated from in the following two particulars:

"The time at which the option for a release of lot 188 from mortgage was to be exercised should be at the maturity of the first note, which would be two years after the 19th day of January, 1923.

"And furthermore said agreement of sale provided for separate notes of $3,000 each, due in 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 years.

"And further in accordance with the agreement between the parties the note maturing in two years from date of said agreement shall contain a clause in pursuance with said agreement specifying that should the mortgagors at the time of maturity of said note desire the release of lot No. 188 from the operation of the mortgage the said mortgagors shall pay the sum of $5,000 in lieu of said sum of $3,000; and that

"Further the provisions and conditions of the mortgage shall be made in conformity with said provisions of said note maturing two years from date of the agreement.

"Kindly notify me that you have complied with this request to make the aforesaid corrections on or before January 31st, 1923, and oblige,

"Yours respectfully, George Schrader."

Thereafter, and on the 2d day of February, 1923, the defendant wrote an additional letter to the plaintiffs in this action, notifying the plaintiffs that he refused to and would refuse to comply with the agreement of sale entered into, as herein stated. This letter is as follows:

"Gentlemen: On January 24, 1923, I mailed you and each of you a notice in writing containing a request that escrow instructions in escrow No. 195,057 (order No. 643,902) be modified to correspond to the original contract entered into for the sale of lots 164, 166, 185, 186, 187, and 188 of the Wingerter tract, and requested you to notify me on or before the 31st day of January, 1923, that you had complied with said request.

"Not having received any such notice from you, you are hereby notified that I refuse to go on with said sale, and that the same is hereby terminated.

"Yours respectfully, George Schrader."

Immediately upon receipt of this letter, the attorneys for the plaintiffs notified the defendant Schrader to the effect that the plaintiffs had until the 19th day of February, 1923, within which to close the proposed deal, and were ready and willing to comply with all the conditions of the agreement of sale. This letter is as follows:

"February 5, 1923.

"Mr. George Schrader, 18 Mar Vista Street, Pasadena, Cal.—Dear Sir: I am the attorney for L. L. Smith and S. F. Smith, who are purchasing certain real property from you in the Wingerter tract, consisting of lots 164–66, 185–6–7 and 8.

"They have heretofore entered into a written agreement concerning this property, and also escrow instructions. They received a notice from you dated the 2d of February, 1923, in which you notify them of your refusal to go on with this sale, and notify them of your intention to terminate the sale.

"Both Mr. Smiths insist on carrying out the terms of this sale, and performing the obligations on their part to be performed, and according to their contract with you, and are ready, able, and willing to perform each and every thing upon their part to be done or performed to carry out this contract.

"The escrow instructions, so I am informed, provide for 30 days from the 19th of January, 1923, within which to close this deal, therefore this deal must be closed before the 19th of this month, and I therefore desire to ascertain from you if it is your intention to refuse to abide by this contract, which you have with Mr. Smith, and if you refuse to deliver the property according to the agreement. If so, I have no other alternative but to immediately institute suit to compel the performance. I trust you will notify me by return mail so there will (be) no unnecessary delay.

"I have discussed the matter several times with Mr. Weyse and made several propositions to arrive at an amicable adjustment of the matter, but he informs me same cannot be done as you insist on terminating this contract. Both Mr. Smiths went to the office of Mr. Weyse today hoping to meet you there and discuss the settlement of your differences, and to ascertain if some amicable adjustment could not be arrived at, but you refused to be present. It is my understanding from what my clients inform me Mr. Weyse informed them you refuse to go on with the deal.

"I therefore wish to ascertain if this is the position you take and if there is no possibility of closing the transaction, as I will have no other alternative but to institute an action at law.

"Trusting to hear from you by return mail, I am,

"Yours truly."

On February 9, 1923, the defendant Schrader sold the premises in controversy to the defendant Paul Kent Truck Company for a consideration of $31,000. The plaintiffs, as stated, had judgment for specific performance of the contract and judgment in damages for the sum of $210 per month from the 19th day of February, 1923, on account of the alleged increase in the rent upon the premises then occupied by the plaintiffs, being premises other than those involved in this action.

The record shows that the plaintiffs and the defendant Paul Kent Truck Company, a corporation, were engaged in the motor transportation business; that prior to the time of the execution of the agreement of sale herein mentioned the plaintiffs occupied certain premises under a lease which expired on December 31, 1922; that the plaintiffs desired to purchase suitable property for the location of their business and the erection of a warehouse thereon; that the Schrader property was especially adapted or suitable for such purposes; that on January 19, 1923, the plaintiffs and the defendant Schrader met in the office of a Mr. Weyse, an attorney representing Mr. Schrader, for the purpose of entering into an agreement for the purchase and sale of the property. Mr. Schrader's agent, Mr. Meidenberg, was also present. It further appears that the agreement of purchase and sale was then prepared, read, and signed; that the parties, including the attorney for Mr Schrader, and his agent, Mr. Meidenberg, went to the office of the Title Insurance & Trust Company for the purpose of placing the transaction in escrow and having escrow instructions prepared and signed by them; that the escrow memoranda herein referred to were then and there drawn, read over to the parties, and, also, to the defendant Schrader and his attorney, and were signed by the parties to the contract. It does not appear that the plaintiffs were represented by an attorney during these transactions. Immediately upon the signing of the escrow instructions, plaintiffs signed and delivered to the Title Insurance & Trust Company their check for $5,000, made payable to the company, as provided in the contract.

Immediately thereafter the defendant Schrader served a written notice upon the defendant Paul Kent Truck Company, the tenant, which was then in possession of the premises in controversy, to vacate the same within 90 days thereafter, which notice informed the defendant Paul Kent Truck Company of the agreement of sale made with the plaintiffs, and that the property had been sold to plaintiffs for $32,000, of which the defendant Schrader was to receive the net sum of $30,000. At that time the defendant Schrader also notified Mr. Paul Kent of the Paul Kent Truck Company that there were six lots included in the deal. Mr. Kent replied that if he had known that there were six lots instead of five, he would have purchased the property himself. In a few days thereafter, the defendant Paul Kent Truck Company offered the defendant Schrader $31,000 for the property. On the next day, February 2, 1923, the defendant Schrader withdrew the notice to vacate. On the 23d day of January, 1923, the defendant Schrader obtained from the Title Insurance & Trust Company copies of the escrow instructions, with a copy of the contract of sale herein set forth, and took the same to the office of Mr. Shipman, the attorney for the Paul Kent Truck Company, and on January 24, 1923, the defendant Schrader, together with Mr. Shipman, went to the office of Mr. Weyse, attorney for defendant Schrader, and then and there a letter was prepared and signed by Mr. Schrader and mailed to the Title Insurance & Trust Company, stating, in substance, that the escrow instructions deviated from the terms of the sale in two particulars, to wit, that the time for which the option for the release of lot No. 188 from the mortgage was to be exercised should be at the maturity of the first note and that the agreement provided for separate notes of $3,000 each; that the note maturing in two years from date should contain a clause specifying that should the mortgagors at the time of maturity of the note desire the release of lot No. 188 from the operation of the mortgage, the said mortgagors should pay the sum of $5,000 in lieu of $3,000. Some further negotiations took place, from which it appears that the plaintiffs were ready and willing to comply with the terms of the contract just as written, irrespective of the alleged variations in the memoranda of instructions given by the respective parties to the Title Insurance Company.

[1] One contention made by the appellant that the court erred in allowing judgment for specific performance is that the variation in the terms of the escrow instructions relative to the $5,000 being paid at any time prior to January 25, 1925, or, as it is written in the memorandum "1/25/25," instead of being paid at the maturity of the first note, which would be, as stated in the Schrader memorandum, on the 25th day of January, 1925, and the further variation in the plaintiffs' memorandum to the extent that there was only to be one note, whereas there were to be a number of notes in the sum of $3,000 each, equal to the sum remaining due, payable 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 years after date, bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum. There was no difference in the amount nor in the annual installments, nor in the interest to be paid, the only variation being in this particular, that the agreement called for notes and the memoranda of instructions called for the execution of a note, and the amount remaining due was to be secured by mortgage. This variation, it is argued by appellants, imposed onerous conditions upon the defendant Schrader, contrary to their agreement of sale and of such a nature as to entitle the defendant Schrader to refuse to comply with the terms of the agreement. However, the record shows that shortly after this variation had been discovered, the plaintiffs, in writing, stated that they were ready and willing to comply with the terms of the written agreement, irrespective of the variation therefrom contained in the memoranda of instructions. Irrespective of this, we do not very well see how the alleged variation imposed any onerous or burdensome conditions upon the defendant Schrader. The amount of money agreed to be paid was exactly the same in all the installments, the amount of the deferred payments were the same, the amount of the installments were the same, and the rate of interest was not changed. As to the installments, it appears from the agreement that they were to be evidenced by a number of notes. In the memoranda of instructions, the installments were to be evidenced by one note, or a note for the aggregate sum remaining due, payable in installments. The record is absolutely silent as to how the alleged variation between the agreement of sale and the memoranda of instructions delivered to the Title Insurance & Trust Company occurred. There is not a scintilla of evidence that either party intended to deceive or mislead the other, or showing in any way whatever that either party either desired or was attempting to vary the terms of sale. The only burden imposed upon the seller, under the memoranda of instructions, would be the duty of accepting payment of $5,000 earlier than called for in the agreement. It does not appear that either of the parties intended by the memoranda of instructions delivered to the escrowee to vary the terms of the agreement of sale, and in view of the fact of the plaintiffs' readiness and willingness to comply with the terms of sale as mentioned in the agreement, we think the trial court was justified in concluding that the defendant Schrader had no grounds upon which to attempt cancellation of the agreement of sale and to refuse to comply with the conditions therein upon the defendants' part imposed.

[2] It further appears that after refusing to comply with the terms of his agreement of sale entered into with the plaintiffs, the property was sold to the defendant Paul Kent Truck Company, a corporation, for the sum of $31,000, or $1,000 less than the sum agreed to be paid by the plaintiffs, which answers the requirement of the law, we think, that the evidence must show, before specific performance will be awarded, that the amount agreed to be paid is fair, just, and equitable.

[3] The second ground for reversal which is necessary to be considered herein and which we find meritorious is that in relation to the damages awarded by the trial court. It appears in the transcript, and from the facts which we have gleaned therefrom and stated herein, that the plaintiffs were occupying premises not involved in this action, their lease to which had expired on the 31st day of December, 1922, and that after the failure of the defendant Schrader, in this action, to comply with the agreement of sale, the rent on the premises then and there occupied by the plaintiffs was increased in the sum of $210 per month. It is this increase in the rental value of the premises occupied by the plaintiffs that, as set forth in plaintiffs' complaint, is the foundation for its claim to damages in said sum, and it is upon this basis that the trial court made its findings and judgment awarding the plaintiff damages in the sum of $210 per month, in addition to interest on the $5,000 deposit by the plaintiffs with the Title Insurance & Trust Company as the first payment of the purchase price of the premises agreed to be sold by the defendant Schrader to the plaintiffs. The facts recited above show that the plaintiffs had permitted their lease to expire on the premises occupied by them some little time before the execution of the agreement of purchase and sale set forth herein, and therefore any allegation that plaintiffs were left without a lease on the premises occupied by them, by reason of the defendants' failure to comply with the agreement of sale, is controverted by their own testimony that the lease had been allowed to expire prior to the execution of the agreement. The complaint is silent as to the rental value of the premises involved in this action. The only reference thereto is found in the testimony of Paul H. Kent to the effect that his company was paying the sum of $85 per month therefor. The findings of the court make no mention of the rental value of the premises involved in this action. The appellants base their appeal upon the provisions of section 3306 and 3334 of the Civil Code, and argue that said sections fix and limit the damages recoverable, if at all, by the plaintiffs in this action. This contention, however, does not appear to be borne out by the authorities. On the other hand, the respondents, apparently, take the position that all damages, whether remote or proximate, suffered by the plaintiffs, whether within the reasonable contemplation of the parties or connected with the property involved, may be recoverable, as well as a decree for specific performance in this form of action. This contention appears to be based upon the following excerpt found in the opinion, in the case of Abbott v. The 76 Land & Water Co., 161 Cal. 42, 118 P. 425, to wit:

> "It is true that the vendee had an election of remedies. He might have brought an action to recover such damages as were caused him by the breach, or he might, as he did, bring his action for specific enforcement of the contract, and in such action obtain not only the specific enforcement of his contract, but also such damages as he was lawfully entitled to, for it is thoroughly settled that a court of equity taking jurisdiction for the purpose of specifically enforcing a contract takes full jurisdiction of all the rights of the parties, whether legal or equitable, and may award such legal damages as the vendee may have suffered by reason of the delay in performance. See 2 Warvelle on Vendors, § 958; 36 Cyc. 753."

A careful reading of this statement of the law relied upon by respondents discloses that the award can be only of such legal damages as the vendee may have suffered by reason of the delay of the vendor. The text found in Cyclopedia, upon which this language of the Supreme Court rests, defines the legal damages as follows:

> "A vendor retaining, or wrongfully regaining, possession, after the time appointed for delivery of possession, is chargeable with the rents and profits, or with the fair rental value of the premises." 36 Cyc. 755. "Where there is delay in completion of the contract, compensation may be made to one or the other of the parties by means of the rents and profits, and interest on the price. The general rule is to adjust the rights of the parties so as to give to each as nearly as possible what he would have received if the contract had been performed according to its terms. * * * The vendee is discharged from the duty of paying interest by a tender of the purchase-money when it became due and a continued readiness to pay it since, or by depositing it in a bank, with notice to the vendor, subject to his order, to be delivered to him on the execution and delivery of a deed."

A number of authorities are cited on pages 754 and 755 of 36 Cyclopedia, setting forth the measure of damages. In Harper v. Battle, 180 N. C. 375, 104 S. E. 658, 20 A. L. R. 357–360, a case involving the damages to be allowed under certain circumstances, in addition to specific performance, the court said:

> "On the facts presented, we are of opinion that the judgment should be reformed so as to allow plaintiff for the rents from June 1, 1918, the day when the deed should have been made, and plaintiff charged with interest from that date on the contract price."

In McMahan v. McMahan, 122 S. C. 336, 115 S. E. 293, 26 A. L. R. 1295, in a case for specific performance and damages, where specific performance was not awarded, the court stated the rule as to damages, as follows: "Where a vendor having title refuses to convey, and no part of the consideration has been paid, the measure of damages which the vendee is entitled to recover is the value of the land at the time the contract should have been performed, less the contract price," which conforms very closely to the provisions found in section 3306 of our Civil Code. In Baker v. Puffer, 299 Ill. 486, 132 N. E. 429, the direct question which we are here considering was passed upon by the Supreme Court of the state of Illinois, and it was there held that the plaintiff was not entitled in a court of equity to damages for rent paid for other premises that he might occupy or had occupied by reason of the refusal of the defendants to perform their contract. In 27 R. C. L. 631 (section 388), the rule as to the measure of damages is thus stated:

> "Under any of the different rules of damages the purchaser is entitled at least to recover nominal damages for a breach by the vendor. The rule is laid down in many cases that the purchaser is entitled, as general damages for the refusal or inability of the vendor to convey, to recover the difference between the actual value of the land and the agreed price, together with any payments he may have made, or the value of the land deducting the amount of the purchase money unpaid. These statements are substantially the same in effect and result in giving the purchaser as damages the benefit of his bargain in case the land is worth more than the price agreed upon."

And on page 636 of the same volume, section 394, relative to special damages, the law, supported by authorities there cited is thus stated as follows:

"In addition to general damages the purchaser may be entitled to recover special damages where they are the natural and proximate cause of the vendor's breach of the contract; and where the breach consists in the failure of the vendor to convey at the time agreed upon and his continued wrongful detention of the possession from the purchaser, a conveyance having been afterward made and accepted, rents received by the vendor during the time the control of the property was so detained have been held to be recoverable. To be recoverable, however, the special damages must be a proximate cause of the vendor's breach of his contract. Thus expenses incurred by a purchaser in preparing to build on other lands owned by him with the use of a building on the land sold, the benefit of which is lost to the purchaser by reason of the failure of the vendor to convey, are too remote to be recoverable."

The general rules which we have stated relative to the measure of damages are supported by practically all the authorities, and must be held to be the legal damages referred to by the Supreme Court of this state in Abbott v. The 76 Land & Water Company, recoverable in connection with a decree for specific performance.

[4] The respondents, in reply to the appellants' claim that the court adopted the wrong measure of damages, call our attention to the case of Durkee v. Chino Land & Water Co., 151 Cal. 561, 91 P. 389, and Kincaid v. Dunn, 26 Cal. App. 686, 148 P. 235, where it is held that error cannot be predicated upon the failure of the court to adopt the correct measure of damages, where the case has been tried upon the theory that a particular rule of damages was applicable to the issues being tendered to the trial court. This position, however, is untenable. A reference to the transcript shows that the right of the plaintiff to recover damages under the pleadings in this case was all the while controverted by the defendants, as the following colloquy taking place between counsel during the trial abundantly shows: Mr. Musgrove, attorney for the plaintiffs, in seeking to introduce certain testimony stated:

"The purpose is to show that Mr. Schrader knew that this property was the only property available, etc. * * *

"Mr. Haas: That might be material, if your Honor please, in an action for damages where the question of good faith and bad faith were concerned, but it is immaterial in an action for specific performance.

"Mr. Musgrove: The theory is that in an action for specific performance—well, we are not asking for damages. We want the property because it is the only property for this particular purpose.

"Mr. Haas: Well; it is absolutely immaterial what you want it for. The question of good faith or bad faith does not enter into it. Well; I will stipulate that such is a fact, but I will not stipulate that it is material in any way.

"The Court: Well; it would be material as bearing upon the question as to damages for withholding, wouldn't it?

"Mr. Haas: Well; those damages for withholding—we will show that they are not entitled to recover those in an action for specific performance. They may be grounds for a separate action, but I am satisfied they are not entitled to recover any damages in an action for specific performance.

"The Court: If that is the case, what is the danger of going into it for what it is worth? * * * Subject to the objection and ruling, which will be reserved, the facts last stated by Mr. Musgrove are admitted."

And further on the question of damages:

"Mr. Musgrove: We might have an action for damages. Now, I do not want to be placed in the position, inasmuch as I have already included an action for damages; I do not want to be foreclosed by this action, and if necessary, I will offer proof * * * for the particular needs for which we wanted it.

"Mr. Haas: You are not entitled to make that proof.

"The Court: Do you think you would be entitled to make that proof? Mr. Musgrove: Under the pleadings as they now stand; not under the pleadings of the third amended complaint, no.

"The Court: Was this preliminary to a suggested amendment?

"Mr. Haas: Well; we will resist that. Having gone into the trial and having asked us to make stipulations which are now in the case, they are not entitled to amend. That is an entirely different line of attack, which would mean a different line of preparation. We have a right to rely upon the pleadings as they are at this time."

Upon the question of the increased rent which the plaintiffs allege they paid on property other than that involved in this action, the record shows that the plaintiffs offered to prove by a certain witness that the rent had been increased as alleged, and counsel for the defendants stipulated that the witness would so testify. The stipulation is as follows:

"Mr. Haas: We will stipulate that they will so testify. We do object to it on the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, if offered. Your Honor may withhold your ruling on that until the final argument."

It was also stipulated that Paul Kent was the sole owner of the stock of Paul Kent Truck Company, with the exception of qualifying shares.

It is clear from the foregoing that the measure of damages alleged in the complaint and sought to be established by the testimony, and which was finally adopted by the court, was opposed by the defendants all during the course of the trial, and, having been so opposed and questioned, the cases dealing with the measure of damages, accepted by counsel as the true measure of damages applicable to the case being tried, have no relevancy, nor when the measure adopted by the court as the true measure of damages is not acceded to but controverted during the trial by the defendants.

[5] Interest on the $5,000 deposited by the plaintiffs with the escrowee was properly allowed. We do not find any merit in the contention of appellants that the decree awarding specific performance varies from the agreement of purchase and sale entered into by the parties. The wording is slightly different, but the effect is precisely the same. Under such circumstances, it would only unduly lengthen this opinion to set forth our views in relation thereto.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment of the trial court, so far as it relates to damages awarded for increased rents paid by the plaintiffs, must be set aside on the ground that the damages have been based upon remote and collateral matters, and not upon anything relative to usable values—that is, the rents, issues, and profits of the premises to be sold by the defendant Schrader to the plaintiffs. No question has been made upon this appeal that if specific performance should be awarded under the agreement of sale, it should be awarded as well against the defendant Paul Kent Truck Company as against the defendant Schrader. A number of minor objections have been urged upon this appeal, but, not being deemed of sufficient merit to affect the decision in this cause, are not specifically referred to in this opinion.

The judgment of the trial court awarding damages to the plaintiffs, in so far as it is based upon the alleged increase of rents paid by them for other premises than those involved in this case, is hereby reversed; as to all other parts, the judgment is affirmed, appellants to recover their costs on appeal.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PRESTON, Justice pro tem.

---

80 Cal. App. 501

WAGG v. TOLER et al. (Civ. 3179.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1) — Finding of trial court will be sustained on appeal if supported by any substantial evidence.

Finding of trial court, if supported by any substantial evidence, will be sustained on appeal.

2. Bills and notes 🔑525—Corporation transferring note sued on in payment for plaintiff's stock held under evidence not to have sold stock under agreement to repurchase as affecting claim that plaintiff was holder in good faith of note.

In action on note transferred by corporation to plaintiff to pay for stock repurchased by corporation, evidence held to show that plaintiff did not purchase stock under agreement by corporation to repurchase same as affecting claim that he was holder in good faith of note.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1052(5)—Error in admitting evidence of fraudulent acquisition by corporation of note sued on and transferred to plaintiff in payment for stock held not prejudicial, in view of finding.

In action on note transferred by corporation to plaintiff in payment for his stock repurchased by corporation, error in admitting proceedings in action by maker of note to show that corporation fraudulently acquired note held not prejudicial, in view of finding that repurchase of plaintiff's stock was void ab initio.

4. Corporations 🔑324—Directors of corporation cannot use assets of corporation to purchase capital stock in behalf of corporation (Civ. Code, § 309).

Under Civ. Code, § 309, directors of corporation are prohibited from using its assets to purchase in behalf of corporation its capital stock except under certain conditions, such act being made misdemeanor by Pen. Code, § 560.

5. Corporations 🔑370(1)—Term "ultra vires" refers to powers not conferred on corporation by act of its creation.

Term "ultra vires" refers to powers not conferred on corporation by act of its creation and are violations of trust reposed in managing board.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ultra Vires.]

6. Bills and notes 🔑352—Stockholder exchanging stock for note held by corporation is not purchaser in good faith of note (Civ. Code, § 309).

Under Civ. Code, § 309, incorporator and stockholder of corporation cannot become purchaser in good faith of note given corporation in payment of its stock by exchanging for note his stock in corporation.

7. Corporations 🔑376—Objection that transfer of note by corporation to stockholder in payment of stock was void may be made at any time.

In suit on note transferred by corporation to stockholder in payment of stock repurchased by corporation, objection that transfer is void may be made at any time.

8. Corporations 🔑376—Transfer of corporate note to stockholder in payment of stock repurchased by corporation held void ab initio (Civ. Code, § 309).

Purchase by corporation of its stock and transfer of note held by corporation as asset of company in payment of stock held void ab initio, under Civ. Code, § 309, applying as well to stockholder as to corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Action by W. I. Wagg against J. L. Toler, known also as Jessie Lee Toler, and another, Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gerald Willis Myers and Bigby & Myers, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bailie, Turner & Lake, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiff to recover from the defendants the sum of $2,500 on a certain promissory note executed and delivered by the defendant Toler to the defendant Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company, a corporation, and by the corporation assigned and transferred to the plaintiff. Defendants had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

The grounds urged by appellant for reversal upon this appeal necessary to be considered herein are: First, that the court erred in holding that the transfer of the note sued upon to the plaintiff by the defendant corporation was void ab initio; second, that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings; third, errors in the admission of testimony. Other grounds are set forth, but are not such as affect the merits of this action and need not be set forth in detail in this opinion.

It appears from the transcript that some time prior to the incorporation of the defendant Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company there was in existence a certain other corporation known as and called the Leach-Biltwell Motor Company; that the plaintiff, W. I. Wagg, became a stockholder in that corporation and also a director; that the par value of the stock purchased by the plaintiff in said corporation was the sum of $10,000; that at the time of the purchase of said stock by plaintiff from the Leach-Biltwell Motor Company the plaintiff was promised employment and was immediately given employment at a salary of $150 per month; that a number of months later all the property and good will of the Leach-Biltwell Motor Company was transferred to the Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company, a corporation, which appears to have been formed for the purpose of taking over all the affairs and properties of the Leach-Biltwell Motor Company.

The testimony tends to show that the plaintiff was one of the incorporators and a director of the Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company. After this latter company was organized all the property of the Leach-Biltwell Motor Company was transferred to the Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company, and the various stockholders in the older corporation surrendered all their stock and received from the new corporation certificates of stock evidencing their ownership therein. The plaintiff remained in the employ of the Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company until some time in October, 1921. The agreement for the issuance of stock in the new corporation was made some time prior to March 31 of that year. At that time the plaintiff was a director of the new corporation. Some time in September, 1921, the defendant Toler purchased a number of shares of stock in the defendant Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company and executed a promissory note in part payment therefor, in the sum of $2,500. In October, 1921, the defendant corporation purchased from the plaintiff all of its common stock theretofore issued to and then owned and held by the plaintiff, and, as part payment therefor, assigned without recourse and delivered to the plaintiff the promissory note executed to defendant corporation by the defendant Toler, which is the note involved in this action. In December, 1921, the defendant Toler commenced an action against the defendant corporation whereby she sued to have the sale of stock theretofore purchased from the corporation rescinded and set aside on the grounds of fraud; that said action was compromised and in settlement the defendant corporation agreed with the defendant Toler that the transaction relative to the purchase of stock should be rescinded and that the corporation would hold defendant Toler harmless by reason of said note, and agreed before said note matured it would buy the same and return the note to the defendant Toler. This the corporation did not do. The pleadings in this suit instituted by the defendant Toler against the defendant corporation, as well as the cancellation of the purchase of stock, were admitted in testimony by the trial court. Upon the facts presented relative to the transaction, which we have here sketched, the court found as follows:

> "II. That on or about the 5th day of October, 1921, Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company attempted to transfer the promissory note herein sued upon to plaintiff, and, for that purpose, wrote upon the back of said note what purported to be an indorsement thereof to plaintiff without recourse, and then and there delivered said note to plaintiff with said purported indorsement thereon, and that plaintiff ever since has been in possession thereof, but the court further finds that said attempted transfer of said note to plaintiff by said Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company was made pursuant to an agreement made and entered into by and between said plaintiff and said Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company, in and by the terms of which agreement said plaintiff attempted to sell to said Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company and the said Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company attempted to purchase from plaintiff certain shares of the capital stock of Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company theretofore sold and delivered by Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company to plaintiff herein, and in and by the terms of which said agreement said Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company, in consideration thereof, and for no other consideration, attempted to transfer to said plaintiff said promissory note and delivered the same to him as aforesaid; that said promissory note constituted, at the time of the attempted transfer thereof by said Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company to said plaintiff, a part of the actual capital and assets of Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company with which it carried on its corporate business, and did not constitute surplus profits, and that said attempt on the part of said Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company to purchase said stock from said plaintiff was not made pursuant to any agreement made or entered into by or between said Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company and said plaintiff prior to or at the time plaintiff purchased said stock from said corporation by which said corporation was bound or obligated to repurchase said stock, or any part thereof, from plaintiff."

The court also further found that the transfer of the note by the corporation to the plaintiff was without any consideration to support it; that the transfer was against public policy; and that the plaintiff never acquired any ownership in said note. The court also found in finding No. 4 that the defendant Toler had instituted an action for the cancellation of her purchase of stock in the defendant corporation on the grounds of fraud, and that the purchase was canceled and rescinded and that the defendant Toler had restored to the defendant corporation everything of value which she had received on account of her agreement to purchase stock in the defendant corporation.

The chief contention of the appellant is that the stock purchased and held by him was purchased and held under an agreement with the corporation to repurchase the same. This contention is found adversely to the plaintiff and constitutes the principal attack made upon the judgment of the trial court.

Though not in the order presented, we will here consider the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the trial court. The plaintiff's assignment in this particular reads as follows:

"In finding as a conclusion of fact that the plaintiff did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant corporation was under contractual obligations to repurchase his stock."

[1] The finding of the court here attacked is not set forth in appellant's brief, nor in any supplement thereto, and it would be sufficient, under the rule laid down in the Estate of Berry, 195 Cal. 354, 358, 359, 233 P. 330, under such circumstances, to pass this question by as not being presented so as to require consideration, and so far as this question is concerned in the determination of this cause to hold adversely to the appellant's contention. However, as presented to us on appeal, we will state it is not a matter of preponderance of evidence, because if there is any substantial evidence supporting the finding of the trial court it is sufficient.

[2] An examination of the testimony shows that the preponderance of the testimony would appear to be against the appellant and not in his favor. The plaintiff testified that at the time he obtained his position in Leach-Biltwell Motor Company and also his stock therein he had a conversation with Mr. Leach, the president of the corporation, in which the following conversation took place. The witness said: "If I don't make good, what is going to happen?" Mr. Leach replied: "Why, we will give you your money back. * * *" "I couldn't give you the dates, but before I left the employ of the Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company, I had conversations about leaving the company. I was only supposed to be in the store-room about a month and then I was to have a better position; I didn't get a better position, waited a couple of months more; and probably three months after I went to work I spoke to Mr. Leach about getting a better position. He said he could not do anything more, nothing at present. I waited a little while longer and went to him again about three months afterwards. I wanted a better position or have him give my money back."

The only other evidence in behalf of the plaintiff is that of the witness King, called by him. This witness testified, in substance, as follows:

"About February 18, 1920, I had a conversation with Mr. Leach at the office of the company; Mr. Wagg, Mr. Hertzler, Mr. Leach, and myself were present, possibly the stenographer; the first time I remember that I was there, I took Mr. Wagg in and introduced him to Mr. Leach and Mr. Hertzler, and then afterwards we were in again and went over the matter more thoroughly; we went over the matter of the investment of Mr. Wagg in the company and getting a position with the company; he was to have the position of buyer, or purchasing agent; buyer was the word used—was the only position talked of; there had been a question as to Mr. Wagg's experience and Mr. Leach stated that they were willing to try Mr. Wagg out in that position and if he did not fill that position acceptably to the company, that they would find some other suitable position for him with the company.

"Q. Was there anything said at that time with regard to whether or not he was not satisfactory, that they would find a purchaser for his stock? A. Yes.

"Q. What was said in that connection? A. Mr. Leach stated definitely to myself that if Mr. Wagg wouldn't fill the position acceptable and didn't wish to remain with the company, that they would buy the stock back or give him his money back, at any rate see that he got it back."

The witness Leach testified substantially as follows:

"I am president and manager of the Leach Biltwell Motorcar company; I had the same position in Leach Biltwell Motor Company; Mr. Wagg purchased $10,000 worth of stock in Leach Biltwell Motor Company; when he purchased the same Mr. Hertzler, the salesman that sold him the stock, and myself were present, as well as Mr. Wagg; Mr. Hertzler is now dead; Mr. Wagg stated he was desirous of obtaining a position where his money went, that he had to work for a living and if he made an investment it would be necessary that he go with it, and we gave him a position; I told him his salary would be $150 a month, that he could go to work any time; nothing whatever was said about giving him a position as purchasing agent; we did not have any purchasing agent at that time. When we moved down to the Santa Fé avenue plant and our operations had been enlarged, and Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company had been incorporated, Mr. Wagg made application at that time for the position as purchasing agent; at the time Mr. Wagg purchased the stock in Leach Biltwell Motor Company, there was nothing mentioned at all about Leach Biltwell Motor Company buying the stock, nor was anything said about Leach Biltwell Motor Company repurchasing Mr. Wagg's stock during the time said company was operating the business; I do not remember any conversation in which Mr. Wagg said, 'What will happen if I don't make good?' I did not state to Mr. Wagg in effect that, 'If you don't make good, why, we will give you your money back', nor did I make to him any other statement to that effect; a new company was organized and called Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company; the stockholders of the old company exchanged their stock for stock in the new company; Mr. Wagg was a director in the Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company; he continued as an employee of the Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company from the time of its organization until some time in October of the same year; he was a director of the company at the time the agreement was made for the exchange of stock; the first time Mr. Wagg mentioned the repurchase of the stock was 60 to 90 days prior to the time he left the company; Wagg came in and said his wife was ill and wanted to return to Canada; that his salary of $150 would not permit his sending her there and he living in California, and asked if I could help him out. I said, 'Mr. Wagg I would be glad to do anything I can for you, you have been a good, faithful employee here; if it is possible for me to turn over to you the assets of the corporation that you can use, and take back your stock, I will endeavor to do so.' This matter came up on several different occasions until the time we actually did deliver to him something like $10,000 or $11,000 worth of notes that were in possession of the Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company, among which was the Toler note; these conversations commenced about three months prior to the time that he actually left our employ; the repurchase of his stock had not been mentioned prior to that time; there were several applications among other employees for the position of purchasing agent, of which Mr. Wagg was one; I told him I thought he was not qualified to fill the position; he told me that he thought he was. The Leach Biltwell Motorcar Company never operated at a profit."

Testimony was then introduced relative to the rescission and cancellation of the purchase of stock by the defendant Toler from the Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company, as we have herein stated. The testimony further shows that the sole consideration for the transfer of the stock from the plaintiff to the defendant corporation was the transfer to the plaintiff of notes held by it, including the note sued upon in this action.

The foregoing shows without the necessity of argument that the finding of the court that the purchase of plaintiff's stock in the Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company was not made upon any agreement by the company to repurchase the same is amply supported and does not fall within the line of cases holding that, under such circumstances, such agreements will be enforced.

[3] The admission of the pleadings and proceedings in the action instituted by the defendant Toler for the cancellation of her purchase of stock in the defendant corporation we think erroneous, but from the fact that finding No. 4 that such stock had been issued upon fraudulent representations and had been surrendered up and canceled and the defendant corporation agreed to hold the defendant Toler harmless on account of the note sued on in this action that had theretofore been transferred to the plaintiff as part payment for the purchase of his stock is wholly unnecessary to support the judgment in this action, and from the further fact that the testimony shows that the finding of the court that the purchase of the plaintiff's stock was attempted to be made by taking the assets of the company and transferring them to the plaintiff, we cannot well see that the plaintiff was at all prejudiced by the action of the court in admitting such testimony. If the purchase of the plaintiff's stock by the use of the assets of the corporation was unlawful and therefore void ab initio and transferred no property rights to the plaintiff, then and in that case, it would make no difference whether the defendant Leach-Biltwell Motorcar Company had acquired the Toler note by either fair or fraudulent means.

[4] By section 309, Civ. Code, directors of corporations are prohibited from using the assets of a corporation to purchase in behalf of the corporation its capital stock, except under well-defined conditions, such as are set forth in the case of Stewart v. Stewart Hotel Co., 33 Cal. App. 168, 164 P. 620. Nothing has been called to our attention that would take this case out of the general rule prohibiting directors from the purchase of the capital stock of a corporation and using the assets thereof for such purposes. Section 560, Penal Code, makes any such act a misdemeanor.

This case presents not merely the question of an ultra vires transaction on the part of the corporation, such as was at issue in the cases of Ingle v. Scales, 36 Cal. App. 412, 172 P. 169; Savings Bank v. Barrett, 126 Cal. 413, 58 P. 914; Savings Bank v. Burns, 104 Cal. 480, 38 P. 102; Bay City v. Broad, 136 Cal. 525, 69 P. 225; and Blochman v. F. G. Inv. Co., 177 Cal. 762, 171 P. 943. In all of these cases it is held, in substance, that a debtor of a corporation, who had received loans from or property from a corporation, cannot set up in defense of an action to recover the money loaned or the property involved that the act of the corporation in transferring the property or making the loan was ultra vires. As pointed out in the cases cited, such holding would be, in effect, to permit a party to a transaction to take advantage of his own wrong. Thus, banks are prohibited from making loans to any one individual above a certain percentage of their capital stock, and if a loan were made above such amount, it would be ultra vires on the part of the corporation, but it would not operate as a gift to the borrower by estopping the corporation from maintaining an action to recover the money loaned. It is evident that such cases have no bearing upon the questions here presented.

[5] The following cases are more nearly in point: In Poultry Producers, etc., v. Barlow, 189 Cal. 278, 208 P. 93, it was held that a clause in a subscription agreement purporting to give to a corporation the right, at its option, to purchase its shares of stock from its stockholders, was illegal and void. Likewise, in Chilberg v. Cross Land Co., 55 Cal. App. 678, 204 P. 28, it was held that a clause in a certificate of a corporation agreeing to return to stockholders the amount paid for shares out of the money received from the sale of real property of the corporation was void. The term "ultra vires" simply refers to the power of a corporation. It simply refers to those powers which are not conferred upon a corporation by the act of its creation and are violations of the trust reposed in the managing board. This difference is made plain in the Matter of the Assignment of the Mutual Ins. Co., 107 Iowa, 143, 77 N. W. 868, 70 Am. St. Rep. at page 158.

[6] The transaction under consideration is not merely one which is outside of and beyond the powers conferred upon the corporation by the provisions of the Codes, to which it owes its corporate existence, but is a distinct unlawful act so denominated by the Civil Code and made a crime by the Penal Code. The plaintiff in this case was one of the incorporators of the defendant as well as a stockholder therein, and could not, under such circumstances, become a purchaser in good faith of the Toler note by exchanging therefor his stock in the defendant corporation. As said in Schulte v. Boulevard Gardens Land Co., 164 Cal. 464, 129 P. 582, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1013, the plaintiff, as well as the corporation, was acting within the inhibitions of the Codes. In speaking of section 309 of the Civil Code, prohibiting directors of corporations from dividing, withdrawing, or paying to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock, or from reducing or increasing the capital stock, except as therein provided, thus defines the phrase "capital stock":

> "The phrase 'capital stock,' as used in this section, and in the section of the Practice Act from which the Code provision was drawn, has been construed in various decisions of this court. Its meaning has been definitely settled to be, not the shares of which the nominal capital is composed, but the actual capital, i. e., assets, with which the corporation carries on its corporate business. Martin v. Zellerbach, 38 Cal. 309, 99 Am. Dec. 365; San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. v. Bee, 48 Cal. 398; Kohl v. Lilienthal, 81 Cal. 385, 20 P. 401, 22 P. 689, 6 L. R. A. 520; Tapscott v. Mex. Col., etc., Co., 153 Cal. 667, 96 P. 271; Burne v. Lee, 156 Cal. 222, 104 P. 438."

[7] It is finally urged that the respondents were not entitled to raise this question. This objection, however, is not well taken, as the objection that the contract is absolutely void may be made at any time. In Morey v. Paladini, 187 Cal. 727, 203 P. 760, where the question of a transaction being void is first raised on appeal and its consideration objected to on that ground, the court in holding the transaction illegal and void, states the rule as follows:

> "The respondent objects to a consideration of the point upon the ground that objection comes too late. But a void contract, a contract against public policy or against the mandate of the statute, may not be the foundation of any action either in law or in equity. Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387—390, 18 P. 391, 9 Am. St. Rep. 211; Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 91, 94, 45 P. 1015, 33 L. R. A. 750, 55 Am. St. Rep. 63. As the appellant comes now into court pleading that he has violated the law and is seeking relief based upon his own unlawful acts, respondent contends that the court should leave him where it finds him. But neither the silence nor the consent of the parties justifies the court in retaining jurisdiction of such an action. Ball v. Putnam, 123 Cal. 134, 140, 55 P. 773. Any one sued upon a contract may set up a defense that it is a violation of an act of Congress, and if it is found to be so, that fact will constitute a good defense to the action. Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 88, 22 S. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058. See, also, Rose's U. S. Notes. The burden ordinarily rests upon the party asserting the invalidity of the contract to show how and why it is unlawful (Harbison-Walker Co. v. Stanton, 227 Pa. 55, 63, 75 A. 988), and, as a general rule, cases will not be reversed upon points which the respondent has not had an opportunity to discuss, but in cases of this kind it matters not that no objection is made by either party. When the court discovers a fact which indicates that the contract is illegal and ought not to be enforced, it will, of its own motion, instigate an inquiry in relation thereto."

[8] As we have said, the pleadings and finding in this case are not set out in appellant's brief nor in any supplement thereto, nor is the testimony, other than that of the plaintiff and of plaintiff's witness King, copied herein set forth in appellant's brief, nor does the appellant print anything indicating the grounds upon which objection was made to the introduction in this case of the pleadings and proceedings in the case of Toler against the defendant corporation, and, so far as we have been able to ascertain, the typewritten transcript shows only that the plaintiff objected to the introduction of such testimony as being immaterial. The sufficiency of this objection is questioned by the respondent, but whether sufficient or insufficient is unnecessary for us to decide, because in holding that the attempted sale of the note and transfer thereof as the assets of the company to the plaintiff, in return for his stock, was void ab initio and that the Code provisions apply as well to a stockholder as to a corporation, is determinative of the case at bar and shows that the plaintiff has no right of property or ownership in the note in question, nothing further needs to be decided.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PRESTON, Justice pro tem.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

199 Cal. 749

Edward Velardi MANRIQUEZ, Petitioner, v. SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR the COUNTY of LOS ANGELES, and Hon. Hugh J. Crawford, Judge of Said Court, Respondents. (L. A. 9591.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1926.) In Bank. Application for writ of mandate prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Hugh J. Crawford, Judge, to compel restoration to calendar and disposition of motion for new trial. Writ granted. Alan Nichols, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and McIntyre Faries, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. At the close of the oral argument the Chief Justice announced the decision of the court as follows: This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent superior court, and the judge thereof, to restore to its calendar, and to dispose of, a motion for a new trial, in an action entitled Eileen M. M. Manriquez v. Edward Velardi Manriquez, No. D37507, pending in said court. The record discloses that the trial judge, when the motion was called for hearing, being of the opinion that the defendant in the case and the moving party for a new trial was in contempt of court for noncompliance with an order of the court previously made allowing alimony, made and entered an order in which it is recited that the motion for a new trial came on for hearing, A. Moresby White representing the plaintiff, and Alan Nichols representing the defendant, and ordering that said motion for a new trial be dismissed on account of the defendant being in contempt of court for noncompliance with a court order. The attorney for the defendant duly excepted thereto. The court is of the opinion that, under the circumstances disclosed by the record which is now before it on the petition and the return of the respondent, the trial court acted in abuse of its discretion in making the order complained of, and that it is that court's duty to restore said motion for a new trial to its calendar, and to proceed to dispose of the same on its merits as required by law. Let the writ issue as prayed for.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

252 PACIFIC REPORTER

200 Cal. 201

MOUSSEAU v. GAREY, County Auditor.
(L. A. 9075.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1926.)

1. Counties ⚷72—County officer is not prohibited from performing services for county other than official duties and receiving compensation therefor (Pol. Code, § 4290).

Pol. Code, § 4290, making salaries provided for full compensation for services rendered by county officers, does not prohibit county officer from performing services for county other than his official duties and receiving compensation for such services.

2. Counties ⚷74(2)—County clerk may be lawfully compensated for services as purchasing agent while occupying latter office (Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 21, and §§ 4246, 4290).

Under Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 21, and 4246, 4290, county clerk may legally accept employment from board of supervisors as county purchasing agent while occupying office of county clerk and may be compensated for services as purchasing agent.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Mandamus by Calvin G. Mousseau to compel W. D. Garey, Auditor of Imperial County, to issue warrants in payment of plaintiff's services as purchasing agent of county. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. R. Utley, Dist. Atty., of El Centro, for appellant.

Calvin G. Mousseau, MacDonald & Thompson, of Los Angeles, and Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Respondent is the duly elected and qualified county clerk of the county of Imperial, having been elected to that position at the general election held in November, 1922. He qualified as such officer and entered upon the discharge of his duties on the first Monday in January, 1923, and has ever since continued to fill said office and to discharge the duties thereof. On the 15th day of January, 1923, the board of supervisors of said county appointed or employed him to act as county purchasing agent and fixed his compensation for the services to be performed under said appointment at the sum of $50 per month. He accepted such employment and discharged the duties required by him thereunder up to the 1st day of June, 1923. His salary was paid for the first three months of his employment, but the appellant, the duly elected, qualified, and acting auditor of said county, refused to allow respondent's demands for salary for the months of April and May, 1923. Thereupon respondent instituted this proceeding in mandamus to compel appellant to issue warrants in payment of respondent's services as purchasing agent for the months of April and May, 1923. There is no dispute as to any of the facts in the case and the only question presented for decision is one of law, and that is whether the respondent while occupying the office of, and drawing the salary as, county clerk of said county, can legally accept other employment from said county and be paid therefor from the public funds of said county.

The county of Imperial belongs to the seventeenth class and the salary of the county clerk of said county at the date of respondent's election to said office as fixed by section 4246 of the Political Code was the sum of $2,400 per annum. By section 4290 of the same Code it is provided that:

> "The salaries and fees provided in this title shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers named in this title either as officers or ex officio officers, their deputies and assistants, unless in this title otherwise provided. * * *"

[1, 2] By subdivision 21 of section 4041 of the Political Code, the board of supervisors is given authority to appoint a purchasing agent. This section was in force at the time of plaintiff's election. Therefore, the duties of the purchasing agent were at no time any part of the duties to be performed by the plaintiff as county clerk of said county. The board of supervisors had no authority to require plaintiff in his official capacity to perform these duties. Whoever the board appointed purchasing agent would perform the duties of this office as purchasing agent and not in any other capacity. When, therefore, plaintiff was appointed to this position and entered upon the discharge of the duties of purchasing agent, he performed said duties not as county clerk of said county or as ex officio county clerk. The salary paid him as purchasing agent was not paid him for services rendered either as county clerk or ex officio county clerk of said county. Had plaintiff resigned his office as county clerk the next day after his appointment as purchasing agent said resignation would have had no effect upon his position as purchasing agent and he would have continued to discharge the duties of said last-named position so long as the board of supervisors continued him in such employment.

Therefore section 4290 of the Political Code, providing that the salaries therein provided shall be in full compensation of all services rendered by county officers either as officers or ex officio officers, has no application to the compensation paid plaintiff for services which had no connection with, and which were entirely independent of, his duties as county clerk. This section does not attempt to deal with the question as to whether county officers can or cannot perform services for their respective counties outside of their official duties and be compensated for such services. It certainly contained no provision prohibiting a county officer from performing services on behalf of his county other than his official duties and to receive compensation for such services, and our attention has not been called, nor have we been able to discover, any other statute of the state which makes such prohibition. It is true that there is language to be found in the case of County of Humboldt v. Stern, 136 Cal. 63, 68 P. 324, which might support such a contention, but a careful reading of this case, we think, will convince any one that such language was not necessary for its decision and that it is mere dictum. Accordingly, we find nothing either in the statutes or in the decisions of the courts of this state that made the plaintiff ineligible to the position of purchasing agent. Having been appointed to such position by the board of supervisors, who are specially authorized to make said appointment, we see no real reason why he is not entitled to receive the compensation agreed to be paid him for his services in said position.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; PRESTON, J.; SHENK, J.

200 Cal. 152

In re SMITH'S ESTATE.

SMITH v. SPAULDING.

(L. A. 9122.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1926.)

1. Wills 🔑53(2)—Evidence concerning unsoundness of mind before or after executing will is important only as showing condition at time of executing it.

Where testator's competency is attacked, question is his mental condition at time of execution of will, and evidence of unsoundness of mind before or after execution of will, is important only in so far as showing mental condition at time of execution of will.

2. Wills 🔑52(1)—To overcome presumption, testator's unsoundness of mind must be shown by preponderance of evidence.

To overcome presumption of sanity, contestant must show that testator was of unsound mind by preponderance of evidence.

3. Wills 🔑34—Only insanity, resulting in general incompetency, or hallucination, or delusion, of which will is product, invalidates will.

Mental derangement to invalidate will must be insanity, resulting in mental incompetency generally, or hallucination, or delusion, of which the will is the product.

4. Wills 🔑50—Testator need only be able to understand nature of act, nature and situation of property, and relations to persons having claims on bounty and affected by will; "competent."

Testator is "competent," if he has mental capacity to understand nature of act, to understand and recollect nature and situation of his property and his relations to persons having claims on his bounty and whose interests are affected by his will.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Competent.]

5. Wills 🔑324(2)—Aged testator, suffering from auto-intoxication, held not incompetent, as matter of law.

Evidence that 79 year old testator executed will when suffering from attack of acute auto-intoxication held insufficient to establish testator's mental incompetency, as matter of law.

6. Wills 🔑324(3)—That testator executed will during attack of auto-intoxication, in presence of sole beneficiary, held not to establish undue influence, as matter of law.

Evidence that 79 year old testator was suffering fatal attack of acute auto-intoxication and executed will, in presence of sole beneficiary, to exclusion of wife, from whom he was separated. held insufficient to establish undue influence, as matter of law.

7. Wills 🔑155(1)—"Undue influence" is exercise of acts toward another person, by which latter's mind is controlled.

"Undue influence" is exercise of acts or conduct by one person towards another person, by which latter's mind is subjugated to that of former.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Undue Influence.]

8. Wills 🔑166(7)—Substantial proof of pressure overcoming volition is required to set aside will for undue influence, proof of interest and opportunity alone being insufficient.

To establish that will was executed under undue influence requires substantial proof of pressure which overpowered testator's volition when will was made, and proof of interest and opportunity alone is insufficient.

9. Wills 🔑52(2)—No presumption of incompetency arises from nor is burden of proof shifted by will being unnatural, unfair, or unjust.

That will is unnatural, unfair, or unjust does not raise presumption of incompetency or shift burden of proof to proponent.

10. Wills 🔑163(6)—No presumption of undue influence arises from nor is burden of proof shifted by will being unnatural, unfair, or unjust.

That will is unnatural, unfair, or unjust does not raise presumption of undue influence, nor shift burden of proof to proponent.

11. Wills 🔑384—Court's declaration that contestant, claiming undue influence and incompetency, would waste time by introducing further similar expert medical testimony held not prejudicial error.

Court's declaration that expert medical testimony did not assist him, and that contestant who claimed incompetency and undue influence would waste time in introducing further similar testimony, held not prejudicial error, where court did not preclude contestant from introducing further testimony, and hypothetical question contained matters not established by evidence.

12. Wills 🔑386—Discrepancies and falsities in proponent's evidence are for trial court.

It is for trial court to weigh discrepancies and falsities in proponent's evidence.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John Perry Wood, Judge.

Application by John E. Spaulding for the probate of the will of D. K. Smith, deceased, opposed by Barbara M. Smith, contestant. From a judgment in favor of proponent admitting the will to probate, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

G. P. Adams and W. W. Orme, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank G. Tyrrell and R. A. Jarrott, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order and judgment of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles admitting to probate the will of D. K. Smith, deceased.

The decedent at the time of his death, which occurred on February 28, 1925, was 79 years of age. His widow, contestant and appellant, survived him, but he left no issue. By a will bearing date February 23, 1925, the decedent devised and bequeathed his entire estate to the proponent and respondent, who was a friend of some years' standing. On March 5, 1925, the proponent filed a petition for probate of said will and prayed that letters of administration with the will annexed be issued to him. The appellant thereupon filed her contest, alleging, among other things, that she was the surviving widow of said decedent; that at the time of the execution of the will the decedent was not of sound and disposing mind; and that the execution thereof was procured through undue influence. A trial of said contest was had before the court without a jury, and the order and judgment admitting the will to probate, and from which this appeal is prosecuted, were duly entered.

Inasmuch as the contestant reiterates herein that the decedent was without testamentary capacity at the time the will was executed, and that said will was the creature and product of undue influence exerted upon the testator by the proponent thereof, we will set forth, in substance, the evidence relating to or bearing upon those issues.

Barbara M. Smith, the contestant, testified that she was the widow of the decedent, and that he was 79 years of age at the time of his death; that he was taken sick on February 23, 1925; that he was seriously ill, his heart failing and his body in a state of utter collapse; that he refused to leave the cabin where he had been living in back of her house and declined to go to a hospital; that she saw the proponent about the decedent's cabin on the day the will was executed; that proponent came to her house at 9 p. m. on said day, and during the course of the conversation inquired if the witness thought that decedent would die during the night; that she went to decedent's cabin at 10 p. m. that night, and the proponent and his wife were there; that decedent was in bed "in a semiconscious condition, with his eyes half open, and his mouth open, panting for breath"; that he was "apparently unconscious—in a stupor or daze"; that decedent did not recognize her; that "his mind worked very slowly"; that she saw decedent at 5:30 a. m. the following morning, and "he was very much worse than the night before"; that "his mind was dazed"; that he was taken to a hospital on February 24, 1925; that in the afternoon of said day he "appeared to be better"; that "he appeared rational then."

Thomas Lavell testified that he knew the decedent and his wife intimately; that he saw decedent at the hospital on February 25, 1925, and found him to be "an extremely sick man"; that he was "really too sick to be conversed with" and "was half out of his head, you might say"; that he answered some questions "irrelevantly," and others "relevantly"; that when he first saw decedent at the hospital he thought he was semidelirious because he failed to reply to some questions.

Marcel L. Maxey testified that he saw decedent at the hospital the day preceding his death and "he seemed rather in a daze."

John E. Spaulding, proponent, called on behalf of the contestant, under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, testified: That he stayed with the decedent on February 23, 1925, continually from 9:30 a. m. until 6 a. m. the following day with the exception of but a few short periods. That the contestant came to the cabin a few times during this period to see and inquire of the decedent. That she asked the witness if the decedent had made "out any papers," and suggested that he prevail upon the decedent to go to a hospital as she did not "want him to stay down here and disgrace me any longer." That, in response to the decedent's interrogatories, he conveyed to him the substance of the witness' conversation with the contestant; that the decedent stated: "Well, she is awful confounded interested about me now. I will make a will. Look over in the drawer and you will find some paper." That he dictated the will to the witness' wife. That decedent signed it, and witness and his wife also signed at the end thereof. That decedent said, "You will need a witness to this. Go and get Mr. Britt." That the other witness was secured. That decedent asked the proponent to keep the will. That decedent discussed some of the property with him. That he and his wife were alone with the decedent during the night on which the will was executed.

Dr. John L. Kirkpatrick testified, in response to a lengthy hypothetical question, that, in his opinion, the decedent at the time of executing the will was "irrational and incompetent"—this answer was apparently based on his next statement that:

> "A man of his age, if he was suffering from this acute auto-intoxication and absorption of poisons, and he was irrational Monday morning and he was also irrational Tuesday, he certainly could not have recovered any normal state Monday night. If he died of acute auto-intoxication, he would not be clear at any time. There might be apparently intervals in which he would seem to be talking all right, but he would never be perfectly clear to a person who was skilled and was watching him."

On cross-examination, the witness testified that, if the decedent at the time of executing the will had intelligently discussed his property and exercised good business judgment, he would "think it was all right." In response to a question propounded by the court, the witness stated that if the decedent was not irrational on Monday and Tuesday, there was nothing else to indicate that decedent was incompetent when he executed the will "only his age and his general sickness."

Miss L. J. Sherrod testified that she had been the decedent's day nurse; that he recognized all of his friends that came to see him and spoke with them; that "he appeared to be rational, all the time, and conscious"; that he answered questions "rationally and reasonably"; that "his mentality seemed quite clear all the time."

Mrs. Geneva Spaulding, wife of the proponent, testified that decedent dictated the will to her, and that she wrote it on paper; that decedent signed it, and requested the witness and her husband to sign their names, and suggested that a witness be procured; that her husband secured Mr. Robert L. Britt, and he signed as a witness at decedent's request and after the latter had declared the instrument to be his will and acknowledged his signature; that the will was executed after 10 p. m., on February 23, 1925.

Robert L. Britt testified that proponent came for him after midnight on February 23, 1925; that they went to the decedent's cabin; that he conversed with the decedent; that decedent stated he had made and signed a will, which decedent read to the witness and asked the latter to sign his name as a witness thereto; that "a man that would talk as intelligently as he did, especially in a business matter of that kind, I would consider of very sound mind."

As indicated at the commencement of this synoptical statement, we have attempted to set forth, in substance, only that evidence which might have some bearing on the issues of testamentary capacity and undue influence.

[1, 2] The actual mental condition of the decedent at the time of the execution of the will is the question to be determined upon a contest based on his alleged incompetency, and evidence tending to show unsoundness of mind either before or after the execution of the will is important only in so far as it tends to show mental condition at the time of the execution of the will. Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 192 P. 1085; Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 227, 86 P. 695, 9 Ann. Cas. 795. To overcome the presumption of sanity, the contestant must show affirmatively and by a preponderance of the evidence that the testator was of unsound mind at the time he executed his will. Estate of Casarotti, supra; Estate of Dow, 181 Cal. 106, 183 P. 794.

[3] It is declared in Estate of Perkins, supra, that "Mental derangement sufficient to invalidate a will must be insanity in one of two forms: (1) Insanity of such broad character as to establish mental incompetency generally; or (2) some specific and narrower form of insanity under which the testator is the victim of some hallucination or delusion," and, even in this latter class of cases, the evidence "must establish that the will itself was the creature or product of such hallucination or delusion."

[4] A testator is of sound and disposing mind and memory, if, at the time of making his will, he has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the act he is doing, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property, and to remember and understand his relations to the persons who have claims upon his bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument. Estate of Sexton (Cal. Sup.) 251 P. 778; Estate of De Laveaga, 165 Cal. 607, 133 P. 307; Estate of Huston, 163 Cal. 166, 124 P. 852.

[5] In our opinion, the evidence outlined above is not sufficient to establish that the testator was incompetent at the time he executed his will. Disregarding any conflicting evidence and resolving whatever conflicts there may be in the evidence in favor of and granting to the contestant every possible inference to be drawn from the evidence, there still remains a hiatus in the chain of proof that, at the time of the execution of the will, the testator was mentally incompetent, or that he was at the time subject to delusions which, in any manner, affected his testamentary act.

[6-8] Nor do we think the evidence above narrated is sufficient to warrant and support an inference that the testator was induced to make the will in question as the result of the undue influence of the sole beneficiary named therein. Undue influence has been repeatedly defined to be "the exercise of acts or conduct by one person toward another person by means of which the mind of the latter is subjugated to the will of the person seeking to control it." Estate of Newhall, 190 Cal. 709, 717, 214 P. 231, 234 (28 A. L. R. 778). It is declared in Estate of Bryson, 191 Cal. 521, 541, 217 P. 525, 533, that:

> "In order to establish that a will has been executed under undue influence, it is necessary to show, not only that such influence has been exercised, but also that it has produced an effect upon the mind of the testator by which the will which he executes is not the expression of his own desires. * * * The presumption of undue influence is not raised by proof of interest and opportunity alone. In order to set aside a will for undue influence, there must be substantial proof of a pressure which overpowered the volition of the testator at the time the will was made."

The evidence of the contestant relating to the issue of undue influence does no more than show that the proponent had the opportunity to make the alleged false statements attributed to him touching asserted conversations with the contestant. But there is no showing, in addition, that the mind of the testator, at the time of the making of the will, was subjugated to and dominated by the desires and designs of the proponent to the point of undue influence. Moreover, there is a conflict in the evidence as to the correctness or falsity of these statements made by the proponent to the decedent, and this was within the province of the trial court to consider.

[9, 10] The fact that the will of a testator may be unnatural, unfair, or unjust creates of itself no presumption that the decedent was incompetent or that the instrument was procured by undue influence, nor does it shift the burden of proof to the proponent. In Estate of Martin, 170 Cal. 657, 663, 151 P. 138, 141, it is declared that:

> "A testator has the right to make an unjust, or an unreasonable, or even a cruel will, and that no will may be legally set aside upon the mere establishment that it is such a will."

We do not wish to be understood as characterizing the will in question as an "unfair, unjust, or unnatural" will. In our view, the evidence tends to stamp it as a fair and just will, for it was shown that the decedent and proponent had been intimate friends for many years; that decedent was solicitous of the proponent's well-being and had often loaned him money for various purposes; that he had often expressed the desire and willingness to assist proponent in acquiring his own home; and that the proponent had cared for the decedent in his last illness. On the other hand, the evidence tends to show that the decedent and contestant had experienced certain marital difficulties, which terminated in the filing of a divorce action by the contestant in 1916 or 1917; that said divorce action proved abortive; that decedent and contestant had never resumed marital relations thereafter; and that the decedent had stated that the contestant had sufficient property in her own name. When these matters and circumstances are borne in mind, they tend, in some degree, to account for and explain the dispositive provisions of the decedent's will.

[11] We are not prepared to hold that the contestant was injured as a result of the trial court's declaration that he was not assisted in the determination of the cause by the testimony of Dr. J. L. Kirkpatrick, and that the introduction of similar expert testimony would therefore tend to "waste time." The court did not preclude the contestant from introducing further expert testimony, for he further declared:

> "I don't want to be arbitrary; if you feel that you want to put him on, I will give you the opportunity to do so."

Moreover, as contestant's plan was to ask "the same line of questions propounded to Dr. Kirkpatrick," and as the principal hypothetical question put to said witness contained matters which had not been established by the evidence adduced, it follows that contestant suffered no prejudicial injury as a result of the court's expression of its attitude in the premises.

The rulings of the court below, excluding certain testimony of Dr. W. P. Burke and Dr. J. F. Scherfee as being privileged, within the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 1881, Code of Civil Procedure, were correct. In re Redfield, 116 Cal. 637, 644, 48 P. 794; Estate of Nelson, 132 Cal. 182, 187, 64 P. 294; Estate of Budan, 156 Cal. 230, 232, 104 P. 442.

An examination of the several asserted "errors in law" fails to disclose anything prejudicial to the contestant.

[12] It was for the trial court to weigh and pass upon the asserted discrepancies and falsities in the evidence adduced by the proponent.

For the foregoing reasons, the order and judgment appealed from are hereby affirmed.

---

200 Cal. 143

CITY OF SACRAMENTO v. GODDARD, Mayor. (Sac. 4002.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1926.)

1. Municipal corporations 🔑918(2)—Submission of more than one bond proposition at election is not prohibited (Const. art. 11, § 18; St. 1901, p. 27).

Const. art. 11, § 18, does not prohibit submission of more than one bond proposition or purpose at same election, and St. 1901, p. 27, authorizes such submission, but provides that it shall require votes of two-thirds of voters voting.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑918(4)—Words "so voting" held to relate to electors voting at bond election, and, if two-thirds vote "Yes," proposition carries (Sacramento Charter, § 92).

Under Sacramento Charter, § 92, providing that, if two-thirds of electors "so voting" at election vote in favor of bonds, council may proceed to issue them, words "so voting" relate back to electors voting, and, if two-thirds of electors vote in favor thereof, proposition is carried.

In Bank.

Original proceeding for mandamus by the City of Sacramento against A. E. Goddard, as Mayor of the City of Sacramento. Writ granted.

R. L. Shinn, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Hinsdale & Otis and Devlin & Devlin, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The city of Sacramento prays for a peremptory writ of mandate directing the respondent, as mayor of the city, to attest and sign certain bonds, issuance of which, it is alleged, was duly authorized by action of the voters. The respondent has demurred to the petition, and raises the question whether or not the bonds were authorized by the requisite number of electors voting therefor.

At a special election regularly called and held for that purpose on the 29th day of June, 1926, twelve different propositions for the issuance of municipal public improvement bonds, separately designated and stated on the ballots, were submitted to the electors of the city of Sacramento. Among them was one designated as proposition No. 4, for the issuance of bonds in the sum of $350,000, to provide for the installation of additional filter beds in the filtration plant of the city, and the purchase and installation of additional equipment for the plant which is a part of the city's water supply system. A total of 9,890 votes were cast at the election; 9,412 votes were cast on proposition No. 4, 6,298 of which were for the bonds, and 3,114 in opposition thereto. It thus appears that 23 more than two-thirds of those voting on proposition No. 4, but 296 less than two-thirds of all those voting at the election, cast their votes in favor of the bonds for the filtration plant. All the proceedings leading up to and including the election were regular, but respondent refused to attest the bonds upon the ground, and for the reason, that they had not been authorized by two-thirds of all the votes cast at the election.

[1, 2] Section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution prohibits a city from incurring a bonded indebtedness, such as that here sought, "without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose." So far as this provision governs, it is not directly provided that more than one purpose may be submitted at the same election, but such submission is not prohibited. The Legislature, however, by a subsequent enactment (Stats. 1901, p. 27), authorized the submission of more than one proposition or purpose at the same election, but provided that it shall "require the votes of two-thirds of all the voters voting at such special election to authorize the issuance of the bonds." It is conceded here that, if the sufficiency of the vote on the filtration bond issue is to be determined in accordance with the provisions of the statute, proposition No. 4 did not carry. Petitioner, however, relies upon a provision of the Sacramento city charter to support its contention that the bonds received the favorable vote of a sufficient number of the electors. This provision appears to be peculiar to the Sacramento charter, for which reason the question presented in this case is one de novo, and is not determined by any of the former rulings of this court. The language of the charter is as follows:

> "Section 92: The city council may contract bonded indebtedness as follows: It shall, by order duly passed by Ayes and Noes, recorded in its journal of proceedings, specify the particular purpose for which the indebtedness is to be created, and the amount of bonds which it is proposed to issue. * * * The ballot shall be printed 'For the Issue of Bonds. Yes.' 'For the Issue of Bonds. No.' If two-thirds of the electors of the city so voting at such election shall vote in favor of issuing bonds, and not otherwise, the city council may proceed to issue the amount of bonds specified."

It is the contention of the petitioner that the use of the words "so voting" (italicized by us) is significant. It claims that the framers of the charter had in mind the statute of 1901 requiring all the votes cast at such an election to be determinative of the requisite number for each particular purpose, and sought to obviate the statutory restriction by using the words "so voting," thereby making the vote on each proposition the basis of determining whether or not such proposition "so voted" upon was legally assented to by the electors of the city. If that were the purpose, and it seems only reasonable to believe that it was, it was but the forerunner of the action of the voters generally throughout the state at the last general election. The section of the Constitution, supra, was amended to provide that, whenever two or more propositions for incurring any indebtedness or liability are submitted at the same election to the electors of any city, or other specified political subdivision, the votes cast for and against each proposition shall be counted separately, and, when two-thirds of the qualified electors, voting on any one of such propositions, vote in favor thereof, such proposition shall be deemed adopted.

We are of the view that the words "so voting," as used in the Sacramento charter, were intended to, and do, relate back to those electors who vote "Yes" or "No" on any particular bond proposition, and that, if two-thirds of the electors of the city voting on any separate proposition vote in favor thereof, as was done in the instant case, the proposition is carried. No cases have been called to our attention in which the precise question has had judicial consideration, but an interesting discussion of the subject will be found in Montgomery County Fiscal Court v. Trimble, 104 Ky. 629, 47 S. W. 773, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 827, 42 L. R. A. 738.

Let a writ of mandate issue as prayed for.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; CURTIS, J.

---

200 Cal. [illegible]

MILLER v. LYONS. (L. A. 8536.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1927.)

1. Automobiles 🔑244(18)—Evidence held to show negligence in placing truck carrying girder across road after dark.

Evidence held to show defendant was negligent in placing truck carrying steel girder completely across road after dark when there was "considerable traffic."

2. Automobiles 🔑244(36)—Evidence held to show negligence in placing truck across road was proximate cause of automobile driver's injury by protruding girder.

Evidence held to show negligence in placing truck carrying steel girder completely across road after dark was proximate cause of death of driver of approaching automobile, who ran into girder protruding beyond end of truck.

3. Automobiles 🔑245(23)—Negligence as to automobile driver injured by girder on truck held question of fact.

Determination of whether defendant was negligent in placing truck across road, and whether negligence was proximate cause of death of automobile driver who ran into girder which was on truck, held for trial court.

4. Appeal and error ⚷1010(1)—Findings and judgment of trial court supported by evidence will not be disturbed.

Where there is evidence ample to justify findings and judgment of trial court, Supreme Court will not disturb them.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action by Vada Lou Miller against Jerome F. Lyons. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Joe Crider, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles awarding to the plaintiff damages in the sum of $10,000 for the death of her husband, George Miller, caused by the alleged negligence of the appellant's employees. The case was tried by the court without a jury.

[1, 2] In appellant's brief the sole ground of the appeal is thus stated:

> "We insist that there is no evidence whatsoever justifying the judgment, and that it is against the weight of all of the evidence. This is our sole basis for appeal."

The casualty occurred after dark and at about 7:30 o'clock on the evening of November 7, 1922. At the time of the accident the deceased, an oil well worker, was driving a Dodge automobile along Norwalk road, a highway having a paved surface 22 feet wide, in a southerly direction and at a speed of approximately 25 miles an hour. Norwalk road is intersected at right angles at a certain point by a narrow road approximately 15 feet in width. The employees of the appellant were operating a truck upon said Norwalk road in a northerly direction just prior to the accident. The truck was 24 feet long and carried a steel girder 47½ feet in length, known in oil field terms as a Kelley, diagonally across the bed thereof. It was the purpose of the driver of the truck to back it in a westerly direction into the narrow intersecting road, and to accomplish this purpose he turned the steering wheel so as to face the truck in an easterly direction down the intersecting road, intending later to back in a westerly direction. While the truck and its load were thus obstructing the entire width of the Norwalk road the deceased came upon the scene in his automobile. He was on the westerly and proper side of the Norwalk road when his car collided with that portion of the steel girder which protruded beyond the rear end of the bed of the truck. The deceased died shortly thereafter from the injuries thus incurred.

At the time of the accident, as established by the evidence and conceded by appellant, the front end of the truck was approximately 3 feet east of the easterly edge of the paved portion of the Norwalk road and the girder protruded about 3 feet beyond said front end of the truck. In this position the rear end of the truck extended beyond the center line of the highway and into the westerly half thereof and the girder extended well beyond the westerly line of said highway.

The evidence of one of the appellant's employees engaged on the truck at the time is to the effect that the deceased was first seen to be proceeding in the direction of the truck at a speed of 25 miles an hour when he was approximately 1,200 feet away. This witness also testified that the deceased's car struck the girder about 20 seconds after he had first been seen approaching the truck. Mathematical computation reveals that the witness was not seriously in error in estimating this period of time. There is further evidence to the effect that the engine of the truck was "dead" at the time of the accident and that there was "considerable" traffic passing along the Norwalk road or highway at said time.

Under the circumstances herein presented, we are of the opinion that the trial court properly determined that it was an act of negligence upon the part of the appellant's employees to place their vehicle with its load entirely and completely across the Norwalk road at a time when the traffic on said highway would be endangered thereby. To place a truck carrying a steel girder 47½ feet long across said highway after dark and at a time when traffic upon said highway would reach the position of the truck in less than one-half minute constituted a breach of duty upon the part of the appellant's servants and agents to operate the motor truck in such a manner as not to injure third parties. The breach of said duty was clearly the proximate cause of the deceased's death.

We are not unmindful that one of the appellant's employees attempted to warn the deceased of the impending accident by leaving the truck and waving his arms. This action proved ineffective and futile in the darkness, however, as said employee was without an illuminated signal. The incident cannot serve to relieve the appellant of liability. The mere fact that a lighted lantern had been attached to either end of the steel girder likewise would not serve to relieve the appellant of responsibility, for, as indicated in the above summary statement of the evidence, the ends of the girder protruded beyond the paved limits of the Norwalk road, and lanterns attached thereto would in all probability be assumed by approaching motorists to indicate the situation of obstructions adjacent to the highway. This would seem to be well illustrated by the instant case, as the evidence tends to show that the deceased, in an effort to avoid striking the appellant's truck, altered the course of his automobile, and by so doing brought it into contact with that part of said steel girder which protruded beyond the rear end of the truck.

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[3, 4] All of these matters were for the trial court to consider and weigh. When there is evidence ample to justify the findings and judgment of the court below this court will not, under the well-settled rule, disturb said findings and judgment. In our opinion the evidence herein is sufficient to warrant a finding of negligence on the part of the appellant's servants and agents, which negligence was the proximate and sole cause of the deceased's death.

Appellant's contention touching the condition of the headlights and brakes on the automobile driven by the deceased is without merit, for there is an utter lack of evidence tending to show that they were defective.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is hereby affirmed.

---

80 Cal. App. 371

SAN JOAQUIN GROCERY CO. v. TREWHITT et al. (Civ. 5617.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 20, 1926.)

1. Adjoining landowners 🔑8—Evidence held insufficient to show damage to adjoining property by water was caused by water discharged by defendant contractor.

Owner of building on adjoining lot held not entitled to recover damages from foundation contractors, in absence of evidence that water discharged by them, as distinguished from water subsequently discharged by brick masons employed by another independent contractor, "drained, seeped, and percolated" into plaintiff's basement, as alleged in complaint.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1067—Refusal of instruction to find for foundation contractors, if brick masons' negligence caused water damage to goods in adjoining building, held prejudicial error.

In action for damages to goods in building by water discharged on adjoining land by defendant, foundation contractors, refusal of instruction to find for defendants, if damage was caused by negligence of brick masons as employees of independent contractor, held prejudicial error, though defendants did not plead that such masons' employer was an independent contractor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin Grocery Company against W. D. Trewhitt and another, copartners doing business under the firm name of the Trewhitt-Shields Company, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant partners appeal. Reversed.

Chester H. Warlow, of Fresno, for appellants.

Gearhart, Carling & Cummings, of Fresno, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to recover a judgment for damages. The defendants answered, and a trial was had in the lower court before the court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and a judgment was entered thereon. The defendants moved for a new trial on all the statutory grounds; the motion was denied. Thereafter the defendants appealed from the judgment under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appellants present several points, each of which they claim would support a reversal, but in the view that we take of the record it will be unnecessary to consider anything except the claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict and that the trial court erred in refusing to give one of the instructions requested by the appellants. We will take those points up in the order stated, but before doing so it is necessary to make a statement of facts.

The plaintiff is a corporation engaged in conducting a grocery store in the city of Fresno. It also maintains a warehouse, which is located on Fulton street a short distance south of Los Angeles street. Back of the warehouse on the eastern side is an alley. The plaintiff's holding includes lots 18 to 26. The property on the northerly side of the warehouse and bounded by Fulton street, Los Angeles street, the alley, and by plaintiff's warehouse, was purchased by Ben Tyre. The Tyre holding includes lots 27 to 32. When Mr. Tyre purchased his lots some of them were occupied by dwellings. He proceeded to wreck the dwellings, to level up the ground, and to construct a building covering his holding. Some of the dwellings had cellars. Those cellars were filled up and the grounds were scraped so as to make the surface level. In this behalf, in its complaint, the plaintiff alleges:

> "That on or about the 12th day of February, 1923, the defendants, their employees, agents, and servants, leveled, scraped, and checked by means of levees all of said lots 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, and 32 of said block 202 to a depth of about 8 inches, and made numerous excavations on the said lots to a depth of about 6 feet, for the construction of certain concrete piers, particularly near the common boundary of said lots 26 and 27 and along the easterly boundary line of said lot 27; that in the course of said leveling, scraping, excavating, and construction the defendants, their employees, agents, and servants, with gross carelessness and negligence caused and permitted large quantities of water to be poured and to pour onto said lots 27, 28, 29, 30, 31 and 32 and into the said excavations and to flood the same; that on or about the 12th day of February, 1923, by reason of said gross carelessness and negligence on the part of said defendants, their employees, agents, and servants, the said water accumulated along the wall of the said building of said plaintiff on said lot 26 near the said common boundary line of said lots 26 and 27, and the said water drained, seeped, and percolated into the said basement of plaintiff, and, without any fault or lack of care on the part of the plaintiff, the said water flowed into, upon, and around the goods which this plaintiff then owned and had there stored, and injured, damaged, and completely destroyed and rendered valueless large quantities of same, all to the great injury and damage of this plaintiff in the sum of one thousand ($1000.00) dollars."

The defendants denied the allegations contained in said paragraph, and on the trial it transpired that the Tyre lots were graded, filled, and scraped; that after the same had been leveled checks were made so that each lot was surrounded with a check, and thereafter water was run onto each lot for the purpose of causing the dirt to settle, and thereafter certain holes were dug for the purpose of putting in piers to obtain a support on which to rest the roof. Along the northern boundary of the plaintiff's property a trench was dug and a foundation of concrete was placed in the trench, and thereafter the dirt was thrown up against the concrete foundation so constructed. At the end of that wall, and at every 20 feet, a pier was set down on a level with the bottom of the plaintiff's wall, and later the soil was replaced around the piers and settled with water. That process had been completed two weeks before February 12, 1923. After Friday, February 9, 1923, the defendants were not on the job. The brick masons were there doing the brick work. When the foundation was ready brick masons came forward and proceeded to lay brick walls on top of the concrete foundation. In doing their work the brick masons let water through a hose to make mortar and wet the brick. On Monday, February 12, 1923, the southerly wall of the Tyre building had progressed to the point where it was about 9 feet in height above its foundation. That was the result of 2½ days' work by the brick masons. Some of the witnesses testified that the running of water to settle the soil stopped on Wednesday, February 7; however, Mr. Peterson, the general manager of the plaintiff, testified that he was about the new building on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, that is, February 8th, 9th, and 10th and, to use his language, "It is my impression, and as far as my memory serves me, I believe there was (water spread about the property); in fact, I am quite sure." On Sunday, February 11th, between 8:05 a. m. and 12:50 p. m. there was a rain of .39 of an inch. Several witnesses testified that on Saturday afternoon they saw water running out of a three-quarter inch hose at a point on the Tyre property 20 feet north of the plaintiff's building and 50 feet west of the alley. There was further testimony that said stream of water was still flowing Monday morning February 12, 1923. Witnesses testified that between 8 o'clock Monday morning and noon of that day they went down into the basement of the plaintiff's store, and there they saw, at a point about 50 feet west of the alley water coming through the north wall of plaintiff's building, and that there was in the neighborhood of 2½ inches of water on the floor of the basement. No witness testified to any fact or facts showing where the water had come from which percolated through the north wall. Mr. Peterson testified that his building had a roof of such nature that the rain falling thereon would run to drains which emptied on the Fulton street side. The evidence is without conflict that the work done on the Tyre property before the brick masons commenced to lay brick was done by the defendants under an independent contract and that the brick work was done by Paul Kindler, an independent contractor.

[1] There is evidence in the record that when the foundation wall for the Tyre building was being constructed along the north line of the plaintiff's property that the soil was excavated up against the north wall of the plaintiff's property and to a depth of about 3 feet. A strip of land 4½ inches in width along the north side of said wall was on the plaintiff's side of the property line. There is no evidence that the soil in the territory 4½ inches wide was of any peculiar quality or that it was impervious to water. Neither is there any evidence in the record that the 4½ inches of soil was not afterwards put in place or that it was improperly put in place. When the case went to the jury there were the possibilities that the water which was afterwards found in the plaintiff's basement was (1) rainwater; (2) water used for settling soil by the defendants as independent contractors; (3) water escaped from the three-quarter inch hose used by the masons; and (4) waters coming from other sources. There was no evidence of a water channel, natural or artificial, or that waters percolated through soil in any place leading to the body of water found in the plaintiff's basement. When the case went to the jury there was no evidence showing that the water which the defendants had discharged on the Tyre property "drained, seeped and percolated into the said basement of plaintiff. * * *" Such proof was necessary. In Puckhaber v. Southern Pacific Co., 132 Cal. 363, at page 365, 64 P. 480, 481, the court said:

> "It is as necessary for the plaintiffs to show that defendant's negligence caused the injury, as it is for them to show that defendant was guilty of negligence, or that the party was injured."

In Albert v. McKay & Co., 53 Cal. App. 325, at page 327, 200 P. 83, 84, this court said:

> "Resting on circumstantial evidence the plaintiff's case is not sufficient merely because the circumstances proved are consistent with the plaintiff's theory; but, the circumstances must show, when weighed with the evidence opposed to them, that the circumstances relied on have more convincing force substantiating the theory contended for, and from which theory it results that the greater probability is in favor of the party upon whom the burden rests. Wilbur v. Emergency Hospital Ass'n, 27 Cal. App. 751, 759, 151 P. 155; Puckhaber v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 Cal. 363, 366, 64 P. 480; Union Investment Co. v. San Francisco Gas, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 58, 62, 141 P. 807."

In the case entitled Estate of Wallace, 64 Cal. App. 107, 220 P. 682, Mr. Presiding Justice Finlayson, speaking for the court, at page 110 (220 P. 683), said:

> "An inference cannot be said to be established by circumstantial evidence, either in a civil or a criminal case, unless the circumstances relied upon are of such a nature and so related to each other that it is the only inference which can fairly or reasonably be drawn from them. If other inferences may reasonably be drawn from the facts in evidence, the evidence does not support the inference sought to be deduced from it. This rule is stated in Neal v. Chicago, etc., Co., 129 Iowa, 5, 105 N. W. 197, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905, as follows: 'If it appears that the facts and circumstances from which a conclusion is sought to be deduced, although consistent with that theory, are equally consistent with some other theory, they do not support the theory contended for.' In Puckhaber v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 Cal. 366, 64 P. 480, the court quotes from Stringert v. Ross Tp., 179 Pa. 614, 36 A. 345, as follows: '* * * The question then arises whether the inference that the death was caused by the negligence of the defendant is the only inference that can be drawn from the facts that are in evidence. If it is not, and other inferences may be drawn from the same facts, then there is nothing for the jury but mere guesses or conjectures, and upon these no verdict can be founded.' See, also, 10 R. C. L. p. 1007."

In the case of California, etc., Co. v. Indus. Acc. Com., 59 Cal. App. 225, at page 228, 210 P. 524, 525, Mr. Presiding Justice Langdon, speaking for the court, said:

> "A failure to sustain a burden of proof cannot be remedied by a finding based upon guess, conjecture, or surmise. Glass on Workmen's Compensation Law, pp. 39, 40; Puckhaber v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 Cal. 363, 64 P. 480."

So in this case the jury were left to merely guess where the waters found in the plaintiff's basement had come from—whether said waters were those in division (1), (2), (3), or (4), as hereinabove indicated.

[2] The instruction requested and which was not given, and concerning which the appellants complain, was worded as follows:

> "You are instructed that the defendants are responsible for their own negligence and for the negligence of their servants and agents within the scope of their employment, but defendants are not responsible for the negligent acts of the independent contractors or the negligent acts of the servants or agents of the independent contractors. If you believe from the evidence in this case that the brick masons and plasterers were the employees of an independent contractor and not of the defendant, and that the cause of the damage suffered by the defendants, if any, was the negligence of the brick masons or plasterers permitting water to run upon the ground from a hose used by them, if you believe that water did run upon the ground from a hose used by them, you should find for the defendants."

From what has been said above, it is patent that it was altogether material and that the respondent in introducing its case should have shown that the waters which injured its property were the waters discharged by these appellants as independent contractors as distinguished from the waters discharged by Paul Kindler as an independent contractor. We note that the respondent contends that the appellants had not pleaded the facts that Paul Kindler was an independent contractor; nevertheless the respondent had pleaded that the waters which injured him were the waters which the "said defendants, their employees, agents, and servants * * *" discharged on the Tyre property. In making the contention which the appellants are making they are but negativing the allegation of the plaintiff's complaint. They are not introducing new matter. It was therefore prejudicial error for the trial court to refuse to give the instruction requested.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; NOURSE, J.

80 Cal. App. 520

WALKER v. CLARK. (Civ. 5583.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 29, 1926.)

1. Evidence ⚷594—Where defendant's allegation was supported by testimony which was uncontradicted, she was entitled to finding that allegation was true.

In suit for specific performance of contract for exchange of property, where defendant's allegation that certain parties acted as agents of plaintiff was supported by testimony of defendant and two agents mentioned, which was uncontradicted, she was entitled to finding that allegation was true.

2. Specific performance ⚷117—Adequacy of consideration as to party against whom specific performance is sought must be pleaded and proved (Civ. Code, § 3391).

In suit for specific performance, adequacy of consideration as to party against whom specific performance is sought must be pleaded and proved, in view of Civ. Code, § 3391.

3. Appeal and error 🔑840(4)—In determining whether findings in language of pleading supported judgment, where defendant had no opportunity to demur, appellate court could consider question in same view as demurrer to complaint.

Where findings were in language of pleading and defendant did not have opportunity to demur, question whether findings supported judgment could be considered by appellate court in same view as trial court would consider demurrer to complaint for failure to state sufficient facts.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—In suit for specific performance, failure to find in accordance with uncontradicted evidence disclosing inadequacy of consideration held prejudicial error.

In suit for specific performance of contract for exchange of real property, failure of court to find in accordance with uncontradicted evidence disclosing inadequacy of consideration held prejudicial error.

5. Appeal and error 🔑931(9)—Where fact is not pleaded and trial court has not found on issue, appellate court could assume that evidence was insufficient to support such finding.

In suit for specific performance, where adequacy of consideration was not pleaded and trial court failed to find on issue, appellate court could assume that evidence was insufficient to support such finding.

6. Specific performance 🔑123—Absence of finding of adequacy of consideration, in suit for specific performance, required reversal of judgment for plaintiff (Civ. Code, § 3391).

In suit for specific performance of contract for exchange of real property, absence of finding that there was adequate consideration required to enforce specific performance, under Civ. Code, § 3391, required reversal of judgment for plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; F. C. Drumm, Judge.

Suit for specific performance of contract to exchange real property and for damages by C. E. Walker against Mary Kinsey Clark. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Richard Kittrelle, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chas. D. Swanner and Roland Thompson, both of Santa Ana, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for the specific performance of a written contract for the exchange of real property and for damages in the sum of $600. Plaintiff had judgment decreeing a performance of the contract as prayed and awarding him $627.33. From this judgment the defendant has appealed on a typewritten record.

By the terms of the contract, the plaintiff agreed to transfer to the defendant property which he represented to be of the value of $10,000, and the defendant agreed to transfer to the plaintiff property which she represented to be of the value of $8,500. The plaintiff agreed to assume a mortgage of $1,370 which was outstanding upon the defendant's property, and the defendant agreed to place upon plaintiff's property, after the transfer, a mortgage of $2,870 which was to be delivered to plaintiff.

[1] The appellant complains that the findings made by the trial court are not supported by the evidence. Particular criticism is directed to the finding that all the allegations in the amended answer are untrue. Appellant correctly states that in some instances, the allegations of her amended answer were supported by evidence which was without contradiction and which required a finding favorable to her. She points out that, in her amended answer, she alleged that Sweetzer and Wallace were acting as agents of the plaintiff, and that the truth of this allegation was shown by the testimony of the respondent and that of the two agents mentioned. No evidence appears to the contrary, and appellant was entitled to a finding that the allegation was true.

The trial court found that the reasonable market value of appellant's property at the time of the agreement was the sum of $7,000, and this finding is complained of because the only evidence in the record on which a finding of the market value of that property could have been based showed that its market value at the time of the agreement was between $7,500 and $8,500. The same criticism is directed to the finding that the allegation in paragraph 5 of defendant's amended answer is untrue. It was there alleged that the property which plaintiff agreed to exchange to the defendant was not reasonably worth $10,000, as represented by him. Though the trial court held that this allegation in the amended answer was not true, it at a later time found that the reasonable value of the plaintiff's property was only $8,500. The trial court found that there was no misrepresentation, fraud, or deceit on the part of plaintiff or any one acting in his behalf, and also found that if any such misrepresentation, fraud, or deceit was practiced upon the defendant she did not rely upon it because she had an opportunity, either personally or through her husband, to make a full and complete investigation. The findings referred to are open to the criticism directed by the appellant in each instance, and the inconsistency between the two findings on the issue of misrepresentation, fraud, or deceit seems the more apparent and important to the appellant from what is hereafter said.

[2] The more serious question presented on this record is the failure of the plaintiff to plead and prove adequacy of consideration to the defendant and the failure of the trial court to find on that issue. The rule is statutory. Section 3391 of the Civil Code provides that:

> "Specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract in any of the following cases: 1. If he has not received an adequate consideration for the contract; 2. If it is not, as to him, just and reasonable."

In Morrill v. Everson, 77 Cal. 114, 116, 19 P. 190, the Supreme Court, in reference to this section, said:

> "Here the inadequacy of consideration seems to be mentioned as a distinct ground from the injustice and unreasonableness; and the provision seems to be explicit and absolute."

The necessity of pleading and proving adequacy of consideration as to the party against whom specific performance is sought has been repeatedly determined. Joyce v. Tomasini, 168 Cal. 234, 237, 142 P. 67; Haddock v. Knapp, 171 Cal. 59, 62, 151 P. 1140; Salisbury v. Yawher, 184 Cal. 783, 795, 195 P. 682; Baker v. Miller, 190 Cal. 263, 267, 212 P. 11.

To meet the demands of the statute, the original complaint alleged that the agreement—

> "was and is a just and reasonable contract * * * that the exchange therein agreed to be made * * * was a reasonable and fair exchange * * * and said contract at the time of its execution was, and is now a just, equitable and reasonable contract."

The pleading is in almost the same language as that which was condemned as insufficient in Joyce v. Tomasini, 168 Cal. 234, 237, 142 P. 67, and in many of the cases therein cited.

The cause went to trial upon this complaint and at the close of plaintiff's case defendant moved for a nonsuit, giving as reasons therefor the failure of the plaintiff to show that the contract was fair and reasonable or that the value of the property sought to be transferred to her was an adequate consideration for her property. In support of the motion, section 3391 of the Civil Code was cited. The attention of the plaintiff was thus called to his failure to show adequacy of consideration as well as justness and reasonableness of the contract, but the motion for a nonsuit was denied without argument. On July 1, 1924, about six months after the trial of the case, findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed, and on the same day plaintiff filed what is designated as an amended complaint, filed to conform with the proof, wherein it was alleged that the reasonable market value of the property which he proposed to transfer to the defendant was $8,500 and that the reasonable market value of the property which the defendant proposed to transfer to him was $7,000, that defendant's property was subject to a mortgage of $1,370 which the plaintiff agreed to assume, and that the defendant agreed to place a first mortgage on the property, which she acquired from the plaintiff, in the sum of $2,870. Following this, appear the same allegations as to the justness and reasonableness of the contract as appeared in the original complaint, but in neither case do we find any allegation relating to the adequacy of the consideration or the other elements mentioned in section 3391, Civil Code.

[3] We have called attention to the fact that the amendment to the complaint was filed on the same day as the findings were filed for the purpose of explaining defendant's failure to demur thereto. The findings were in the language of the amended pleading and the question is, therefore, whether the findings support the judgment. As the defendant did not have an opportunity to demur, this question is to be considered by us in the same view as a trial court would consider a demurrer to a complaint for failure to state sufficient facts. We are not therefore concerned with the question of the sufficiency of the pleading, but with the question of the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment, and consequently the case is not controlled by the rule of Estate of Behrens, 130 Cal. 416, 418, 62 P. 603, and similar cases, holding that where no demurrer is interposed the pleadings will be held good after judgment.

[4] By the express terms of the Code a party is not entitled to the specific performance of a contract, unless he shows that the consideration therefor is adequate to the other party, and that as to him it is just and reasonable. Conceivably a contract may be just and reasonable, though it may not carry an adequate consideration to one of the contracting parties, and it is just as important to prove one of these elements as to prove the other. If the question had arisen before the trial court on a demurrer to the amended complaint which was filed to conform to the proofs, the fact that the amendment failed to plead the uncontradicted evidence affirmatively showing an inadequacy of consideration would have required an order sustaining the demurrer. With the question as it is presented here, we must say that the failure of the trial court to find in accordance with this uncontradicted evidence, disclosing an inadequacy of consideration, was error prejudicial to the defendant.

Thus, though we assume that the evidence was insufficient to support a finding of misrepresentation on the part of the plaintiff or his agent, there can be no doubt that the uncontradicted evidence did disclose that there was concealed from the defendant the fact that the plaintiff's property required an annual outlay for upkeep of over $800 above all possible income. The value of plaintiff's property was represented to be $10,000, and on that basis the defendant agreed to execute a mortgage in plaintiff's favor for $2,870. Manifestly, a mortgage of this amount is a greater burden against a property valued at $8,500 than it is against a property valued at $10,000. Evidence was offered that representations were made to the defendant that she might easily retire this mortgage through the income from the property. The evidence demonstrated that this could not be done because the annual income from plaintiff's property was some $800 less than the cost of upkeep. Since the annual income of defendant's property was more than $500 above the cost of upkeep, the inadequacy of the consideration moving to the defendant is apparent.

[5, 6] There has been no departure from the rule that it is necessary to plead sufficient facts to show that the consideration for the contract was adequate and that the burden of proving that issue is upon the party who would have the contract enforced. Where the fact is not pleaded and the trial court has failed to find on the issue, it is proper to assume that the evidence was insufficient to support such a finding, and it is therefore unnecessary for us to give any further consideration to the evidence in this record. As the finding is a necessary and essential prerequisite to a judgment in specific performance, the absence of the finding requires a reversal of the judgment.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 393

SHEEHAN v. ALL PERSONS, etc. (Fidelity Bond & Mortgage Co., Respondent).★

(Civ. 5545.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 22, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 17, 1927.)

1. Judgment ⟹18(2)—Judgment on insufficient complaint is not void, if court has jurisdiction.

Judgment is not void, if court has jurisdiction of parties and subject-matter, irrespective of whether complaint states cause of action, if it apprises defendant of nature of demand.

2. Process ⟹55—Plaintiff's attorney is not "party to action" and is competent to serve summons (Code Civ. Proc. § 410).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 410, plaintiff's attorney is not a "party to action" and is competent to serve summons.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Party to Suit or Proceeding.]

3. Judgment ⟹497(2)—Recital that defendant was served and failed to appear or plead, and default was entered, held conclusive on collateral attack.

Judgment, reciting that defendant was duly served with summons and complaint and failed to appear or plead, and that default was duly and regularly entered, held conclusive on collateral attack.

4. Judgment ⟹279—Findings of fact and conclusions of law form no part of judgment roll.

Findings, in default case, of fact and conclusions of law, are entirely unnecessary, and form no part of judgment roll.

5. Execution ⟹345—Title of purchaser at sheriff's sale held not void for error in return.

Where sheriff was authorized to make sale on execution issuing July 18, 1910, and made sale thereunder, it was not invalid, though return erroneously showed that sale was made on execution issuing October 13, 1910.

6. Execution ⟹319—Misrecital of execution in sheriff's deed held not to affect validity, if sheriff had authority.

Misrecital of execution will not affect validity of sheriff's deed, if sheriff had authority; purchaser being only required to show sale and officer's authority.

7. Execution ⟹319—Judgment and execution prove authority of sheriff, and deed proves sale.

In execution sale, judgment and execution prove authority of officer to make sale, and deed proves the sale.

8. Execution ⟹260—Purchaser need see only that there is valid judgment and execution regular on its face.

All that purchaser at execution sale is bound to do is to see that there is judgment which is not void and execution which is regular on its face.

9. Execution ⟹345—Validity of title under sheriff's deed at execution sale is not dependent on his return.

Validity of title to property, conveyed by sheriff's deed at execution sale, is not dependent on sheriff's return; title being derived from previous sale by sheriff by authority of writ of execution.

10. Execution ⟹319—Sale and sheriff's deed are sufficient evidence of title, if sheriff had authority to sell.

Sale and sheriff's deed are sufficient evidence of title, if purchaser can show that sheriff was authorized to sell.

11. Execution ⟹316—If sheriff's deed is defective, he may be compelled to make another.

Where sheriff's deed is defective, he has right to make another deed, and may be compelled to do so.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

12. Adverse possession 🔑13—Possession must be actual, open, notorious, hostile, continuous, and uninterrupted for statutory period to give title; "adverse possession."

Before one can acquire title by "adverse possession," possession must be actual, open, notorious, continuous, and uninterrupted for statutory period; exclusive, hostile, and under claim of right, and taxes must be paid by adverse claimant.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Adverse Possession.]

13. Tenancy in common 🔑15(2)—Plaintiff's possession of undivided portion of lot held not adverse.

Exclusive possession of entire lot, half of which was owned by plaintiff as tenant in common, held not to show his possession was adverse to co-owner or her successors.

14. Tenancy in common 🔑15(2)—Tenant in common cannot gain title by adverse possession against cotenant by merely refusing to recognize cotenant's rights.

While tenant in common in possession may gain title by adverse possession against cotenant, he cannot do so by merely refusing to recognize rights of cotenant; it being insufficient to raise presumption of ouster.

15. Tenancy in common 🔑15(10)—To react presumption that possession of one tenant is that of all, it must be shown that possession was with intent to hold adversely.

Possession of one tenant in common is presumed to be possession of all, and to react presumption and make possession adverse, it must be shown that possession was with intent to hold adversely; intent being indicated by acts calculated to exclude cotenant.

16. Tenancy in common 🔑15(1)—Cotenant not in actual possession cannot rely for adverse possession against cotenant, on possession of third cotenant.

One cotenant out of actual possession cannot rely for adverse possession against another cotenant out of possession, on possession of a third cotenant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Benjamin K. Knight, Judge.

Action by James C. Sheehan against all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property described or any part thereof. From a judgment for defendant, the Fidelity Bond & Mortgage Company, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 195 Cal. 546, 234 P. 1113.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harding & Monroe, of San Francisco (Julia M. Easley, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. Plaintiff, James C. Sheehan, brought this action under the provisions of the McEnerney Act (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78) to quiet title to a lot of land situated at the northwest corner of Broderick and Greenwich streets, in the city and county of San Francisco. Defendant Fidelity Bond & Mortgage Company answered, alleging that it was the owner in fee simple of an undivided one-half interest in said property, and praying that its title thereto be quieted. The case was tried by the court and judgment was entered quieting the title to an undivided one-half interest in the plaintiff, James C. Sheehan, and the other undivided one-half interest in the defendant Fidelity Bond & Mortgage Company. From this judgment the plaintiff, James C. Sheehan, has prosecuted this appeal.

The record before us discloses these facts: Hannah Sheehan, at the time of her death, was the owner of the entire title to the real property in question and resided thereon with her son, James C. Sheehan, the plaintiff, and her daughter, Anna Sheehan. Hannah Sheehan died testate in the city and county of San Francisco on the 1st day of December, 1904. Her estate was duly probated and this property was on July 31, 1905, distributed according to her last will to James C. Sheehan and Anna Sheehan (now Anna De Vries) in equal, undivided interests. Anna Sheehan moved from the property about three months after the death of her mother and has never returned to live upon the property. James C. Sheehan continued to live in a small cottage on the property from the death of his mother up to the commencement of this action. The property has at all times been inclosed by a substantial inclosure and James C. Sheehan has paid all taxes and street assessments levied or assessed against the entire property from the date of the death of his mother to the time of the commencement of this action.

On June 16, 1908, one A. J. Harford commenced an action in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Contra Costa, against Anna De Vries (formerly Anna Sheehan), and on July 28, 1908, obtained judgment against her for the sum of $671 claimed to be due for board furnished to minor children of Mrs. De Vries. Although Anna De Vries did not appear in said action, and a default judgment was entered against her, nevertheless, the court made and filed findings of fact and conclusions of law. The summons was served on the defendant Anna De Vries by R. E. Hewitt, the attorney for plaintiff in the action. On this judgment an execution was issued on July 18, 1910, and placed in the hands of the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, with instructions to levy upon and sell all of the right, title, and interest of Anna De Vries in and to the property here in question. Another execution was apparently issued on October 13, 1910, and also placed in the hands of the sheriff. The sheriff advertised the property and sold it on the 23d day of September, 1910, to the plaintiff, A. J. Harford, for the sum of $100. The sheriff's return of sale was attached to the execution dated October 13, 1910. On December 22, 1911, a sheriff's deed was duly executed and delivered to A. J. Harford, which recited that the execution sale occurred on September 23, 1910, upon an execution issued October 13, 1910.

On April 7, 1923, Anna Sheehan executed a deed to James C. Sheehan, the plaintiff, for all her right, title, and interest in and to this property. On August 4, 1923, after A. J. Harford had died, a corrected deed was obtained from the sheriff to A. J. Harford, correcting the recitals as to date of execution in the sheriff's deed of December 22, 1911.

On June 11, 1912, A. J. Harford and Maggie Harford, his wife, conveyed their interest in the property in question to Melvin E. Lyons and on September 5, 1922, the said Melvin E. Lyons conveyed the same property to the defendant and respondent Fidelity Bond & Mortgage Company.

The appellant, James C. Sheehan, assails the judgment in the case of Harford v. Anna De Vries on a number of grounds and we will notice briefly all of the contentions made for a reversal of the judgment.

[1] The appellant contends that the judgment in Harford v. De Vries is void because the complaint in that case does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It is thoroughly settled in this state that a judgment is not void if the court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, irrespective of whether or not the complaint states a cause of action, so long as it apprises the defendant of the nature of plaintiff's demand. Christerson v. French, 180 Cal. 523–525, 182 P. 27; Blondeau v. Snyder, 95 Cal. 521, 31 P. 591; Mayo v. Ah Loy, 32 Cal. 477, 91 Am. Dec. 595; In re James, 99 Cal. 374, 33 P. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60; Canadian, etc., Co. v. Clarita, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 672, 74 P. 301; Brush v. Smith, 141 Cal. 466, 75 P. 55; Crouch v. Miller & Co., 169 Cal. 341, 146 P. 880; Gillespie v. Fender, 180 Cal. 202, 180 P. 332; California Casket Co. v. McGinn, 10 Cal. App. 5, 100 P. 1077, 1079; Baldwin v. Foster, 157 Cal. 643, 108 P. 714; Lemon v. Hubbard, 10 Cal. App. 471–475, 102 P. 554; Crane v. Cummings, 137 Cal. 201, 69 P. 984; Estate of Ross, 180 Cal. 643, 182 P 755.

In the Estate of Ross, 180 Cal. 651, at page 659, 182 P. 752, 755, the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Angellotti, said:

> "It is thoroughly settled in this state that the failure of a complaint to state a cause of action is not a defect going to the jurisdiction of the superior court, and that a judgment given upon such a complaint cannot be held void upon collateral attack. In this connection it is only necessary to refer to our recent decision in Gillespie v. Fender, 180 Cal. at page 202, 180 P. 332."

We have examined the complaint that is assailed, and, while it is inartfully drawn, we think it sufficiently clear and certain to inform the defendant therein of the nature of the claim against her, and sufficient to give the court complete jurisdiction of the cause. Certainly the default judgment rendered thereon could not be held void upon this collateral attack under the authorities above cited.

[2] Appellant also contends that the court had no jurisdiction to enter the default, or render judgment against Anna De Vries, because the summons was served upon the defendant Anna De Vries, formerly Anna Sheehan, by one R. E. Hewitt, who was also the attorney for the plaintiff in said action. Two or three sufficient answers may be readily made to this contention: First, the record does not reveal that the R. E. Hewitt who signed his name as attorney for plaintiff in that action is the same R. E. Hewitt who served the summons upon Mrs. De Vries; second, but assuming that it is the same person and that the service was made by the attorney for the plaintiff, still it did not affect the jurisdiction of the court in said action.

Section 410 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part:

> "The summons may be served by the sheriff of the county where the defendant is found, or by any other person over the age of eighteen, not a party to the action," etc.

See, also, 21 Cal. Jur. pp. 534–536.

The plaintiff's attorney was not a party to the action and was competent to serve the summons.

In 32 Cyclopedia, p. 454, it is stated:

> "If by statute, any person not a party may serve the summons, plaintiff's attorney is competent. * * * One who makes service ot the writ will be presumed to be a proper person in the absence of any showing to the contrary."

[3] Third, the judgment recites:

> "That said defendant was duly served with summons and complaint herein, and failed to appear or demur or answer herein, and that the default of said defendant was duly and regularly entered herein."

This is conclusive upon a collateral attack, such as the one made here. Crouch v. Miller & Co., supra; Sacramento Bank v. Montgomery, 146 Cal. 745, 81 P. 138.

[4] It is also contended by appellant that there is no authority in law for a judgment upon findings in a default case, and, because the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law in the action of Harford v. De Vries, the judgment is a nullity and void. This contention is wholly without merit. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the filing of findings of fact and conclusions of law in a case where they are not required is a mere irregularity, or error, and is harmless and cannot in any way affect the judgment. Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495–506, 82 P. 57. In such a case, findings, if made, are entirely unnecessary and form no part of the judgment roll. Murray v. Murray, 115 Cal. 266, 47 P. 37, 37 L. R. A. 626, 56 Am. St. Rep. 97; Thomson v. Thomson, 121 Cal. 11, 53 P. 403; section 670, Code Civ. Proc.

[5] Appellant also makes this contention:

> "The alleged execution sale is clearly void. The sheriff's return of sale shows that the alleged sale to Harford was made on September 23, 1910, on an execution issued October 13, 1910. This return of the sheriff is in law prima facie evidence of the truth of its contents. * * * There is no evidence in the case at bar, nor in the record, to rebut this prima facie proof. * * *"

It is true, according to the record, that for some reason two executions were issued on the Harford judgment, but it clearly appears that the sale was made pursuant to the execution of July 18, 1910, and by some inadvertence the sheriff's return of sale was attached to the execution issued October 13, 1910, but the only levy the sheriff made in pursuance of the execution was made on the execution of July 18, 1910, and the notice of sale and all of the proceedings based on the execution sale show beyond question that the execution referred to was the one of July 18, 1910, and that the recital in the deed of December 22, 1911, was obviously a mistake made by the sheriff. There appears to be no question of the authority of the sheriff to make the sale from the record.

[6-11] It is settled law in this state that a misrecital of the execution in the sheriff's deed will not affect the validity of the deed if the sheriff had the authority. Shirran v. Dallas, 21 Cal. App. 415, 132 P. 454, 462, and cases therein cited. The purchaser is only required to show a sale and the authority of the officer to make it. The judgment and execution prove the authority and the deed proves the sale. All the purchaser is bound to do is to see there is a judgment which is not void, and an execution which is regular upon its face. As to all of the acts of the officer under execution, which precede the sale, he may rely upon the legal presumption that they have been fully performed. The validity of title to property conveyed by sheriff's deed at execution sale is not dependent upon the sheriff's return. The title is not created by the return, but is derived from the previous sale made by the sheriff by authority of his writ of execution. The sale and the sheriff's deed are sufficient evidence of title, and, if a purchaser can show that the sheriff had authority to sell, it is enough and he need look no further. Blood v. Light, 38 Cal. 653, 99 Am. Dec. 441; Ritter v. Scannell, 11 Cal. 248, 70 Am. Dec. 775; Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 564, 4 P. 473, 8 P. 46, 56 Am. St. Rep. 726; Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 172; McFall v. Buckeye, etc., Ass'n, 122 Cal. 468, 55 P. 253, 68 Am. St. Rep. 47; Weldon v. Rogers, 157 Cal. 413, 108 P. 266; Wilson v. Madison, 55 Cal. 5; Shirran v. Dallas, supra; 2 Freeman on Executions, § 274. It is likewise well settled that, where a sheriff's deed is defective, he has a right to make another deed and he may be compelled to do so. 23 Corp. Jur. 740.

Appellant also contends that he has acquired title to the undivided one-half interest formerly belonging to his sister, Anna Sheehan, by adverse possession. Under the evidence in this case, we find no basis for this contention. It will be remembered that Anna Sheehan and James C. Sheehan received the title to this property from the estate of their mother in 1905, and were tenants in common until Anna Sheehan's interest was divested by the execution sale hereinabove discussed. The testimony shows that Anna Sheehan removed from the property about three months after the death of her mother and never returned to live upon the property; neither did she pay any taxes upon the property.

[12] The law is well settled that, before one can acquire title by adverse possession, the possession must be actual, open, notorious, continuous, and uninterrupted for the statutory period; exclusive, hostile and under a claim of right, and taxes must be paid by the adverse claimant. Barlow v. Frink, 171 Cal. 165, 152 P. 290; Franz v. Mendonca, 146 Cal. 640, 80 P. 1078; Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 66 P. 10; Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 589, at page 595, 49 Am. Rep. 100. An adverse holder who fails to establish any one of these elements cannot acquire title by adverse possession.

[13-15] It clearly appears, therefore, that, as far as Anna Sheehan is concerned, she has no basis for a claim of title by adverse possession. Appellant is the undisputed owner of an undivided one-half interest in this property and under the evidence he never attempted to claim the other half as his own until he received the purported deed on April 7, 1923, from his sister, Anna Sheehan. His claim all this time was that he owned one-half and the other half belonged to his sister. It is true that he occupied the property from the death of his mother up to the commencement of this action, and it was inclosed by a substantial fence, and he paid the taxes thereon, and his possession was, no doubt, exclusive of the entire lot, but from this it does not follow that his possession was adverse to his sister or Harford and his successors in interest as to the other half; he was a tenant in common with them. While it is the law that one tenant in common, in possession, may gain title by adverse possession against his cotenant, he cannot do so by merely refusing to recognize the right of his cotenant as James C. Sheehan seems to have done in the case at bar. This is not sufficient to presume an ouster. Colman v. Clements, 23 Cal. 245, and cases there cited. The possession of one tenant in common is presumed to be the possession of all, and in order to react this presumption and make the possession adverse, it must be shown that the possession was with the intent to hold adversely, and such intent must be indicated by acts calculated to exclude the cotenant. Colman v. Clements, supra.

It appears to us from a careful examination of the entire record, including the evidence, that appellant, James C. Sheehan, has wholly failed to meet these requirements, and we conclude that his possession was not adverse to his cotenants.

[16] If appellant claims adverse possession in Anna Sheehan by reason of his own possession of the property, it must fail, for one cotenant out of actual possession cannot rely for adverse possession against another cotenant out of possession, upon the possession of a third cotenant; or, to state it another way, Anna Sheehan cannot rely for adverse possession against Harford and his successors in interest upon the possession of James C. Sheehan. 1 Cal. Jur. 543; Gage v. Downey, 94 Cal. 241, 29 P. 635.

We are of the opinion that the judgment should be, and it is hereby affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

200 Cal. 215

HUGHES v. MUNICIPAL COURT OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (L. A. 9403.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1926.)

1. Statutes 🔑124(1)—Any provision, in statute creating municipal court, that continues small claims courts in existence, held within title prescribing "jurisdiction" of municipal courts (St. 1925, pp. 650, 657, §§ 4, 26, 27; Const. art. 4, § 24).

Any language in St. 1925, pp. 650, 657, §§ 4, 26, and 27 that can be construed to continue in existence small claims courts after establishment of municipal court, is not void as being in contravention of Const. art. 4, § 24, since it is included within title to act "authorizing establishment of municipal courts, prescribing their constitution, regulation, government, procedure, and jurisdiction."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Jurisdiction (of Courts).]

2. Courts 🔑188(1)—Municipal court must accept for filing small claim, under statute creating small claims courts (St. 1925, p. 657, §§ 26, 27; St. 1921, p. 117; Amendment of Nov. 4, 1924, to Const. art. 6, §§ 11, 11a).

Municipal court, created under St. 1925, p. 648, must accept small claim for filing under St. 1921, p. 117, creating small claims courts, in view of St. 1925, p. 657, §§ 26, 27, notwithstanding amendment of November 4, 1924, to Const. art. 6, §§ 11, 11a, since small claims court is not separate court, but merely separate procedure; but Legislature may create inferior courts to relieve congestion in municipal courts.

3. Courts 🔑160—Small claims court procedure held not abolished by Code Civ. Proc. (Code Civ. Proc. § 831e et seq. [added by St. 1925, p. 945]).

Procedure adopted by Code Civ. Proc. § 831e et seq. (added by St. 1925, p. 945), is inapplicable to small claims court matters, and was not intended to abolish the small claims court procedure.

In Bank.

Application for a writ of mandate by Robert J. Hughes, doing business under the firm name and style of the Roberts Mutual Paint Company, prayed to be directed to the Municipal Court of the City of Los Angeles and others, requiring them to accept for filing a claim under the statute creating small claims courts. Writ granted.

Frank M. Smith, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett W. Mattoon and R. C. McAllaster, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

Arthur L. Johnson, of San Francisco and Chas. F. Lowy, of Los Angeles, amici curiæ, for Bureau of Labor Statistics.

J. M. Friedlander, City Prosecutor, and Vernon S. Gray, Deputy City Prosecutor, both of Los Angeles, amici curiæ, for Municipal Court.

SEAWELL, J. Petition for writ of mandamus. James Wallace was indebted to petitioner, Roberts Mutual Paint Company, in the sum of $40.21. Petitioner, upon the authority of the statute creating small claims courts (Stats. 1921, p. 117, adding sections 927-927p to the Code of Civil Procedure), presented to respondents Hon. Henry M. Willis and W. S. Dinsmore, presiding judge and clerk, respectively, of the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles, said claim, and requested the same to be filed. Respondents and each of them refused to permit said claim to be filed in said court, and refused to assume jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action or to at all entertain the proceeding, assigning as the grounds of their refusal that, by the amendment of article 6, § 11, state Constitution, adopted November 4, 1924, all existing inferior courts upon the organization of a municipal court as provided therein were abolished, and that, at the time the proceeding herein was attempted to be initiated, said municipal court of the city of Los Angeles was fully organized and functioning as such court. It is further argued that courts of inferior jurisdiction cannot exist in cities where municipal courts are established without affirmative action on the part of the Legislature creating them, and, inasmuch as no inferior or small claims court has been created by any act of the Legislature, none exists in the city of Los Angeles, and hence respondents are justified in their refusal to entertain said action.

[1] In brief, it is the contention of respondents that, by reason of the provisions of the Constitution providing for the organization of municipal courts, by virtue of which the respondent court was created, and by reason of the omission of the Legislature to provide by appropriate statute an inferior court in and for the city of Los Angeles, the jurisdiction of which court should not extend to cases wherein the claim or demand is more than $50, there no longer exists in said city a forum in which claims or demands of $50 or less may be tried in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the general act creating small claims courts. Code Civ. Proc., §§ 927–927p; Stats. 1921, p. 117. It is further contended that, conceding certain language employed in sections 4, 26, and 27 of the act authorizing the establishment of municipal courts (Stats. 1925, p. 648) is susceptible of a construction that would continue in existence inferior or small claims courts, the title of the act does not express this subject, and therefore the provisions of said act which attempt to continue in existence said courts are void and without effect as being in contravention of article 4, § 24, of the Constitution. We are of the opinion that the subject of the act is expressed by its title, which is in the following language:

"An act authorizing the establishment of municipal courts, prescribing their constitution, regulation, government, procedure and jurisdiction. * * *"

The language of the title is quite comprehensive, and unquestionably expresses the subject, to wit, the regulation, government, procedure, and jurisdiction of said courts.

[2] In the instant case the Legislature has not met in biennial session since the organization of respondent court, and no courts of an inferior jurisdiction have been created to perform the services formerly rendered by justice's courts. The provision of the Constitution which authorized the Legislature to create courts inferior to the municipal courts reads:

> "The Legislature may, however, provide for the establishment of courts inferior to municipal courts in cities and cities and counties where municipal courts are established; provided, however, that the jurisdiction of such inferior courts shall not extend to cases in which the claim or demand is more than fifty dollars." (Article 6, § 11a, adopted Nov. 4, 1924).

The foregoing language, construed with reference to all the other provisions of the amendment and the statute establishing small claims courts, forces the conclusion that it was not the intention of the lawmaking body to deprive any judicial district of the state of the benefits of the summary procedure conferred by statute which it had formerly enjoyed, but, on the contrary, it was the evident intent of the amendment to continue in force said summary procedure as a part of the judicial system of the state, and, if necessary for the accomplishment of the object for which small claims courts were created, to authorize the Legislature to create such additional inferior courts as the business of each municipality or community may require. The small claims court was created primarily to avoid wasteful litigation and to reduce to a minimum costs of trial in cases where the demands are small. Leuschen v. Small Claims Court, 191 Cal. 133, 215 P. 391. Considering the history of the entire subject, we think there is greater reason for concluding that the clause of the Constitution last above cited was intended solely to confer upon the Legislature the means of expediting litigation by relieving the municipal courts of congestion, rather than to deprive persons who reside within municipal court districts of a privilege equal with those who reside without the jurisdiction of said courts.

The Municipal Court Act provides that any city or city and county or township, by complying with the constitutional requirements, may establish a municipal court. Such a court is given enlarged jurisdiction over justice's courts, and is designed to supplant those courts in case the people of said municipalities or political subdivisions elect to avail themselves of the privilege of establishing courts of enlarged jurisdiction. The justice's courts and other inferior courts of like jurisdiction cease to exist upon the establishment of a municipal court. The central thought running through the act is to abolish the justice's courts and their procedure in cities and townships which adopt the municipal court system. The amendment (Const. art. 6, § 11a) expressly provides that—

> "Pending actions, trials, and all pending business of inferior courts within such city or city and county or township, upon the establishment of any such municipal court, shall unless otherwise provided by law be transferred to and become pending in such municipal court, and all records of such inferior courts be transferred to and thereafter be and become records of such municipal court."

The Legislature may relieve the municipal court of the duties with which it is charged by the Small Claims Court Act by establishing a court of inferior jurisdiction, which it is authorized to create, and, unless the municipal court is so relieved by the Legislature, it is required to finish all unfinished business pending in the court which it supplants and perform the duties that the law imposed upon the justice's court. There is nothing in the language of the constitutional amendment that would justify the conclusion that the municipal court is required only to complete the unfinished business of the justice's court or other inferior court which it was established to succeed, and that it may refuse to perform the service that was a part of the duty of the court which it succeeded. The Legislature, by providing the small claims court procedure did not set up a separate, independent judicial tribunal, to be presided over by a judge elected or appointed exclusively to perform the duties prescribed by the small claims court statute, but made it the duty of the several justices of the peace of the state to enforce its provisions. In other words, additional duties were imposed by statute upon the justices of the peace. The amendment provides that, when a municipal court supplants a justice's court, the former court is clothed with the powers which said justice's court had over all matters of which the justice's or inferior court exercised jurisdiction, and it is further charged with the performance of every duty which the law imposed upon the court to whose power and jurisdiction it has become the successor, unless it is otherwise provided by law. Respondents rely largely in support of their contention upon the meaning of the clause of the amendment which provides that, where a court is established in any city or in any city and county or township, "there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court except as herein provided." This clause, in our view, was intended by the Legislature to apply only to the establishment of distinct or independent judicial bodies constituted in the usual and ordinary manner in which courts are created.

Sections 927–927p, Code of Civil Procedure, in defining the jurisdiction conferred by the statute adding said Code sections, provides that:

> "All justices of the peace shall exercise the jurisdiction conferred by this title and while sitting in the exercise of said jurisdiction shall be known and referred to as the small claims court." Section 927.

Thus it will be seen that a separate, formally constituted court was not created, but a certain procedure was merely adopted as to small demands, and the justices of the peace were required to conform to it in actions where the demand was $50 or less. The justice's courts always had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the actions affected by the small claims court procedure. The practical effect of the statute was to lay additional burdens upon the justices of the peace as to matters of procedure. We think it apparent that it was not the intention of the Legislature to establish a separate court of justice in the sense that courts are ordinarily constituted.

Section 26 of the act establishing municipal courts reflects the view of the Legislature as to the meaning of the language of the amendment providing for the establishment of municipal courts. It reads:

> "Sec. 26. The municipal court and each judge thereof shall have and exercise all of the powers and shall do and perform all of the acts which were conferred upon, or required of, any police court, justice's court, police judge or justice of the peace, by law, whenever any such inferior court shall have been superseded by a municipal court and whenever any such police judge or justice of the peace shall become a judge of the municipal court by reason of any of the provisions of this act, and all such laws, not inconsistent herewith, are made applicable to any such municipal court and to each judge thereof." St. 1925, p. 657.

This section makes it quite clear that the duties appended to justice's courts by the Small Claims Court Act are transferred to the municipal courts unchanged in any material respect. Section 27 is to the same effect.

[3] The procedure adopted by sections 831e et seq., Code of Civil Procedure (added by St. 1925, p. 945), is inapplicable to small claims court matters, and we think the procedure therein provided was not intended to abolish the small claims court procedure. To abolish the procedure would, in fact, be to abolish the court. There does not appear anywhere in the municipal court law an express or implied intention on the part of the lawmaking body to repeal or suspend the operation of the earlier statute establishing small claims courts, but, on the contrary, the continuation of said court seems to be contemplated. Without the procedure, the court cannot exist. The application of the superior court procedure would entirely nullify the beneficent purpose of the court. From an examination of the entire subject, it is reasonable to conclude that it was the intention of the Legislature that the procedure which as a matter of fact creates the small claims court should continue in effect and apply uniformly throughout the state. Any other conclusion would manifestly lead to absurd results.

We are of the opinion that the amendment and statute before us are not susceptible of the construction placed upon them by respondents. Emphasis is laid upon the fact that much of the time of the municipal court judges will be consumed by small claims litigation to the neglect of municipal court affairs. While this may be so, the Legislature is authorized by the Constitution to relieve a congested situation by the creation of inferior courts which may engage exclusively in the dispatch of small claims matters. The small claims court is a useful and important arm of our judicial system, and we are not privileged to limit its operation.

Let the writ issue as prayed for in the petition.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.

---

200 Cal. 170

DOYLE et al. v. JORDAN, Secretary of State.
(S. F. 11978.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1927.)

1. Highways ⚷90 — Names cannot be withdrawn from petition to public officials, for formation of bridge and highway district, after determination of jurisdiction of body authorized to act.

Right to withdraw names from petitions to be presented to and acted on by public officials, for formation of bridge and highway districts, may not be exercised so as to defeat jurisdiction after jurisdiction of body authorized to act has been determined.

2. Highways ⚷90—Withdrawal of names from petition for formation of bridge and highway district, after certification by county clerk and filing with secretary of state, held too late (St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715).

Attempt of signers of petition for formation of bridge and highway district, under St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715, to withdraw their names after petition was certified to as sufficient by county clerk and filed with secretary of state, held too late.

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

3. Highways 🔑90—County board could not repeal ordinance declaring intent to join bridge and highway district after petition was certified and presented to secretary of state (St. 1925, p. 452, §§ 2, 3).

County board of supervisors could not repeal ordinance declaring intent to join bridge and highway district, as required by St. 1923, p. 452, § 2, after petition provided for by ordinance was circulated, signed, certified, and presented to secretary of state, pursuant to section 3.

4. Highways 🔑90—County board could not withdraw ordinance declaring intent to join bridge and highway district after other counties adopted like ordinances and took all statutory proceedings to join district (St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3; St. 1925, p. 715).

Ordinance, passed by county board of supervisors, declaring county's intention to join bridge and highway district, could not be withdrawn, even if only an offer or proposal, where five other counties accepted it by adopting like ordinances and taking all proceedings required by statute (St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3; St. 1925, p. 715) to join district.

5. Highways 🔑90 — Acceptance of county's offer in ordinance to unite with counties adopting like ordinances to form bridge and highway district held not precluded by two counties' refusal to join (St. 1923, p. 452, § 2).

County board of supervisors' ordinance, purporting to have been enacted in accordance with St. 1923, p. 452, § 2, "to unite with such other counties as may adopt like ordinances," to form bridge and highway district, held not an offer to join only proposed district of eight counties, so as to preclude acceptance thereof after refusal of two counties to join.

6. Highways 🔑90—Failure to describe project in petition to form bridge and highway district and county board's ordinance held not fatal defect (St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, 13, 14; St. 1925, p. 715).

Proceedings under St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715, to incorporate a bridge and highway district, held not fatally defective because project was not set forth or mentioned in county board of supervisors' ordinance or electors' petition, where definitely designated in written applications, pursuant to which board of each county in district passed like ordinances under section 3; sections 13 and 14, requiring only that project be definitely designated somewhere in proceedings.

7. Highways 🔑90—Petition for incorporation of "Golden Gate bridge and highway district" held sufficient to put electors on inquiry as to real project (St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715).

Petition under St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715, for incorporation of district, "to be known as the Golden Gate bridge and highway district," held sufficient to put electors on inquiry as to real project contemplated, which was to bridge the Golden Gate.

8. Constitutional law 🔑278(2) — Bridge and Highway Act authorizing incorporation of districts held not to violate due process clause (St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715).

St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715, providing for incorporation of bridge and highway districts, held not invalid as seeking to deprive persons of their property without due process of law.

9. Eminent domain 🔑19—Bridge and Highway Act held not invalid as seeking to take private property for private use (St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715).

St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715, providing for incorporation of bridge and highway districts, held not invalid as seeking to take private property for private use.

10. Statutes 🔑107(9)—Title of Bridge and Highway Act held not to embrace more than one subject (St. 1923, p. 452).

St. 1923, p. 452, entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation and organization and management of bridge and highway districts, * * * acquisition and construction by said districts of bridges and approaches, * * * acquisition of all property necessary therefor, * * * issuance and payment of bonds, * * * levying of taxes and the collection of tolls by said districts * * * and annexation of additional territory thereto," held not invalid as embracing more than one subject in title.

11. Highways 🔑90—Provision of statute empowering boards of directors of bridge and highway districts to levy and collect taxes, and absence of provision for equalization of assessments in different counties, held not to invalidate proceedings to incorporate district (St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3; St. 1925, p. 715).

Provisions of St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715, as to duties of boards of directors of bridge and highway districts organized thereunder, especially powers given them to levy and collect taxes, and absence of provision for equalization of assessments of property in different counties of district, held at most mere defects, curable by proper legislation, and not invalidating proceedings under statute to incorporate district.

12. Constitutional law 🔑63(1) — Bridge and Highway Act held not violative of Const. art. 11, § 13 (St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3; St. 1925, p. 715).

St. 1923, p. 452, §§ 1–3, and St. 1925, p. 715, providing for incorporation of bridge and highway districts, held not violative of Const. art. 11, § 13.

In Bank.

Original application by Frank P. Doyle and another for a writ of mandate to Frank C. Jordan, as Secretary of the State. Peremptory writ granted.

Rehearing denied; PRESTON, J., dissenting.

Frank L. Coombs and Nathan Coombs, both of Napa, and George H. Harlan, of San Rafael, for petitioners.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Charles A. Strong, of San Francisco, Charles M. Mannon, of Ukiah, and Casper A. Ornbaum, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

CURTIS, J. The petitioners herein by this proceeding seek from this court a writ of mandate directed to the respondent, the secretary of state, commanding him as such public officer to publish certain notices which petitioners claim respondent is by law required to publish by virtue of certain proceedings set forth in the petition herein, which proceedings were taken under the authority of and in compliance with the provisions of a certain act of the Legislature providing for the incorporation, organization, and management of bridge and highway districts. Said act is entitled:

> "An act to provide for the incorporation and organization and management of bridge and highway districts and to provide for the acquisition and construction by said districts of bridges and approaches thereto, and for the acquisition of all property necessary therefor, and also to provide for the issuance and payment of bonds by said districts, for the levying of taxes and the collection of tolls by said districts and for the annexation of additional territory thereto." St. 1923, p. 452.

This act was amended in some of its essential features by an act of the Legislature in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 714). Sections 1 and 2 and a portion of section 3 of said act are as follows:

> "Section 1. A bridge and highway district may be organized and incorporated and managed as herein expressly provided, and may exercise the powers herein expressly granted or necessarily implied. The word 'county' as used herein shall include county, and city and county.
>
> "Sec. 2. A bridge and highway district may be organized consisting of one or more counties or parts of a county or counties, and including a city and county, under the provisions of this act, by proceeding as follows: The several boards of supervisors of said counties, or parts of counties, may adopt an ordinance to the effect that the county, or part of county, intends to unite with such other counties as may adopt like ordinances to form such district, or such ordinance may, in one or more of said counties, be adopted by the electors of the county under the provisions of the law applicable to the passage of ordinances by the initiative. Each of said counties shall be contiguous to another county therein; provided, that counties separated by any of the waters of this state are contiguous within the meaning of this act. In such ordinance it shall be directed that a petition be circulated therefor, and the board shall, by resolution, name and appoint persons to circulate and secure signatures for the same.
>
> "Sec. 3. Such petition which may consist of any number of separate instruments shall be presented to the secretary of state, signed by qualified electors, residing within the boundaries of the proposed bridge and highway district, equal in number to at least ten per centum of the number of such qualified electors in each county from which such petitions are presented voting for governor of this state at the last general election prior to the presentation of such petition. The board of supervisors of any county may, in lieu of proceeding by petition, call an election, as provided for the calling of special elections under the laws pertaining thereto, to be held in conformity therewith, where and when the same may be determined by a majority vote of the electors voting thereat.
>
> "Such petition shall set forth the extent of the district, either by describing its exterior boundaries, or by naming the counties proposed to be included therein, as having been determined by said ordinance and in case only part of any county is proposed to be included therein, the extent of the part of the county included may be indicated by naming the county and excepting therefrom, some administrative or governmental subdivision or subdivisions thereof, such as townships, school districts or other similar subdivisions, or such excluded portion may be described by its boundaries, and in any of said descriptions of included or excluded territory, reference to recorded instruments may be made for the purpose of defining such boundaries, and shall contain a prayer that such proposed bridge and highway district be incorporated under the provisions of this act. Attached to each of the petitions shall be a copy of the said ordinance. The said ordinance may be enacted by the board of supervisors at any time after application shall be made to them for such purpose, but in case such board shall neglect to act upon such application for a period of sixty days thereafter, the said ordinance may be submitted to the electors of such county or city and county under the provisions of the initiative applicable thereto. In case said ordinance shall be passed by the board of supervisors, it shall be subject to the referendum provisions applicable to ordinances generally in such county or city and county. The said petitions from any county shall be grouped or fastened together and shall contain a certificate of the county clerk of such county that the same contains the requisite number of qualified signatures of qualified electors. The said county clerk shall have ten days time for the examination of such petitions when left with him for verification and it shall be his duty to verify the same, attach his certificate thereto within said period of time and forward the same to the secretary of state with his certificate that the same is sufficient and if from such examination he shall find that said petition is not signed by the requisite number of qualified electors residing within his county he shall also certify to the number of qualified electors required to make such petition sufficient, and it may be amended by filing a supplemental petition or petitions within twenty days from the date of such certificate, either by the same persons theretofore appointed to secure signatures, or by other persons appointed by the board of supervisors for that purpose. The county clerk shall within ten days after the filing of such supplemental petition or petitions make like examination of the same and certify to the result of such examination as hereinabove provided. If his certificate shall show any such petition or said petition as amended to be insufficient it shall be filed by him with the secretary of state and kept by him as a public record without prejudice however to the filing of a new petition to the same effect, but if, by the certificate of the county clerk such petition or said petition as amended is shown to be sufficient the county clerk shall present the same to the secretary of state without delay. If any supplemental petition be filed all of the signatures appended to the petition or to the supplemental petition or petitions shall be considered in determining the number of qualified electors signing the petition. In case an election is had in any county in the place of said petition, the county clerk shall certify to the secretary of state the result thereof, with a copy of the action of the board of supervisors authorizing said election.

"After the certificate is issued by the secretary of state for the incorporation of such proposed bridge and highway district, the sufficiency of such petition in any respect shall not be subject to judicial review or be otherwise questioned. If any county within the boundaries of such proposed bridge and highway district shall have a registrar of voters other than the county clerk the said registrar of voters shall perform the duties herein required to be performed by the county clerk respecting the examination, certification and filing of the petition, and said registrar of voters shall return said petition immediately upon the completion of such examination, together with his certificate showing the result of such examination to the secretary of state. When all said petitions, or certifications of the result of elections when such elections are held, have been received from the several county clerks of counties having any portion of their territory within said proposed bridge and highway district the said secretary of state shall publish the text of such petition for at least three weeks before the time set by him as the time up to which protests may be received as hereinafter provided in at least one and not to exceed three newspapers printed and published in each of the counties from which such petitions have been presented, together with a notice stating the time which he has fixed up to which protests will be received against the inclusion of property within such proposed bridge and highway district. The names attached to said petition need not be published therewith, nor the certificates of any of the county clerks or registrars of voters, but it shall be sufficient to state that the same has been signed by a certain number of electors, naming it, and duly verified by such county clerks or registrars of voters.

"At any time before the time set by the secretary of state up to which protests may be received, any owner of property subject to taxation within said proposed bridge and highway district, may file, with the secretary of state, his protest in writing against the formation of such district, and stating therein such grounds as he may have for claiming that his said property, or any portion thereof, will not be benefited by the formation of the proposed bridge and highway district. The said protest shall contain the name and address of the person protesting and the name and address of his attorney, if he has one, and all of the protests so received by the secretary of state shall, with the petition filed from the county, be forwarded by the secretary of state to the superior courts in the respective counties from which the same have been received by the secretary of state, and thereupon the said superior courts shall acquire jurisdiction to hear and determine the said protests so received from the owners of lands located within their respective counties. It shall be the duty of the clerk of said superior courts to set the said matters for hearing before said court, and to give ten days' notice thereof in writing to the protestants, and to any person who shall have filed with the secretary of state his name and address as the attorney for the petitioners in said petition, which said attorneys' names and addresses shall be certified from the office of the secretary of state to the respective county clerks at the time of the transmission of the petitions thereto. At the time specified in such notice, or at such other time to which the said hearing may be continued, the said superior courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all matters urged by the protestants against the formation of the said proposed bridge and highway district, or against the inclusion of their lands therein, and the said superior courts shall have jurisdiction to exclude the said lands from said proposed district, together with any other lands contiguous to the excluded lands, and contiguous to the exterior boundaries of the proposed district which are similarly situated to the lands of the protestants, to the end that isolated tracts may not be excluded from the district without also rectifying the boundaries thereof so that the district when finally formed shall be compact, continuous and without tracts of land excluded therefrom which are totally surrounded by other lands which are left within the district.

"The judgment of the said superior courts, when given shall be certified by the clerk to the secretary of state, together with the original petitions and protests theretofore transmitted to him by the secretary of state, and the said judgment shall not be appealable, and all questions of fact therein contained shall be final and conclusive upon the whole world, and shall only be subject to review by the supreme court of this state, upon a writ of review issued out of that court in such cases as writs of review are now permissible against superior courts, or the irregular exercise of the jurisdiction of such courts. Such proceedings for a writ of review must be taken within ten days after the entry of the judgment in the superior courts, and if not so taken all judgments of the superior courts shall become final.

"When all of the protests have been disposed of as hereinabove provided, and the results of the judgments therein certified to the secretary of state, the secretary of state shall thereupon issue his certificate of incorporation declaring the said district with the boundaries as finally established to be duly incorporated, formed and organized and shall file the same in his office, and cause a certified copy thereof to be recorded in the office of the county recorders of each of the counties situated within or partially within said proposed bridge and highway district."

By an amendment to the statute in 1925 it was provided that:

> "In case the board of supervisors of any county named in the petitions from other counties engaged in the formation of a bridge and highway district shall fail or neglect for sixty days after the application submitted to them, to pass such ordinance, and a period of more than sixty days thereafter shall elapse without any proceeding for passing such ordinance under the provisions of law relating to the initiative being on file with the county clerk or registrar of voters, the latter must upon receipt of an affidavit of an elector of the county, setting forth the date of making the original application to the board of supervisors and the failure of such board to act thereon for sixty days thereafter, issue his certificate to the secretary of state attached to such affidavit certifying that on the date of the issuing thereof no proceedings have been filed in his office to submit such ordinance to the electors under the provisions applicable to the initiative, and must forthwith transmit such certificate and affidavit to the secretary of state and the latter shall file the same, and the county from which such affidavit and certificate have been received by the secretary of state shall be excluded by him from the proposed district in the same manner as if the same had been excluded by order of the superior court. * * *"

The act further provides, after the secretary of state has issued his certificate of incorporation, for the appointment by the boards of supervisors of the respective counties comprising the district of directors to conduct and manage the affairs of the district, defines the powers of such board of directors and provides for the incurring of a bonded indebtedness upon a two-thirds vote of the electors of the district whenever the board of directors deem it necessary.

The amended petition herein alleges that written applications were presented to the board of supervisors of the counties of Del Norte, Humboldt, Mendocino, Lake, Sonoma, Napa, and Marin and of the city and county of San Francisco to pass an ordinance as in said act provided, declaring it to be the intention of such counties and of such city and county to form a bridge and highway district to be known as the Golden Gate bridge and highway district; that such ordinances were passed by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco and of the counties of Del Norte, Mendocino, Sonoma, Napa, and Marin; that thereafter and in each of said last-named counties and in the city and county of San Francisco petitions were circulated identical in form and in all respects as required by said act and praying that said Golden Gate bridge and highway district be formed under the provisions of said act of the Legislature; that each of said petitions was signed by more than 10 per cent. of the votes cast in said respective counties and in said city and county for Governor at the last general election immediately preceding the time when said petitions were circulated; that said petitions with the signatures attached to each thereof were left with the county clerks of said respective counties and with the registrar of voters of the city and county of San Francisco, and were by said last-named officers certified to be sufficient and were thereafter transmitted to the respondent as secretary of state; that there was also filed with the secretary of state certificates and affidavits as required by said act from the county clerks of Humboldt and Lake counties setting forth that no ordinances had been passed as required by said act in said county of Humboldt or in said county of Lake within 60 days after the filing of the application therefor, and that no proceedings for the passage of an ordinance under the provisions of law relating to the initiative were on file with the county clerk of either of said counties. Said amended petition further alleges that said respondent has failed, neglected, and refused to advertise in said counties or in any of them the notice required by law by him to be advertised, and that a demand had been made upon said respondent before the institution of these proceedings that respondent forthwith publish and advertise said official notice so required by him to be made under the provisions of said act; that the respondent after such demand has failed, neglected, and refused to publish said notice in said counties or in any of them.

By the answer and return of the respondent it is admitted that all of the documents and instruments in the matter of the incorporation and organization of the Golden Gate bridge and highway district claimed by the petitioners in their amended petition to have been filed in the office of respondent have been filed therein in accordance with the provisions of said act of the Legislature providing for the incorporation and organization of bridge and highway districts. Said answer and return further shows that all of said proceedings in the matter of the incorporation and organization of the Golden Gate bridge and highway district above referred to had been presented to him and filed in his office by the 2d day of December, 1925, and that thereafter and on the 17th day of December, 1925, there was also tendered to him and received by him in the office of the secretary of state a document purporting to be a copy of Ordinance No. 222 passed by the board of supervisors of the county of Mendocino on the 15th day of December, 1925, entitled "an ordinance repealing Ordinance No. 220, adopted January 27th, 1925, which said ordinance declared the intention of the county of Mendocino to unite with other counties adopting like ordinances to form a bridge and highway district, and directing the circulation of a petition for that purpose," and that there was also on said day presented and tendered to him a resolution passed by the board of supervisors of Mendocino county on the 15th day of December, 1925, purporting to revoke, annul and cancel and set aside said Ordinance No. 220. Furthermore, on the 21st day of January, 1926, there was tendered to and received by him in the office of the secretary of state a document purporting also to be a certified copy of said Ordinance No. 222 passed by the board of supervisors of the county of Mendocino on the 15th day of December, 1925, whereby it was sought to repeal said Ordinance No. 220; furthermore, on the 21st day of January, 1926, there was tendered to and received by him in the office of the secretary of state five several documents, identical in form, and purporting to be signed by 180 electors of the county of Mendocino who had theretofore signed the petition for the formation of the Golden Gate bridge and highway district which had been theretofore circulated in said county of Mendocino and being the same petition which had been certified as sufficient by the county clerk of said county of Mendocino, and by said clerk transmitted to and filed in the office of respondent. The persons signing said last-named five documents each asked to withdraw his name from said petition for the formation of said district. (By deducting said 180 names from the number signed to said original petition by the electors of Mendocino county, the said original petition would be insufficient and would bear the names of less than 10 per cent. of the qualified electors in said county voting for Governor at the last general election immediately preceding the circulation of said petition.)

The position of respondent as set forth in the answer and return is that with the instruments and documents presented to him as above referred to he is uncertain as to the proper course for him to pursue, and he is in doubt whether he shall publish the required notice as prescribed by said act in the county of Mendocino or in the other counties within said proposed district or at all. However, the amici curiæ appearing herein and representing the board of supervisors of the county of Mendocino and various organizations and individuals and taxpayers of said county and of other counties interested, in resisting the formation of the proposed district, take the position that said writ should not issue for any purpose whatever. The first contention of the amici curiæ is that by the withdrawal of the 180 names from the original petition received by respondent from the county of Mendocino, said petition is reduced below the number required by the provisions of said act and is therefore insufficient, and no further action can be taken in the proceedings to incorporate said district, at least so far as said county of Mendocino is concerned. This contention involves the right of the signers of said original petition to withdraw their names therefrom after the same has been certified as sufficient by the county clerk of the county of Mendocino and presented to and filed with the secretary of state as provided by said act.

[1] The right of persons, signing petitions to be presented to and acted upon by public officials, to withdraw their names therefrom has been before the appellate courts of this state on a limited number of occasions. In the case of Locher v. Walsh, 17 Cal. App. 727, 121 P. 712, it appeared that a petition had been filed with the city clerk of the city of Auburn praying that a certain ordinance relating to the regulation of the sale of intoxicating liquors in said city be submitted to the vote of the electors thereof. After the clerk had examined the same and had attached his certificate thereto that said petition was signed by more than 30 per cent. of the qualified voters of said city, certain of the signers of said petition attempted to withdraw their names therefrom by handing to the clerk a request that their names be withdrawn from said petition. The court in this case held:

> "That the clerk had jurisdiction to determine the sufficiency of the petition as filed, and having determined that it was sufficient, and having so found and certified before any request for withdrawal was made, such request was too late for the petitioners to exercise any such right or to divest the clerk of jurisdiction."

This case was followed and approved in the later case of Laam v. McLaren, 28 Cal. App. 632, 153 P. 985. In this latter case a petition was filed to recall a supervisor. The petition was referred to the clerk and certified by him to be sufficient, but, after it had been certified to the board by the clerk as sufficient, certain of the signers attempted to withdraw their names from the petition and thus to reduce it below the number of signers required by law. It was held that upon the certification by the county clerk of the sufficiency of the petition the duty then devolved upon the board of supervisors to order the election and the superior court had no jurisdiction to enjoin the board from so acting on the ground that after such certification and before the calling of the election certain signers to the petition had attempted to withdraw their names therefrom so as to reduce the number below that required to give the board authority to call the election. In Beecham v. Burns, 34 Cal. App. 754, 168 P. 1058, certain signers of a recall petition requested the clerk to withdraw their names therefrom after the petition had been filed with the clerk and before that officer had certified the result of his examination as required by the statute. The court held:

> "In our opinion, the signers of such petitions may not withdraw their names or have their names withdrawn by the clerk at any time after the petition has been filed."

Outside this state we find that the right of persons signing a petition to withdraw their names therefrom has frequently been before the courts of other jurisdictions. In the decided cases from other states we find many which are in accord with those from our own state above mentioned. In Mohr v. Seattle, 59 Wash. 68, 109 P. 309, it was held that under a charter provision that the city controller shall verify the sufficiency of the signatures to a referendum petition and imposing no duty upon the city council in that regard, it was the duty of the controller to determine the sufficiency of the signatures to the petition and after action had been taken by him no name might be withdrawn from the petition. In the case of Sim v. Rosholt, 16 N. D. 77, 112 N. W. 50, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 372, the Supreme Court of North Dakota, after an examination of a large number of authorities upon the question of the right of a signer of a petition to withdraw therefrom, arrives at the following conclusion:

> "Upon examination, it will be found that most of these cases relate to petitions for the removal of county seats, or are based upon a statute different from ours; and it will also be found that they do not support the right of petitioners to withdraw their names after the sufficiency of such petition and the qualifications of the petitioners have been passed upon by the board authorized to act thereunder. On the contrary, they will be found to support respondents' theory that, after the board has passed upon the sufficiency of such petition, it is thereafter too late to withdraw therefrom."

In a note to this case found in 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) supra, we find it said that:

> "Even the cases which allow the most liberal margin of time for withdrawal seem to recognize that this right to withdraw may not be exercised so as to defeat the jurisdiction, after the jurisdiction of the body authorized to act has been determined"—citing Littell v. Vermilion County, 198 Ill. 205, 65 N. E. 78.

As against these authorities the amici curiæ have cited but two California cases, McAulay v. Board of Supervisors, 178 Cal. 628, 174 P. 30, and Covell v. Lee, 71 Cal. App. 361, 235 P. 79. In neither of these cases, however, were the withdrawals attempted to be made after the petition had been filed with the person or board whose duty it was to act thereon. In McAulay v. Board of Supervisors, supra, certain signers of a petition for the organization of an irrigation district asked to have their names withdrawn from said petition prior to the time said petition was to be presented to the board of supervisors. This court held that they could effectively withdraw their names therefrom. It will be observed, however, that said petition at the time of said withdrawal had never been presented to the board of supervisors, and accordingly it had never been passed upon by said board or by any officer whose duty it was to examine it and determine its sufficiency. In the case of Covell v. Lee, supra, the petition was one for the organization of a joint union high school district and was directed to the superintendent of schools as the law provided. It was signed by the required number of electors from each of the school districts to be included in the proposed high school district. Before the petition had been presented to the superintendent of schools, three electors from Plainfield school district (one of the districts to be included in said proposed union high school district) who had signed the original petition, signed written requests, addressed to the superintendent of schools, asking that their names be withdrawn from the petition. These written requests were presented to the superintendent of schools before the original petition was presented or filed with such officer. The superintendent of schools in computing the number of names signed to said petition rejected these three names, thus reducing the number of signers thereto from the Plainfield school district below the number required by law. The District Court of Appeal, upon the authority of McAulay v. Board of Supervisors, supra, sustained the action of the superintendent of schools in rejecting said three names and held that they had a right to withdraw from said petition. It will be observed that in this case, like the case of McAulay v. Board of Supervisors, supra, the signers seeking to withdraw from the petition presented their request for withdrawal before the petition had been presented to the officer whose duty it was to act thereon, and, of course, before said officer had taken any action to determine the sufficiency of the same. A large number of cases from other jurisdictions are cited by the amici curiæ in support of the right of the signers to withdraw from petitions which they had previously signed. Many of these arose under statutes entirely unlike our own and in cases where the facts were so different from those in the present proceeding as to detract materially from their value as precedents to be followed in this action. From the study we have been able to give to these authorities we are forced to agree with the author of the note to Sim v. Rosholt, in 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) supra, wherein he stated:

> "Even the cases which allow the most liberal margin of time for withdrawal seem to recognize that this right to withdraw may not be exercised so as to defeat the jurisdiction, after the jurisdiction of the body authorized to act has been determined."

[2] The record in the present proceedings shows that the ordinances passed by the boards of supervisors of Del Norte, Mendocino, Sonoma, Napa, and Marin, and by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco had all been passed and petitions in compliance with these ordinances had all been circulated and signed by electors of said counties, respectively, and that all said petitions had been presented to the county clerks of the respective counties and to the registrar of voters of said city and county, and that these officers had certified that the petitions presented to them, respectively, were sufficient and that said ordinances and the said petitions with the certificates of the certifying officers attached thereto had all been filed in the office of the respondent, the secretary of state, and also that the affidavits of the nonpassage of ordinances in the counties of Humboldt and Lake had been filed in the office of the respondent, before the board of supervisors of Mendocino county had adopted the resolution declaring it not for the best interests of Mendocino county to join in said proposed district, and before the board of supervisors of said county had taken any action to repeal or rescind their former ordinance of intention to join said district, and before any copy of said resolution or any copy of said repealing ordinance or before the petition signed by the 180 electors of Mendocino county asking to have their names withdrawn from the original petition had been filed in the office of respondent. To state the matter more briefly, by December 25, 1925, all steps required by the statute to be taken by either the boards of supervisors or the electors of the counties embraced within the boundaries of the proposed district had been taken by said boards of supervisors and by said electors and all the papers, documents, and instruments required by said act to be presented to the respondent in order to require him to publish the notice demanded of him in said proceeding had been presented to and filed by respondent in his said office. It therefore became the duty of respondent upon receipt by him of said documents to publish said notice as required by the statute. Upon the receipt by him of said documents he acquired jurisdiction to proceed under said statute and to perform the duties required of him by the terms thereof. Any attempt thereafter of any of the original signers of any of said petitions to withdraw therefrom, according to the great weight of authority, was ineffectual and could not divest respondent of jurisdiction to proceed as directed by the statute. The first of the documents, whereby Mendocino county sought to withdraw from said district, that was filed in the office of respondent, was the certified copy of the resolution adopted by the board of supervisors of said county on December 15, 1925, and it was filed in the office of respondent December 17, 1925. Thereafter there was filed with respondent two certified copies of the ordinance passed by the board of supervisors of Mendocino county whereby they attempted to repeal the ordinance declaring it the intention of said county to join in said district, and on January 21, 1926, the request signed by 180 of the persons on the original petition from said county attempting to withdraw their names from said original petition was filed with respondent. Under these facts and circumstances we are forced to the conclusion that the attempt by the signers of said petition to withdraw therefrom after said petition had been certified to as sufficient by the county clerk and thereafter filed with respondent was too late and was therefore ineffectual for any purpose whatever.

[3] The same conclusion must be reached, we think, in regard to the attempt of the board of supervisors to repeal the resolution of intention to join said district. "There is, * * * a distinction between the permanent or continuing powers of the board and those that are to be exercised once for all for a specified occasion only, as in the proceedings of the kind before us; for in the latter case the power to repeal the act after it has been finally executed is from the nature of the case clearly excluded." Vernon v. Board of Supervisors, 142 Cal. 513, 516, 76 P. 253. Continuing, the court in this case says:

> "There is no longer any power to rescind, and this, for the double reason that the powers granted to the board have been exhausted, and that vested rights have accrued."

The court in the Vernon Case was considering the right of a board of supervisors to rescind a resolution defining the boundaries of a proposed town and providing for an election to determine whether the territory included within said boundaries should be incorporated under the Municipal Corporation Act. It held that the board's action rescinding its resolution providing for said election was valid as it had been taken before the election was held and under a misapprehension of the real facts before the board at the time of its passage. We refer to this case more particularly for the reason that it brings out clearly the distinction between the general powers of a board of supervisors as to the enactment and repeal of ordinances and those that are exercised in proceedings of the kind before us. The board of supervisors of the county of Mendocino having passed the ordinance required by the statute, and the petition provided for by said ordinance having been circulated, signed, certified, and presented to the respondent (which proceedings might be compared with the holding of an election under the Municipal Corporation Act), it was then too late for said board to repeal said ordinance. The powers granted it under the statute had become exhausted.

[4] Nor do we think that there is any merit in the further contention of the amici curiæ that the passage by the board of supervisors of Ordinance No. 220 declaring it to be the intention of said county to join the bridge and highway district is but an offer or proposal on the part of the county and that it may be withdrawn or revoked at any time before its acceptance. Conceding it to be an offer or proposal only, it was according to statute and made "to unite with such other counties as may adopt like ordinances." As we have already seen, four of the above counties and the city and county of San Francisco adopted like ordinances as that passed by the board of supervisors of Mendocino county, and following the passage of said ordinances they took all proceedings required of them by said statute in order to join said bridge and highway district. The offer, therefore, made by the county of Mendocino, was fully accepted by the other counties to whom it was made and the attempt of the board of supervisors to withdraw the same thereafter was too late and accordingly ineffectual.

[5] The additional contention of the amici curiæ is also untenable, that is, that the offer was made to join a district composed of eight counties, including Humboldt and Lake counties, and that as these two last-named counties refused to join in said district it was impossible to accept the offer as tendered. The ordinance passed by the county of Mendocino purported on its face to have been enacted in accordance with the act of the Legislature providing for the incorporation of bridge and highway districts, the second section of which provides that:

> "The several boards of supervisors of said counties or parts of counties, may adopt an ordinance to the effect that the county, or part of county, intends to unite with such other counties as may adopt like ordinances to form such district. * * *"

The legal effect of the ordinance passed by the board of supervisors of the county of Mendocino was that it intended to unite, in the language of the statute "with such other counties as may adopt like ordinances." It was clearly the intention of the board of supervisors to adopt an ordinance in compliance with the terms of the statute. In our opinion the ordinance adopted by them met these requirements. Its offer then was to unite with such other counties as might adopt similar ordinances. It was not impossible to accept said offer so long as any one or more of said counties passed a similar ordinance, and the passage of such ordinance by any of said other counties was of itself an acceptance of said offer of Mendocino county to join in said district.

[6] The amici curiæ claim that the proceedings taken by the respective counties to incorporate said bridge and highway district are fatally defective, in that they fail to set forth or describe the project for which the district was proposed to be incorporated. It is true that the project for which it is proposed to form the district is not set forth nor mentioned in either the ordinance passed by the board of supervisors or in the petition circulated and signed by the electors. Nothing in the act provides that the project for which it is proposed to form the district shall be set forth in any particular or specified manner or shall be described or contained in any particular or specified document or instrument which may form a part of the proceedings taken for the incorporation of the district. By section 13 of the act it is made the duty, after the organization of the district, of the board of directors and other officers of the district, "to prepare plans, both engineering and financial, for the purpose of putting into operation the project for which the district has been organized," and in section 14 of said act it is further provided:

> "That no taxes shall be levied by the board under the provisions of this section for the purpose of carrying out new projects after the original project for which the district was formed has been completed."

It would appear from these sections that the project for which the district is formed should be definitely designated somewhere in the proceedings in order, at least, that the board of directors of the district might know the extent and the limits to which they might proceed after the organization of said district. In fact, the object and purpose of the district, or its project, is a matter of first importance to all electors of the counties embraced within its limits. While it is true that the project is not set forth either in the ordinance or in the petition, yet it is claimed by petitioners that it sufficiently appears elsewhere in the proceedings. By section 3 of said act it is provided that:

> "The said ordinance [referring to the ordinance of intention to join the district] may be enacted by the board of supervisors at any time after application shall be made to them for such purpose. * * *"

It is alleged in the amended petition, and not denied in the answer and return that written applications were filed with the board of supervisors of each of the counties and of the city and county originally intended to be included within the boundaries of the proposed district, and "That said applications and each of them definitely designated the bridging of the Golden Gate as the object and purpose for which a bridge and highway district was to be formed." It is further alleged by petitioners, and not denied, that it was in response to these written applications that the board of supervisors of the respective counties and of the city and county passed the ordinances declaring it to be the intention of said counties and of said city and county to join in the organization of said district. It will thus be seen that there is officially of record in each of the counties of said district a document among the proceedings to incorporate said district in which the object and purpose or the project for which said district was to be formed is definitely and distinctly set forth. This, we think, is all that is required under the statute. It will be seen from an examination of the terms of the statute that no directions are contained therein requiring that the project for which said district is to be formed shall be stated either in the ordinance to be passed by the supervisors or in the petition to be circulated and signed by the electors. The boards of supervisors of the respective counties were by the written applications filed with them duly and sufficiently apprised of the project contemplated for the formation of the district.

[7] The petitions signed by the electors of the respective counties contained a prayer for the incorporation of a district under the provisions of said statute, "to be known as the Golden Gate bridge and highway district." Conceding that this was no notice to them that the project of the proposed district was to bridge the Golden Gate, it was sufficient to put them upon inquiry as to the real project contemplated by the incorporation of said district, and from the fact that they signed the petition it must be assumed that they satisfied themselves of the nature of said project and that they favored their county joining in said district. While we consider that it would have been the better practice to have had the project of the proposed district set out either in the ordinance or in the petition or both, yet we are not prepared to say that the failure to so set it out or to refer to it in said ordinance or petition renders the proceedings invalid so long as such project is set forth in full and shown in the written applications on file with the boards of supervisors of the counties to which they were presented.

[8-10] Various constitutional grounds are urged against the validity of the statute providing for the incorporation of bridge and highway districts. Among these grounds are that, by the terms of the statute, it seeks to deprive persons of their property without due process of law and that it seeks to take private property for private use. It is also contended that more than one subject is embraced within the title of said statute. We do not think that there is any merit in any of these contentions, nor do we feel that any extended answer thereto would serve any useful purpose.

[11] A further objection urged against the validity of the statute upon constitutional grounds deals mainly with the provision thereof defining the duties of boards of directors of said districts and particularly with the powers given to said boards by the statute to levy and collect taxes. It is claimed that as the directors of said district are appointed by the boards of supervisors of the counties composing said district and are not elected by the electors of said counties that they have no power to levy taxes. Even assuming that this point is well taken and that the attempt to clothe the directors of said district with power to levy taxes is beyond the constitutional authority of the Legislature, yet we seriously doubt whether this question can be raised in this proceeding instituted for the sole purpose of testing the validity of those provisions of the act providing for the incorporation and formation of said district. The district when incorporated may be a valid and constitutional agency of the state, although some of the powers with which the Legislature may have sought to invest the directors thereof are invalid and unconstitutional. The result would be that in a proper proceeding the court might restrain any attempt on the part of said directors to exercise such illegal and unlawful powers. But these illegal provisions, if any such there are in the statute, present no good ground why the district should not be incorporated, nor will they affect the legality of the district when incorporated. It may be that a board of directors formed as contemplated by the statute would be without power to levy taxes as provided in said act. If this would hereafter be made to appear, undoubtedly the Legislature could, and probably would, provide for some different manner or means of raising taxes in the district, or possibly might provide for the election of said directors by a direct vote of the electors of the respective counties. This would be a mere defect in the machinery of the district and could be cured by proper legislation. It could not be held to invalidate the proceedings taken under the statute to incorporate the district. The same may be said in regard to the objection that there is no provision in the statute providing for the equalization of the assessments of property in the different counties. If by the failure to provide for the equalization of assessments it should be held that any levy of taxes sought to be imposed by the directors of the district was illegal, this defect in the statute could be remedied by proper legislation to be thereafter enacted. In our opinion, therefore, there is no relevancy in any of these objections in so far as they are made or relied upon for the purpose of invalidating or rendering unconstitutional the provisions of the statute providing for the incorporation of such district. It is therefore, unnecessary for us to express any opinion as to the validity of those provisions of the statute conferring upon the board of directors of said district power to levy and collect taxes nor the effect upon said statute of its failure to provide for the equalization of the assessments of property in the various counties of said district. These are matters not properly before us in this proceeding.

[12] The final contention of the amici curiæ is that the act in question is unconstitutional, in that it is violative of article 11, § 13, of the Constitution. Practically the same question was raised to the validity of statutes creating sanitary districts and county water districts as is now raised by the amici curiæ against the constitutionality of the bridge and highway act. In each case it was held that the statute in question did not violate the above provisions of the Constitution. Woodward v. Fruitvale Sanitary Dist., 99 Cal. 554, 34 P. 239; Henshaw v. Foster, 176 Cal. 507, 169 P. 82. We can see no valid distinction between the questions involved and decided in those cases and that raised by the amici curiæ in the present proceeding under their final contention as to the constitutionality of the bridge and highway act. Upon the authority of these cases we have no hesitancy in holding that the statute under consideration does not violate article 11, § 13, of the Constitution of this state.

It is therefore ordered that the peremptory writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SULLIVAN, J.

---

200 Cal. 161

REDO Y CIA v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 8452.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 27, 1927.)

1. Trial 🔑339(2)—Refusal to accept verdict contrary to instructions and requiring jury to bring in verdict conforming to instructions held proper (Code Civ. Proc. § 619).

Where jury entirely disregarded law as set forth in court's instructions and brought in verdict opposed thereto, it was proper for court to decline to accept such verdict and to instruct jury to again retire and bring in verdict in conformity with instructions, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 619.

2. Trial 🔑339(2)—Trial judge exercises supervisory power over verdict of jury, though he cannot control jury in passing on evidence.

While trial judge may not interfere with or control jury in passing upon evidence, he exercises salutary, supervisory power over their verdict.

3. Trial 🔑337—Instructions on law which must be given by court are binding on jury.

Trial court is under duty to instruct jury on law, and instructions are binding on jury in its deliberations.

4. Trial 🔑339(2)—Compulsory reduction of verdict by jury after refusal of first verdict held proper amendment before recording of verdict and discharge of jury.

Reduction of verdict, in action to recover money paid for bills of exchange, so as to conform with court's instructions after court's refusal of verdict first returned, constituted an amendment properly made before verdict had been recorded and prior to discharge of jury, though made by jury under compulsion.

5. Trial 🔑337—Jurors cannot disregard instruction, though erroneous.

Instruction as to lawful limit of liability by defendant, in suit to recover money paid for bills of exchange, indicates only amount for which judgment could lawfully be rendered, and cannot be disregarded by jury, but if erroneous, may be revised and corrected on appeal.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1070(1)—Error in refusing poll of jury all favoring verdict for plaintiff, amount of which was directed by court, held not prejudical.

Where jurors were all in favor of verdict for plaintiff and so announced themselves on return of verdict that was recorded, error, if any, in refusing plaintiff's request for poll of jury was not prejudicial, where court directed amount of verdict in case of plaintiff's recovery.

7. Banks and banking 🔑188½—Verdict for money paid for bills of exchange impliedly determines dishonor of bills by drawee and waiver of protest by drawer.

In action to recover money paid for bills of exchange, verdict for plaintiff impliedly determined that evidence sufficiently showed dishonor of bill by drawee bank and waiver by drawer bank of formality of protest.

8. Appeal and error 🔑719(8)—Correctness of implied findings by jury will not be questioned on appeal, where not attacked.

Where implied findings of jury as to dishonor and waiver of protest on bills of exchange from verdict allowing recovery of money paid for bills were not attacked on appeal, their correctness will not be questioned by Supreme Court.

9. Banks and banking 🔑188½—Negotiable Instruments Act does not apply to action on bill of exchange executed before act took effect (Negotiable Instruments Law, § 3266d, incorporated in the Civil Code by St. 1917, p. 1531).

Negotiable Instruments Law, § 3266d, incorporated in the Civil Code by St. 1917, p. 1531, does not apply in determining amount of damages in action to recover money paid for bills of exchange executed before act took effect.

10. Banks and banking 🔑188½—Drawer of dishonored bill of exchange, in marks, is liable for value of marks as of date of presentment for payment plus damages and interest (Civ. Code, §§ 3234–3239).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3234–3239, purchaser of bill of exchange, expressed in German marks, dishonored by drawee, may recover of drawer value of marks in United States money at time bill was presented to drawee for payment at existing rate of exchange, protest having been waived, whether decreasing or increasing value of marks, plus statutory damages and interest.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Redo y Cia, a copartnership composed of Mrs. Alejandro de la Vaga de Redo and another, against the First National Bank of Los Angeles. Judgment for plaintiff for part of amount claimed, and it appeals. Affirmed.

Mott & Vallee, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Flint, MacKay & Bowen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, J. Plaintiff instituted this action to recover $14,200 paid by it to the defendant bank for two foreign bills of exchange drawn by the defendant on the Deutsche Bank of Hamburg, Germany, each being for 40,000 marks.

The plaintiff firm was engaged in the sugar business in Mexico and maintained an office in the city of Los Angeles. In the conduct of its business plaintiff maintained an account with Bartning Gebruder of Hamburg, Germany. On March 22, 1917, plaintiff's Los Angeles manager inquired of the defendant bank the exchange rate on a draft for 40,000 German marks. The defendant bank thereupon wired its correspondent, the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco, and secured from it the rate of exchange, together with its consent to effect the sale. Thereafter and on March 23, 1917, the plaintiff, through its Los Angeles manager, purchased the first bill of exchange for 40,000 marks from the defendant bank. This bill of exchange was drawn on the above-named German bank and was payable to the plaintiff in marks. At the then prevailing rate of exchange the plaintiff paid $6,920 therefor, the exchange rate of each mark being 17.3 cents. On the same day the defendant notified the Crocker Bank of the issuance of the bill of exchange.

The Crocker Bank had an arrangement with the Deutsche Bank Filiale of Hamburg, Germany, dating from the year 1911, under which the latter honored and paid bills of exchange of the former bank and its correspondents to the extent of 500,000 marks at any time, without previous advice or the deposit of funds.

On April 2, 1917, the plaintiff, through its manager, purchased of the defendant bank a second bill of exchange for 40,000 marks similar to the first and paid therefor the sum of $7,280. Upon payment being made each of said bills was delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff's manager. The amount paid for said two bills of exchange totaled $14,200, the sum sued for herein, of which amount the defendant asserts it retained $25 as commission and then remitted the remainder to the Crocker Bank.

A state of war was declared to exist between the United States and Germany on April 6, 1917, and mail service between the two countries was officially discontinued on the following day. Prior thereto the Crocker Bank had addressed and mailed to the Hamburg Bank a separate advice of each draft, both of which were received by the latter bank. Subsequent advices mailed by the defendant bank to the Hamburg Bank were returned marked, "Mail service suspended to country addressed." This information was apparently conveyed to the Crocker Bank by the defendant. The continued existence of a state of war between this country and Germany prevented the plaintiff for a considerable period from sending the two drafts to the latter country by mail. Hostilities were terminated on November 11, 1918, by the signing of the armistice, and on July 15, 1919, mail service and commercial transactions between the two countries were resumed. Approximately one month later, August 14, 1919, plaintiff's Los Angeles manager mailed the two bills of exchange to the home office in Mexico for indorsement to Bartning Gebruder, Germany, together with instructions for their forwarding. The bills were inclosed in a letter bearing date August 20, 1919, and addressed to the indorsee in Germany.

Subsequent to the restoration of peace conditions and the resumption of business relations with Germany, the Crocker Bank effected a new credit arrangement with the Hamburg Bank, being known as the new account, the previous arrangement thereafter being referred to as the old account. No change had apparently been made in the arrangement, however. The bills of exchange were presented by the indorsee to the Hamburg Bank on September 24, 1919, whereupon the latter cabled the Crocker Bank and inquired if they might be paid from the new account, together with "all old drafts." In reply thereto the Crocker Bank cabled to ascertain the status of the old account and to learn "why above drafts cannot be charged against same." On October 1, 1919, the Hamburg Bank cabled the Crocker Bank to the effect that at the close of business the old account had a balance of 100,000 marks, but that "according peace conditions you cannot dispose against same." The Crocker Bank addressed a letter bearing date November 6, 1919, to the Hamburg Bank "regarding the matter of paying drafts drawn against our old account to the debit of our new account, and would thank you to hold this matter in abeyance for the time being, advising us, however, when our old account is again at our disposal." Other correspondence passed between the Crocker Bank and the Hamburg Bank relative to the status of the old and new accounts and the payment of the bills of exchange. The bills here involved were never protested, but, after being held for a time by the indorsee, were returned to the plaintiff at Los Angeles. This action to recover the amount paid for said bills of exchange grew out of the return thereof.

Among other things the trial court instructed the jury that laches was not chargeable to the plaintiff nor was the defendant bank relieved of any liability by reason of any delay in the presentation of the drafts to the Hamburg Bank occasioned by the existence of a state of war between the United States and Germany, and that it was the duty of the jury to determine whether the defendant bank had waived protest of the drafts. The jury was further instructed that, should it determine that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, such recovery would and should be limited to the value of 80,000 marks in United States money on September 24, 1919, the date of presentment to the drawee, or $3,600; that in addition thereto the plaintiff would be entitled to damages of $15 on each $100 thereof, or $540, together with interest on $4,140—the total of the principal sum and damages—from the date of demand made by plaintiff on the defendant, which date was to be determined by the jury.

After deliberating the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $14,200—the full amount paid by it for the bills of exchange. The verdict was passed to the court, and it declared that:

> "The court cannot accept that verdict. I told you what the extreme amount was that you could find. That is all there is to it. You will retire again."

Considerable discussion thereupon ensued between the court and individual jurors, and the court again instructed them that they could award no more than $4,140 and interest thereon to the plaintiff. The jury again retired and brought in a verdict in accordance with the court's instructions, and judgment thereon was duly entered.

[1] Plaintiff urges as a first ground of appeal that the court erred in declining to receive and record the first verdict brought in by the jury. Appellant contends that:

> "The court was bound in law to receive the first verdict rendered by the jury. It could thereafter, on motion, set it aside and order a new trial, but it had no power to compel the jury to render a verdict different in substance."

[2, 3] We cannot uphold this contention. In its instructions the trial court informed the jury that in the event they found or concluded that appellant was entitled to recover from the respondent, such recovery was to be for $4,140, together with interest. The jurors entirely disregarded the law as set forth in the court's instructions and brought in a verdict opposed thereto. In our opinion the lower court very properly declined to accept such a verdict and acted within its province when it instructed the jury to again retire and bring in a verdict in conformity with the instructions. While the trial judge may not interfere with or control the jury in passing upon the evidence, he nevertheless exercises a salutary supervisory power over their verdict. People v. Knutte, 111 Cal. 453, 455, 44 P. 166. It is the province and the duty of the court to instruct the jury upon the law, and such instructions are binding on the latter in its deliberations. Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 460, 177 P. 283. In the case of Logan v. Lewis, 35 Cal. App. 663, 666, 170 P. 851, 852, the jury, at the suggestion of the trial court, accompanied by proper instructions, amended its verdict by reducing the amount of the special damages awarded. The procedure therein pursued was upheld, and the opinion declares that:

> "Inasmuch as the verdict of the jury had not been recorded nor the jury discharged, we think the court was warranted in permitting the jury to make this amendment. Code Civ. Proc. § 619; 38 Cyc. 1893, 1894; 22 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 967, 968; McNutt v. Pabst, 25 Cal. App. 177, 143 P. 77; Conlin v. Lewis Inv. Co., 26 Cal. App. 388, 147 P. 472."

[4] We are of the view that the change made in the verdict constituted an amendment which could properly be made before the verdict had been recorded and prior to the discharge of the jury. This amendment was necessary so that the verdict would be in conformity with the instructions. We do not regard as significant the fact that the amendment was made by the jury under compulsion. If it were held otherwise "the refractory jurors would be able to compel a new trial and thus defeat the exercise by the court of a power which it clearly possesses." Estate of Sharon, supra.

[5] When the court instructed the jury as to the lawful limit of liability on the part of the defendant, if the jury should find the defendant liable at all, the court thereby indicated the only amount for which a judgment could lawfully be rendered. The jurors were not at liberty to refuse obedience to this instruction. If the court be in error in giving such an instruction, the error may be revised and corrected on appeal.

Nothing said herein is opposed to the principles enunciated by the several cases referred to in appellant's briefs. In none of those cases did the jury disregard the instructions of the court upon a question of law and bring in a verdict contrary thereto. In the main those cases presented instances where the jury had passed upon questions of fact and the trial court had attempted to substitute its opinion in the place and stead thereof. As declared in one of said cases:

> "The functions of the jury in determining the facts of the case were usurped by the judge." Langdon v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. App. 41, 43, 223 P. 72, 73.

Such is not this case.

[6] Assuming that error was committed by the trial court in refusing the appellant's request for a poll of the jury, we think no prejudice resulted therefrom, for the reason that the jurors were all in favor of a verdict for the appellant and so announced themselves on the return of the verdict that was recorded. As to the amount of said verdict the polling of the jury would have been a "mere useless ceremony." See Estate of Sharon, supra.

[7, 8] Before considering the amount of damages awarded to the appellant it may be said that by returning a verdict favorable to the appellant the jury impliedly determined that the evidence in the case was sufficient to show a dishonor of the two bills of exchange by the drawee bank and a waiver by the respondent drawer bank of the formality of protest. As these implied findings of the jury are not attacked on this appeal, the correctness thereof will not now be questioned.

[9] It remains to be determined whether the trial court correctly instructed the jury as to the amount of damages that might be awarded to the appellant in the event the jury was of the opinion that appellant should recover. In the solution of this problem we are precluded from having recourse to the provisions of the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law as incorporated in the Civil Code July 31, 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 1531). It is appropriate to note, however, that section 3266d of the new law provides:

> "The provisions of this title do not apply to negotiable instruments made and delivered prior to the taking effect hereof. * * *"

The two bills of exchange involved herein were made and delivered on March 23 and April 2, 1917, respectively. Said two bills having antedated the adoption by this state of the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law, the measure of damages recoverable from the drawer upon dishonor must be found in the law in effect prior to July 31, 1917. Sections 3234 to 3239, inclusive, of the Civil Code, constituted the law of this state when the two bills of exchange were sold, and were determinative of the amount of damages recoverable from the respondent bank upon the dishonor of said bills by the drawee and protest or waiver thereof. Section 3234 provided:

> "Damages are allowed as hereinafter prescribed, as a full compensation for interest accrued before notice of dishonor, re-exchange, expenses, and all other damages, in favor of holders for value only, upon bills of exchange drawn or negotiated within this state, and protested for nonacceptance or nonpayment."

Section 3235 provided:

> "Damages are allowed under the last section upon bills drawn upon any person: * * * (3) If drawn upon a person in any place in a foreign country, fifteen dollars upon each one hundred dollars of the principal sum specified in the bill."

Section 3236 provided:

> "From the time of notice of dishonor and demand of payment, lawful interest must be allowed upon the aggregate amount of the principal sum specified in the bill, and the damages mentioned in the preceding section."

Section 3237 provided:

> "If the amount of a protested bill of exchange is expressed in money of the United States, damages are estimated upon such amount without regard to the rate of exchange."

And section 3238 provided:

> "If the amount of a protested bill of exchange is expressed in foreign money, damages are estimated upon the value of a similar bill at the time of protest, in the place nearest to the place where the bill was negotiated and where such bills are currently sold."

[10] The amount of the bills of exchange involved herein was expressed in foreign money, and under said section 3238 the appellant was entitled to recover the value of said 80,000 marks at the time the bills were presented to the Hamburg Bank for payment, the jury having impliedly determined that protest had been waived. At the then existing rate of exchange, according to the record herein, said 80,000 marks would be the equivalent of $3,600 in United States money. In addition to this principal sum the appellant was entitled under section 3235 to damages of $15 upon each $100 thereof ($540) and interest, under section 3236, on the total of said two sums, or on $4,140, from the time payment was demanded of respondent.

The trial court's instructions upon the damages recoverable by appellant, as set forth in substance above, were in strict accordance with the rule of damages expressly declared by the above sections, and the trial court therefore did not err in confining the appellant's recovery as indicated. If German marks had increased in value the appellant would have been entitled to recover at the current rate. The fact that they depreciated in value could not affect the rule.

In view of the statutory rule of damages fixing the amount of recovery upon dishonored bills of exchange issued prior to the adoption by this state of the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law, it becomes unnecessary to consider and discuss the numerous cases from other jurisdictions cited by the parties hereto. Since the statutory rule of damages is applicable in all cases of dishonored bills of exchange it is likewise unnecessary to pass upon the several contentions of the parties touching the cause of the dishonor of the two bills herein involved.

As the appellant was awarded the maximum damages to which it is entitled under the law, a review of further asserted errors of the trial court would serve no useful purpose.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SULLIVAN, J.

200 Cal. 247

In re KIMBALL'S ESTATE.

KIMBALL v. TULLY et al.

(S. F. 12030.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1927.)

1. Executors and administrators 🔑14—Plaintiff held not entitled to appointment as executor under will providing for his appointment if testator and wife died at same time, where testator predeceased wife.

Under will appointing wife sole executrix, but, if testator and wife should die at same time, appointing plaintiff and others executors, plaintiff's right to be appointed executor was dependent on testator and wife dying at same time, and where testator predeceased wife by three days, plaintiff never acquired right to appointment.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑14—Death of executrix after decease of testator terminated her right to letters testamentary.

Under will appointing wife sole executrix and appointing others if wife and testator died at same time, death of wife shortly after testator terminated her right to letters testamentary.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑21(1)—Probate court must appoint qualified administrator with will annexed where estate is left without executor.

Where death of executor after death of testator avoided condition in will for appointment of other executors leaving estate without executor, it was duty of probate court to appoint qualified person to receive letters of administration with will annexed.

4. Executors and administrators 🔑32(2)—Administrator appointed under order not based on alleged invalid nomination by deceased executor will not be removed without showing of disqualification (Code Civ. Proc. § 1426).

General order appointing administrator, not shown to have been predicated on nomination of deceased executrix, was valid under Code Civ. Proc. § 1426, regardless of invalidity of nomination, and in absence of showing of disqualification administrator appointed will not be removed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Petition by Charles H. Kimball to remove Charles F. Tully and another, as administrator and administratrix with will annexed of the estate of Frederick H. Kimball, deceased, and for appointment of the petitioner as executor of the estate of deceased. From an order denying the application to be appointed executor, and from an order of appointment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Harry I. Stafford and W. F. Stafford, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edward M. Leonard, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. These appeals are from two orders, one from an order denying the application of the appellant to be appointed executor of the last will and testament of Frederick H. Kimball, deceased, and the other an appeal from an order appointing the respondents Charles F. Tully as administrator, and Sarah J. Ring as administratrix, with the will annexed, of the estate of said decedent. The facts are not disputed. Frederick H. Kimball died testate in the city and county of San Francisco, leaving his last will and testament, the only portions of which presented for consideration upon these appeals are those relating to the appointment of those who were to act as executrix or executor of said will. These portions of said will read as follows:

"To my dearly beloved wife and little sweetheart, Charlotte Frances Kimball, I devise and bequeath all of my property real, personal and mixed of whatsoever nature not otherwise provided for in this my last will, and direct said wife Charlotte Frances Kimball to be the sole executrix of this my last will without bonds or obligations to any one. * * * Should it please the Good Lord to call myself and little wife at the same time, regardless of who died first, it is my wish that my property shall be equally divided between Sarah Ring, Charles H. Kimball, Harold E. Ring, S. J., Mildred Kielty, Camille Vissas, and they to carry out bequest on reverse side of this sheet, and also bequests made in the last will of my dearly beloved wife—and Sarah Ring, Chas. H. Kimball and Harold E. Ring, S. J., shall be Executors without Bond."

The death of Frederick H. Kimball occurred on September 21, 1925. Three days later or on September 24, 1925, his wife, Charlotte Frances Kimball died; but subsequent to her husband's death, viz., on September 22, 1925, she signed and acknowledged a document addressed to the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, whereby she expressly renounced her right to act as executrix of the last will and testament of her deceased husband and appointed Charles F. Tully and Sarah J. Ring, her brother and sister, to act as administrator and administratrix, with the will annexed, of the estate of said decedent. She died two days later. Thereafter said Charles F. Tully and Sarah J. Ring filed said will for probate, together with their application to said court for the issuance of letters of administration thereon, which application, after due notice of the hearing, came on to be heard before said court on October 9, 1925, and was then heard without opposition; and at the conclusion of said hearing said will was duly admitted to probate and an order was made and entered appointing said Charles F. Tully and Sarah J. Ring administrator and administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed, of said estate; and they each thereupon duly qualified and entered upon their duties as such. On December 9, 1925, Charles H. Kimball, the appellant herein, filed his petition in said court praying for the removal of said Charles F. Tully and Sarah J. Ring as such administrator and administratrix, respectively, of said estate and the cancellation of their and each of their letters of administration and that he be appointed the executor of said will. An answer was filed to said petition, and the matter came on for hearing before said court on December 17, 1925, and was then heard and submitted to said court, which, on February 5, 1926, made and entered its order denying the appellant's petition both for the removal of said respondents and for the issuance to appellant of letters testamentary as executor of the will of said decedent.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] From each of the aforesaid orders the appeals herein have been taken. These appeals present the contentions of the appellant herein in two aspects. The first relates to the right of said appellant to receive the appointment of executor of said will in accordance with the terms thereof. This asserted right on his part must be predicated upon the fact, if it be a fact, that Frederick H. Kimball and his wife, Charlotte Frances Kimball, died "at the same time" according to the intent and meaning of the testator as expressed in his said will. But obviously this is not the fact in so far as is disclosed by the record herein. Conceivably it might have been shown that the testator had in contemplation when he prepared his olographic will that his wife and he might come to their end in a common casualty and that its peculiar wording had reference to such an eventuality, in which case it would have been immaterial which died first, or even that the one survived the other for a brief period, though dying from the fatal injuries received in the common disaster. Had such a state of things been shown the appellant might have thus created a basis for his claim of right to appointment as the executor of said will. But no such facts have been made to appear, and for all that this record discloses the death of the wife was in nowise connected by any causation with the death of the husband; and, this being so, three days of separation between the two events would be as effectual to defeat the operation of the terms of said will as to the conditional appointment of the appellant to be the executor thereof as any longer period of intermission would have been. It follows that the appellant never attained the right to such appointment, and hence that in so far as his appeal lies from the order of the trial court denying his petition for such appointment is concerned, that portion of its order to that effect must be affirmed.

The second aspect of the appellant's contentions upon these appeals is also twofold, the first relating to the correctness of the order of the trial court appointing the respondents herein administrator and administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed, of the estate of Frederick H. Kimball, deceased, and the second relating to the correctness of its subsequent order refusing to revoke said appointments upon the appellant's petition therefor. As to the first of these the appellant insists that the document executed by Charlotte Frances Kimball two days before she died was ineffectual to form the basis for the appointment of the respondents as administrator and administratrix, respectively, with the will annexed, of the estate of Frederick H. Kimball, deceased, for the reason that since Charlotte Frances Kimball had herself died before the application for such appointment by these respondents, her right of appointment died with her and hence could not suffice to form the foundation of the right of these respondents to be appointed in conformity with its nomination. The appellant presents an interesting legal problem in relation to his foregoing contention, but it is one which we do not feel called upon to decide.

[2-4] Charlotte Frances Kimball, the executrix first named in said will, having died shortly after the decease of her husband, the testator, her right to letters testamentary thereby ceased. But, having survived her husband for a period of time sufficient to amount to an avoidance of the conditions of his will, which depended upon their dying "at the same time," there remained no executrix or executor qualified for appointment as such under said will. It would therefore become the duty of the court wherein said document was offered for probate to appoint some qualified person or persons to receive letters of administration, with the will annexed. The respondents made due application for the probate of said will and for the issuance of letters of administration with the will annexed thereon, and while in their said application they set forth the fact of their nomination by Charlotte Frances Kimball to receive such letters, it is to be noted that they did not pray for such appointment of themselves, but only "that the court may make all necessary and proper orders to be made in the premises." It is also to be noted that the order of the trial court making such appointments was a general order, which did not purport upon its face to be predicated upon the aforesaid nomination of Charlotte Frances Kimball, then deceased. Such being its tenor, it was clearly within the powers of the court as prescribed in the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the selection of administrators with the will annexed of testate decedents' estates. Section 1426. The respondents were qualified to receive such appointment. The order was a valid order at the time it was made, entirely regardless of the validity or invalidity of the nomination by Charlotte Frances Kimball, then deceased, of the individuals thus selected, as suitable for such appointment.

This being so, and the appellant herein, upon his later petition for the removal of the respondents and the cancellation of their letters of administration, having made no showing of any disqualification or of any adequate grounds for their removal, the order of the court denying his petition therefor was properly made. The several orders of said court appealed from should therefore be and they are hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.

200 Cal. 222

BANDY v. WESTOVER et al. (L. A. 8514.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 7, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑694(1)—Supreme Court is concluded by trial court's findings in absence of testimony.

The Supreme Court is concluded by trial court's findings, where neither testimony in trial court nor on motion for new trial is before it.

2. Exchange of property 🔑3(1)—Writing in which plaintiff offered to exchange property, reserving right to revoke before defendant's acceptance, was not agreement to sell and lacked consideration (Civ. Code, § 1586).

Writing in which plaintiff offered to exchange her property for that of defendant, reserving right to revoke any time prior to acceptance by defendant, who was then in Europe, was not agreement of sale and purchase, but mere offer to exchange, and lacked consideration in that defendant gave no promise to plaintiff, in view of Civ. Code, § 1586.

3. Exchange of property 🔑3(1)—Plaintiff did not revoke offer to exchange land by notice to her own agents.

Plaintiff held not to have revoked offer to exchange land before defendant's acceptance, where she only notified her own agents that she would not make exchange, so that contract became binding on all parties on defendant's acceptance.

4. Exchange of property 🔑6—Plaintiff who offered to exchange land held to have waived objection to failure to make immediate delivery to escrow party (Civ. Code, § 1691).

Plaintiff, having offered to exchange land, held to have waived objection to failure to make immediate delivery to escrow party, where indorsements were made on original offer at her request and she was sued for broker's commissions prior to such delivery, especially where she did not offer to restore defendant to his property on attempting rescission, in view of Civ. Code, § 1691.

5. Exchange of property 🔑3(1)—Acceptance of offer to exchange land within four months held within "reasonable time," where offer recognized that the other party was abroad.

Offer to exchange land was not revoked by unreasonable lapse of time before acceptance, where offer recognized that the other party was in Europe and would not return for some months and offer was accepted within four months.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Reasonable Time.]

6. Set-off and counterclaim 🔑34(1)—In suit to cancel deed, claim for money expended in connection with other property is not proper counterclaim (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 438, 439).

In suit for cancellation of deed, defendant's claim for money judgment for sums expended in connection with other property is not proper counterclaim, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 438, 439.

7. Set-off and counterclaim 🔑34(1)—To constitute counterclaim, claim must qualify or defeat judgment to which plaintiff is otherwise entitled.

Matters set up as counterclaims must be claims which, if established, would in some way qualify or defeat judgment to which plaintiff is otherwise entitled.

8. Pleading 🔑147—Allegations of cross-complaint must state facts sufficient to constitute independent cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 442).

Allegations of cross-complaint are insufficient, where they fail to state facts sufficient to constitute independent cause of action, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 442.

9. Appeal and error 🔑173(11) — Plaintiff's failure to plead to counterclaims does not preclude contention, on appeal, that they were unauthorized.

Failure of plaintiff to demur or move to strike or otherwise plead to counterclaims does not preclude her from making contention, on appeal, that they were unauthorized.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Suit by Minnie D. Bandy, née Minnie D. Boyle, against Myron Westover and others, in which named defendant filed a counterclaim. From a judgment for defendants and for named defendant on his counterclaim, plaintiff appeals. Judgment for defendants affirmed; judgment on counterclaim reversed.

E. Marion Crawford, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Myron Westover and M. M. Meyers, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants, and also from a judgment in favor of defendant Westover upon an original and also upon an amended and supplemental counterclaim. Neither the testimony taken in the court below nor on the motion for a new trial is before us.

Plaintiff brought this action against the defendants, Myron Westover, W. H. Houghton, Frank H. Purcell, and Walter Bicknell, for cancellation of a deed executed by her to defendant Westover, covering a section of land in Kimball county, Neb., in exchange for a 20-acre orange grove tract, belonging to defendant Westover, situated in Los Angeles county, upon the ground that said deed was not knowingly or intentionally executed and also upon the ground that said deed and the paper writing executed at the same time constituted nothing more than an offer to exchange properties, which offer was revoked and withdrawn; also upon the ground that said deed was induced by fraudulent misrepresentations made to plaintiff by defendants Purcell and Bicknell.

Defendants Purcell and Bicknell answered, denying all the allegations of the complaint. Defendants Westover and Houghton answered separately, alleging that they had no knowledge of the transaction and adopting on information and belief the answer of their codefendants Purcell and Bicknell. Defendant Westover also filed a counterclaim in the sum of $713.23, which was later reduced to $684.13, alleged to be due him on account of escrow charges, revenue stamps on plaintiff's deed, recording deed to her, abstract of title to the Nebraska land, and also charges for labor, water, interest, and insurance accruing after June 1, 1923, in connection with the Westover tract; and said defendant Westover later filed an amended and supplemental counterclaim in the sum of $655.61, additional items of interest, labor, fuel and supplies in connection with the operation of said orange grove tract of land.

The trial court made findings in favor of defendants and also in favor of defendant Westover on both of his counterclaims and later gave judgment for all defendants and also judgment in favor of defendant Westover on the first counterclaim and reserved future action upon the amended and supplemental counterclaim. The court found specifically that the defendants Purcell and Bicknell were the agents of plaintiff in the transaction and not the agents of the defendant Westover; also, that the defendant Houghton was a real estate broker representing the defendant Westover only as such agent. The court also found specifically against the plaintiff as to each and every of her claims of fraudulent misrepresentation; also, as to her alleged ignorance of the execution of the deed and the intention to deliver same, and also as to her claim that she thought the paper executed by her was to be merely evidence of good faith and that same was to be cancelled at her option.

[1] We are thus concluded by these findings as to all these allegations of the complaint. The only question of law presented on this branch of the case by the pleadings and findings is the nature and legal effect of the transaction between the plaintiff and the defendant Westover, when viewed in the light of the acts and conduct of the parties.

[2] Plaintiff contends that the paper writing signed by her and made "Exhibit A" to the complaint, in connection with the deed executed by her as a part of the same transaction, amounts to nothing more than a revocable offer to exchange her Nebraska property for California property of Westover, which said offer was, prior to acceptance thereof by said defendant, withdrawn and revoked by her. The material portion of the said instrument in writing is as follows:

> "The said party of the first part desiring to make an exchange of the property first above described, clear of all incumbrances, for the equity in the property second above described and understanding that the owner of the said described property is in Europe on an extended tour, and difficult to communicate with, and whereas the agent W. H. Houghton, for the party of the second part, has endeavored by cablegram to reach the said party of the second part, and whereas the party of the first part waiving all responsibility and liability of the agent in and to this agreement, and desiring to take possession of the property of the party of the second part as above described and not wishing to deliver possession of the property first above described until October 1, 1923,
>
> "Agrees, to execute and deliver in trust, with the Trust Dep. of the Bank of Italy, in the city of Los Angeles, California, a warranty deed conveying the property first above described to Myron Westover, same to be held in trust by them for the benefit of the said Myron Westover till such time as the said Myron Westover and wife can be communicated with and a deed covering the property second above described, be obtained from them to the party of the first part, and that in the meantime the party of the first part shall procure a certificate of title to the lands first above described, showing the property free and clear, and deposit same with said trust, in the Bank of Italy, said papers and deeds are to be delivered when received by the said trust department of the Bank of Italy to the respective parties hereto to complete this exchange and
>
> "Whereas there is certain personal property connected with the property of the party of the second part, which is included in the exchange, and it is agreed that all personal property on the said property of the party of the second part is included, and
>
> "Whereas this agreement having been read and fully understood, the party of the first part agrees to make the above exchange as above stated, by executing and delivering a warranty deed conveying the property first above described, to Myron Westover subject only to possession, which will be October 1st, 1923, and
>
> "Whereas the said Myron Westover when communicated with will be asked to execute and deliver to the party of the first part a full covenant grant deed conveying the property second above described, subject to the right of way, restrictions, and reservations contained in former deeds, and deliver the property to the first party subject to the two above mentioned mortgages.

"This agreement shall bind the heirs, executors, and assigns of the respective parties hereto.

"In witness whereof the party of the first part has hereunto set her hand and seal this 25th day of May, 1923.

"[Signed] Minnie D. Young Boyle.
"Witness: ——. [Notarial Seal.]

"The above agreement is hereby accepted for Myron Westover by
"[Signed] W. H. Houghton, Agent."

We are in accord with the plaintiff that this writing did not constitute an agreement of sale and purchase between the parties, but on the contrary constituted merely an offer by plaintiff to exchange her Nebraska property for California property of Westover, which offer she was at liberty to revoke at any time prior to acceptance thereof by the defendant Westover in the manner provided in the offer. The rule of law in this behalf is well settled. Such a contract is lacking in consideration in that Westover gave no enforceable or any other promise to plaintiff. Civ. Code. § 1586; Roth v. Moeller, 185 Cal. 415, 419, 197 P. 62; Hamlin v. Barnhart, 26 Cal. App. 632, 147 P. 1188; 6 Cal. Jur. 51, § 29.

[3] But the controlling consideration is: Did the plaintiff, prior to acceptance of the offer by the defendant Westover, withdraw or revoke the same? The findings of the court in this behalf are:

> "On or about June 13, 1923, plaintiff telephoned to said defendants Purcell and Bicknell that she would not make said exchange and demanded that said transaction be canceled, to which said demand defendants Purcell and Bicknell replied by letter dated June 13, 1923, addressed to plaintiff, saying, in regard to her telephone message, that she 'did not want the deal to go through,' that she had investigated the matter before signing said agreement and that they were not in a position to countermand any transaction. And the court finds that on or about June 14, 1923, plaintiff knew that said defendants Purcell and Bicknell considered said agreement and transaction as binding upon her."

The finding also, as noted above, was that Purcell and Bicknell were merely the agents of plaintiff and were not found to be the agents of either the defendant Westover or the defendant Houghton. It is too clear for controversy that any notice given by the plaintiff to the defendants Purcell and Bicknell alone would be of no effect in transmitting notice to the defendant Westover, the defendant Houghton, or to the escrow party in the transaction. Indeed, it appears that the defendants Purcell and Bicknell notified plaintiff that they considered the offer binding upon her and that, as far as the record shows, she acquiesced in their conclusion. At any rate, the offer of plaintiff remained unrevoked until after the defendant Westover returned from Europe about September 15, 1923, and until long after September 22, 1923, upon which latter date he accepted the offer of exchange made by plaintiff by delivering to the escrow party, pursuant to the offer, a conveyance to the Los Angeles county real and personal property. No contention is made that he did not fully comply on said date with the terms of the offer as made by plaintiff. There is no escape from the conclusion that the acceptance by Westover in the manner stated made the contract in all respects binding upon both parties and authorized the escrow party to deliver the respective deeds to the respective grantees named therein. The rule of law in this case is clear and without conflict. Russ v. Tuttle, 158 Cal. 226, 110 P. 813; Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 104 P. 689, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522; 6 Cal. Jur. p. 54, § 30.

[4] We are unable to sustain plaintiff in the claim that because the deed and contract were not actually delivered to the escrow bank prior to June 13th, the said letter of withdrawal on that date to her agents should be held effective against the defendant Westover because the defendant Houghton became the agent of plaintiff to effect the escrow delivery. The facts found show that when deed and offer were executed on May 25th they were at that time delivered to Houghton, who receipted for them as held in escrow. He later, in June, on the request of plaintiff, while still retaining the papers, indorsed on the original offer a confirmation of the personal property to be conveyed as well as a statement regarding taxes for the years 1922 and 1923. Also, on June 1st, Houghton wrote a letter to plaintiff's agents tendering possession of the orange grove. Indeed, on July 9th, plaintiff was sued by the defendants Purcell and Bicknell for commissions as brokers in the transaction, they claiming the offer was binding upon her. In September, the exact date is not stated, the documents were delivered to the Bank of Italy as the escrow party. Under these circumstances, plaintiff must be held to have waived any objections she might have had to the failure of Houghton to make immediate delivery to the escrow party. Common prudence would have required plaintiff to make known to all the interested parties her election to withdraw from the offer. Plaintiff's position is further weakened by the failure to effect or attempt to effect a recission of the transaction by offering to restore to Westover the property he deeded to her. Civ. Code, § 1691. If she were to prevail in this action, the effect would be to restore her own former property to her while at the same time holding title to the property of Westover. No justification of her claim to a judgment that would have this effect can be found in the findings of the court.

[5] The claim that the offer was revoked by the unreasonable lapse of time between May 25th and September 22d is without merit as the offer recognized the fact that Westover was in Europe and would not return for some months. "Reasonable time" is a relative term depending upon the terms of the offer and other circumstances. Simons Brick Co. v. Wiglesworth, 184 Cal. 390, 392, 193 P. 947, 19 A. L. R. 1029; Cal. Jur. vol. 6, p. 55, § 31. The plaintiff made no issue in her complaint as to the claims of unreasonable delay, and no occasion existed for a special finding thereon by the court.

The conclusion above announced renders unnecessary the consideration of any of the other points urged either by the plaintiff in support of her appeal or the defendants in answer thereto. The only other matter left for consideration is the attack by plaintiff upon the counterclaims pleaded by the defendant Westover and upon which the court gave judgment as prayed for on the one, and reserved judgment on the other.

[6] It is manifest that the allowance of either of these claims of defendant Westover as proper counterclaims is erroneous. The counterclaims are controlled by sections 438 and 439 of the Code of Civil procedure. Section 438 provides that the counterclaim "must be one existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising out of * * * the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action."

Section 439 provides that—

> "If the defendant omits to set up a counterclaim upon a cause arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, neither he nor his assignee can afterwards maintain an action against the plaintiff therefor."

The provisions of section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the effect that, if defendant omits to set up a counterclaim arising out of the transactions set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, neither he nor his assignee can afterwards maintain an action against the plaintiff therefor, make it important that section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure be not extended to any case which does not fairly come within its provisions.

In the case at bar plaintiff is suing upon the equity side of the court for the cancellation of a deed to real property and in effect to establish title thereto. Defendant, in his counterclaims, however, is claiming a money judgment against plaintiff on account of sums expended by him in connection with the operation of another piece of property. It is true in a remote sense that the claims arise from the same transaction but, by no means, do they arise from the same "foundation" that plaintiff's claim rests upon.

[7] Indeed, the judgment as rendered in this case by the court makes it plain also that a several judgment was not and could not be entered. The judgment has two lines of adjudication within it, one confirming the land transaction and the other a judgment for money due on a contract. Another element of the rule regarding counterclaims is that the matters set up as such counterclaims must be claims which, if established, would in some way "qualify or defeat the judgment to which plaintiff is otherwise entitled." The counterclaims in suit likewise fail to conform to this requirement. The rule of law in this connection is well settled in this state. See Meyer v. Quiggle, 140 Cal. 495, 499, 74 P. 41; Ward v. Goetting, 44 Cal. App. 435, 438, 186 P. 640; Hayward v. Black, 46 Cal. App. 504, 506, 189 P. 460, where the question is fully discussed. Bannerot v. McClure, 39 Colo. 472, 90 P. 70, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 126, is to the same effect.

[8] Even if the allegations were to be considered as those of a cross-complaint, still the pleading could not be sustained as it wholly fails, standing alone, to state facts sufficient to constitute an independent cause of action. Code Civ. Proc. § 442; Imperial Water Co. No. 4 v. Meserve, 62 Cal. App. 593, 598, 217 P. 548.

[9] The failure of plaintiff to demur or move to strike out or otherwise plead to the counterclaims of defendant does not preclude her from making the contention that the same are unauthorized under our system of pleading. Macdougall v. Maguire, 35 Cal. 274, 95 Am. Dec. 98.

The above conclusion renders unnecessary the consideration by the court of the contention of plaintiff that the counterclaims as pleadings fail to state the proper averments of a cause of action.

Judgment for defendants is therefore affirmed, and judgment in favor of defendant Westover upon his counterclaims is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

200 Cal. 147

In re HAUPT'S ESTATE.

HAUPT et al. v. LINDAHL et al.

(L. A. 8728.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1926.)

1. Wills 🔑166(1)—Evidence held not to show that will was procured through fraud and undue influence.

In proceeding for revocation of probate of will, evidence held not to show that execution of will was procured through fraud and undue influence.

2. Wills 🔑155(1)—That officer of bank assisted in redrafting customer's will appointing bank executor and trustee would not support inference of undue influence.

That decedent was a customer of bank named as executor, of which one who assisted in redrafting will and read it over to testatrix before it was executed, was an official, would not support inference of undue influence.

3. Wills 🔑52(1)—Contestants had burden of establishing that testatrix was of unsound mind.

In proceeding for revocation of probate of will, contestants had burden of establishing fact that at time of execution of will the testatrix was of unsound mind.

4. Wills 🔑324(2)—Where evidence did not show that testatrix did not know extent of property, natural objects of bounty, or nature of act, issue of testamentary incapacity was properly withheld from jury.

Where evidence did not show that testatrix, when will was executed, was suffering from such insane delusions that she was not familiar with extent of property, did not know natural objects of her bounty, or did not understand nature of act, issue of testamentary incapacity was properly withheld from jury.

5. Wills 🔑116—Employees of bank named as executor and trustee held competent witnesses to will (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1618, 1699, 1700).

Where bank named as executor and trustee in will had no further interest than compensation for acting as such, its employees were competent subscribing witnesses to will, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1618, 1699, 1700.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Petition by Edward Paul Haupt and another by Charles H. Dickinson, their guardian ad litem, for the revocation of the probate of the will of Alma Haupt, deceased, against Sophia Lindahl and others. From a judgment dismissing the petition, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

Lewis & Fleming, of Los Angeles, and John M. Martin, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

O'Melveny, Millikin, Tuller & Macniel, Lovett & Hervey and Mott & Vallee, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles denying and dismissing the petition of the appellants for the revocation of the probate of the will of Alma Haupt, deceased.

The petition contained four counts. In substance it was alleged that the testatrix was without testamentary capacity at the time the will was executed; that its execution was procured by fraud and undue influence; that the testatrix did not know the contents of the will at the time of its execution; and that the will was not lawfully witnessed. After hearing the evidence on behalf of the appellants the trial court dismissed the petition without submitting the issues involved therein to the jury and the judgment was entered in accordance therewith.

The decedent died in the county of Los Angeles on May 25, 1922, leaving as her only heirs at law, a son William Frederick Haupt, a daughter, Norma Haupt, and the appellants, who are the minor children of a predeceased son. By the terms of her will, bearing date April 17, 1922, the testatrix made certain specific bequests and devised and bequeathed the remainder of her estate to the respondent bank in trust for certain specified purposes. The seventh clause of said will expressly declared that the testatrix purposely omitted to make provision therein for the appellants.

The first contention advanced by the appellants is that:

> "The trial court erred in its refusal to admit competent evidence, which refusal was prejudicial to the rights of the petitioners and appellants."

Hereunder it is urged that error was committed by the court in sustaining objections interposed by respondents to certain questions propounded by appellants and covered by exceptions numbered 1 to 64. We are in accord with the appellants' concession that "it is impracticable to discuss each ruling separately." For like reason it is impracticable for us to pass upon each ruling separately. We have examined all of the rulings complained of. Many of them, standing alone, might properly be held erroneous, but when considered in the light of the evidence elsewhere admitted they are not prejudicial. The trial court very rigidly confined the examination of witnesses upon the issue of the decedent's mental capacity to those limits prescribed and enunciated by this court upon innumerable occasions. Taken as a whole the court exercised a reasonable control over the examination. Section 2044, Code Civ. Proc.

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] It is next urged that the execution of the will was procured through fraud and undue influence. In support of this claim it is stated that the decedent at the time of the execution of the will was in poor physical and mental condition; that she did not know whether she was signing the original draft of the will or a corrected copy thereof; and that the witness Spence, being the vice president of the respondent bank, had "tremendous influence" over its customers, of whom the decedent was one. From an examination of the evidence we feel no hesitancy in stating that there is nothing therein that even tends to savor of fraud or undue influence. The appellants' contention that the failure of the witness Spence to inform the decedent whether her suggested changes in the original draft of the will had been made supports the charge of fraud cannot be sustained. After testifying that the decedent requested certain changes to be made in said original draft, the witness Spence testified that he took the redrafted will to her and that he and decedent read it over together; that thereafter no changes were suggested or made; and that the will as redrafted was executed. This uncontradicted evidence was ample to establish that the will as executed was in complete accord with the decedent's wishes and expressed desires. The claim of fraud is without merit.

[2] Nor is there anything in the record which tends to show that decedent would have executed a different instrument had the witness Spence not assisted her in its preparation and execution. As declared in Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45:

> "There is an utter lack of any proof of pressure brought to bear upon the testatrix which overpowered her mind and overcame her volition at the very time the will was made. In re Rick's Estate, 160 Cal. 450 [117 P. 532]."

The mere fact that the decedent was a customer of the respondent bank, of which the witness Spence was an official, would not support an inference of undue influence.

[3, 4] As a third ground of appeal the appellants contend that the trial court erred with reference to the "law of the case." It is urged that the presumption of sanity was overcome by substantial evidence and that the issue of testamentary capacity should therefore have been submitted to the jury for determination. With this contention we are not in accord. The case of Estate of Perkins, supra, contains a concise but complete statement of the law bearing upon the question of testamentary capacity. Applying the principles announced in that case the conclusion is inescapable that the contestants failed to sustain the burden of establishing the fact that at the time of the execution of the will the testatrix was of unsound mind. Considering the evidence introduced on behalf of the appellants in a light most favorable to their contention it cannot be said that it is sufficient to establish that on April 17, 1922, the day upon which the will was executed, the decedent was affected with general testamentary incapacity or was suffering from such insane delusions that she was not on that day familiar with the extent of her property, did not know those who would be the natural objects of her bounty, or that she did not know and understand the nature of the act in which she was then engaged. Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 227, 86 P. 695, 9 Ann. Cas. 795; Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 128 P. 932; Estate of Collins, 174 Cal. 663, 164 P. 1110; Estate of Presho, 196 Cal. 639, 238 P. 944. A careful survey of the record reveals that it is devoid of all evidence which would tend to support either a claim of fraud, undue influence, or testamentary incapacity, and the trial court, therefore, was not in error in dismissing the petition for revocation of probate as to said issues without submitting them to the jury. If the cause had been submitted to the jury, and a verdict favorable to the contestants had been returned on any or all of said issues, it would have been the duty of the court, under the evidence, to have set aside the verdict.

[5] Appellants urge as their final ground of appeal that the will in question was not properly witnessed. The claim is that the bank, as executor and trustee of the decedent's estate, had a beneficial and financial interest therein which disqualified its employees from witnessing the will. This contention is based on the assertion that a person named therein as executor may not witness the execution of a will and that if the executor may not act in that capacity the employees of the executor may not so act. It has been held that a person named as executor may properly serve as a subscribing witness. Baker v. Bancroft, 79 Ga. 672, 5 S. E. 46; Jones v. Larrabee, 47 Me. 474; Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358; Stewart v. Harriman, 56 N. H. 25, 22 Am. Rep. 408. Page on Wills, § 199, states that:

> "The reasons given by the older cases for holding an executor to be incompetent [as a subscribing witness] have been entirely abandoned by the courts. His commissions are looked upon as merely a compensation for services rendered, and as giving him no financial interest in the probating of the will. * * * Accordingly, it is now held by the great weight of modern authority that an executor has, at the time of the execution of the will, no such beneficial interest thereunder as renders him incompetent."

This view found early expression in this state. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 488, 506; Estate of Egan, 6 Coff. Prob. Dec. 28, 30.

The respondent bank was also appointed by the will to act as trustee after final distribution. The superior court retains jurisdiction over the trust estate after distribution for the purpose of the settlement of the accounts of the trustee (section 1699, Code Civ. Proc.) and on such accounting the trustee is allowed only such compensation as the court may deem just and reasonable (section 1700, Code Civ. Proc.). Compensation which the respondent may receive as executor is also provided for by statute (section 1618, Code Civ. Proc.) and it will receive the same as compensation for services rendered and not as an interest in the estate by will or by succession (Estate of Simonton, 183 Cal. 53, 190 P. 442). In an early case it was held that a subscribing witness is not rendered incompetent as a witness by holding lands in trust for a devisee. Peralta v. Castro, 6 Cal. 354.

It was shown that the subscribing witnesses herein were employees of the respondent bank. They were known to the decedent and were requested to act at her suggestion. When the executor and trustee has no further interest than the compensation for acting as such, he is not thereby rendered incompetent to act as a subscribing witness, and it would follow that the employees of such executor and trustee would not be incompetent. Assuming that an executor or trustee had a disqualifying interest by reason of some discretionary powers exercisable under the terms of the will, still, when, as here, it does not appear that the subscribing witnesses were stockholders or officers of the respondent, their interest as employees would seem to be in no sense proprietary and would be too indefinite, uncertain, remote, and contingent to affect their competency as witnesses. Peralta v. Castro, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; PRESTON, J.

---

200 Cal. 204

CHESTER R. PYLE CO. v. FOSSLER et al. (L. A. 7551.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 27, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—Omission to find on issue not necessitating change in judgment does not warrant reversal or new trial.

Omission to find on issue when finding would not necessitate any change in judgment does not warrant reversal or new trial.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—Failure to find on certain issues does not constitute prejudicial error if findings are made on issues determining case.

If findings are made on issues which determine case, other issues become immaterial, and failure to find thereon does not constitute prejudicial error.

3. Trial 🔑397(5)—Court's failure to find on immaterial issues held not error.

In action to foreclose contract on building because of failure to pay purchase price claimed due, failure of trial court to find total cost of building and improvements or cost of various changes in construction, or to allow compensation as provided in construction, or to allow reasonable attorney's fees for prosecution of action, held not error; findings of trial court having completely disposed of all material issues of case.

4. Estoppel 🔑53, 54—Waiver always rests on intent and knowledge.

Waiver of rights always rests on intent and knowledge of parties.

5. Contracts 🔑322(4)—Evidence held insufficient to show waiver by defendants of any rights under contract to construct building for defendant.

In action to foreclose contract for construction of building because of failure to pay purchase price, evidence held insufficient to show either express agreement or conduct by defendants to warrant inference of waiver of rights under contract.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by the Chester R. Pyle Company against Mrs. Kate Fossler and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roy V. Rhodes and Wilbur Bassett, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Plaintiff brought an action to foreclose a written contract in the nature of a mortgage for the construction of a building for the defendants and respondents. Prior to the commencement of the action, defendants made an offer in writing to pay plaintiff the sum of $1,000, in addition to the sum of $2,500 theretofore paid, in satisfaction of any and all claims under the contract. The offer, accompanied by a sufficient tender, was refused, and the defendants subsequently paid the money into court. The trial court, by its judgment, decreed that plaintiff take nothing by the action, save and except the sum of $1,000, and that the defendants recover their costs. From this judgment the plaintiff appealed, citing insufficiency of the evidence, lack of proper findings, and errors of law occurring at the trial.

The appellant is a corporation carrying on a general contracting and building business. During the year 1918 the defendants, a mother and four daughters, sold their home in Nebraska and came to California; the mother, Mrs. Kate Fossler, about 75 years of age, and ill and weak, and two daughters, planning to live here. They had received $5,000 from the sale of the Nebraska property, which was all the money they had. With this modest amount to invest, they sought to buy a home in Pasadena. While in search of such an investment, and looking at houses already built, they came in contact with the appellant. One of its agents suggested to defendants that, instead of buying a home already constructed, they purchase a lot for $2,000, and erect thereon a house and garage similar to one already constructed with which they were familiar. He assured them that the desired structure could be built for a sum not to exceed $3,000. Acting on the advice of plaintiff, through its agent, the defendants purchased the lot, and agreed with the plaintiff that it should erect thereon a dwelling house, garage, and other improvements "at a cost of approximately $3,000."

A contract was thereupon prepared by the plaintiff and submitted to the defendants. It provided that whereas the defendants had agreed to hire, and contract with the plaintiff to erect a dwelling house, garage, and other improvements, the defendants would furnish the money therefor, in specified payments, the plaintiff to furnish all things required to complete a "one-story dwelling including an attic, a garage, and such other improvements" as might be ordered by the defendants, "according to plans and specifications and drawings" to be prepared by the plaintiff, "and agreed upon, and when agreed upon to be signed and approved by at least three of the" defendants. The contract further provided that the defendants might, during the progress of the work, request alterations, additions to, or omissions from the contract and plans and specifications, and also that, should the superintendent of construction order necessary changes or deviations, the same should in no way make void the contract, but any increased cost thereof should be added to the amount specified as the cost on which the compensation of the builder should be computed. By another stipulation, it was understood and agreed that the cost of the building and improvements ordered or contemplated in the contract and plans and specifications, or incurred by any changes made by the defendants, might be more than the amount specified in the contract, and, if so, the defendants should furnish the necessary money to complete the building, but the plaintiff should have the right to furnish any money at its option to construct and complete the improvements, all such amounts, so advanced, to be deemed secured by the contract, "as a lien on said premises in the nature of a mortgage." In consideration for any advancements and for its services, plaintiff was to be paid a sum equal to 10 per cent. of the cost of the building and improvements.

When the contract was presented for signing, the defendants called attention to the fact that it contained no provision as to the total maximum amount which the improvements would cost them, and did not provide that changes and alterations should be ordered in writing. The contract was thereupon taken away by plaintiff, and when again presented contained the provision for the erection of "a dwelling house and garage and other improvements at a cost of approximately $3,000.00," and that all changes and alterations should be ordered in writing. Not "knowing anything about contracts," and desirous of being properly advised, the defendants requested the name of a lawyer, and were sent by plaintiff to its own attorney. The defendants did not know of the relation of the attorney to the plaintiff, and one of them went to him for advice. He advised that the contract "was all right," but does not appear to have had any other connection with the transaction in its inception.

In apparent performance of the contract executed by the parties, the plaintiff erected a dwelling house and garage on the lot of the defendants but departed widely from the plans and specifications first presented to the defendants, and demanded payment for the completed improvements in the sum of $12,118.39. The defendants claim that then, for the first time, they learned that they were not getting a house and garage at a cost of approximately $3,000. On this point the evidence is contradictory. Appellant's superintendent of construction, who drew the plans and specifications, and who appears to have conducted most of the negotiations with the defendants, testified that he showed the defendants plans for a six-room frame house, and told them that it could be built for approximately $3,000; that prior to the signing of the written agreement no plans had been perfected, and no specifications had been drawn; that plaintiff a week later submitted a pencil sketch of plans for a frame building, and he was told to prepare plans along the lines shown on it; that certain changes in the sketch were suggested by the defendants; plans and specifications were subsequently prepared by him; that he frequently talked with defendants during the construction, and told them "that changes would cost more money than what the contract called for." In this connection, however, it must be borne in mind that the defendants were at all times planning and thinking in terms of improvements to cost approximately $3,000, all the money they had. They had been shown such a house by appellant's superintendent. He prepared a pencil sketch, apparently of a house that could be erected for that sum. On the witness stand he admitted that he gave defendants no figures regarding the cost of the house finally settled upon, and shown on the blue prints furnished by him. There is evidence on the part of the defendants that when the changes from the pencil sketch were talked over, appellant's superintendent assured the defendants that appellant had on hand some old or "left over material," by the use of which the house finally decided upon could be built within the original estimate. The evidence is in sharp conflict as to what was said and done by the parties in relation to changes made after the plans were signed, and during the progress of the work.

The findings appear to have been made largely in response to the issues raised by the third and special defense interposed by the defendants. The court found that the officers and agents of the plaintiff were skilled and experienced in the building business, and were accustomed to drawing and entering into contracts similar to that entered into by the defendants; but, on the other hand, the defendants were without business experience or skill, and were without knowledge regarding the erection of buildings and improvements or the cost thereof, or the matter of contracts similar to that entered into by them. As shown by the testimony of defendants' experts, the improvements, as originally planned, would probably have cost $6,000, and, as finally completed, should have cost approximately $8,000. The evidence clearly shows that had these facts been known to the defendants they would not have entered into the contract. During all the preliminary negotiations they made it plain that they would not do so if the cost to them should exceed the sum of approximately $3,000. It is equally clear that they would not have contemplated costly additions to and changes in the work. The court also found that, in entering into the contract, the defendants believed and relied on the representations of plaintiff that the improvements contemplated by them would be built for the sum of approximately $3,000, and that prior to the time at which the improvements were substantially completed plaintiff did not inform or disclose to defendants, nor did defendants have any knowledge that the total cost of construction, according to the plans and specifications made and first approved by them, or as subsequently modified, would exceed the agreed sum of approximately $3,000. The court also found the defendants did not order in writing any changes or alterations in the plans previously agreed upon, and did not agree to any deviation from the plans and specifications as originally submitted to them, which they knew or believed would increase the cost of the improvements above the maximum price fixed by the contract. There is another finding that, before making the many changes in the character of the improvements, the plaintiff never made or furnished to the defendants any estimate of the increased cost thereof, nor informed them that such changes from the plans and specifications would increase the total cost of construction, and the defendants understood and believed that the changes would not increase the cost of construction beyond the amount specified in the contract.

The trial court found, as the ultimate fact, that an additional sum of $500 over and above the sum of $3,000 was "in contemplation of the provision in said contract that the dwelling house, garage and improvements should be constructed at a cost of approximately $3,000, * * * adequate, just and full compensation from defendants to plaintiff for all changes, alterations, additions to, and deviations from said plans and specifications made by or with the consent of the defendants, or any of them, after said plans and specifications were approved"; and "that the total sum of $3,500 is adequate, just, and full compensation for all sums due from defendants to plaintiff." The offer and tender of the defendants, and the subsequent deposit in court, being of the exact amount found due, the plaintiff was not entitled to its costs.

[1-5] The appellant advances a number of reasons why the judgment should be reversed. They are that the trial court failed to find the total cost of the building and improvements, or the cost of the various changes in construction, and did not find and allow it compensation at the rate of 10 per cent. of the cost, as provided in the contract, and did not find and allow it a reasonable attorney's fee for the prosecution of the action. It also argues that the trial court attempted to find the reasonable value of the improvements constructed, which, it contends, is not an issue presented by the pleadings. In answer, it need only be said that an omission to find upon an issue, when a finding would not necessitate any change in the judgment, does not warrant a reversal or a new trial. If findings are made upon issues which determine the case, other issues became immaterial, and a failure to find thereon does not constitute prejudicial error. 24 Cal. Jur. pp. 943–944. The probative and the ultimate facts here found properly and completely dispose of the material issues of this case. The contention that the court did not find on an issue, raised by an amendment to the complaint, that the defendants waived the condition of the contract requiring deviations and changes to be ordered in writing, and consented that they be made, and accepted the benefits thereof, is answered by the findings taken as a whole. Waiver always rests upon intent and knowledge. There was, in this case, neither an express agreement nor such conduct on the part of the defendants, under the facts found, as would warrant an inference of any relinquishment on their part.

We have considered the various contentions of the appellant as to the sufficiency of the evidence, and the lack of appropriate findings, as well as the specifications of error in law occurring at the trial, and do not find that they warrant a new trial of the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; SEAWELL, J.

---

200 Cal. 192

LANGFORD et al. v. THOMAS et al.

(L. A. 8498.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1926.)

1. Brokers 🔑31—Broker, who concealed his ownership of interest in property and agency for another having an interest therein, held liable for secret profits (Civ. Code, §§ 2228, 2230, 2231, 2322).

Broker selling chicken ranch held liable for secret profits to same extent as unfaithful trustee, under Civ. Code, §§ 2228, 2230, 2231, 2322, where he concealed his interest in the ranch and also his agency for another having an interest in the ranch.

2. Brokers 🔑38(4) — In purchasers' action against their real estate broker, who concealed ownership of property, to recover secret profits, value of property is immaterial.

In action by purchasers against their real estate broker, who concealed his ownership of property sold, to recover secret profits, evidence of value of property purchased is immaterial since recovery is difference between price paid by real estate broker and price paid by purchaser from him.

3. Brokers 🔑38(4)—Testimony as to plaintiffs' real estate broker acting also for one having contract to purchase property held not admissible on ground that parties knew situation.

In purchasers' action against real estate broker to recover secret profits, testimony as to broker's agency for parties having contract to purchase property sold plaintiffs held not admissible on ground that dual agency is unobjectionable if both parties know of situation, there being no evidence of fact assumed.

4. Trial 🔑397(5)—Acreage sold plaintiffs, suing for secret profits by their broker, and personal property thereon held immaterial and findings thereon unnecessary.

In action for secret profits by real estate broker, failure to find on issues of acreage of property sold and amount of personal property thereon held not error, such issues being immaterial.

5. Brokers 🔑38(4)—In suit for secret profits against real estate broker, his letters suggesting meeting to adjust grievances held properly excluded.

In action to recover secret profits from real estate broker, court properly excluded letters by broker to plaintiff, written after completion of transaction and merely requesting meeting of parties to adjust grievances.

6. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)—Conflict in evidence must be resolved in favor of court's findings.

Conflict in evidence on issues in action to recover secret profits from real estate broker must be resolved in favor of court's findings.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by Ada C. Langford and husband against J. F. Thomas and another for damages for violation of duty as real estate agents. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George H. Strong, of San Francisco, and Glen H. Munkelt, of San Diego, for appellants.

Hamilton & Lindley, of San Diego, for respondents.

SULLIVAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for $2,136.99 and costs against the defendants for damages for violation of their duty as real estate agents during the period of their employment as such by plaintiffs.

The case was tried by the court without a jury and findings were filed covering all material issues by the trial judge on November 25, 1924, the date of the entry of judgment in the superior court of San Diego county.

The facts, as stated in the complaint on which the cause was tried, as found by the trial court and as thoroughly established by evidence at the trial, may be summarized as follows:

(1) On March 1, 1923, Ada C. Langford and Norton Langford, husband and wife, were the owners of a lot situated at 1505 Lewis street, in the city of San Diego, referred to throughout the record as the "Lewis street property." The value of the property at the time, as found by the court, was $8,000. It was subject to a mortgage for $3,250, making the net value of the property of the Langfords at that time $4,750. The negotiations on the Langfords' part were conducted mainly by the wife.

(2) J. F. Thomas at the time was conducting business as a real estate agent in the city of San Diego under the name of "The Crescent Realty Company," a defunct corporation.

(3) On March 1, 1923, the Langfords, desiring to secure a chicken ranch and to make use of the Lewis street property, in whole or in part, in securing the new property, employed Thomas as a real estate agent to conduct negotiations for them, Thomas accepting the employment and undertaking to effect a desirable exchange. Neither then nor at any time during the negotiations resulting in the exchange of properties did Thomas suggest any disqualifying or adversary interest on his part which might prevent his undivided service and loyalty as agent for the Langfords. At no time did Thomas inform the Langfords, or either of them, that "he or any one for whom he" was acting as agent had "an interest, present or contingent, adverse to that of his beneficiary," the Langfords. See sections 2230 and 2322, Civ. Code.

As a matter of fact, at the time of making the engagement to act as agent for the Langfords, Thomas was disqualified to assume such agency, both by his own personal interest and his interest as agent for the Malletts in the Chula Vista chicken ranch.

(4) As a result of the activities of Thomas assuming to act for all concerned, the Langfords parted with their equity in the Lewis street property, worth $4,750, gave their note for $4,500 and secured by mortgage on the chicken ranch, and paid off a street assessment lien of $121.99, due from Thomas or the Malletts, or both, on the chicken ranch. The aggregate cost to the Langfords to secure the Chula Vista chicken ranch was $9,371.99. The aggregate cost to Thomas of the chicken ranch deeded by him to the Langfords at the price of $9,371.99 was $7.235, made up of items which we shall presently state.

The difference between this latter amount and the price obtained from the Langfords was $2,136.99, for which amount the trial court gave judgment to the plaintiffs.

(5) The Chula Vista chicken ranch, on March 1, 1923, when Thomas, as agent for the Langfords, engaged to negotiate an exchange of the Lewis street property for a chicken ranch, was the property of Thomas subject to a contract of sale made by him on September 14, 1920, with Mildred Mallett and W. H. Mallett, under which he was to convey the same for a price of $6,250. On March 1, 1923, the balance due on the sale contract from Mallett and wife to Thomas was $3,500. To secure a release of the contract right of the Malletts in the Chula Vista chicken ranch, Thomas canceled his claim for the $3,500 unpaid balance and paid to the Malletts an additional sum of $3,735—making a total cost to Thomas of the ranch, $7,235.

Without burdening this opinion with all the details of the one transaction set out in the third amended complaint, we may say that Thomas, as trustee for the Langfords, violated his duty (a) by nondisclosure of his disqualification owing to his antecedent and continued ownership of the Chula Vista chicken ranch, (b) by his agency for the Malletts, (c) by concealment and suppression of essential facts likely to affect the action of the Langfords, (d) by misrepresentation and such other fraudulent device as would aid him in securing for himself the Lewis street property in San Diego and getting rid of the chicken ranch with its lien of $121.99.

[1] The law of California imposed on Thomas, the real estate agent, the same obligation of undivided service and loyalty that it imposes on a trustee in favor of his beneficiary. Violation of his trust is subject to the same punitory consequences that are provided for a disloyal or recreant trustee. King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 628. The case cited was one of secret profits realized by an agent out of a transaction handled by him for the benefit of two associates and himself in a common enterprise.

Justice Niles in 1872, speaking for an undivided court, declared that:

> "By the terms of the original agreement between the defendant and the plaintiffs, Crosett and King, the defendant was to purchase the land for the least price for which it could be purchased, and for the benefit of the three parties concerned.
>
> "By this agreement the defendant assumed a position of trust, and in that relation was bound to exercise the utmost good faith towards his associates in the transaction. It is one of the plainest principles of equity that an agent cannot make a profit out of his principal in the business of his agency. The defendant, as associate of the plaintiffs in the proposed purchase, and entrusted by them with its management, was held to the same good faith, and could make no bargain, the benefits of which his coassociates would not be entitled to share."

The Civil Code, enacted at the legislative session of the same year 1872, crystallized the adjudicated law of earlier days into statutory form as Civil Code sections declaring the rules for the government of agents and trustees in their dealings with principals and beneficiaries. Section 2322 of the Civil Code, as then enacted and still in force, provided that:

> "An authority expressed in general terms, however broad, does not authorize an agent * * * (3) to do any act which a trustee is forbidden to do by article 2, chapter 1, of the last title."

In the article and chapter thus referred to, we find section 2230, Civil Code, which contains the following inhibition upon the activities of trustees:

> "Neither a trustee nor any of his agents may take part in any transaction concerning the trust in which he or any one for whom he acts as agent has an interest, present or contingent, adverse to that of his beneficiary, except as follows: 1. When the beneficiary, having capacity to contract, with a full knowledge of the motives of the trustee, and of all other facts concerning the transaction which might affect his decision, and without the use of any influence on the part of the trustee, permits him to do so. * * *" (Italics ours.)

Under the statutory rule thus laid down for Thomas in his proposed employment as a real estate agent by the Langfords, he was barred from acceptance of the employment, unless he disclosed all the facts to the Langfords and after such disclosure was permitted by them to act as their agent.

The law as laid down in these Code sections has been frequently interpreted and applied. The case of Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 P. 486, decided in 1904, is instructive. It was held in that case, as shown in subdivision 1 of the syllabus, as follows:

> "Principal and Agent—Fiduciary Relation—Duty of Agent—Advantage Over Principal.—The relation of an agent to his principal is of a fiduciary nature, and not only imposes upon the agent the highest good faith toward the principal, but precludes him from obtaining any advantage over him in any transaction had by virtue of his agency."

In the opinion in the same case at page 641 (76 P. 487), we find the following:

> "The relation between Garnier and the plaintiffs was of a fiduciary nature, and not only imposed upon Garnier the duty of acting in the highest good faith towards the plaintiffs, but precluded him from obtaining any advantage over them in any transaction had by virtue of his agency. Subdivision 3 of section 2322 of the Civil Code forbids an agent from doing 'any act which a trustee is forbidden to do' under sections 2228, 2239 of the Civil Code. Section 2228 declares that 'In all matters connected with his trust, a trustee is bound to act in the highest good faith towards his beneficiary, and may not obtain any advantage therein over the latter by * * * concealment;' and section 2231 declares that 'A trustee may not use the influence which his position gives him to obtain any advantage from his beneficiary.' See, also, Story on Agency, § 211; Mechem on Agency, § 470; Bunker v. Miles, 30 Me. 431 [50 Am. Dec. 632]; King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 628; Rubidoex v. Parks, 48 Cal. 215; Burke v. Bours, 92 Cal. 108 [28 P. 57]; Sterling v. Smith, 97 Cal. [343] 393 [32 P. 320]."

Cases to like effect covering the intervening years might be multiplied indefinitely, but it would be a work of supererogation. Thomas by his own showing, under the circumstances attending his conduct, became answerable as an unfaithful trustee for any benefits, profits, or advantages realized by him.

A brief reference to the 11 specific grounds for reversal urged by the appellants may be proper.

I. The trial court overruled a demurrer to the third amended complaint and denied a motion to strike out certain portions thereof. Appellants insist that the third amended complaint did not state a cause of action. As we read the complaint in the light of the law applicable as above stated, the ground is not tenable. Neither do we find reversible error in the ruling of the court on the same demurrer on the grounds of uncertainty or misjoinder of causes of action.

II. Appellants here contend that their motion to strike certain portions of the complaint was improperly denied. As stated in appellants' brief, the motion was made so as "to eliminate all allegations which tend to present two causes of action." The complaint detailed but one transaction and stated but one cause of action. The motion to strike was properly denied.

[2] III. For a third contention, the appellants urged that the court below erred in excluding testimony touching the value of the Mallett chicken ranch. In an action against an agent for breach of trust and to recover a secret profit obtained by said agent as a result of the agency relationship the authorities are to the effect that the value of the land is immaterial on the ground that:

> "The plaintiffs should have, from the defendant, the difference between the price of the land purchased by him for the plaintiffs and the amount paid by the plaintiffs." King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 628, 635; Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 642, 76 P. 486.

[3] IV. As their fourth point the appellants contend that the trial court erred in excluding certain offered testimony of the agency of Thomas for the Malletts, insisting that:

> "There is no objection to a dual agency if both parties are advised of the situation."

What we have said in the earlier part of this opinion disposes of the contention. The record herein fails to establish that the Langfords were informed of and consented to Thomas acting as the agent of the Malletts.

[4] V. Alleged failure of the trial court to find on material issues. We cannot say that the trial court failed "to find upon the material issues as framed by the pleadings." As we read the complaint, it alleges a cause of action arising from the false and fraudulent representations and concealments of Thomas by which the respondents were led to believe that they were dealing with the Malletts, when, in fact, they were dealing with Thomas. The record reveals that the court below found upon all the material issues presented by said cause of action. The issues raised by the further allegations of the complaint touching appellants' representations as to the acreage of the chicken ranch and the amount of personal property thereon were immaterial and findings thereon unnecessary. The judgment entered would not in any way be affected by findings on said immaterial issues. Sharp v. Pitman, 166 Cal. 501, 505, 137 P. 234.

[5] VI. It is here urged that the lower court erred in excluding two letters addressed by the appellant Thomas to one of the respondents requesting that the latter visit the former in order to adjust any grievance that might exist.

We cannot see the materiality of the evidence and conclude that it was properly excluded. The letters involved were written long after the consummation of the transaction out of which this action arose and merely requested a meeting of the parties to adjust grievances. In addition, the letters contain many laudatory and self-serving declarations.

[6] VII., VIII., XI., X. We are of the opinion that the several findings complained of under the above headings are amply supported by the evidence. As already indicated, the evidence tends to show that the appellant Thomas by his conduct and activity, in effect, succeeded in substituting himself as principal in the place and stead of the Malletts. Any conflict in the evidence upon the issues covered by the findings complained of must be resolved in favor of said findings.

XI. The final ground urged by the appellants for reversal is that the court erred in the measure of damages awarded to the respondents. This matter has been fully covered by us in the preceding pages of this opinion. In our opinion, the trial court properly held Thomas answerable to his employers for the full amount of his secret profits realized on the one transaction which he, as their agent and trustee, conducted for them as principals and beneficiaries of the trust.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.

---

200 Cal. 210

MORRIS v. STANDARD OIL CO.

(L. A. 8612.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1926.)

1. Master and servant ⚷389—Compensation insurer, paying benefits for injuries to workman, held to have cause of action against wrongdoer (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 30, subd. [f]).

Where, upon insurer being allowed lien for compensation paid against judgment giving employee certain compensation to be paid by defendant, such insurer assigned claim to employee, at time of assignment insurer held to have cause of action against defendant, in view of Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 860) § 30, subd. (f), providing that if insurance carrier has paid any compensation for which employer is liable it shall be subrogated to all rights of such employer, which rights may be enforced in its own name.

2. Master and servant ⚷389—Insurer's cause of action, arising from subrogation to employer's rights by payment of compensation, held assignable (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 30, subd. [f]; Civ. Code, § 954).

Cause of action, arising through subrogation, under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 860) § 30, subd. (f), of insurer to rights of employer because of such insurer having paid compensation for which employer was liable, held assignable, in view of Civ. Code, § 954, governing transfer.

3. Assignments ⚷22—Cause of action, arising either out of violation of property right, or out of obligation or contract, is transferable (Civ. Code, § 954).

Under Civ. Code, § 954, cause of action, arising either out of violation of right of property, or out of obligation or contract, may be transferred.

4. Master and servant ⚷389—Cause of action for compensation paid by insurer held to arise in favor of subrogated insurer and not in favor of employee (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 30, subd. [f]).

Cause of action of insurer for compensation paid by it for which employer was liable held to arise not in favor of employee because of injuries, but in favor of insurer, subrogated to employer's rights under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 860) § 30, subd. (f) for reimbursement for amount of disability indemnity paid employee.

5. Assignments ⚷24(2)—Cause of action, arising from injuries to body or feelings of person injured, is not assignable.

Personal causes of action, arising out of injuries to body or feelings of person injured, are not assignable.

6. Limitation of actions ⚷34(1)—Action on assigned claim for compensation, paid by insurer to employee, held required brought within three years from time insurer paid employee (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 30, subd. [f]).

In action upon assigned claim for compensation, paid by plaintiff's assignor as insurer to plaintiff's ward, employee, such action, being based on liability created by statute (Workmen's Compensation Act [St. 1917, p. 860] § 30, subd. [f]), held subject to three-year limitation statute running from time insurer paid disability indemnity to injured employee.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action by J. M. Morris, guardian of the person and estate of Milton Morris, a minor, against the Standard Oil Company, on an assigned claim for compensation paid by plaintiff's assignor as insurance carrier to plaintiff's ward. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 247 P. 583.

Dorsey Whitelaw, of El Centro, and Geo. H. Moore, of Hollister, for appellant.

A. L. Hubbell, of Calexico, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The main question to be determined on this appeal is whether or not a lien for the amount of the compensation paid an injured employee, by the insurance carrier of the employer, and allowed under the provision of section 26 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 854), against a judgment for personal injuries recovered by the employee against the person causing the injuries, is assignable.

Milton Morris, a minor, the plaintiff, was run over by a truck operated by the defendant, Standard Oil Company, and seriously injured while in the course of his employment by the Chronicle Publishing Company of Calexico. He brought an action against the oil company for damages for personal injuries, and, after two appeals to this court, he was awarded the sum of $12,000. Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 468, 205 P. 1073; Ibid., 192 Cal. 343, 219 P. 998, 30 A. L. R. 1103. The action was defended by the Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, Limited, of London, England, which company was the insurance carrier of both the oil company and the minor's employer, the Chronicle Publishing Company. As compensation carrier for the employer, it supplied the injured boy with medical and hospital care, and paid to him disability indemnity during the existence of the disability arising from the injury, but refused to inform the employee of the items or the amounts expended for medical and hospital care. Consequently those expenditures were not given consideration in the action brought by the minor against the oil company. During the pendency of the second appeal in that action, the Industrial Accident Commission made an award to the injured employee, fixing the amount of compensation to be paid by the insurance carrier of the employer at the sum of $800.64, which amount the insurance company paid.

Neither the employer of the boy nor its insurance carrier joined, or was joined, in the action for damages brought by him against the oil company, and neither instituted an independent action against that company because of the injury. The Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, as such insurance carrier, having paid the employee compensation for which his employer was liable, was subrogated to all rights of the employer and was entitled to enforce such rights in its own name. Workmen's Compensation Act, § 30, subd. (f). It therefore petitioned for a lien against the judgment obtained by the employee against the oil company for the amount paid by it as compensation and the additional sum paid for medical and hospital treatment. The application was denied as to the latter items, but the insurance carrier was allowed a lien against the judgment for the sum of $800.64, paid as compensation, upon the condition that it assign to the employee any and all claims, demands, or causes of action it might have against the oil company for the amounts paid by it to the employee. No appeal was taken from this order allowing a conditional lien. The oil company, not having reimbursed the insurance company for the disability indemnity paid the employee, it complied with the order of the court and duly assigned its claim to him.

Thereafter, and while the second appeal in the action for damages hereinabove noted (192 Cal. 343, 219 P. 998) was pending, the parties entered into negotiations for settlement of the judgment there in question. As a result, a settlement was had whereby the oil company paid the injured minor the sum of $10,290.21, and agreed to and did, secure from the insurance company and deliver to the employee a satisfaction and release of the lien, and also caused the company to assign to the employee, with full power to enforce the same, any cause of action it might have against the Standard Oil Company by reason of the indemnity payment. The court approved the terms of the settlement, and the judgment against the oil company was thereupon satisfied and discharged. The oil company retained, and presumably paid to the insurance company, the sum of $800.64 from the amount agreed to be paid by the oil company to the employee in satisfaction of the judgment. The oil company refusing to acknowledge the legality of the assignment or to pay the amount assigned, the employee, as assignee, instituted this suit, setting up the assignment and basing his cause of action thereon. Judgment was entered in his favor for the amount, interests, costs, and attorney's fees, and the Standard Oil Company has appealed.

[1, 2] Appellant's first contention is that at the time its insurance carrier made the purported assignment to the employee it had no cause of action against the oil company. This contention is answered by the provision of the Workmen's Compensation Act (section 30, subd. [f]) that, when an employer is insured against liability for compensation with an insurance carrier, and such carrier shall have paid any compensation for which the employer is liable, or furnished or provided any medical services required by the act, such insurance carrier shall be subrogated to all the rights of the employer and may enforce such rights in its own name. The ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation therefore had a cause of action arising by way of subrogation or equitable assignment. Dibble v. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., 47 Cal. App. 112, 117, 190 P. 198. The cause of action was assignable.

[3-5] Section 954 of the Civil Code has effected a change in the common-law rule of nonassignability of choses in action. One arising either out of violation of a right of property, or out of an obligation or contract, may now be transferred. Dibble v. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., supra; Stapp v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 34 Cal. App. 41, 46, 166 P.

823. The cause of action here assigned is not one arising in favor of the employee by reason of his injuries, but out of the obligation imposed by the Workmen's Compensation Act on the oil company, which caused a property injury to the employer, to reimburse the employer or its subrogated insurance carrier for the amount of disability indemnity paid the employee. It must not be confused with those peculiarly personal causes of action arising out of injuries to the body or feelings of the person injured, which are not assignable.

[6] The action on the assignment was not barred by the statute of limitations. Being one based upon a liability created by statute, it was properly commenced within three years from the time the insurance company paid the disability indemnity to the injured employee.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SULLIVAN, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.

200 Cal. 81

HERMINGHAUS et al. v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON CO. et al.

(S. F. 11630.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 21, 1927.)

1. Waters and water courses 🔑51—Accretions to San Joaquin river from snows and rainfall held "usual and ordinary flow" and not "storm" or "flood" or "vagrant" waters; "enemy" waters.

Waters of San Joaquin river, annually flowing therein before, during, and after regularly occurring accretions in volume by reason of melting of snows in mountains, held to constitute usual and ordinary flow of such river, and are not "storm" or "flood" or "vagrant" or "enemy" waters.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Flood Water.]

2. Waters and water courses 🔑51—Riparian owners held entitled to entire flow of San Joaquin river, including accretions from snows.

Riparian owners on San Joaquin river held invested with riparian rights in entire flow of waters in such river, including seasonable accretions resulting from melting of snow in mountains.

3. Waters and water courses 🔑39—Lands to which water is conveyed by minor channels cut by river on leaving mountains held "riparian."

Where river on entering plains from mountains has cut numerous minor channels, all land to which water is carried by such minor channels is "riparian" to river, authorizing reasonable use of flow of water.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Riparian.]

4. Waters and water courses 🔑38 — Sloughs with definite beginnings, channels, and definite ending held "water courses," and lands bordering thereon riparian.

Sloughs conducting water during excessive rainfall periods having definite beginnings, definite channels and banks, and definite endings, are water courses, and lands bordering thereon are riparian lands, with right to flow of water thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Water Course.]

5. Waters and water courses 🔑40—Riparian owners are abstractly entitled to reasonable use of waters of river at all seasons.

Riparian owners are abstractly entitled to reasonable use of waters of river at all seasons of year as having a vested right to usufruct of flowing stream in usual and ordinary course of its flow.

6. Waters and water courses 🔑44—Riparian owners' utilization of river water for growing grasses and reclaiming alkali land by use of overflow held reasonable.

Riparian owners' utilization of waters of river and flow and underflow and overflow thereof for growing of natural grasses and reclaiming alkali land by overflow held to constitute reasonable use thereof.

7. Waters and water courses 🔑42—Riparian owners' failure to regulate natural flow by artificial devices held not to limit right to usufruct of waters in natural course.

Failure of riparian owners to regulate natural flow of river by artificial contrivances involving large expenditure of money held not to operate to limit riparian right to usufruct of such waters in their natural course.

8. Waters and water courses 🔑44—Riparian owners' use of whole flow to carry waters used held not waste, though smaller quantity would be necessary with modern methods; "waste water."

Underflow of streams carrying water actually used to riparian lands benefited therein is not waste water, though with modern irrigation methods much less water would be necessary, since without uplift of former the outflow and beneficial use of latter could not exist.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Waste Water.]

9. Waters and water courses 🔑42—Riparian owners as against appropriators need not limit natural use of waters by artificial appliances.

Riparian owners are not obliged, as against appropriators, to limit their natural use and enjoyment of waters of river by artificial appliances.

10. Waters and water courses 🔑40—Upper riparian proprietor has same usufruct in waters as all other riparian owners.

Generally, upper riparian proprietor has same usufruct in waters of river as all other riparian owners along the course thereof.

11. Waters and water courses 🔑42—Upper riparian owner is entitled to benefit of reasonable waste occurring in course of reasonable exercise of rights.

Upper riparian owner along river and tributaries thereof is entitled to benefit of whatever reasonable waste or diminution of waters of river occurs during course of reasonable exercise of its riparian rights therein.

12. Waters and water courses 🔑46—Upper riparian owner may use waters for development of power.

Upper riparian proprietor is entitled to make appropriate use of waters of river for development of power and electric energy.

13. Waters and water courses 🔑78—Upper riparian owner as such may not reservoir and indefinitely divert and detain waters of stream.

Upper riparian owner as such has no right to reservoir and indefinitely divert and detain waters of river to such an extent as would practically effectuate a withdrawal of waters from large portion of riparian owners during certain periods in each season.

14. Waters and water courses 🔑142—Appropriation under statute divests no private rights, but merely gives preference over subsequent appropriator (Civ. Code, §§ 1410–1422).

Appropriation of water by riparian owner, under Civ. Code, §§ 1410–1422, divests no existing private right and merely gives preference over subsequent appropriator or diverter, who takes under no other right or title.

15. Waters and water courses 🔑130—Water Commission Act. declaring waters public waters, held inapplicable to waters beneficially used by riparian owner (Water Commission Act, § 11).

Water Commission Act (St. 1913, p. 1012) § 11, relative to declaring waters which may not be needed for useful and beneficial purposes on riparian lands to be public waters, held to have no application in case where waters are being applied to useful and beneficial purposes on riparian lands.

16. Waters and water courses 🔑130—Water Commission Act, construing term "useful or beneficial purposes," held not to include all waters not used for irrigating cultivated land (Water Commission Act, § 42).

Water Commission Act (St. 1913, p. 1012) § 42, construing term "useful or beneficial purposes," as used in act, held not to confine such term as used in section 11, making subject to appropriation all waters not used for useful and beneficial purposes, to waters used for irrigation of cultivated lands.

17. Waters and water courses 🔑128—Water Commission Act, construing term "useful and beneficial purposes," held not within police power (Water Commission Act, §§ 11, 42).

Water Commission Act (St. 1913, p. 1012) § 42, construing the term "useful and beneficial purposes" in section 11, making waters "not used for useful or beneficial purposes" subject to appropriation as public waters, to limit the use of water in irrigation of uncultivated land to not more than 2½ acre feet of water per acre, held not within police power of the state.

18. Waters and water courses 🔑78—Upper riparian owners, contemplating sequestration and diversion of water, cannot justify right as lessee of government to superior use in aid of navigation.

Upper riparian owner cannot predicate asserted right as lessee and licensee of federal government to superior use of river waters in aid of navigation, where record shows that contemplated use required sequestration, storage, and diversion of very large quantity of waters from river.

Shenk, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Action by Amelia Herminghaus and others against the Southern California Edison Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied; SHENK and LANGDON, JJ., and FINCH, Justice pro tem., voting for rehearing.

Edward F. Treadwell, Roy V. Reppy, George E. Trowbridge, and Gail C. Larkin, all of Los Angeles, and Lindsay & Conley, of Fresno, for appellant.

John W. Preston, James F. Peck, and Preston & Duncan, all of San Francisco (Annette Abbott Adams and Robert E. Hatch, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

Amici curiæ in support of appellants—McCutchen, Olney, Mannon & Greene and Warren Olney, Jr., all of San Francisco, Lucien Shaw, of Los Angeles, John G. Sargent, U. S. Atty. Gen., and Harold Baxter and James F. Lawson, Sp. Asst. U. S. Attys. Gen., for the United States.

Amici curiæ in support of respondents—George J. Hatfield, of San Francisco (Fred B. Wood, of San Francisco, of counsel), for James J. Stevinson, a corporation.

Amici curiæ in support of appellants in part and in support of respondents in part—U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Spencer Burroughs, of Sacramento, for the State, the Department of Public Works, the Division of Engineering and Irrigation, the Division of Water Rights, W. F. McClure, Director of Public Works, and Edward Hyatt, Jr., Chief of Division of Water Rights; Richard J. Coffey, of San Francisco, for the United States Bureau of Reclamation; A. E. Chandler, of San Francisco, A. L. Cowell, of Stockton, P. H. Griffin, of Modesto, H. J. Hankins, of San Francisco, and M. B. Harris, of Fresno, for Irrigation District Association of California; Power & McFadzean, of Visalia, for Alto Irrigation District; Harris, Johnson, Willey & Griffith, of Fresno, for Consolidated Irrigation District, Madera Irrigation District, and Stratford Irrigation District; Harris & Hayhurst and Harris, Johnson, Willey & Griffith, all of Fresno, for Fresno Irrigation District; A. E. Chandler, of San Francisco, for Corcoran Irrigation District; Hankins & Hankins, of San Francisco, for Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District; Guy Knupp, of Porterville, for Foothills Irrigation District; H. C. Bell, of Willows, for Jacinto Irrigation District and Princeton-Codora-Glenn Irrigation District; J. E. Rodgers and A. F. Bray, both of Martinez, for Knightsen Irrigation District; A. L. Cowell, of Stockton, for Merced Irrigation District; C. F. Metteer, of Sacramento, for Nevada Irrigation District; P. H. Griffin, of Modesto, for Oakdale Irrigation District and Turlock Irrigation District; Griffin, Boone & Boone, of Modesto, for Owens Valley Irrigation District; Edw. T. Houghton, of San Francisco, for Lemoore Irrigation District; George R. Freeman, of Willows, for Provident Irrigation District; Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, of Stockton, for South San Joaquin Irrigation District; Sidney J. W. Sharp, of Hanford, for Laguna Irrigation District, Riverdale Irrigation District, Liberty Mill Race Company, Reed Ditch Company, and Liberty Canal Company; Charles L. Childers, of Ellentro, for Imperial Irrigation District; H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, for Last Chance Water Ditch Company, People's Ditch Company, and Lucerne Irrigation District; F. E. Burton, of Bakersfield, for Kern River Water Storage District; L. J. Maddux, of Modesto, for Modesto Irrigation District; D. E. Perkins, of Visalia, for Alpaugh Irrigation District; Raymond A. Leonard, of Oroville, for Oroville-Wyandotte Irrigation District, Thermalito Irrigation District, Paradise Irrigation District, and Table Mountain Irrigation District; Warren Lee Pierson, of Los Angeles, for La Canada Irrigation District; W. D. Tillotson, of Redding, for Fall River Valley Irrigation District; W. R. Bailey, of Visalia, for Tulare Irrigation District and various mutual water companies.

Amicus curiæ concerning section 11 of Water Commission Act—Samuel C. Wiel, of San Francisco.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in the plaintiffs' favor in an action brought by them to obtain an injunction preventing the defendants from an alleged actual and proposed diversion of the waters of the upper San Joaquin river and its tributaries to the irreparable injury of the plaintiffs, through the interference thereby with riparian rights of the latter in and to the flow and use of the waters of said river upon, along, and across their lower lying lands contiguous to the banks and course of said river. The plaintiffs in their original complaint herein allege that they are the owners and tenants in possession of a certain large tract of land containing about 18,000 acres in the counties of Fresno and Madera, state of California, and extending along the bank of the main channel of the San Joaquin river for a distance of about 20 miles; the said land being as to the whole thereof riparian to said river, and the said plaintiffs having, for many past years, in the exercise of their riparian rights therein, made appropriate use of the waters of said river for the irrigation, overflow, and enrichment of their said lands and of the whole thereof. The plaintiffs proceed to allege that the defendants, being the occupants of lands lying along the reaches of the San Joaquin river and its tributaries above to the location of the plaintiffs' lands, claim some right in and to the waters of said river and to the use thereof adversely to the rights of the plaintiffs therein, and by virtue of such claims are threatening by dams, reservoirs, and other works to stop the flow of said river and to impound the waters thereof in and thereby to divert the waters of said river impounded and to convey the same away from said river at points above the plaintiffs' said lands so as to prevent the waters of said river from flowing through the courses and channels thereof down to and along, across, and over the said lands of plaintiffs, and to thus deprive the latter of the use and enjoyment thereof to their great and irreparable injury. The fuller particulars of the plaintiffs' utilization of the waters of said river and of the nature of the defendants' actual and threatened interference with such uses as alleged in said complaint will be set forth at a later point in this opinion. To the plaintiffs' complaint the defendants presented their answer, wherein and in certain amendments thereto they proceeded by denials and by affirmative averments to set forth twelve separate defenses to the plaintiffs' alleged cause of action. The particulars of these will also be adverted to in their proper order in the course of this decision. It is sufficient here to state that the said defendants by their said answer and defenses put in issue the averments of the plaintiffs' complaint respecting the nature of the rise and flow of the waters of said river as related to the plaintiffs' asserted right to the use thereof as lower riparian owners along the banks and courses thereof, and also put in issue the question as to the fullness and extent to which the plaintiffs' said lands, or certain portions thereof, are riparian to said stream. To these two primary considerations the trial court addressed itself in its findings of fact and in its conclusions of law based thereon; and it would seem that these should be the first to receive our consideration before passing to the other questions discussed upon this appeal and which must necessarily be to a greater or less degree predicated thereon.

[1] The trial court found upon sufficient evidence, which was not materially conflicting, that the San Joaquin river was a natural stream of water with well-defined channels and banks which, with its tributaries, took its rise in the Sierra Nevada mountains and descended thence in a generally westerly course to the plains of the San Joaquin valley, and thence in a generally northwesterly direction through the counties of Madera, Fresno, Merced, Stanislaus, and San Joaquin to the San Francisco bay; that the said river in its usual, ordinary, and natural flow passed along and over the lands of the plaintiffs herein; that the natural flow of water in the said San Joaquin river is, and has always been and always will be, if unobstructed, variable in quantity in the course of each and every year; that is to say, the same is, has been, and will be largest and most abundant at times of heavy rainfall over its watershed in said mountains in each winter season, and will also have a larger accretion in the spring and summer seasons by reason of the melting of the snows in said mountains; that these annually occurring accretions in the amount and flow of the waters of said river are natural and regular, and occur in their usual, expected, and accustomed seasons, and result in an increased amount and flow of the waters of said river as they proceed by, along, and across the lands of said plaintiffs, lasting through several months in the annual change of seasons of every year. From these findings of fact, based upon evidence which is indisputable, the conclusion is inevitable that the waters of the San Joaquin river annually flowing therein before and during and after these regularly occurring accretions in the volume thereof constitute the usual and ordinary flow of said river, and are in no sense "storm" or "flood" or "vagrant" or "enemy" waters as these terms are understood in law. This has in fact been so definitely determined by the decisions of this and other courts having precise reference to the waters of this and of other similar streams taking their sources in the same range of mountains and owing their periodical accretions to the same general causes, as to be no longer a matter susceptible of serious dispute.

In the case of Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 59, 99 P. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391, this court was called upon to determine the nature of the annual flow of the waters of the Fresno and also of the San Joaquin rivers, which streams take their rise in the same general region and are subject to the same periodic and climatic conditions. It was in that case contended by the defendant that the waters it proposed to divert did not constitute any part of the ordinary or usual flow of these rivers, but were waters occurring during periods of heavy rains and were storm, freshet, and flood waters as distinguished from the ordinary and usual flow of said rivers, and that as such the defendant was entitled to impound, divert, and use the same. On the other hand, it was claimed by the plaintiff that the rise in the flow of the waters in said rivers was not extraordinary, occurring upon rare occasions, but that such flow and overflow occurred in all years of ordinary rain and snowfall and constituted the regular annual and usual flow of said rivers. The trial court found in that case, as in this case, that the claim of the plaintiff relative to such waters was correct, and this court in sustaining such finding and conclusion used the following language:

> "Upon this showing it cannot be said that a flow of water, occurring as these waters are shown to occur, constitutes an extraordinary and unusual flow. In fact, their occurrence is usual and ordinary. It appears that they occur practically every year and are reasonably expected to do so, and an extraordinary condition of the seasons is presented when they do not occur; they are practically of annual occurrence and last for several months. They are not waters gathered into the stream as the result of occasional and unusual freshets, but are waters which on account of climatic conditions prevailing in the region where the Fresno river has its source are usually expected to occur, do occur, and only fail to do so when ordinary climatic conditions are extraordinary—when a season of drouth prevails."

Again, the court says:

> "This is the character of the waters of the Fresno river, the flow of which it is shown the defendant intends to divert. These overflow waters, occasioned through such usually recurring floods and freshets, are not waters which flow beyond the natural channel boundaries of the stream which nature has designed to confine their flow; they are not waters which depart from the stream or are lost or wasted; they flow in a well-defined channel in a continuous body and in a definite course to the San Joaquin river, and while they spread over the bottom lands, or low places bordering on the main channel of the Fresno river as it carries its stream during the dry season, still this is the usual, ordinary, and natural channel in which they flow at all periods of overflow, the waters receding to the main channel as the overflow ceases."

And finally the court concluded:

> "In the present case the storm and freshet waters are not something distinct and separate from the ordinary waters of the Fresno river. As a fact, and under the authorities, being annually recurring floods and freshets, flowing in a clearly defined channel, they constitute a part of the ordinary flow of the waters of such river."

In the case of Piper v. Hawley, 179 Cal. 10, 17, 175 P. 417, this court expressly approved the doctrne laid down in the foregoing case to the effect that annually recurring floods, even though the flow of their waters made the stream wider during the period thereof so as to include adjoining lands, are yet to be deemed a part of the ordinary flow of the stream. In the case of California Pastoral, etc., Co. v. Enterprise C. & C. Co., 127 F. 741, the Circuit Court of the United States, sitting in and for the Southern District of California, and having under consideration a case wherein the particular lands affected by the present controversy and the riparian rights of the owners and occupants thereof in relation to the San Joaquin river were involved, decided that the waters of the San Joaquin river which the defendant in that case was proposing by means of a canal and dam to divert from their accustomed flow in said river along and over the Herminghaus lands were not storm or freshet waters which any person who can may impound and use, but that such waters constituted the usual and ordinary flow of said river in which the full riparian rights of the owners of said lands inhered. In the case of Lindblom v. Round Valley Water Co., 178 Cal. 450, 173 P. 994, this court said, with relation to the facts of said case:

> "The evidence is clear to the effect that the water running into Round Valley (and, except as intercepted by the defendant, down North Canyon) consisted of the runoff from the usual, and annually recurring, fall of rain and snow. Such water, when running in a defined stream, constitutes a watercourse to which the riparian proprietor's rights attach"—citing Miller & Lux v. Madera, etc., Co., supra.

[2] In the presence of the foregoing consistent rulings of this court and of the federal court, having reference to the precise or similar conditions relative to the annual, usual, ordinary, and regularly recurring outflow of the San Joaquin river during the varying seasons of each and every year, we are constrained to hold that, in so far as the lands of said plaintiffs shall be found to be riparian to said river, they are entitled to the exercise and enjoyment of whatever riparian rights they shall be determined to be invested with, in the entire flow of the waters of said river, considering the same with its seasonal accretions as the usual and ordinary flow of said stream during each and every year.

[3, 4] The next question to which our consideration should logically be directed is as to what are the riparian rights of the plaintiffs in respect to said river and the waters thereof. This question is divisible into several parts, the first of whch involves the inquiry as to how much of the plaintiffs' said tract of land is riparian to the San Joaquin river. The findings of the trial court germane to this inquiry show that the plaintiffs' large tract of land lies in a position of peculiar and unique vantage in its relation to the San Joaquin river, since said tract of land not only extends for a goodly number of miles along the bank of the main channel of said river, but also lies just at the base of the lower reaches of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, from which the river makes its immediate debouchment into the plain, and in the apparent stress of which it has cut numerous minor channels or sloughs, so-called, 22 in number, which parallel or intersect each other, and which extend into and in some instances across the plantiffs' tract of land and which convey the waters of said river which enter the same at differen seasons of the year out, upon, or over said lands, and finally conduct the residue of such waters back into the main channel of the river. Upon this subject the findings of the trial court are we think fully sustained by the evidence, and are quite lengthy and detailed, but are also very instructive. The opinion of the trial court, rendered in deciding this cause, makes the following summary of these detailed findings, which will suffice for the purposes of this decision:

> "The evidence in this case shows that some of the sloughs that traverse the Herminghaus property, such as sloughs 19, 20, and 22, take from the river at all stages and carry their water in well-defined channels, with banks and bottoms, to Fresno slough. Others of the sloughs, such as No. 1 and No. 9, take directly from the river at higher stages, and likewise conduct their water in similar channels across the Herminghaus property to Fresno slough, a distance of some miles. Others of the main sloughs have no mouths entering the river's banks, but take water either by seepage from the main river or at times when the river overflows its adjoining banks. After the water has entered these sloughs, they conduct the same in well-defined channels across the Herminghaus property to Fresno slough. The testimony showed that the water in these sloughs was not stationary but was moving in a current. The evidence also showed that these sloughs, or at least the ones the descriptions of which have heretofore been set forth, carry water as above set forth each year during the late spring and summer months, when the San Joaquin river has been raised by waters from the melting snow. The testimony also showed that these sloughs for many years have been conducting water in this manner. It appears to me, therefore, that there is every element here that goes to make up a legal water course. These sloughs have definite beginnings, definite channels with banks and bottoms, and a definite ending in Fresno slough. Likewise, there is a permanent source from which they take water during certain seasons of the year. I am forced to the conclusion, therefore, that these sloughs are in fact and in law water courses, and that the lands bordering on them are riparian lands, and have a right to the flow of the water as it was, by nature, wont to flow, subject only to a reasonable use by riparian owners on the San Joaquin river, at points above said lands."

With the foregoing conclusions of the trial court with reference to the nature of these 22 channels or sloughs as water courses conveying the waters of the said river to practically all of the lands of these plaintiffs, thus rendering the same and the whole thereof riparian to the San Joaquin river, we entirely agree. The fact that some of these sloughs make their more or less definite connection with the main channel of said river at elevations which permit the waters thereof to enter said sloughs only when the increment in the quantum of such waters reaches a height and volume which makes possible their passage into the same in no way militates against their quality or utility to the plaintiffs as water courses, since the plaintiffs are, as we have seen, entitled to the beneficial use of said waters, in some degree at least, at all times and under all conditions attending the usual and ordinary flow of said stream.

This conclusion leads us to our next consideration, which involves the nature, extent, and limitations of the plaintiffs' riparian rights in and to the use of the waters of the San Joaquin river in connection with their ownership and uses of their said tract of land. We shall first consider this subject abstractly and without reference to the bearing upon it of those rights which the defendants possess as upper proprietors upon the San Joaquin river. The plaintiffs in their complaint aver that for more than 10 years prior to the commencement of this action they were and have since been the owners in fee of the 18,000 acres of land described in their said complaint, located in the San Joaquin valley, and bordering on the San Joaquin river; that the climate of that portion of the San Joaquin valley is arid, and as a result thereof their said land, unless irrigated, is unfit for cultivation or the growing of profitable crops thereon; that the soil is naturally fertile and very productive if water is supplied thereto; that the natural flow of the waters of the San Joaquin river is variable in quantity, being more abundant during the period of rainfall in the winter season and also during the late spring and summer when the snows upon its watershed in the high Sierras melt and contribute their accretion to said river; that during these periods in the augmented natural flow of said river the waters thereof flowed naturally out and over the plaintiffs' said lands and saturated the same, and deposited thereon a very fertile silt, which enriched said land and caused an abundant growth of grasses thereon as the same would not have grown except for said natural irrigation by the overflow of said waters and the deposit of said silt; that said waters reached said land as to the lower portions thereof, which are described as swamp and overflow land lying immediately adjacent to the lower reaches of said river, by direct overflow therefrom, but that said waters reached the upper portions of said tract of land during said periods of abundant flow by means of the numerous sloughs or channels which have been hereinbefore referred to; that, as the quantity of water flowing in said river diminishes, the area of said lands covered by the flow of said river in its higher stages would diminish until such waters would be confined to the said channels which traverse said lands, and would then seep into and moisten the same while such waters continued to flow in said restricted channels; that any artificial change in the natural flow of the waters of said river which would cause a further diminution in the quantum of the flow thereof would result, to the extent of such diminution, in the cessation of the accustomed overflow of the river directly and through the aforesaid numerous channels thereof, and would, if sufficiently extended, cause the waters of said river to proportionately cease to enter said sloughs or channels or to continue to flow therein, and would thereby diminish the area of said lands thus irrigated and enriched, and render the same, to the extent of such deprivation, arid and unsuitable for the growth of grasses or other products thereon, and thus destroy the value and profitable use of the same.

The answer of said defendants put in issue the aforesaid averments of the plaintiffs' complaint in those portions of its several defenses wherein they controvert the plaintiffs' claim that those parts of the plaintiffs' said lands which are traversed by the aforesaid channels and sloughs other than the main channel of said river, or are affected by the overflow from the former, are areas of said lands which are riparian to said river. or that the waters of said river, which enter the same during periods of its most abundant flow, constitute the usual and ordinary flow of said river, or that plaintiffs are entitled thereto as riparian proprietors along the course of said river, or, if so, to the extent and nature of the uses and benefits to which the said plaintiffs claim the right as such riparian proprietors to put and continue to utilize said waters.

The trial court, upon the particular issues thus joined, found the aforesaid averments of the plaintiffs' complaint to be true. We are satisfied, from a careful review of the evidence in this case, that it sufficiently sustains the findings of the trial court in the foregoing regard, and, this being so, it becomes necessary for us at this point to review the history and development of the law of riparian rights in this state. We are saved the necessity of an extended elaboration of the earlier stages of that development by the decision of this court in the leading case of Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 P. 919, 10 P. 674, wherein, in the longest opinion in the judicial history of this court, the growth and development of the doctrine of riparian rights under the common law, in other jurisdictions, and finally in California, since its adoption of the common law in the year 1850, through a course of judicial decision down to the date of the determination of that cause upon appeal, is exhaustively reviewed. While it is true that the decision in the case of Lux v. Haggin was that of a divided court, we think it is also true, as stated by Mr. Chief Justice Shaw in his most able review of the "Development of the Law of Waters in the West," to be found in the appendix to 189 Cal. at page 779 et seq., that:

> "It declared that the rights of the riparian owners to the use of the waters of the abutting stream were paramount to the rights of any other persons thereto; that such rights were parcel of the land and that any diminution of the stream against the will of the riparian owner by other persons was an actionable injury. The question was settled by that case and the riparian right has never since been disputed."

When we turn to that notable decision to determine just what was thus settled in the way of a definition of the riparian right, we find that it is embraced in the following conclusions by Chief Justice Shaw of Massachusetts in the case of Johnson v. Jordan, 2 Metc. 239, 37 Am. Dec. 85, which this court therein adopted and approved in the following language (69 Cal. at page 391 [10 P. 754]):

> "The right to the flow of the water is inseparably annexed to the soil, and passes with it, not as an easement or appurtenant, but as a parcel. Use does not create, and disuse cannot destroy or suspend it. Each person through whose land a watercourse flows has (in common with those in like situation) an equal right to the benefit of it as it passes through his land, for all useful purposes to which it may be applied; and no proprietor of land on the same watercourse has a right unreasonably to divert it from flowing into his premises, or to obstruct it in passing from them, or to corrupt or destroy it."

In a later portion of the opinion this court said (69 Cal. at page 394 [10 P. 755]):

> "By our law the riparian proprietors are entitled to a reasonable use of the waters of the stream for the purpose of irrigation. What is such reasonable use is a question of fact, and depends upon the circumstances appearing in each particular case."

The doctrine of riparian rights thus abstractly stated has been clarified, though not materially changed, by this court in its application to the particular cases which have come before it since the decision of the case of Lux v. Haggin, supra. The case of Heilbron v. Last Chance Water Ditch Co., 75 Cal. 117, 17 P. 65, was one wherein the tenant in possession of a large tract of land riparian to Kings river brought suit to restrain a diversion of the waters of said river by an upper appropriator who had diverted a large body of the waters of such river and conveyed the same by a ditch to land not riparian to said river. In setting forth the original right of the plaintiff to have said stream continue to flow as by nature it was wont to flow over, through, or along his land, this court said:

> "It seems clear, upon principle and authority, that the diversion of natural water from land is 'an injury done to the inheritance.' The flow of natural water over land is a continuous source of fertility and benefit; and its withdrawal is followed by consequences which are perpetually injurious to the freehold. This is strikingly illustrated by the averments in the complaint in this case, 'that the waters of said Kings river have hitherto been accustomed to overflow, seep through, and moisten the lands of said rancho, whereby the fertility of said lands was greatly increased, and a large and valuable quantity of natural grass was produced upon said lands'; and that, by reason of the diversion of the water by defendant, 'said lands have failed to produce their accustomed crops of natural grass.' The flow of the water of a stream, whether it overflow the banks or not, naturally irrigates and moistens the ground to a great and unknown extent, and thus stimulates vegetation; and the growth and decay of vegetation add, not only to the fertility, but to the very substance and quantity of the soil. It is not true, therefore, as claimed by appellants, that the water of a natural stream may be taken away from land for a great number of years, and then turned back, without any permanent injury to the land."

In the case of Southern California Investment Co. v. Wilshire, 144 Cal. 68, 77 P. 767, wherein the controversy was between the plaintiff as a lower and the defendant as an upper riparian proprietor along a certain stream, this court said:

> "The plaintiff has riparian rights in the stream, and this right extends to all the water flowing in the stream through its lands. * * * As such riparian owner, it has the right to have the stream continue to flow through its lands in the accustomed manner, and to use the same to irrigate an additional area thereof, undiminished by any additional or more injurious use or diversion of the water upon the stream above. This right is a part of the estate of the plaintiff—parcel of its land—and whether it is or is not as valuable in a monetary point of view, or as beneficial to the community in general, as would be the use of a like quantity of water in some other place, it cannot be taken by the defendants without right, or, in case of a public use elsewhere, without compensation. It is not necessary in such cases for the plaintiff to show damages, in order that it may be entitled to a judgment. It is enough if it appears that the continuance of the acts of the defendants will deprive it of a right of property, a valuable part of its estate" (citing cases).

In the case of Anaheim Water Co. v. Fuller, 150 Cal. 327, 88 P. 978, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, wherein the plaintiffs, who were lower riparian owners along the Santa Ana river, sought to enjoin the defendants, who were upper riparian owners upon said river, from diverting water from the stream by means of a ditch through which said defendants proposed to convey such water to other lands not riparian to the stream, the defendants, among other contentions, urged that the plaintiffs were actually using but 400 inches of water for their land, and that there would remain in the stream after the defendants' proposed diversion more than 2,000 inches flowing down to and beyond the plaintiffs' lands, and which was more than the latter could possibly use thereon, and that therefore no damage could ever ensue, even conceding the defendants' diversion to be unlawful, and hence that their said diversion ought not to be enjoined. Mr. Justice Shaw, in dealing with this contention, said (150 Cal. at page 335 [88 P. 982]):

> "The theory of the law of riparian rights in this state is that the water of a stream belongs by a sort of common right to the several riparian owners along the stream, each being entitled to sever his share for use on his riparian land. The fact that a large quantity of water flows down the stream by and beyond the plaintiffs' land does not prove that it goes to waste, nor that the plaintiffs are entitled to take a part of it, as against other riparian owners or users below. Nor can it be said that plaintiffs, on account of the present abundance, could safely permit defendants to acquire, as against them, a right to a part of the water. The riparian right is not lost by disuse, and other riparian owners above may take, or others below may be entitled to take, and may insist upon being allowed to take, all of the stream, excepting only sufficient for the plaintiffs' land. In either alternative, the taking of a part of the water by the defendants would not leave enough for the plaintiffs' use. There is nothing in this case to show how much water is required above and below by those having rights in the stream. In view of the well-known aridity of the climate and the high state of cultivation in the vicinity, the court could almost take judicial notice that in years of ordinary rainfall there is no surplus of water in the stream over that used by the various owners under claim of right. But, however this may be, it is settled by the decisions above cited that a party, situated as the plaintiffs are, can enjoin an unlawful diversion, in order to protect and preserve his riparian right."

In the case of Modoc L. & L. S. Co. v. Booth, 102 Cal. 151, 36 P. 431, the plaintiffs, who were the owners of swamp and overflowed land riparian to the Pitt river, sought an injunction to prevent the defendants, who were upper but nonriparian owners of land, from appropriating 200 inches of water from said river for irrigation, stock, and domestic uses upon their nonriparian lands. The evidence in the case showed that the plaintiffs were engaged in reclaiming their said swamp and overflowed lands by ditching and diverting the waters of the Pitt river away from the same at times of the high flow of said river during the months of June, July, August, and September when the defendants used the comparatively small amount of the water of the river appropriated by them. The trial court denied the injunction sought, and this court affirmed its order to that effect, saying:

> "The only point made for a reversal is that the court erred in not granting an injunction against the respondent, because appellants were riparian owners and as such 'entitled to have the stream flow in its natural channel, undiminished and unobstructed.' In a state like this, where irrigation is greatly needed, and where large areas of land are comparatively worthless unless artificially irrigated, it is difficult to lay down a rule as to riparian rights which will be applicable to and cover all cases. It seems clear, however, that in no case should a riparian owner be permitted to demand, as of right, the intervention of a court of equity to restrain all persons who are not riparian owners from diverting any water from the stream at points above him, simply because he wishes to see the stream flow by or through his land undiminished and unobstructed. In other words, a riparian owner ought not to be permitted to invoke the power of a court of equity to restrain the diversion of water above him by a nonriparian owner, when the amount diverted would not be used by him, and would cause no loss or injury to him or his land, present or prospective, but would greatly benefit the party diverting it. If this be not so, it would follow, for example, that an owner of land bordering on the Sacramento river in Yolo county could demand an injunction restraining the diversion of any water from that river for use in irrigating nonriparian lands in Glenn or Colusa county. And yet no one, probably, would expect such an injunction, if asked for, to be granted, or, if granted, to be sustained."

In the case of Fifield v. Spring Valley Water Works, 130 Cal. 552, 62 P. 1054, this court applied the rule above quoted from the last-cited case to a situation wherein the defendant, a nonriparian appropriator, was seeking to divert the storm or flood waters of a stream but none of the ordinary flow. In the case of Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 59, 99 P. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391, which has already been adverted to as to its facts, it was urged upon this court upon petition for rehearing that it had not given due consideration to its rulings in the cases of Modoc Land Co. v. Booth, and Fifield v. Spring Valley Water Works, last above referred to, but this court differentiated between the two cases last above referred to and the case of Anaheim Water Co. v. Fuller, supra, and also between those former cases and the instant case before it, by showing that the instant controversy was not one relating merely to storm or flood waters, but that the pending cause involved the usual and customary flow of the Fresno river and the right of a lower riparian owner thereto as against an upper appropriator of the waters of said stream. In the course of this differentiation, Mr. Justice Sloss, after approving the language of the main opinion to the effect that the owners of land bordering upon such a flow of water are riparian proprietors entitled to all the rights pertaining to riparian ownership, went on to say:

"It is suggested that a different rule should apply in a semiarid climate like that of California, where the fall of rain and snow occurs during only a limited period of the year, and, consequently, streams carry in some months a flow of water greatly exceeding that flowing during the dry season, with the result that such increased flow is not, at all points, confined within the banks which mark the limits of the stream at low water. But no authority has been cited, and we see no sufficient ground in principle, for holding that the rights of riparian proprietors should be limited to the body of water which flows in the stream at the period of greatest scarcity. What the riparian proprietor is entitled to as against nonriparian takers is the ordinary and usual flow of the stream. There is no good reason for saying that the greatly increased flow following the annually recurring fall of rain and melting of snow in the region about the head of the stream is any less usual or ordinary than the much diminished flow which comes after the rains and the melted snows have run off. Perhaps other considerations should apply where a river, in times of heavy flow, runs over its banks in such manner that large volumes of water leave the stream and spread over adjoining lands to an indefinite extent, there to stagnate until they evaporate or are absorbed by the soil. But the evidence of respondent, and this was the evidence on which the court below acted, fails to show that the water which defendant seeks to divert was such 'vagrant water.' The evidence of respondent was to the effect that at all seasons the water of the Fresno river, even though overflowing the banks of the channel in which it flowed during the dry season, formed a single and continuously flowing stream. The argument that the method of irrigation adopted by plaintiff, i. e., that of having the annual increased flow of the river spread over its lands, was not a reasonable use of the water can have no weight in this case. The doctrine that a riparian owner is limited to a reasonable use of the water applies only as between different riparian proprietors. As against an appropriator who seeks to divert water to nonriparian lands, the riparian owner is entitled to restrain any diversion which will deprive him of the customary flow of water which is or may be beneficial to his land. He is not limited by any measure of reasonableness. If any doubt ever existed on this point, none can remain since the recent decision of this court in Anaheim Union Water Co. v. Fuller, 150 Cal. 327 [88 P. 978, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062]. The cases relied on to show that the riparian owner is entitled to only a reasonable use of the water were all cases of controversies between owners of different parcels of land riparian to the same stream. Virtually the same point is presented by the argument that plaintiff is not limiting itself to the most economical manner of using the water. This is not an objection which may be raised by an appropriator who seeks to divert water of the stream to non-riparian lands. It is argued that unless appropriators are permitted to divert and store for future use water which would otherwise run into the sea and be wasted, there will be a failure to make the most beneficial use of the natural resources of the state and that riparian owners should not be permitted to obstruct the development of these resources. It may be that, if nonriparian owners are permitted to intercept the winter flow of streams, in order to irrigate nonriparian lands or to develop power, the water so taken will permit the cultivation of more land and benefit a greater number of people than will be served if the flow continues in its accustomed course. But the riparian owners have a right to have the stream flow past their land in its usual course, and this right, so far as it is of regular occurrence and beneficial to their land is, as we have frequently said, a right of property, 'a parcel of the land itself.' Neither a court nor the Legislature has the right to say that because such water may be more beneficially used by others it may be freely taken by them. Public policy is at best a vague and uncertain guide, and no consideration of policy can justify the taking of private property without compensation. If the higher interests of the public should be thought to require that the water usually flowing in streams of this state should be subject to appropriation in ways that will deprive the riparian proprietor of its benefit, the change sought must be accomplished by the use of the power of eminent domain. The argument that these waters are of great value for the purposes of storage by appropriators and of small value to the lower riparian owners defeats itself. If the right sought to be taken be of small worth, the burden of paying for it will not be great. If, on the other hand, great benefits are conferred upon the riparian lands by the flow, there is all the more reason why these advantages should not, without compensation, be taken from the owners of these lands and transferred to others."

The case of Arroyo Ditch & Water Co. v. Baldwin, 155 Cal. 280, 100 P. 874, cannot be said to be at variance with the foregoing principles or cases, since the questions discussed therein arose in an action wherein a lower riparian proprietor was claiming the right gained by prescription as against the upper riparian owner to have a certain quantum of the waters of the common stream flow down to him for purposes of diversion. The court in such a case was not called upon to discuss the principles enunciated in the case of Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., supra, but doubtless had that case in mind, since it is reported upon earlier pages of the same volume of our reports; and whatever the court may have said in developing the later case cannot be held to be in any wise hostile to its utterances in the earlier one. Neither do we find anything in the case of Gray v. Reclamation Dist., 174 Cal. 622, 163 P. 1024, or in the earlier case of Lamb v. Reclamation Dist., 73 Cal. 125, 14 P. 625, 2 Am. St. Rep. 775, each dealing with the particular situation therein considered, which is in conflict with the case of Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., supra, and its companion line of cases which seem to deal with the identical situation as to the state and flow of the streams in question presented by the case at bar. We are unable to draw the differentiations which the appellant and certain of the amici curiæ herein would have us see between the case of Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., and this one in the foregoing regard; nor are we referred either by appellant or the amici curiæ to any later decision of this court which has materially modified the decision in the last above-cited case in its application abstractly to the rights of riparian owners to the usufruct of streams identical in their origin and outflow to that of the San Joaquin river.

[5] As a result of the foregoing review of the cases which have succeeded and have generally followed the doctrine declared in the early case of Lux v. Haggin, supra, we arrive at the following conclusions: The waters of the San Joaquin river, as they approach and pass along, through, and over the lands of the plaintiffs herein at all seasons of the year constitute the ordinary, usual, periodical, and natural flow of said river. They are not "flood" waters, or "storm" waters, or "vagrant" waters, or "enemy" waters, which are the result of occasional or unusual freshets and which any one having the ability so to do may impound or divert, and who in most cases confer a blessing upon lower riparian landowners by so doing. The plaintiffs herein are riparian owners along the course or courses of the San Joaquin river, and their tract of land is practically all riparian to said river, either directly along and beside the main channel thereof or through the contiguity of the upper portions thereof to the numerous sloughs putting off from said river and interpenetrating these higher areas of their said tract of land. As such riparian owners said plaintiffs are abstractly entitled to the reasonable use of the said waters of said river at all seasons of the year. Their right thereto is to the usufruct of said flowing stream in the usual and ordinary course of its flow, and this right is a vested right inherent in the soil of their said lands and not a mere incident or appurtenant thereto. It is a right which is neither gained nor lost by use or disuse abstractly and in the absence of adverse rights gained by others by prescription or of their loss by laches creating an estoppel under certain conditions hereinafter to be noted. It is a right which they partake of in common with other riparian proprietors along said stream entitled to a similar usufruct in its waters. It is a right which appropriators of water from said stream do not, as we shall see, share with the riparian owners thereon, in the absence of rights to the use of said waters gained by such appropriators by grant or by prescription.

[6] Having thus defined and limited the right of the plaintiffs as riparian owners along the San Joaquin river to the use and enjoyment of the waters thereof, we pass next to the question as to what the trial court has found to be the extent of the plaintiffs' right to the reasonable use and enjoyment of the waters of said stream under the particular circumstances as shown by the evidence in the case. The trial court found, as we have seen, that practically all of the plaintiffs' tract of land is riparian to said river. The trial court has further found specifically what particular benefit the various areas of the plaintiffs' said tract of land of different elevations derive from the intake, flow, and overflow of the waters of said river, through and by means of the several sloughs which take off from said river at such respective elevations in the land, and which carry a varying content according to their location, and also to the amount of accretion in the flow of the river at certain seasons of the year. Having so found, the trial court proceeds to find as follows:

> "That the climate of that portion of the San Joaquin valley in which the said land described in said schedule A is located is naturally arid, and the annual rainfall is very slight, and, as a result thereof, the said land, unless irrigated otherwise than by annual rainfall, is unfit for cultivation or the growing of profitable crops, but the soil, 10,000 acres or more thereof, is very fertile and by the use of said waters of the San Joaquin river and its branches, is rendered very productive, and abundant crops of natural grasses can be and are produced thereon, as herein specifically stated, and with water to irrigate the same the said land is adapted to the growing of cereals, viticultural, and horticultural crops, vineyards, garden truck, grain, and berries. The balance of said soil blends with different degrees of alkali from the quality of said 10,000 acres of land to land impregnated with alkali in such quantities that the land must be reclaimed from it in order that anything other than natural grasses will grow thereon, and the process of this reclamation of the land from alkali is being accomplished by the overflow aforesaid."

The trial court further found:

> "That all the water which will flow in the San Joaquin river and its branches, as it and they were wont to flow by nature would be beneficial to the land of plaintiffs which is overflowed thereby as aforesaid, for the entire period and in the entire quantity that it is accustomed to so overflow said land."

The foregoing findings of the trial court are, in our opinion, sufficiently supported by the evidence in the case. We are further entirely satisfied that the foregoing utilization by the said plaintiffs of the waters of said river and the flow and underflow and overflow thereof constitutes a reasonable use thereof within the intent and meaning of the foregoing definitions of the riparian right of land owners along such or similar streams. It is to be noted that, apart from certain general similarities of location, topography, adaptability, and quality the plaintiffs' tract of land as to its position, adaptability, and soil qualities, when taken in its relation to the San Joaquin river and the aforesaid natural distribution of the waters thereof, is peculiar, and in fact unique. From the evidence in the case as reflected by the findings of the trial court, it would seem to be a tract of land especially designed and equipped by nature for pastoral uses; but, even if it were not thus peculiarly adaptable to the irrigation and growth of wild grasses for the pasture of stock, even if it were equally or even more advantageously susceptible of adaptation to more intensive and even more profitable agricultural, horticultural, or viticultural uses, we are unable to perceive under what showing or claim of right any other landowner along said river, or any would-be appropriator of the waters thereof, or any aggregation of individuals, or any court or even the state itself, would have the right to dictate to these plaintiffs, choosing to devote their said lands and the water which, in its ordinary and usual flow, as an integral part and parcel thereof, to its present beneficial uses, that they should devote their said lands and the water flowing thereon to other and more intensive uses which such individuals or such aggregation or such court or such state might deem to be more in keeping, and, so to speak, more up to date with modern development in the productive uses of property. To admit the right to such interference to the extent of taking away from the individual his initiative in deciding to which of several adaptable uses he shall devote his property would be to divest him to that extent of his most precious right of ownership therein. In so stating we are not to be understood as dealing with or denying the right of the state in the proper exercise of its police power to regulate the uses, within certain well-defined limitations, of private property. We shall revert to this subject at a later point in this opinion.

[7-9] It is, however, contended by the defendants herein that the trial court placed a vital limitation upon its foregoing findings as to the extent of the right of the plaintiffs to the use and flow of the entire body of the waters of said river entering upon and flowing through and over their said lands by appending thereto and to the last above-quoted portion of finding 30 an additional sentence which would make said finding 30 read in full as follows:

> "That all the water which will flow in the San Joaquin river and its branches, as it and they were wont to flow by nature would be beneficial to the land of plaintiffs which is overflowed thereby as aforesaid, for the entire period and in the entire quantity that it is accustomed to so overflow said land, but a constant flow of 180 cubic feet of water per second from April 1st to October 1st of each year would irrigate the lands of plaintiff, if the same were prepared for intensive cultivation, which preparation would entail a large expenditure of money, but in the present condition of the land all the water flowing in said main and branch channels is necessary for the irrigation of said land."

We are unable to perceive that the emphasized sentence of said finding 30, as above quoted in full, amounts to a limitation in any degree upon the foregoing findings of the trial court to which the same is appended. The fact that these plaintiffs might by artificial contrivances through dams and ditches and reservoirs, involving large expenditures of money, so interrupt or so regulate the present natural flow of said river as to render a smaller quantum of its waters sufficient to satisfy the beneficial uses which they are now making of such waters in their entirety, could not possibly operate to limit or lessen their riparian right to the usufruct of said waters in their natural course and under plaintiffs' unique relation thereto. Were it otherwise, the clause in our foregoing definition of the riparian right to the effect that such right is neither gained by use nor lost by disuse would be meaningless. But more than that—to require of these plaintiffs that they install expensive improvements upon nature's method for the purpose of lessening the quantum of the said water to be used by them below that full amount thereof to which they are in the natural exercise of their riparian right entitled would be to impose a like duty upon all the other riparian owners along the lower reaches, not only of this particular stream, but of all other streams of like origin and outflow, in order that some upper riparian proprietor or nonriparian appropriator might have, gain, and exercise rights to the use and diversion of said waters thus conserved, to which they would not otherwise be entitled. To so declare would be to impose a radical, and, in its outworking, an utterly impracticable, limitation upon the doctrine of riparian rights. The impracticability of such a proposition might, if time and space would permit, be made the subject of almost endless illustration. The rights which the plaintiffs assert herein inhere not only in the upper flow of said waters which actually enters upon and permeates and fructifies the soil of riparian lands, but also in the underflow of said river which lifts the upper flow thereof to the levels of entry upon such lands, and which, having done so, passes by to uplift its peak, in turn, to the levels of lower riparian lands along the course of said river through the plain. The underflow of streams is, with respect to riparian rights therein, no more waste waters than is the upper flow thereof which the riparian owner uses, since, without the uplift of the former, the outflow and beneficial use of the latter could not exist. Such waters are therefore serving a useful and beneficial purpose in relation to said lands.

The foregoing findings of the trial court dispose, we think, of the question as to the reasonableness of the plaintiffs' use of the waters of said river in view of the unique advantages which nature has bestowed upon them in respect to their said lands. Had nature not been thus kind, had the plaintiffs originally been obliged, at large expense and by artificial means, to dig the water courses, create the channels, and make the connections at various levels for the intake of the waters of the river to which as riparian owners they were entitled, it could not, we think, be reasonably contended that their conduct in so doing was so unreasonable as to justify upper appropriators upon said stream in taking away their riparian rights in the waters of the stream which they had thus artificially and at great expense applied to their lands. Neither could it be said that the amount of water of said river, which is thus lifted to the varying levels of plaintiffs' lands and enters upon and flows over the same by means of the channels which nature has provided, is to be held unreasonable merely because it exceeds the volume which the trial court suggested would be sufficient, if conserved and distributed through expensive artificial methods and appliances. As against appropriators the plaintiffs were not obliged by artificial appliances or otherwise to limit their natural use and enjoyment of the waters of said river, nor can it be said, as supported by either reason or authority, that a lower riparian owner, as against an upper riparian owner attempting to impound a greater amount of the waters of the stream than that to which he would be entitled under his well-defined riparian right, should have cast upon him the burden of limiting by artificial contrivances his natural use and enjoyment of said waters in order that the upper riparian owner may make other and greater uses thereof than those to which he is lawfully and naturally entitled. There is nothing in the record herein tending in any degree to show that the defendants herein ever offered, or would be willing to offer, to reimburse the plaintiffs for any portion of the cost, expense, and outlay which would be required in order to limit the amount of water entering upon plaintiffs' land to the amount thereof indicated by the trial court as susceptible of being made reasonably adequate through such artificial means.

[10-12] We have now reached the point in this discussion where the rights and claims of right of the appellant in and to the use of the waters of the San Joaquin river and its tributaries come into view. The appellant is a riparian owner of considerable lands along the upper reaches of said river and its tributaries. It is also a lessee or licensee from the United States government of certain other lands in the same region and riparian to the same river, and as such lessee or licensee thereof is admittedly entitled to the use and exercise of whatever riparian rights the federal government has in respect to said river by virtue of its ownership of said lands. It is in its aforesaid capacity as an upper riparian proprietor along said river that its rights as such therein are first to be considered. Generally speaking, it has the same usufruct in the waters of said river as all other riparian owners along the course thereof possess. It is entitled to the reasonable use of said waters and of the ordinary and usual flow thereof for such customary and domestic uses as inhere in riparian owners along similar streams, and for irrigation of their said riparian lands. Being an upper riparian owner along said stream and the tributaries thereof, it is entitled to the benefit of whatever reasonable waste or diminution in the volume of said waters occurs during and in the course of the reasonable exercise of its riparian rights therein. In addition to the foregoing usual and customary uses of said waters, the appellant is entitled to make appropriate use of the same for the development of power and electric energy. Mentone Irr. Co. v. Redlands Elec. L. & P. Co., 155 Cal. 323, 100 P. 1082, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382, 17 Ann. Cas. 1222. In so holding, this court further held that the production of power upon riparian land was a proper riparian use of the waters flowing thereon, even though the power and energy so developed was to be conveyed away and used at distant points not riparian to such lands. The uses made by the defendants herein as upper riparian proprietors of the waters of said river for purposes of irrigation and for domestic uses are negligible and are not in dispute in this proceeding; and, as to the use of said waters for the production of power and electric energy, the plaintiffs herein concede to the defendants the right to such use as being within the defendants' riparian right, subject, of course, to the duty imposed upon all riparian owners and users of water to make a present return of such waters to the course of the stream without undue waste or diminution. This concession does not satisfy the claims of the defendants herein or of the various amici curiæ who have come forward to support the defendants' contentions as to the extent of their rights as upper riparian proprietors to the use, for the aforesaid purpose, of the waters of said river. These claims of the defendants are set forth in their answer herein, where they appear in the form of several separate defenses, which we shall deal with in turn.

The first of these affirmative defenses consists in the claim of the defendants that, in the course and exercise of their conceded right to a reasonable use of the waters of said stream for the development of power and electric energy, they have the right to build reservoirs at various points along the upper reaches of said river and the tributaries thereof for the storage of the waters of said river to the extent set forth with much of detail in their said answer. With reference to the averments therein, and to the past, present, and prospective work of said development in the planning and building of such reservoirs, a vast amount of evidence was presented at the trial of the cause. The trial court found that the said defendants did claim and assert their right to construct such reservoirs to the extent and capacity shown by the evidence in the case and set forth with much of detail in the findings therein; and the trial court further found from such evidence that the proposed sequestration of the waters of said river, in the system of reservoirs shown to be partially in course of construction and wholly within the contemplation and plans of the defendants, would, if permitted to be completed and carried into operation according to their aforesaid claims and plans and purposes, have the effect of causing a diversion of the waters which constitute the usual and ordinary flow of said river for periods, and to an extent which would practically effectuate a withdrawal of said waters from a large portion of the lands of said plaintiffs during the period in each season when they are benefited by its flow and overflow, especially in and through those sloughs and channels which are wont to convey such waters to the plaintiffs' higher lands. The conclusion of law of the trial court, based upon its foregoing findings of fact, was that the claim of right asserted by said defendants, in so far as the same was sought to be grounded in the alleged rights of the defendants as upper riparian proprietors along the course of said river, was not sustainable as a matter of law. We are asked upon this appeal to review and reverse that conclusion. We are not urged so to do upon the ground that the evidence presented at the trial does not fully sustain the findings of fact of the trial court upon which its aforesaid conclusion of law was predicated. On the other hand, the defendants frankly admit that their proposed plans for the storage of the waters of said river in its vast system of reservoirs hold in contemplation the retirement of said waters for long and indefinite periods of time, in fact, admit that as to certain of said reservoirs, the sequestration of the portion of the said waters stored therein will be cyclic, and as to said waters as a whole and to the extent of their retention in said reservoirs, their ultimate return to the river would depend, not at all upon the claims and asserted rights of lower riparian owners to the usual, natural, and ordinary flow of said waters, but altogether upon the will and convenience of the defendants in their proposed utilization of said waters for power production.

